14673. Has the Workhouse of Granard been maintained in a proper condition of efficiency?—Up to within the last year or two, but since this friction commenced it was neglected a little.

14674. In the dilapidated condition that is visible to anyone visiting it due to the neglect of the last eighteen months?—To the last two or three years. It might be in better order than it is now, but there has been a good deal of money spent on it within the last two or three years.

14675. Have you visited the workhouse recently?—No.

14676. Have you any idea of how much should be spent on it to put it in a proper state of repair?—I heard it said about £1,000.

14677. And has the neglect of eighteen months increased that condition of affairs?—It is more than eighteen months' neglect.

14678. I want to know how long it is neglected?—It is not in the condition that the Local Government Board have been trying to get it for the last two or three years, but it has been repaired several times during that time.

14679. You mean it has been tinkered. Has any proper attempt been made to put this into up-to-date repair?—Yes; I think there is an engineer here will tell you.

14680. The engineer has made many estimates, none of which have been carried out?—I think they have.

14681. Did you ever hear of Mayor Fair's report?—I did.

14682. Were they ever carried out?—Yes, some of them. The engineer will tell you that.

14683. Have you ever heard of resolutions of the Board of Guardians that they would not for several years carry out any repairs?—No; I heard that they would not put the house in repair until the matter would be finally decided as to amalgamation or not.

14684. Then they were always fearing amalgamation in Granard?—Not always; only within the last two or three years.

CHAIRMAN.—1858 was the first.

Mr. Mulholland.—1855 was the first proposal.

14685. Mr. Delany.—Long before I was born they were thinking of breaking up that union?—Oh, so; you were born before that. It was Lord Longford asked that first change, and the Board of Guardians objected, and the Local Government Board backed them up. The next thing that turned up was when the Coram County Council demanded their five divisions, and when that was under consideration the Local Government Board came in inquiry to see if it would be desirable to break up the union. While that was pending no repairs were done. I may say further that I attribute that neglect to some extent to the formation of the present Board of Guardians; everything was done before that as it was required; there was no friction as to repairs or anything else; it was all properly carried out, but the new board are rather reticent, and they don't like to spend too much money.

14686. They like to lose the ship. I take it from you that whatever happens you would like the present board reformed?—I was speaking of Granard specially, but this is a general remark.

14687. Then you admit things are not going on as they ought to go, and as business men would conduct them in Granard?—I admit they are going on very well, but they might be better.

14688. You say that the breaking up of the Granard Union would be an inconvenience to the poor; how would it be an inconvenience to the poor; do you mean that if any of them got stricken with sickness it would take a long time to get them into Longford, supposing our theory was carried out?—I mean that too.

14689. Or do you mean that there is not proper accommodation in the shape of relieving officers?—I don't mean that; I mean solely that from the number of poor in the union and those small towns that if the workhouse was changed to Longford it would inconvenience all these poor people seriously.

14690. You mean that if they had to take shelter in a workhouse they would have further to go?—Yes; and other things too.

14691. The breaking up of the union would involve the sending of the Coram portions to Coram and the Westmeath portions to Mullingar?—Yes; and by that people in those villages—Finis in Westmeath, over twenty Irish miles from Mullingar—people from that district would suffer seriously, and they are only three or three and a half miles from Granard, and people in the County Coram—that portion near Longford—would have a longer distance to go to Coram Workhouse than to Granard.

14692. Am I not right in saying that all the Coram and people from the Coram district want to go to Coram?—No; you are not right in saying that; there are some in favour of it.

14693. Am I not right in saying the majority?—Yes, you are, but the clergymen and priests and persons of that district have written to the Local Government Board against the amalgamation on account of the poor. I don't put down the Guardians for knowing everything.

14694. Do you happen to know how many people are in the workhouse from Finis, or that there are any?—I don't know anything about it.

14695. Who are the District Commissioners for Kilderry?—I cannot tell you.

14696. Are they in favour of amalgamation?—One or two of them.

14697. Is there any public board in the Granard district in favour of the retention of the Granard Union except the Urban Council?—I don't know what you mean by public board.

14698. You are a public man, and you know boards composed of men elected by the public; is there any board of that character in the Grand district against amalgamation except the Urban Council of Grinstead?—I can only speak for my own board.

14703. You do not admit that there is not?—I don't admit that; I am only speaking of the Urban Council.

14704. How many police barracks are there in Grinstead?—I don't know.

14705. The Grinstead Guardians are in favour of amalgamation?—On several occasions they have passed contrary resolutions; that last one was on account of the fixtures going on.

14706. CHAIRMAN.—Did the Grinstead Rural District pass any resolution?—Not that I know of; you have the Chairman of that Board here, and there is one of the Guardians here too.

Mr. Mulsfoot.—I think the District Councillors thought the Guardians were quite sufficient to deal with that; the Guardians embrace the three districts.

14707. Mr. Delany.—You complain of the state of the roads in the Grinstead Union?—I did not make any serious complaint; they are not good.

14708. Is that due to a want of proper contracts; is the starvation policy pursued on the roads of Grinstead as well as the workhouse?—I won't answer that question.

14709. You have a complaint of the roads of Grinstead; you cannot explain it?—No; I have nothing to do with the roads; it is not for me to complain of the roads.

14710. Mr. Mulsfoot.—Were you present at the Inquiry held by Major Rutledge Fair in July, 1931?—Yes.

14711. Did you see Mr. Healy and Mr. Delany there fighting the battle of the Grinstead Guardians against amalgamation?—I did indeed; it was I helped to employ him.

14712. Have all these people changed their mind, including Mr. Delany and the Guardians?—I don't think so.

14713. And don't you remember how successful they were in opposing amalgamation and convincing the Local Government Board that it was wrong?—That is public property; through the eloquence and shiffliness of Mr. Delany.

Feb. 27, 1904

Mr. P. M. Reilly.

Mr. FRANCIS REILLY, J.P., examined.

14714. Mr. Mulsfoot.—Are you a member of the Urban District Council of Grinstead?—The Chairman?—Yes.

14715. How long have you been an Urban District Councillor?—About seventeen years.

14716. And you know the feelings of the local people well?—Yes.

14717. Do you believe the local people are opposed to the breaking up of the Grinstead Workhouse?—Yes; entirely opposed.

14718. Are you yourself opposed to the breaking up of the Grinstead Workhouse?—Yes; I am.

14719. Did you hear the evidence of the last witness?—I heard it all, and endorse it.

14720. And you think it would be a mistake and worse to dissolve the Grinstead Workhouse?—I think it would be a great mistake in the interests of the Poor.

14721. And that the Guardians would not come in from that distance to Longford?—You would have none of them surely.

14722. And you don't believe it would be a financial gain to Grinstead?—I think it would be a loss to Grinstead.

14723. Nobody suggests that it would be a gain to Grinstead?—Nobody.

Mr. Delany.—Except the moral effect.

14724. Mr. Mulsfoot.—Do you think you would gain anything from the moral effect?—I don't think so.

14725. Mr. Delany.—When you speak of local opinion I suppose you refer to the people of the immediate vicinity of Grinstead?—Yes.

Mr. Francis Reilly.

Mr. EDWARD O'REILLY examined.

14726. Mr. Mulsfoot.—Are you a member of the Grinstead Board of Guardians?—Yes.

14727. And of the District Council No. 1?—Yes.

14728. How long have you been a Guardian?—About five years.

14729. Where do you live?—Five miles from Grinstead—near Ballinacree.

14730. Have you considered the question of the breaking up of the Grinstead Union?—Yes.

14731. Are you opposed to the breaking up of it?—Yes.

14732. Were you present at the meeting of the Guardians when it was considered?—Yes.

14733. And there was a minority of twenty-one against the dissolution of the union?—Yes.

14734. How do you account for the resolution having been carried?—The greater part of the Guardians were not in on that day, and then there was a majority for the breaking up of the union.

14735. How many members in the total board?—About seventy-six.

14736. And fifty-three were present, and some of those who were in favour of it were from the Owen district?—Yes; the greater part were from Owen.

14737. Do you believe that a majority of the entire board, if they were all present, would be in favour of retaining Grinstead Union as it stands?—Yes, I do.

14738. They were not in favour of amalgamation in 1931?—They were not.

14739. Was the question then considered by them last?—I think so.

14740. And they engaged counsel and solicitor to oppose the amalgamation?—Yes.

14741. You think that if the Union of Grinstead was broken up the Guardians could not be induced to come into Longford?—Very few.

14742. They would not undertake the expenditure of time and money?—They would not come the journey.

14743. And it would lead to the disfranchisement of the country altogether?—Yes.

14744. Some portions then of the Union of Longford would be very far away from the town?—Yes.

14745. Sixteen or seventeen miles?—It would be more, I think.

14746. And these people have no connection in the way of markets or fairs, or any other business, with Longford?—No; no connection at all.

14747. Would they have any means of getting in by railway?—Part of them would, at Ballywillan.

14748. How far would that be from you?—About twelve miles.

14749. And how far would Longford be from you?—About six miles.

14750. You don't consider there would be any financial gain, at all events, to Grinstead from the breaking up of the union?—I do not.

14751. You know the workhouse in Grinstead?—Yes.

14752. What condition is it in now?—It is in very fair condition; it could be made better.

14753. Have the Guardians been expending money upon it lately?—They have expended £250 in the last two or three years, according to my opinion.

14754. Is Grinstead also the meeting place for three District Councils?—Yes.

14755. And the representatives have to attend these meetings monthly?—Yes.

14756. Were you present at the inquiry before Major Rutledge-Fair?—No.

14757. In the event of the Commission reporting in favour of amalgamation of unions generally in the county, what would you recommend should be the workhouse arrangements in the County of Longford?—There are more facilities for inmates in Longford than there are about Grinstead.

14758. You think Grinstead, as a centre, should be maintained under any circumstances?—I think so.

14759. You heard the evidence of Mr. P. M. Reilly on this general question?—Yes; I agree with him generally.

14760. Mr. Delany.—How many Guardians do you happen to know altogether are in the union?—About seventy-five or seventy-six; I am not very accurate.

14761. This meeting at which the resolution about

Feb. 17, 1904.

Mr. Eugene O'Reilly.

amalgamation was come to, that was a summarized meeting?—Yes; some of the Guardians got commenced and more of them did not.

14758. We must presume that all got it; how many turned up?—Fifty-three.

14759. How many voted for amalgamation?—I suppose over thirty.

14760. From that day to this has there been any deliberate effort on the part of the board as a whole or of those who were present at that meeting to rescind that resolution?—Yes; there was.

14761. With what result?—A failure.

14762. So that the Guardians as a corporate body are in favour of breaking up their own union?—Not as a whole.

14763. I mean the majority?—The majority that was there that day, but not the majority of the whole Board of Guardians.

14764. I asked you was there any attempt on the part of those who were not present or were dissatisfied with the result to revise that result on a subsequent occasion?—There was.

14765. Did they revise it?—They did not.

14766. Was there a vote on it?—There was.

14767. And were the men for retaining the union beaten again?—Yes.

14768. Are you a regular attendant?—No.

14769. Are you aware that Major Fair from time to time reported in language expressive and forcible on the condition of the workhouse?—Yes.

14770. Was that referring to the good management of the Guardians?—Well, no; I think not.

MR. PATRICK MACKEN TESTIFIED.

Mr. Patrick Macken.

14782. Mr. Muldoon.—Are you Chairman of the Grand Board of Guardians?—Yes.

14783. How long have you held that position?—About two years.

14784. Were you present when the Guardians passed this resolution dissolving their union?—Yes.

14785. Did you vote against it?—Yes.

14786. You think the dissolution of the Grand Union would not work well for the ratepayers of the union?—Certainly; I believe we would have an increase of the rates.

14787. How many Guardians have you in the union?—Seventy-six, I think.

14788. And there were fifty-three voted on that occasion?—Yes.

14789. Is it your impression now that really a majority of the Guardians would be opposed to it if they were present and discussed the question?—If they were present; I would not be able to give you an answer.

14790. On previous occasions the question of amalgamation has been considered by them?—Yes.

14791. And they then were opposed to it?—Yes.

14792. One of the applications was successfully resisted by Mr. Delany?—Yes; at a special inquiry.

14793. Do you remember anything of a protest being signed in the union against amalgamation?—Yes; I recollect it.

14794. What was the date of that?—I think in 1901.

14795. And a majority of them signed that protest?—Yes.

14796. Do you think, in the event of the Grand Union being dissolved, that the Guardians would come into the Longford Workhouse to the weekly meetings to discharge the duties?—They could not come except at great inconvenience. It is very seldom they would come, I am sure.

14797. And as matters at present stand Grand Union is much lower rated than Longford?—Yes; since the passing of the Local Government Act we are working at least 7d. in the £ cheaper in Grand than in Longford.

14798. CHAIRMAN.—Is that for Poor Law or other purposes?—General rates.

14799. Mr. Muldoon.—For poor rate alone do you happen to know the figures?—The average for the last three years for poor rate alone would be 8d. in Grand and 7½d. in Longford, and 5½d. in Ballymahon; that is all round.

14800. Therefore there would be a disadvantage in amalgamating with Longford as things stand?—I believe so.

14801. Do you think there would further be some disadvantage as regards the bringing of the sick and destitute poor into Longford?—I am quite certain of that.

14771. What have the Guardians done to put their house in order?—They were waiting to see the result of this Commission.

14772. As a matter of fact, did not the Board of Guardians since after time pass a resolution not to spend a halfpenny on the house?—No.

14773. Did they ever instruct Mr. Thompson to prepare estimates of what ought to be done?—Several times.

14774. Did they ever carry out any of his recommendations?—None of them.

14775. Can you put your finger on one work they carried out?—I cannot.

14776. Have you gone through the house yourself?—Yes.

14777. Have you seen its condition?—I have not been through the house these two years.

Mr. Muldoon.—As I understand, you admit that the majority of the present Guardians are a bad lot?

Mr. Delany.—Don't put it that way.

14778. Mr. Muldoon.—Mr. Delany's clients of two years ago have done nothing he says to put the house in order?—I believe so.

14779. And in passing this resolution they have committed suicide to save themselves from slaughter?—I cannot swear that.

14780. CHAIRMAN.—One of your objections to the breaking up of the Grand Union is the fear that it would lead to higher rates?—Yes.

14781. If you were satisfied that the rates would not be raised, but might be lowered, would that change your mind at all?—No.

14802. During your chairmanship have any improvements been made in the workhouse buildings?—Well, there have been some.

14803. Some money has been spent upon it; how much do you happen to know?—Well, it is smaller, from £105 to £205; and I know that we are quite prepared to spend some more if things would settle down.

14804. A little friction, as we happen to know, has been going on there for some time?—Yes.

14805. And you have had more than one inquiry?—Yes.

14806. Do you believe that it is this friction and trouble that have prevented the Guardians from sending in to put their house in order?—I am quite sure it was.

14807. At the present time the town of Grand is the meeting place for three District Councils?—Yes.

14808. And these three District Councils meet there monthly?—Yes; often at the same time.

14809. And it is also a Quarter Sessions town and market town?—Yes.

14810. And the people mostly of the entire union have business which brings them to the town of Grand?—Yes.

14811. And very few of them would have any connection in any way with Longford; would have no reason to come, or rarely an occasion to come, to Longford?—Very seldom.

14812. You are quite sure that the Guardians would be very unwilling to come to Longford weekly to meetings of the Longford Board of Guardians in the event of amalgamation?—I speak for myself in the respect; I could not come, nor I would not be a Guardian for my division if I had to come to Longford.

14813. CHAIRMAN.—Is your residence in the County of Longford?—Yes; two miles from Ballinacorney. I live within four miles of Grand and eight Irish miles from Longford.

14814. Mr. Muldoon.—Were you present at Major Buttidge-Fair's inquiry?—Yes.

14815. Did you give evidence?—No.

14816. Were you then Chairman of the Guardians?—No.

14817. The Local Government Board after that inquiry decided against touching the Grand Union?—Yes.

14818. Except the frictional trouble in the Grand Workhouse, which has since taken place, has anything happened to alter the circumstances which then existed?—Not that I am aware of.

14819. You think amalgamation, as it was undesirable then, would still be so?—I believe so.

14820. Mr. Delany.—You were at the inquiry held by Major Fair in Grand; was there any attempt tion on the continued refusal of the Guardians to spend money on the house at Gransard?—Command by you?

14821. By any person?—I don't recollect.

14822. Was it suggested that the house was maintained as it ought to be?—Oh, yes.

14823. That is as far back as 1893?—1901.

14824. You were a Guardian during that time?—Yes.

14825. From the time you were elected?—I presume you were elected after the passing of the Local Government Act of 1898—from that time on to the present here the reports of Major Fair, on the condition of the workhouse, have been that the house was in a dilapidated condition?—Yes.

14826. Will you tell this Commission what the Guardians have done to repair that state?—We did a lot of repairs.

14827. Give me the particulars of any one repair?—They were temporary repairs; we did not do any permanent improvements.

14828. I suppose when the wind blew off the slates you put them on, and when the windows were broken by refractory persons you had them replaced; have you done anything of a permanent character to put this house in order?—The Guardians have passed a resolution, and it is on the books, to expend close on £1,000 on the house. We have it in our minds to get a loan, if possible, to carry out improvements if we were sure that the union would be retained.

14829. How long ago is it since that resolution to spend £1,000 was passed?—It is not a year.

14830. Could you give me the date of it; was it before or after the inquiry held last March or April?—It was since the inquiry.

14831. Has anything been done to expend it?—No; in fact we were forbidden to expend any money until after this Commission would sit.

14832. Has it gone further than the minds of the few Guardians anxious to do right that that money should be expended; has it taken any tangible form; has the engineer been directed to make plans?—No; we were forbidden to go on with any permanent improvements until after this Commission.

14833. When?—I cannot give you the date.

14834. Were there repeated requests by Major Fair to get repairs done?—Not since that.

14835. Were there before that?—Yes.

14836. Were there repeated complaints by the medical officer of the workhouse as to the wretched condition which it was allowed to get into?—Oh, yes; he complained of that for six or seven years; probably ten.

14837. What was done to meet the doctor's requirements?—Well, there were so many things asked to be done I don't know.

14838. I will take it quietly; let me have any one thing that is done?—Could you ask me any one particular thing?

14839. No, I cannot; you are Chairman of the Board of Guardians; you tell me the doctor has been complaining for ten years; does your mind travel back to any one thing he complained of and that you did in the shape of an improvement to the house?—I know that he complained about not having a trained nurse there.

14840. I don't know that that is a happy subject for the Board of Guardians, nor do I think it born from the Board of Guardians would improve it; but I want to know of a structural character?—He complained of the floor in the infirmary ward being in a bad state; that has been repaired.

14841. Was that since the inquiry?—Yes.

14842. CHAIRMAN.—You don't mean to say that that has been repaired?—I understood so.

CHAIRMAN.—It is not a couple of weeks ago since we were there.

Mr. Delany.—I suppose you are alluding to the grave; there was a famous hole called the grave, which has been filled up.

CHAIRMAN.—But there were only loose stones thrown into it.

MR. DELANY.—I was told it had been repaired, but I did not see it myself.

14843. CHAIRMAN.—Don't you ever go through the house?—I was not through it for the last twelve months.

Mr. Delany.—May I put it to you, you were so disgusted with its condition you did not want to see it again?—I was not on the visiting committee.

14845. Have you a visiting committee that does not visit?—I must admit that they do not visit the house as often as they should.

14846. But beyond this grave, can you tell us anything else that Dr. Kenny complained of that you carried out?—There are apartments being fitted up which are going to cost us £25.

14847. How long has that apartment been in a dilapidated condition?—We did not require it ever before; certain parties were removed out of the infirmary that we had to fix up this apartment for, and we are doing it far from very well.

14848. You don't give an opinion what the whole Guardians, if they were present, might do, but you admit the result of the summoned board is in favour of amalgamation?—Yes; the majority.

14849. I think you have told us that the average rate on land in Gransard has been £2, since the passing of the Local Government Act, and in Longford £1; there was a slight disparity in the Agricultural Census in Aid; do you know the average grant on buildings in the Longford and Gransard Unions?—I don't recollect, sir; but I know we in Gransard are working at a disadvantage in that respect for the Guardians of that day struck an insufficient rate, and we are suffering since then.

14850. So that the Gransard Guardians have always been in need of a little reform?—Probably.

14851. Do you know now what any reasonable man with a little feeling about him for the condition of his neighbours—what any reasonable man would require to be done in the Gransard Union to put it in order?—Well, I don't think I would be able to go into that.

14852. Would it cost a couple of thousand pounds?—Certainly.

14853. And that would be to bring it into a condition that it ought to be in?—I am with you there.

14854. Has the workhouse been continually neglected in proper repairs?—Well, I believe there should be more done with it.

14855. Is it the case of not doing a stitch in time?—Probably.

14856. So I may take it if the house was properly maintained in Gransard the rates which were struck would not be sufficient to meet the expenditure?—Well, I believe so.

14857. Consequently, the Gransard Workhouse and the Gransard Union has been running on a paper rate, insufficient to meet its lawful and honest obligations. Is the question with you entirely a question of a possible increase of rates?—Well, no.

14858. If the rates were not to be increased would you still be in favour of maintaining the union in Gransard?—Well, I believe it would be a disadvantage to the poor and sick and to the majority of the Guardians to dissolve it.

14859. What convenience have you for bringing in the poor to the workhouse in Gransard?—We have two ambulances.

14860. Are those the ambulances that have been complained of and spoken of as antiquated?—One of them is.

14861. Has anything been done to improve their condition?—About a year and a half ago there were new wheels put on.

14862. Was that after the old wheels had broken down in the service?—Yes.

14863. Of course you have not considered the question of what effect divisional riding would have on amalgamation?—Well, I would not be able to give you an opinion on that; for my part the division which I represent would rather have divisional rating.

14864. As to the inconvenience of men coming to Longford Union, suppose Mr. Kelly's theory were adopted, that we would get one representative from each electoral division, do you think that would be a wise arrangement?—Would that be in case we were going to be amalgamated?

14865. Amalgamation or no amalgamation?—I fear if you were going to be amalgamated with Longford it would be a bad arrangement; if there were two they would contrive to come once in a while, whereas if you had only one he would not.

14867. And if a number of them found it convenient to stay at home?—We would get on somehow.

14868. And if they had to travel to Longford the chances are that the workhouse would stand; what do you say to that?—That might be; it would turn very much on how the Longford Guardians would work for us.

Feb. 17, 1904.
Mr. Falrick
Mackin.

14866. Are not the Longford Guardians all respectable men who do everything right?—I have no fault to find with them.

14870. Of course the presence of three District Council meetings and the Board of Guardians every Monday at Granard is a consideration for the townspeople?—Well, of course, it is; there are few of us Guardians leave Granard without spending less or more.

14871. Mr. Muldoon.—As I understand, the Board of Guardians have made a minute to spend £1,000 on the workhouse, and the Local Government Board have asked them to stop their hands?—Yes.

14872. And you, personally, and the people you represent are willing to incur the additional expenditure to put the buildings in proper repair?—As far as I know I believe they are.

Mr. Muldoon.—I have a couple more witnesses who are engaged on the County Council and some diagrams who are on their way. I would like to put in my copy of the evidence given at Major Rutledge-Fair's inquiry and the letter of the Local Government Board, which I am sure you will have, and I also put in the letter addressed to the Clerk of the Granard Union; I have also a report upon the question of rates affecting the three unions of the county made and signed by Mr. Edgeworth, who will verify it later on in the hot, and who is Secretary of the County Council here.

Mr. JOHN PRATER examined.

Mr. John
Pratt.

14873. Mr. Muldoon.—You are a member of the County Council of Longford?—Yes.

14874. And a member of the Urban Council of Granard?—I am not; I was.

14875. Where do you live?—In Granard.

14876. Have you considered the question of the amalgamation of the Granard Union with Longford?—Yes.

14877. You are opposed to that?—Yes.

14878. As a large newspaper of the district?—Yes.

14879. And you don't think it would work out usefully for the ratepayers of the Granard Union?—Oh, no; nor for the poor.

14880. Do you think it would also result in that district being practically unrepresented upon the Board at Longford?—It would be practically disfranchised.

14881. The people could not attend?—No.

14882. And how do you say it would affect the destitute poor?—Supposing Granard was amalgamated with Longford there are parts of the Granard Union twenty statute miles from Longford; the conveyance of a sick person for twenty miles would be rather a difficult operation, because there is no direct railway communication.

14883. There are, I believe, in the Granard Union a number of small populous centres where there are a great number of poor?—Yes.

14884. And the Granard Workhouse lies at the present time very convenient to them?—Yes.

14885. There would be a great difficulty in the transit of those from Edgeworthstown, Pines, Coole, Scrubby, Bunkahy, and Ballinacree?—Edgeworthstown is wrong, but the others are right.

14886. There are a great number of poor in all these places?—There are.

14887. And the Granard Union lies convenient to them?—Yes, and there is no other union near them.

14888. At the present time the poor rate in Granard is lower than it is in any of the unions of this county?—The poor rate in Granard is 5½d. under Longford.

14889. Granard is a good market town, a fair town, and the Quarter Sessions meets there?—Yes.

14890. And three local District Councils meet there monthly?—Yes.

14891. And the Guardians and the District Councils are the same?—Yes.

14892. And it would be a great inconvenience to have them meet as Guardians in Longford and as District Councils in Granard?—It would.

14893. Were you present at Major Rutledge-Fair's inquiry?—Yes.

14894. Did you give evidence at it?—No.

14895. But you are aware that the Local Government

Board, as the result of the inquiry, decided that there should not be any amalgamation?—Yes.

14896. You know the feelings of the local people?—Yes, pretty well.

14897. Do you think they are generally opposed to amalgamation?—Well, there are peculiar circumstances at present. There is a certain amount of friction going on in the workhouse, and the Guardians seem to have got frightened, and they are crying out for amalgamation, without, I think, seeing what its effect would be.

14898. Its effect on the finances of the union or the poor. Did you think the ratepayers, as apart from the previous representatives of the poor in the Guardians, are opposed to amalgamation?—Certainly.

14899. You are a large newspaper in the district?—Not very large.

14900. What is your valuation?—About £122.

14901. Mr. Delaney.—I suppose you are aware that the Guardians of the Granard Union for a long time have been allowing the workhouse premises to get in disrepair?—Yes, I have heard that.

14902. And in fact have not been spending money that any reasonable being would spend in keeping the house right?—I have heard it alleged.

14903. Have you any reason to doubt it?—I don't know anything about it.

14904. Have you ever been through the workhouse?—I have been through it, but not lately. I have not been through it for the last ten years.

14905. Was it beginning to go wrong then?—I am not an expert in workhouses.

14906. I think you made the complaint that there would be a difficulty about the Guardians coming to Longford?—Yes.

14907. You are a member of the County Council?—Yes.

14908. Gentlemen have to come to that County Council from beyond Granard?—Yes.

Mr. Muldoon.—How often?

14909. Mr. Delaney.—I presume as often as there is a necessity—once or eight times a year?—Yes.

14910. And the work is done efficiently in that County Council?—I cannot tell you that.

14911. Is there any feeling against the County Council?—No; I have no complaints.

14912. Do you hear complaints about the Granard Board that is doing its work at home?—Yes.

14913. Do you hear anything but complaints?—Well, they are not objects of admiration.

14914. I believe complaints are made about everything in the Co. Longford?—Oh, yes.

14915. Have you ever heard complaints about the Local Government Board?—Oh, yes.

Mr. JOHN MASTERSON examined.

Mr. John Masterston.

14916. Mr. Muldoon.—Are you Chairman of the District Council of Granard, and a Justice of the Peace?—Yes.

14917. Have you considered the question of the amalgamation of the Granard Union?—Yes.

14918. Are you opposed to it?—Yes, I am.

14919. You think it would not be in the interests of the ratepayers or of the poor?—I don't think it would.

14920. Did you hear the evidence of Mr. Pettit, which has just been given. Generally speaking, do you agree with that evidence?—I do very fully.

14921. Has your District Council considered the question of amalgamation?—Yes, we did.

14922. Did you pass any resolution on the subject?—Yes, but that is some time ago.

14923. About two months ago?—At that time they were at war with the Local Government Board, but they are not now.

14924. What was the effect of the resolution passed?—In favour of amalgamation.

14925. Did they authorize you to give evidence before this inquiry upon this question of amalgamation?—Yes; about a fortnight ago.

14926. Did they know that you were opposed to the amalgamation?—Yes, they did. I voted against it.

14927. Then the very fact that they nominated you to give evidence before this Commission against amalgamation means that they have changed their view of two months ago?—Yes.

14928. Do you know if either of the two other District Councils that meet there have passed any resolution on the subject?—They are here to-day to give evidence, and they are in favour of retaining the union at Granard.

14929. And you are aware that the Urban Council is in favour of retaining the union at Granard?—Yes.

14930. And you know the feelings of the local people?—Yes.

14931. Do you think that Guardians could be induced to come to Longford in the event of Granard being amalgamated with this union?—I don't believe they would. Some Guardians reside nearly twenty miles away beyond Longford. I have twelve divisions here that I have ridden down tonight. Abbeylara is less than twenty miles from here, and I firmly believe those Guardians could not possibly attend, and apart from that, the poor would find it impossible to come from that. At night, or other times, I don't see how long ones could be transferred twenty miles across the country. If you amalgamated the workhouses of Granard, I am afraid we could not convert it to any other purpose, because we have no water power in Granard as they have at Longford, and, of course, there are too many applications in at the present time for industrial and technical schools, so I would be very much afraid Granard Workhouse would be a white elephant at the hands of the ratepayers; apart from that our rate would increase 5d. in the £ if amalgamated with Longford.

14932. How long are you chairman of the District Council?—Four years.

14933. Have there been any complaints about the District Council?—Not a word.

14934. That is the only body of which we have heard of which there have been no complaints?—I never heard of any.

14935. Mr. Delany.—You admit now, I think, together with all the other witnesses we have had, that the Board of Guardians at a summoned Board passed a resolution in favour of amalgamation?—Yes.

14936. At which there were fifty-three members present?—Yes.

14937. Do you remember the Board at which there were three gentlemen appointed to attend to give evidence here?—Yes.

14938. That was subsequent to the resolution?—That was two months ago, and a reformation has taken place since then. No meeting has been held since, except the District Council meeting, where they appointed three members.

14939. Are you a representative of the District Council today?—Yes.

14940. You don't represent the Guardians?—The Guardians and Council are all one.

14941. How many members of the Board of Guardians are in the District Council you represent?—Something like fifty-four.

14942. Did they come to a resolution for or against on the question of amalgamation?—They did; they were getting annoyed at the way things were going on in Granard, and they wanted to get away from it; but since two months we changed our minds.

14943. When you found some victims that turned the attention of the public from yourselves, you were willing to remain?—Yes.

14944. Did your District Council pass any resolution on the subject of amalgamation?—No.

14945. Did they give you any mandate as to the view you should put before this Commission when appointing you to come here?—They knew I voted against amalgamation, and a month afterwards they appointed me to come here.

14946. Was your appointment to come here arranged at a meeting of which special notice was given that that would be a matter for discussion?—Yes; the paper came from the Local Government Board asking us to do so.

14947. Was there any notice sent to you as a District Councillor for that meeting, saying that the question of this amalgamation Commission would come before them, and it would be your duty to appoint deputies to come here?—No; but it was at a full Board, and they all knew what they were doing.

14948. But the Guardians' meeting, at which a resolution was passed in favour of amalgamation, was a summoned Board for that purpose?—That was two months ago; a number of charges have taken place since then.

14949. I think you mentioned Abbeylara was twenty miles from Longford?—Twenty statute miles as the crow flies, a division alongside Abbeylara, Newgrove, 14950. Do you know Moyne?—That is only twelve miles from here, but it is not in my division.

14951. Were you ever in Moyne?—Yes.

14952. How many miles from Granard is Moyne?—I am not quite sure.

14953. A number of Guardians who gave evidence here to-day admitted that the present condition of the workhouses in Granard is very bad?—Yes.

14954. And that that is due to neglecting to spend money on it year after year?—I heard you saying the contrary at the inquiry.

14955. I am paid for saying such things, but you are giving evidence?—And you proved the contrary in a very eloquent manner.

14956. I will do the opposite now. I suggest that the Guardians of Granard have not been striking proper rates. I suggest that they are attempting a starvation performance—carrying on two workhouses on starvation lines. Tell me the salary of the clerk of your union?—There are so many things tumbled up together.

14957. What is the salary of your clerk of the union?—I think it is about £20 a year.

14958. I want to know the salary which you pay the clerk of your union as clerk?—£65; you know there are emoluments.

14959. I want to know what the salary of your clerk of the union is as clerk—has he £10 a year?—As clerk of the District Council.

14960. As clerk of the union, the man who has to cater for seventy-six Guardians?—It is something short £15 a year, but his salary collectively is £250.

14961. Am I right in saying his salary as clerk of the union is £10?—It is not; it is £250 a year all told.

14962. He got an increase in salary on account of the District Council work?—Yes; an increase of salary was voted him, and the Local Government Board very wisely considered he had enough, and would not sanction it.

14963. How much was the increase?—It was £20 a year.

14964. How much was he getting as clerk?—£250 a year.

14965. Don't you know that that is not a frank answer to the question?—I am not sure what the exact figure is.

14966. What salary do you pay your relieving officers?—They are paid different salaries; there are three of them.

14967. What was the last one appointed?—I think £45 a year. They are paid extra fees for extra work now and again. They can't get a standard salary.

14968. You are in a difficulty. You have a sort of liking for this workhouse. You don't know what would happen to it if broken up?—I would not like to see it broken up; the poor would suffer and the ratepayers would suffer.

14969. There is nothing you could suggest that it could be turned to?—I am assuming it won't be broken up at all.

14970. You did not think it could be made a technical school, and you had an objection to its being made a lunatic asylum. Has it ever occurred to you that it would be useful as an object-lesson to the rest of the country to turn it into a museum.

14971. Mr. Muldoon.—The meeting of the Granard Guardians which passed the resolution in favour of amalgamation was composed of fifty-three Guardians?—I think about that.

14972. The resolution was carried by a majority of eleven?—Yes.

14973. And in the majority there were seventeen Guardians from Cavan?—Yes.

14974. You don't know what the actual figure of the salary of the clerk of your union is as clerk?—I don't know the exact figure, because there are a number of different emoluments. He is clerk of three District Councils.

14975. In the event of his office becoming vacant tomorrow, and you advertised it at this figure of £250, do you think you would have a few candidates?—I am sure we would. Nine or ten were looking for it when it was vacant before, about twelve years ago.

Mr. JOHN THOMPSON examined.

Feb. 17, 1904.
Mr. John
Thompson.

14976. Mr. Muldoon.—Are you an engineer?—Yes.
14977. Where do you reside?—In Glanard.
14978. Are you a ratepayer also of the union?—In a small way.

14979. Have you considered the question of the amalgamation of the Glanard Union with Longford?—Well, yes, I have.

14980. And you are opposed to that?—Yes, I am.

14981. Have you been engaged by the Board of Guardians in making estimates as to the repairs of the workhouse?—Yes, I have been engineer to the Board now for many years.

14982. Will you tell the Commission if, within the last five or six years, you were asked to make any estimate as to repairs?—Yes, I was. I was asked to go into the thing thoroughly and see what would the outlay come to to greatly improve the workhouse. For instance, to provide a proper kitchen with modern cooking utensils; to provide sanitary annexes for the buildings; and hot water supply; plastering walls; ceiling the walls and floors; and, roughly speaking, my estimate came to about £2,000.

14983. Were any of the works carried out which you estimated for?—Very trifling.

14984. CHAIRMAN.—Did you estimate for new windows?—Yes.

14985. Mr. Muldoon.—Are you aware that the Guardians put a resolution on the books to expend £1,000 on these works?—Yes, I am.

14986. Do you happen to know that the Local Government Board asked them to stay their hands for the present?—I believe it was an understood thing that they would stay their hands until something definite would be decided on.

14987. Have a number of labourers' cottages been erected in the union?—Yes.

14988. About how many?—There is a scheme which is in course of being carried out now, and I think we will have pretty nearly 200, perhaps over 200, cottages.

14989. Are you also an assistant County Surveyor?—Yes.

14990. And you know the roads and the distances of the county fairly well?—Yes, I do.

14991. In the event of the Glanard Union being broken up, and that they would have to come to Longford, some of the Guardians from the outlying districts would have a long way to come?—Yes; in one of the districts that was discussed here it would be fully 20 statute miles.

14992. About how far is Scrubby from Longford?—It would be considerably over twenty miles—twenty-five statute miles.

14993. Are the roads good generally. The railway is not accessible?—No; the roads are pretty good in the Glanard division.

14994. It would be a very long way to bring the poor?—It would be a very long way to bring the poor from the outlying parishes.

CHAIRMAN.—They would go to Cavan, not Longford, from Scrubby.

14995. Mr. Muldoon.—How far is Moyne from Longford?—I think about fifteen statute miles approximately.

14996. How far is Moyne from Glanard?—About thirteen miles.

14997. Mr. Delany.—I suppose if the workhouse were broken up your occupation would be gone?—It would not trouble me very much.

14998. CHAIRMAN.—Are you paid by a percentage on the work done?—

14999. Mr. Delany.—How many years have you had an intimate knowledge of the workhouse of Glanard?—Ten years.

15000. During that time has there been very much work carried out of an improving character?—Not very much radical change, but the upkeep was looked after.

15001. With the result that it requires £2,000 to put it in repair now?—The £2,000 includes putting in these works that never existed before.

15002. But ought to have existed?—These things were not so much in front when the workhouse was built.

15003. Am I right in saying the walls of the house are not plastered?—They never were plastered.

15004. What has been done with the roof—has it been rendered?—There is no ceiling; it is thoroughly rendered.

15005. Could you design a graphic ward that would describe the windows of the hospital?—They are of the old description.

15006. Assigned?—Yes; they are the ordinary windows, and open on hinges.

15007. I suppose the hinges have ceased to work a long time ago?—No.

15008. What condition are the doors in?—Wearing and worn.

15009. One of your proposals was to put in a proper kitchen. Don't you think in any kind of official life you should begin with a respectable kitchen?—Yes, it is badly needed.

15010. Is the present kitchen a disgrace?—It is worse.

15011. You were to put in a proper kitchen, and sanitary arrangements of an up-to-date character?—Yes.

15012. And you were to plaster the walls that were never plastered, and repair the floors that were laid?—Yes.

15013. What sort of a place is the mortuary?—It has been shifted. I sent a small sketch plan to the Local Government Board of a new locality for it, and that has not been carried out.

15014. How long ago is it since you first were asked to make any estimate about the repairs of this workhouse?—I think close on two years.

15015. Has it been carried out since?—Not in any extensive way.

15016. Has there been any honest attempt made to carry out the plans you made?—No, certainly not; but I would account for that by the state the workhouse is in. They don't know very well whether it is going to remain, and they have been occupied with other matters.

15017. Have they a sort of presentiment of judgment?—They have not.

15018. I think you told us they agreed to carry out £1,000 worth of repairs?—They did.

15019. Although your estimate for absolutely necessary work was £2,000?—The first estimate I made did not include as much as the last estimate.

15020. Does your last estimate include anything that ought to be left out?—No.

15021. Then if it took £2,000 to do that work, is it not remarkable for a Board of Guardians to say that by deciding to spend £1,000 they were honestly attempting to do their duty to the public or the poor?—The hope was that when the £1,000 was spent they would carry out some more of the work.

15022. Has there been any honest attempt on the part of this Board of Guardians to do its duty properly to the house?—I would go the length of saying that there has not been an attempt made to carry out these modern improvements.

15023. Did you hear about the grave that was filed to that sample of their intelligent way of doing business?—I did not hear about the grave.

15024. Have you ever seen it. Do you know the hole beside the bed in the ward where the old women are?—It is far-fetched to call it a grave; it is a hole.

15025. What has been done to improve it?—Everything is remaining as it is.

15026. You happen to know that Moyne is fifteen miles from Longford?—Roughly speaking.

15027. When you speak of thirteen miles from Glanard, do you mean from the extremity of the county?—The Glanard Union goes down somewhat further the Moyne?—I think it touches the Co. Leitrim.

15028. Does it not go at least three miles beyond Moyne Crossroads?—It is not there. I would say two.

15029. So that it is fifteen miles to the confines of the Moyne district?—Yes.

15030. Does not the Longford Union go down to exactly the same place?—It does.

15031. So that at the present moment there is just as much hardship inflicted on the poor coming in from there?—You have not much to choose when you take that point.

15032. Are you aware that repeatedly the Guardians of Glanard refused to carry out works by resolution?—I am aware they never ordered me to carry them out.

15033. I presume they went as far in the hanging as asking you to make plans?—That was not hanging.

15034. What have they done with the plans?—They have pigeon-holed them.

MR. PETER KENNAN EXAMINED.

15036. And of the Urban Council of Granard, and a large ratepayer?—Yes.

15037. Have you considered the amalgamation of the Granard Union?—Yes.

15038. Are you opposed to it?—Yes.

15039. As a ratepayer of the county, and a member for the duration, what is your valuation?—Really, I could not tell you. I pay £45 or £46 a year rates.

15040. As a ratepayer you don't think it would be an advantage to you to be joined to Longford?—No.

15041. Do you think it would lead to any difficulty in the division of Granard being represented on the Longford Board?—I do.

15042. You think Guardians could not be induced to come to Longford?—They might periodically come, once every twelve months, if there was anything on special, but I think from the way the Guardians are arranged at present, it would be an impossibility for them to attend.

15043. Is it your view that the local people are opposed to amalgamation?—They are.

15044. And you think the resolution passed by the Guardians in the Granard Union did not represent the views of the ratepayers?—I don't think there was any passing in it.

15045. What division of the county do you represent in the County Council?—Bunclahy.

15046. Where is that situated?—The nearest point of Granard would be about two Irish miles, and the extreme eight or nine.

15047. How far are you from Longford?—24½ miles.

15048. At present you have to come in here to the County Council?—I have.

15049. About how often in the year?—Between committee meetings and agricultural meetings, I do so it would be twenty-four or twenty-five times a year.

15050. Do you find it convenient to come in?—Very inconvenient.

15051. And, of course, expensive?—Very expensive.

15052. And the chances from whom the Guardians are now drawn are not able to incur the expenses?—I believe not except in very few cases.

15053. Do you think it would also lead to difficulty in the transfer of the sick poor?—I do. I think if fever broke out, as there was within my own recollection in twenty-five years, I think it would be a matter of impossibility to remove the sick people from Granard town.

15054. Do you know anything about the Granard Board of Guardians?—Except what I see in the papers. I am not a member.

15055. You don't know anything about the union buildings?—Not much.

15056. You do know that the rate in the Granard Union is smaller than it is in Longford?—I do.

15057. And as things stand it would be a disadvantage to the ratepayers to come into this town?—A great disadvantage.

15058. Granard is the market town for a very large district there?—It is.

15059. And it is the meeting-place of three District Councils?—It is.

15060. In the event of the Commission being in favour of lessening the number of unions in the county, what arrangement would you suggest should be made?—I would say that Granard and Ballymahon should stand; they could not be utilised for any other purpose except as workhouses with advantage, and Longford is the only one that could be utilised with advantage for any manufacturing or industrial purpose.

15061. One union would be too few in the county, and the county would be best served by having one at each end?—Yes, and they have a county hospital in Longford in addition; but I would be in favour of the hospital of every union being retained. It would be very detrimental to the interests of the poor of the county if any of the three hospitals at present were disturbed.

15062. Have the County Council considered the question at all of amalgamation of unions on the county?—To-day they have been working at it.

15063. Have they come to any determination?—They have been voting.

15064. Are there any complaints about the County Council in this locality?—None, that I have heard of.

15065. You know the feeling of the local people in the district you represent?—Yes.

15066. And generally in the Granard Union do you think the ratepayers are opposed to amalgamation?—I am sure any sensible ratepayer is, and that they are generally.

15067. How do you account for the Granard Board passing the resolution?—Some of the Guardians I have been speaking to could give me an explanation of why the resolution was passed.

15068. They passed it in a panic?—They all say they would like to get out of it as Guardians to say plain; in fact if there were paid Guardians they would be in favour of them.

15069. Were you present at Major Rutledge-Fair's inquiry?—I was.

15070. The bulk of the evidence there was against amalgamation?—It was.

15071. And the Granard Board of Guardians successfully opposed it?—They did.

15072. Mr. Deasy.—The Longford County Council held a special meeting to-day to consider this question?—Yes.

15073. Did they pass a resolution in favour of amalgamation?—By a majority.

15074. Everything is done in this world by a majority, and they had your disapproval and your facts before them?—I did not say any more on the matter.

15075. Were those members of the Longford County Council as unable to express their reasons as the Granard Board of Guardians?—They did not give their reasons very strongly.

15076. They gave their votes?—They did; they said that the public were in favour of amalgamation, and they passed a resolution by nine to seven in favour of it.

15077. I think you told us that you don't think there was any meeting in the Granard resolution?—I don't.

15078. Does that show a want of intelligence in the Guardians?—There are other complications.

15079. Is one of the complications a want of intelligence?—Outside influence.

15080. And want of intelligence?—I think really on a good many points they are very intelligent.

15081. But they don't understand their resolutions. You are a County Councillor. Have you taken any steps as County Councillor to ascertain the feelings of the people on the question of amalgamation?—Oh, certainly.

15082. Are there any of them here to-day?—I am here on their behalf.

15083. Did you call a public meeting?—I am in touch with them every day of the week.

15084. And you are also in touch with the Guardians every day of the week?—Yes.

15085. You are a large contractor to the union?—If I was not the lowest man I suppose I would not get it.

15086. In 1905 I am told you supplied £180 worth of goods to them, and in 1908 £76 worth, and in 1901 £107 worth?—I don't know that those figures are right. I don't care twopenny if I never had a contract.

15087. Your interest is entirely a ratepayer's interest?—Certainly.

15088. And if you could be shown that the blotting out of the Granard Union, with all its facilities, would lower the rates, you would be in favour of it?—I would.

MR. FRANCIS BROWNE EXAMINED.

15089. Mr. Deasy.—You are a Guardian of the Granard Union?—Yes; deputed by that body to attend here to give evidence.

15090. Are you residing in the urban district of Granard?—I am residing in the Rural District of Granard.

15091. How long have you been a Guardian?—Something like thirteen years.

15092. During that time what has been the conduct of the Board of Guardians in reference to the house?

Have they done anything to keep it in running repair?—Nothing that was permanent; they were striving to repair, more or less.

15093. Do you agree with the description which has been given here as to the unfortunate condition of the house at present?—Yes, I do agree with it.

15094. And you admit, with Mr. Thompson, that it would take a large sum of money to put it in repair?—Indeed it would.

15095. Are you one of the majority who passed this resolution about amalgamation?—On the 27th of April last, I served a five weeks' notice of motion to consider the question of amalgamation. On June 1st, the following motion was proposed by myself, and seconded by Mr. Patrick Liddy:—"That we ask the Local Government Board to reconsider the question of amalgamating the Grandard Union, in consequence of the heavy expenses likely to be incurred by the proposed improvements in the workhouse and hospital, and likely increase in officers' salaries." There was an amendment proposed:—"That the subject be postponed for the present, the Local Government Board having recently appointed a Commission to inquire into the question of amalgamation." There were twenty-nine for the motion and twelve against. Then in October there came a circular from the Local Government Board asking us to answer certain queries with regard to this Commission. A committee was appointed, and on the 18th of November the report of the committee was submitted. The number of Guardians at that meeting was twenty-eight, and they passed it unanimously, and it is a report for the amalgamation of the union on a general basis. In December the chairman got a meeting called so as to have his views with regard to amalgamation before this Commission, and on the 4th of January the chairman put it to the meeting to consider the question of amalgamation, and he stated the object he had was to have the opinion of the Guardians whether they were in favour of amalgamation or not, as he would be guided by their decision. The majority on that date was thirty-four to twenty in favour of amalgamation.

15095. After thirteen years as Guardian in Grandard Union, are you of opinion that it is in the interests of the ratepayers of the Grandard Union to list on the union?—I know that if they were required to put the house in proper order, as it should be, it would have increased the rates so that we would be nearly equal to any other union.

15096. On the assumption now that Grandard is blotted out, you know that that would lead in time to a lessening of the management expenditure?—I will give you my own idea. As far as demeritary classification, we have accommodation in Grandard for about seventy mothers and children. But the other day, when we made inquiries, we have only twelve of that description. It takes the same amount of fire, light, and attendance to look after them, and if it was divided—and the same thing applies to the whole place—one apartment could provide for them all. The house is built to contain 1,003.

15098. In your time has the population of the workhouse gone steadily down?—Steadily down. The inmates at present this year are something more than they were during my time.

15099. Are there any matters that you would like to tell the Commissioners as to the feeling of the public. We hear a lot about public opinion in Grandard. Outside the Urban District of Grandard, what is the public opinion?—The feeling of the people of the district that I represent is in favour of amalgamation. At the time of my election it was partly one of my plans.

15100. I believe the former chairman of the Board of Guardians was Mr. Higgins?—Yes.

15101. He was opposed amalgamation?—Yes.

15102. And he disappeared at the election?—He was not returned.

15103. During his three years of office were there repeated resolutions by the Board of Guardians not to do any work?—Generally speaking, there were. I remember to act on several committees and hiring matters of reform before the Board, and they would be rejected afterwards.

15104. You are here in pursuance of a resolution in favour of amalgamation?—In pursuance of those whom I represent.

15105. Mr. McFadden.—Where do you live?—Close on two Irish miles this side of Grandard.

15106. How far from Longford?—About ten Irish miles.

15107. How do you get home?—By my own horse.

15108. Have you a farm?—Yes.

15109. What is your valuation in the Grandard Union?—Between £20 and £30.

15110. What is the exact amount. Tell us the truth?—I am not able to tell you exactly. I have it in two or three different places.

15111. What is it now. Is it £30 in the entire?—It is more; I have a valuation in three townlands.

15112. Can you write your name?—Readily.

15113. Is that "Francis Browne" there (as does—and) underlined with pencil?—That is the very name, and my own handwriting.

15114. Listen to this:—"To the Local Government Board, Dublin.—We, the undersigned, Guardians of the Grandard Union, hereby protest against either taking away from the Grandard Union the five divisions of the Co. Carrow, or the dissolution of the Grandard Union, on the ground that either of such changes is calculated to inflict increased hardship and inconvenience on the poor, to whose wants it is the duty of the Guardians to see." Is not that very fine?—Yes, it is.

15115. And such change will cause an unnecessary waste of the ratepayers' money, and practically disfranchise most of the present Union of Grandard. What did you sign that?—I would like to know the date of that.

15116. Who presented that to you?—I did not read it, but I believe it was the Rev. Fr. Connolly.

15117. When did he tell you. Has he changed his views?—I could not say whether he has or not, but he came to me one night something in or about 11 o'clock. I was then in bed. He told me he was going around getting a petition signed; that there was a removal or something to that effect, that five divisions were going to leave our union, and leave an inconvenience on the remainder of the union. He asked me was I for amalgamation or not. I said I was for amalgamation. He asked me would I be a party to take away the living or salary of the priests that were there. For his own part he did not care; he was only there for seven or eight months, and perhaps might not be there much longer, and he asked me to sign. There was not much time for me. It was out of my bed I had to go. I did not read it, and I signed, when my wife asked me not to be keeping the priest waiting at such an hour, only to put my name.

15118. This was before the inquiry that took place before Major Rutledge-Park?—That is since the inquiry.

15119. You said you did not remember when you signed it?—It is since it; but I cannot give the date when it was.

15120. Were you at the inquiry?—I was.

15121. And you swear this has been signed since that?—Since that.

15122. What were your views when you were at that inquiry?—My views were that I believed we would be better by amalgamation, but I gave no evidence.

15123. Then you signed this protest afterwards?—Against the five divisions going, as far as I was led to believe, under undue influence.

15124. "On the ground that either of such changes is calculated to inflict increased hardship and inconvenience to the poor, to whose wants it is the duty of the Guardians to see, and such change will cause an unnecessary waste of the ratepayers' money." Do you state here publicly that you, a Guardian of the poor, signed that without reading it?—I did.

15125. On the statement of the clergyman that it was opposed to amalgamation?—Yes.

15126. Did you say to him that you were opposed to amalgamation?—I did.

15127. And were opposed to amalgamation at the date you signed that?—To a certain amount I was.

15128. Now you are a whole-hogger?—I may tell you that any person would have the same body removed.

15129. Is it entirely because of the composition of the present body that you go in for amalgamation?—Not altogether. I believe from the way our population is dwindling away that in the near future our rates will be far lower than they are.

15130. When did you come to that conclusion?—I see every little household removed; that has been the cause of increasing these rates. I see labourers' cottages put up, and the poor diminishing.

15131. Are you opposed to the erection of labourers' cottages?—Not one bit. I gave evidence at the last inquiry, and the houses even were not built that I had sworn to.

15132. In 1902 you were opposed to amalgamation. When did you change your mind; was it in 1903 or was it since what are called the Grandard scandals?—I did not change my view.

15133. Are you still opposed to amalgamation?—I am not—I am for amalgamation.

15134. You stated a minute ago that you signed you were opposed to amalgamation, and told the clergyman 501.—I did not. I told you under what circumstances I signed it.

15135. Did you not tell me you told the clergyman you were opposed to amalgamation?—I did not say so.

15136. Did you tell the clergyman you were in favour of amalgamation?—I told him I was in favour of amalgamation.

15137. Completely?—To a certain amount.

15138. Tell me what you said to the clergyman?—I am after explaining it; it is needless to repeat it.

15139. Did you say, "I am opposed to amalgamation"?—To a certain amount.

15140. What did that mean?—I may tell you this much—it is not my own vote when I give, it is the vote of the people who put me there.

15141. Then it was a natural thing for you to sign this because you were opposed to amalgamation?—It was the way it was put.

15142. You said a moment ago it was due to the undue influence of the clergyman—do you adhere to that statement?—He asked me the question to know what I be a party to that leaving, and I said I would not.

15143. Did you not say that it was his undue influence that led you to sign it?—I am telling you the influence.

15144. Did you say that a minute ago?—I have given my evidence, and you can go back on it if you like, and I won't repeat it more for you.

15145. I cannot make you be courteous or gentlemanly, I can only press you on the answers you are giving.—If I was giving evidence on your behalf you would be very courteous to me.

15146. You were very careful to bring here a resolution that you proposed about amalgamation?—I am very careful always to know what I am talking about.

15147. Although you don't know your valuation, did you happen to bring any resolution with you which you proposed at the board about the repairs of the house?—No.

15148. When did you propose any resolution at the Grand Board about repairing the house?—I don't know; I am not in the habit of going in for very large repairs.

Mr. MICHAEL CASEY examined.

15155. Mr. Deasy.—You have been a Guardian of the Longford Union for a great number of years?—Twelve years.

15156. During that time you have taken a deep interest in the working of the union?—Yes.

15157. Has your head always been ready and willing to comply with anything that was reasonable in the way of keeping the house in proper order and meeting the march of the times?—Always.

15158. Of course, there is a natural objection to expenditure?—Certainly.

15159. That has been got over, and you managed to do the right thing in the end?—I always objected to anything I considered unreasonable myself.

15160. Has your board considered the question of amalgamation?—Yes.

15161. You were summoned together to consider these queries from the Commission?—Yes.

15162. What result has your Board of Guardians come to?—They have come to the conclusion that they consider amalgamation of great benefit to the County Longford. Longford is substantially a small county.

15163. And the town of Longford is the centre?—Yes.

15164. At the present moment the furthest part of the union is at Dungort, beside Arragh—the furthest part of Granard from Longford would not be farther than that?—It might be about a mile more.

15165. During your term as a Guardian the poor had to be brought in from the confines of the county and the furthest parts of the union?—Yes.

15166. Has there been any difficulty?—No difficulty whatever.

15167. I believe in the union here you have a proper fever hospital van?—Yes, we have a van for ordinary cases.

15168. From your knowledge of the County Longford, and I believe you have been everywhere in it, do you think there would be any substantial inconvenience or hurt to the poor if Longford was to be 15149. I suppose you agree generally with what the Guardians did there?—At the last time I strove to make any reformation in it it was moved that it would be adjourned for a number of months or years.

15150. Who suggested that?—It was the late Chairman.

15151. Are you not aware now that the Local Government Board asked the Guardians to stay their hands on account of the expenditure?—Well, it is only reasonable.

15152. Was not that the object of your own resolution?—They were always pressing us to do something with it, but we were never in the mind.

15153. Did you ever complain about the Local Government Board?—What would I complain about them for?

15154. About their pressing you to spend money upon the house?—did you ever do it?—Who would I complain to?

15155. At the board?—I did not, to my knowledge.

15156. You complain sometimes without knowing it?—No, never.

15157. You have no resolution now that you ever proposed about the repairs to the Grand Workhouse? I remember to be on a committee recommending certain alterations with regard to the isolation of convalescents and other things in the workhouse, which were not carried out.

15158. When was that?—I would say it was two years ago.

15159. Did you ever bother about it since?—I did not.

15160. Were you there when it was proposed by the board to spend £1,000 in repairs?—I must have been.

15161. Did you approve of that?—I let it go.

15162. You did not oppose it?—Because I saw it was necessary.

15163. Did you support it?—Yes; and would support it to-morrow if it was going to be.

15164. A change was made some time afterwards?—There is no changing my mind in it, because I see the repairs are necessary.

retained as the one union?—Not that I could say, in my opinion; we never had any difficulty whatever in bringing in patients.

15179. You think you ought to go back to divisional rating?—you, personally, don't think so?—The other members of the committee are for it.

15180. But you think union rating ought to be maintained?—Yes.

15181. Is there any matter now that you think you would like to mention to the Commission yourself?—I don't think so.

15182. You think Granard and Ballymahon might very well be done without?—Certainly, as a union Ballymahon might be turned into an industrial school, as there is sufficient accommodation there—water-power and everything to carry on a factory, which we have not in Longford. It was suggested that there might be an auxiliary asylum wanted for the County Westmeath.

15183. In Longford, I believe, you are sending children to the National Schools?—Yes.

15184. If that were done it would get rid of a lot of the expense of the union?—Yes.

15185. Has that arrangement worked satisfactorily in Longford?—Most satisfactorily.

15186. Do you think that ought to be extended?—Yes.

15187. You think there is quite enough accommodation in the Longford Workhouse, assuming the other two unions were broken up?—According to the estimates we have accommodation for twice as many as are in the three unions.

Mr. Deasy.—Would it be open to make a suggestion to the re-arrangement of dispensary districts?—

Chairman.—We have no function about the dispensary districts.

15188. Mr. Muldoon.—You live two miles from Longford?—Yes.

15189. But you come frequently into this town,—

Yes.

Feb. 17, 1894.

Mr. Francis Reeves.

Feb 17, 1904.

Mr. Michael Cassidy.

15190. Your interests lie here, and you want to bring the entire county into the Longford Union?—I differ with you as far as that is concerned. I take no interest in that; I merely look for the interests of the county-at-large.

15191. You are a humane man?—Yes.

15192. Devoted to the interests of the poor?—Yes.

Mr. James
O'Sullivan.

15193. Mr. Deasy.—You are Chairman of the Longford Board of Guardians?—Yes.

15194. Are you in any way interested in the town of Longford?—Not directly, beyond that I am interested in every town and village in Ireland.

15195. You were a member of the committee appointed to go into the question?—Yes.

15196. Will you tell the Commission what conclusions your board has come to—are they in favour of amalgamation?—They are in favour of amalgamation generally.

15197. Are they desirous of breaking up the Unions of Ballymahon and Gransard?—Yes; I believe one workhouse in the county is quite sufficient.

15199. Do you think it would be the smallest inconvenience to the poor if Longford be retained as the only union for Longford County?—I think, in the case of amalgamation, Longford is the only union workhouse that should be retained, for it is placed in a central position. I got the map of the County Longford sealed, and it is placed in the centre of the county, and the destitute poor would have as far to come from the extreme portion of the Longford Union almost as they would from the extreme portions of Ballymahon or Gransard.

15200. You know that from your knowledge?—Yes.

15201. Was one of the recommendations of your board that there should be a going back to the electoral divisional charges?—Oh, yes; that is a most essential point if the poor law system is to be revived at all, because union charges are a bribe to indifference on the part of the Guardians, and it is an inducement to people, who could earn their bread honestly otherwise, to flock into villages and towns, and occupy houses let to them for a small profit, in order to sit out on the rates, and plead that they could get no work. On the question of amalgamation generally, I could show that it takes considerably off the amount that it takes to supply the wants of the destitute poor to maintain one of these institutions. Now, the electoral division that I represent is one of the poorest in 15202. And if it were shown to you that the poor would suffer by your arrangement would you press it?—I would.

15203. If the result of it would also be to increase the rates you would oppose it?—I think if we had amalgamation it would decrease the rates all over after a short time.

MR. JAMES O'NEILL EXAMINED.

the Longford Union, and its valuation is £1,850. Out of that division there are only three paupers in the workhouse and six in receipt of out-door relief. It costs for the actual upkeep of these only £55, whereas the division pays in rates £135 5s. 7d.—that is, it takes £80 2s. 7d. to administer £55 5s. 7d.

15204. Chairman.—I am afraid you have not gone deep enough into the matter?—That is without the maintenance of the institution.

Chairman.—Your view of the figures I understand, but you have not gone deeply enough into the matter to assist us by your statistics. I know what you mean exactly.

15205. Mr. Deasy.—Another matter that your board is anxious about is the question of sending home paupers from England and Scotland?—Yes.

15206. You think you ought to have reciprocal powers?—That is a great question, I may say, to the Poor Law system of Ireland; because recently there was a pauper deported from Scotland into the Longford Union of the name of McGeehan, who admitted on his oath in Scotland that he spent forty years of his life in Scotland, and was born in the parish of Compeh. Now, I was speaking on Sunday to the only man I know of bearing that name in the parish of Compeh, and there it got another facet of that name living in the parish. And his father emigrated into that parish from Lifford, so, consequently, whatever unions those men see treat the poor best they set themselves down as coming from that union.

15207. Your board is anxious on the question of amalgamation for reduction of the rates?—Yes.

15208. Your board has always been anxious to meet the requirements of reform?—Certainly.

15209. Mr. Muldoon.—You are Chairman of the Board of Guardians. You are not a candidate for Parliament, are you?—No, sir.

15210. The Longford Guardians want amalgamation, which will bring all the Guardians into the town of Longford?—I don't understand that.

15211. Would you be in favour of amalgamation if it was proposed to bring the Guardians into Gransard?—Certainly not; the few that are in Gransard should be brought to some other centre.

15212. Where else would you bring them?—To say central point in the county. It won't add to the dignity of any person to go to Gransard.

MR. THOMAS JENNINGS EXAMINED.

Mr. Thomas
Jennings.

15213. Mr. Deasy.—How long have you been a Guardian?—Five years.

15214. You are able to tell us that the Guardians are unanimous on the question of amalgamation?—I am.

15215. Have you considered the question of the convenience of the poor?—I have.

15216. Will the central workhouse in Longford be quite sufficient for the poor of the county?—I think so.

15217. Would there be any substantial inconvenience?—No inconvenience I can see whatever. The distance will be very considerably increased, and the roads will be much better.

15218. You have a higher opinion of the roads than the Gransard men. Do you agree as to the electoral division charges instead of union?—I do.

15219. From your experience as a Guardian, can you tell the Commission whether amalgamation will eventually result in the reduction of the rates?—I have been a long time in favour of amalgamation. I consider pauperism should be concentrated as much as possible in order to lessen the cost; the more concentrated it is the less cost it will incur. Besides, it is a temptation to paupers to avail themselves of these places when you have too many of them, and they are too convenient.

15220. Has your board erected a large number of labourers' cottages?—Yes, I am very glad to say, a number of them.

15221. Do you think they have contributed somewhat, at any rate, to the falling off of the rates as you as a body for out-door relief?—I entirely think so. They have made good members of society of adults that might have been paupers. I would like to see a revision of the dispensaries.

15222. Mr. Muldoon.—You think if there was only one union in the county there would be less paupers?—I do.

15223. And if we had no unions at all we would have no paupers?—I would not go to that extent at all.

15224. Everything, you think, will be delightful when you get amalgamation—the rates will improve and the persons will improve?—Yes, and I hope we will have less Commissioners.

15225. That is when we get amalgamation bringing all the Guardians into Longford. Did you ever hear of the proposition to have amalgamation with Ballymahon as the only centre for poor law in the county?—I would not be very much against it, as far as able-bodied paupers are concerned, but not otherwise.

15226. Chairman.—Not for the sick?—Not for the sick or infirm—the able-bodied pauper. We have only eight miles or ten miles in Longford as an average.

Very Rev. Dr. LANGAN, R.P., examined.

Feb. 17, 1904.

15227. Mr. Muldoon.—Where do you live now?—In Athlone. I have fourteen years in Athlone, and was chaplain to the workhouse until recently.

15228. That is the extreme point of the Granard Union?—Yes, within the County Longford.

15229. And you know the views of the local people and the ratepayers there?—Pretty well.

15230. And you believe that they are opposed to amalgamation or to having to come into Longford?—Well, they are divided in opinion. The majority of the Guardians in Granard recently expressed themselves in favour of amalgamation, but some time ago a considerable number of Guardians were opposed to amalgamation, and the reason they assign for their change of opinion is that there have been some little differences, and they are more or less disgusted; but they certainly do advance any solid reason for their change of opinion. I think it is more a whim than anything else.

15231. But the great body of the ratepayers remain opposed to amalgamation?—Their views have not been altered.

15232. As far as you could ascertain, is not the feeling of the local people against amalgamation?—I really have not put the question to them.

15233. Do you think it would be inconvenient to the Guardians and the poor to have to come in from that district to the town of Longford?—I do. I think it would be a hardship on the poor and a serious inconvenience on the Guardians. I am quite sure the Guardians would not attend, except a very small proportion of them; and it would be almost an outrage if the sick and infirm were obliged to come in—they might die on the way. I know if a sick person had to come from that remotest part of any parish the journey had to come to-day, he would be in danger of dying. As a rule, the country poor only seek admission when they are sick or are feeble-minded.

15234. These people have a business connection with the town of Granard which takes them there?—They have.

15235. And it is convenient to them?—It is the market and fair town, and three District Councils meet there?—Yes, and the meeting of the Guardians is on the market day.

15236. Would you venture your opinion that it would be a hardship on the ratepayers generally to amalgamate with Longford?—I have not entered deeply into the matter of finance. That point would have to be considered; but my view of it is that it would be an increase in the rates if they were amalgamated. I presume, in any case, if the unions were dissolved, the fever hospital and infirmary should be retained. I think that would be a matter of necessity. Then, one of the retiring officers would have to be superannuated; the most expensive portion of the hospital would remain; there would be only a small outlay in expense. In the case of amalgamation, the number of the poor in Longford would be increased; you will have a larger staff of officials, and, perhaps, extra buildings; so, when you put one thing against the other, it is very doubtful whether the rates would be generally lowered. In my opinion, the rates will be increased in Granard Union. Of course, it is more or less a congested district. Columbkille parish is highly congested, and in Mullabera and a large portion of Scabhy they have all small farms. In Columbkille the farms are scarcely economical holdings. If you look at the valuation of Granard as compared with Longford or Ballymahon you will find a very material difference. Granard has thirty-six electoral divisions, there are only sixteen in Ballymahon, and sixteen in Longford, and still the Poor Law valuation in Granard is only about the same as Longford. We know Ireland, because a poor country, suffers in comparison with England always in case of taxation. If you have a poor part of Co. Longford it is bound to suffer in any case of amalgamation as compared with the wealthier portions, and, therefore, in my opinion, the rates in Granard Union would be increased. On the question of convenience, there can be no difficulty at all. Anyone can see that Granard is more convenient for the poor and the local representatives. It is more convenient for the Longford poor—that is, the poor residing in the Longford portion of the Granard Union—and more convenient for the poor in Granard, to some extent. If the Caran districts were united to Caran they would be as far from their own union as Athlone is now from Longford, twelve or fourteen miles; and, similarly, the Westmeath portion of the Granard Union would be almost equally distant from Mullingar. The ratepayers would be disfranchised, as their elected representatives could not, except at great inconvenience, attend the Board meetings in Longford, and on the principle that there should be no taxation without representation, I think it would be very unfair.

15237. Abbeylara is a very poor village?—Very poor—a wretched village; the number of poor is out of all proportion to the inhabitants.

15238. Mr. Delany.—I am informed that in the Union of Granard there are very large districts of land without many people living on them?—In some portions.

15239. In your portion?—Yes; there is a large grazing tract there, only one farm; the rest is fairly divided amongst the people.

15240. They have very large farms?—No, medium-sized. In the lower portion of my parish, Carragh, there are small holdings. In Derragh, also, the holdings are small.

15241. Does not the description of their being large grass farms apply to the portion of Granard in Westmeath?—A great part of it is bog; but where the people are they are brought together a good deal, and occupy only small holdings or gardens—the village of Coole, for instance, and the town of Finnas, which are both poor.

15242. Are they not well off?—It is a poor parish—the tail end of Westmeath.

15243. Westmeath generally is good, rich land, with very few people on it?—If you go to the better part no doubt, but some portions are poor, and thickly inhabited.

15244. As to the bringing in of the sick poor to the hospitals, their treatment while being carried in will depend largely on the machine in which they are carried?—I don't care what machine you had a day like this, it would be a terrible hardship on the poor patient—he really might die on the way. In addition to the length of the journey, some of the roads leading to the congested districts are bad, and, in a few places, dangerous, being quite unprotected.

Mr. Muldoon.—I am asked to put in the resolutions come to by the County Council?—That there be amalgamation, carried by nine to seven. That Granard be dissolved and added to Longford, carried by ten to four. That if Ballymahon be dissolved the union buildings should be utilized as an industrial school, carried by twelve to three. In case of amalgamation of Granard, that the hospital remain, and that buildings be utilized as an auxiliary asylum, not carried. That district electoral divisions be identical with county electoral divisions, with two members for each division, carried unanimously. No additional accommodation required, and that all fever cases be sent to Longford, the present hospital being retained for other purposes, carried by eleven to seven. That the rating for union purposes and application of agricultural grant shall be as at present, carried by nine to eight. That there should be a discretionary power to make a charge whose petitioners can pay, carried unanimously.

Mr. JOHN PHILLIPS examined.

Mr. John Phillips.

15245. Mr. Delany.—You are Chairman of the County Council?—Yes.

15246. And I believe you called a special meeting of the Council to consider the query about the Commission?—Yes.

15247. Does the document I have read to the Commission represent the resolutions come to by the County Council?—Yes.

15248. And it is signed by you?—Yes.

15249. You have long experience of local life in Longford County—you have been a Guardian for many years and a member of the County Council since we had County Councils?—Yes.

Feb. 17, 1864.

Mr. John Phillips.

15250. Do you think it is to the advantage of the ratepayers and the poor and every interest concerned that we should have amalgamation with Longford?—I do.

15251. That Longford should be the union for the county?—Yes, it is more central.

15252. Do you think there would be any substantial hardship to the poor?—I think not the slightest hardship with a motor ambulance.

15253. And in time it will lead to a reduction of the rates?—Most certainly.

15254. And more efficiency in the discharge of the poor law duties?—Yes.

15255. The view of the County Council is that the representatives making the union should be two members for each County Council division?—Yes, forty Guardians.

15256. And from your knowledge of the working of the County Council, do you think that would make for the advantage of public business?—The smaller the committees the better the work, and the less talk.

15257. Mr. Muldoon.—You live near Longford yourself?—About five miles.

15258. Are you a member of any Council except the County Council?—No, I am not.

15259. I suppose most of the Council members are from the outlying districts?—They are pretty generally divided.

15260. Did you happen to see any figures that your secretary has prepared about the result of amalgamation?—Yes.

15261. When did you see them?—I saw them to-day.

15262. Did you discuss them?—Merely to take them as he had prepared them.

15263. You know your secretary is one of the ablest financiers probably in the country?—I believe so.

15264. Has he not demonstrated that amalgamation would not be in the interests of the ratepayers of the Grand Union?—Yes—but after a few years it would.

15265. Or of Ballymahon?—The answer I would give you is that it is after a few years it would.

15266. Has he done so since?—He has not. That it would be a small loss to Grandard for a time, and a very small one to Ballymahon for a time.

15267. And it would be in the interests of the Longford Union?—I don't consider the interests of the Longford Union at all, sir.

15268. But if it is against the other two it must be in favour of Longford?—It would not be in the interests of Longford either I am sure, as improvements would have to be made in the house.

15269. Mr. Muldoon.—To get in two large unions lower rated than yours—do you want to persuade the Commission that as so?—After a time it would.

Mr. T. N. Edgeworth.

Mr. T. N. Edgeworth, M.P., examined.

15270. Mr. Muldoon.—Are you the Secretary of the County Council?—Yes.

15271. I believe for a number of years past you have been considering the effect of amalgamation on the county?—Yes, I have looked into it. I am a fairly large ratepayer myself.

15272. You were examined at Major Rutledge-Parr's inquiry at Grandard in 1861?—Yes.

15273. And gave evidence against the breaking up of the Grandard Union?—Yes.

15274. Do you still think that the evidence you gave there was fair and accurate?—Yes, the monetary part of it.

15275. What is that in your hand?—This is a return that I prepared. The first item in it is the union rates for the six years ending 1905; that includes the estimate of rate we made to-day for the three unions, Ballymahon, Grandard, and Longford. The next item on it shows the difference in the rates between Grandard, Ballymahon, and Longford.

15276. CHAIRMAN.—What expenditure is included in that union rate?—The only expenditure is the payment that we pay to the union; but then explain it; we have no control.

15277. Are you aware of a good deal of that expenditure is not on Poor Law purposes?—I believe it is not, but we have nothing to do with that on the Council.

15278. That, therefore, would not be the basis on which we here would make our calculations. We would only make our calculations on Poor Law proper expenditure; therefore the figures there, I am afraid, would not do?—We, as a County Council, have nothing to do with the expenditure. We simply provide the money demanded by the unions. This does not include the rural district expenditure in any sense.

15279. Mr. Muldoon.—From your investigations and inquiries, have you come to the conclusion that an amalgamation suggested would work inferentially to Grandard and Ballymahon?—Urges advantages as provided, which I have indicated in this return.

15280. Mr. Muldoon.—Did you take into consideration the expenditure of the different unions?—No; the only expenditure I took into account was the demand that they make on us for the year.

15281. You did not consider whether there were any provisions in Longford and none in Grandard, or in opposition?—No; I merely took into account the actual money we pay them.

15282. CHAIRMAN.—As it is not based on the line in which we would make our own calculations, I am afraid it won't assist us?—The expenditure for non-Poor Law purposes will probably be about the same proportion each of the three unions, so that these figures will probably remain.

CHAIRMAN.—That would be rather a large sum for us to go on, I am afraid.

15283. Mr. Muldoon.—For instance, if the contemplated improvements in Grandard Union had been placed, and that £2,000 or £1,000 had been got for your Council, it would alter the state of the rate considerably?—If it had all been got in a short period of course it would, but if it was got by way of local aid, it would not.

15284. If it had been got over a period of five years, say £200 a year?—That would add about two-thirds of a penny, added to that, but that would not very largely affect these figures. The differences are very slight.

15285. CHAIRMAN.—All the discrepancy expenditure there, and that we don't touch at all; that is not within our warrant?—That would be about the same proportion in each of the three unions.

Mr. John Ross.

Mr. John Ross, J.P., examined.

15286. Mr. Delany.—Are you Chairman of the Ballymahon Board of Guardians?—Yes.

15287. Have you been a member of the Board for many years?—About twenty.

15288. You have an extensive knowledge of the district. What are your views on amalgamation?—My views now are what they always have been. I was always in favour of an industrial school there.

15289. Are you in favour of an amalgamation between Longford and Ballymahon as regards the portion in Longford, and with Athlone as regards the portion in Wexmouth?—That is my own view; not the view of the Board.

15290. Your view is that that would be to the advantage of the ratepayers?—I am not appointed by the Board of Guardians but by the County Council.

15291. You are in favour of amalgamation, and that there ought to be an industrial school at Ballymahon?—Yes.

15292. CHAIRMAN.—You think as soon as possible drop there will be a bigger saving?—I think there will. If Grandard had the workhouse in the same repair as we have at Ballymahon, I think there would be no difference.

15293. Mr. Delany.—You have maintained your workhouse in a proper condition?—I think we have maintained it, I won't say fairly well, but well.

15294. You have never striped it in expenditure?—No; what we considered right ourselves.

Mr. H. GARRAHAN, J.P., examined.

Feb. 17, 1904.

Mr. H. Garrahan.

15305. CHAIRMAN.—Are you from Ballymahon?—Yes; I have been asked to represent the District Council.

15306. Mr. Muldoon.—Has your District Council considered the question of amalgamation?—The Board of Guardians has.

15307. Are they opposed to amalgamation?—Yes.

15308. Is it upon the ground of the inconvenience of the Guardians to come into Longford?—It is principally on behalf of the poor infirm and old people who would have to be taken into Longford, and the sick poor, and also having regard to the distribution of out-door relief.

15309. You think out-door relief would suffer?—We think it would not be so effective as at the present time, because it is necessary to have Guardians from the locality in order to know who are entitled and who are not to out-door relief, and we think we would not have representation if we had amalgamation.

15310. The Guardians would not always be in attendance?—There would hardly be any attendance. It is such a distance it would be impossible for the Guardians to attend.

15311. How do you come to Longford?—I drive or cycle—drive in winter and cycle in summer. I would not represent the division if we had amalgamation. I could not do it.

15312. Of course the same applies generally?—No; only to the outlying districts.

15313. Did your Board consider and pass a resolution on the subject?—Yes.

15314. When was that?—About a fortnight ago.

15305. Was it carried by a majority or unanimously?—Unanimously.

15306. Against amalgamation?—Against amalgamation.

15307. CHAIRMAN.—You and your chairman differ in opinion?—He did not express it. We think it would be a great hardship on old and infirm persons to be taken thirteen Irish miles. I know the distance myself. In case of sickness that hardship would be aggravated.

15308. If there were a hospital left at Ballymahon?—In that case I don't know what the advantage would be of amalgamation. It certainly would not lessen the rates to have amalgamation. The expense of keeping a hospital at Ballymahon would be very considerably less than maintaining the workhouse as it is at the present time, and you could not very well utilize the Ballymahon Workhouse for the purpose suggested by the County Council if you retained the hospital there. I presume the fever hospital would be retained, and the other hospital; and then to keep premises for nurses would occupy the greater portion of the workhouse, and the expense would be very little, if any, lessened, without having regard to the additional expense which would be entailed in Longford by having amalgamation. Another reason that we took into consideration was that there would be great difficulties placed in the way of stamping out contagious diseases in the case of an epidemic. Under the present arrangement we find that it was often intimated to us by one of our doctors that he was afraid there was concealment of cases of scarletina; people did not give notice. Of course that danger would be increased very much by a long journey having to be undertaken by children.

Mr. HUGH MULVILLY examined.

Mr. Hugh Mulvilly.

15315. CHAIRMAN.—Are you a Guardian of the Ballymahon Union?—Yes.

15316. You have heard the evidence of the last witness?—Yes.

15317. You also were appointed to represent the views of the Guardians?—Yes.

15318. Do you agree with his view?—I do.

15315. In all respects he mentions?—Yes.

15316. Is there anything more on which you would wish to add your personal opinion?—No, there is nothing more.

15317. You don't desire to add anything except to express your concurrence?—Yes.

Mr. P. GIBBY examined.

Mr. P. Gibby.

15319. CHAIRMAN.—Are you also a member of the Ballymahon Board?—Yes.

15320. Is there any special matter you wish to mention?—Nothing, except that I agree with Mr. Garrahan.

15318. You would prefer keeping the house for the reasons he gave?—Yes.

15319. Is there any other consideration you would wish to put before us?—Nothing at present.

Dr. J. M. S. KERRY examined.

Dr. J. M. S. Kerry.

15321. CHAIRMAN.—The first matter that you wish to express an opinion on is the need of a public sanatorium on modern lines for the treatment of pulmonary tuberculosis?—Yes.

15322. From your experience and practice, have you seen a good deal of that disease in the country?—A good deal.

15323. Are you inclined to think it is spreading, or stationary?—It is spreading.

15324. Do you think it is absolutely necessary in the interests of public health that some isolation and proper treatment should be adopted?—It is absolutely necessary to take some means of preventing the spread.

15325. I suppose you don't wish to indicate any site or place for such a hospital, or would you leave that to the counties or districts that would combine?—Yes.

15326. You would not say whether it should be for a county or a group of counties?—The only matter I would mention to the Commission would be that when it would be dealt with it should be dealt with adequately, on modern lines, not in any temporary way.

15327. No patched-up structures?—No patched-up structures.

15328. The next matter you mention is the need of a properly equipped hospital for the Union of Granard, distinct from the workhouse. You refer to the provision in the Local Government Act for district hospitals?—Yes.

15329. You consider that a district hospital would be more advantageous?—It would be far and away better than the present system.

15320. Explain the reasons why you think it would be more liked in the country?—My experience of the working of a workhouse hospital is that a great number of cases suitable for hospital treatment will not come into it, on account of its association with the workhouse; and then there is the question of the clothing, and the regulations and rules that are in force at present.

15321. In force in the workhouse, and should not obtain in the hospital?—Yes; have no connection at all with a properly-conducted hospital; those all enter people from coming in.

15322. Would such a hospital require any expenditure in the way of maintenance so far as the staff goes, except the doctor, the nurses, the matron, and the chaplain?—None.

15323. Is there anything else that occurs to you with reference to this question of the district hospital?—In a general way, what I have stated would be a good commencement.

15324. Would you have it so that you could perform emergency operations?—Yes.

Feb. 17, 1896.

Kenny.

of having to go long distances from home acts badly on them.

15335. You think they grow a little away from home?—Strongly; and if we had suitable accommodation these cases would not go.

15336. The next matter you refer to is the need of proper provision for the aged and infirm?—I beg your pardon; about the hospital, I think in the district hospital there should be some system of payment, that it would not be a pauper institution altogether.

15337. That the governing body would have power to make them pay in accordance with their means?—Yes.

15338. From 1s. up to the full cost?—Up to whatever would be considered right.

15339. Then the need of proper provision for the aged and infirm, that is, I suppose, assuming that the workhouse might be closed, would you think that proper provision ought to be made for the aged and infirm. Where would you put them? Would you provide for them in-door or out-door?—I think a great number could be provided for out-door, under a proper system of boarding-out and looking after.

15340. Do you think it would be likely to tend to economy to have the double system in operation in any place.—Both boarding-out and treating in an institution.—Do you think that might not lead to extravagance?—There are some cases that could not be met by the boarding-out system.

15341. You mean people without relatives or friends?—Yes.

15342. Would you see any objection to boarding them out with people who were no friends and no connections?—I think it would require very strict supervision.

15343. Are not people when they reach that age rather quick than slow to complain if there is any grievance?—Sometimes you see cases where old people are wholly neglected.

15344. What would you do for the in-door keeping up of the aged and infirm?—Merely domestic attention.

15345. In the central workhouse at Longford, or wherever it was?—Yes; a central workhouse would meet the requirements.

15346. Therefore you would have classification of the inmates according to respectability, and if they were married, you would not separate married couples?—Yes; I think that is a very great hardship on the deserving married couples, and aged and infirm, to be associating with the disreputable element that is now in the workhouses.

15347. You also very strongly object to the rearing of children in workhouses?—I do.

15348. What idea have you on that subject?—I think the boarding-out system.

15349. You would not begin the boarding-out until their disposition was equal to taking what was going. What age would you say, about two or three?—First, any way; possibly more.

15350. What would you do with them in that state of infancy?—In the case of illegitimate children, there should be some sort of penitentiary for the mothers and the children until they could be boarded out.

15351. In connection with district nursing, have you seen the need and want of nurses to look after the sick who can be treated in their own homes and cannot be moved very well?—Yes.

15352. There is the serious ailment that seems to be moved, and the trifling ailment that would be treated by prompt and regular looking after?—Yes.

15353. And you think district nursing?—It would be very necessary.

15354. One for each dispensary district?—Yes; it would have an elevating influence on the community, and help them to understand the character of disease, and how to live in a healthy way, better than they do.

15355. The only other topic you touch on is one we have no warrant to look into, that is the need of proper house accommodation for the poor. We have no power to make recommendations about that. Is there anything else you would like to mention?—In connection with tuberculosis, I have remarked that a great number of that disease comes over to us from America by the emigrants being turned back. Young people going out there fall into ill-health, and are sent home to us that America dying and spreading the disease. I have known numerous instances of that.

15356. Not enough to materially affect the amount that is in the country, but you have seen enough in your own practice to make it serious?—Yes; in the district I practice in, nearly every family have tuberculosis. America then come and go; and recently, with the easy transit and short passages, and cheap rates, they come and go very frequently, and I have noticed a number of cases coming home in bad health.

15357. Mr. McNamee.—It may be that they come for health purposes?—Yes; the doctors tell them to come back to their native air, but they come to spread disease.

15358. You would hardly refuse the people?—I could not refuse them, but I mention it as a factor in the spread of this very serious disease.

15359. Mr. Deasey.—You know the Longford County Infirmary?—Yes.

15360. And that two very comfortable wards have been added in recent years?—I have seen them.

15361. Would that meet the suggestion you make to the surgical hospital?—It would not. I want it in the district.

15362. How many would you want in the Co. Longford?—I am speaking of the district I am aware myself.

15363. You have an infirmary at Cavan, and so at Longford, and also at Mullingar. You don't suggest that there should be a surgical hospital at every halfway house?—No. I suggest there should be provision made for each district, a unit. I consider the General Union a very important unit that should be provided with requirements of that sort.

15364. So you think that instead of workhouse hospitals we should have surgical hospitals.

CHAIRMAN.—A village or district hospital, with an opportunity for doing urgent operations?—Yes.

15365. Mr. Deasey.—In the majority of parishes I understand you have nurses attached to parishes?

CHAIRMAN.—There are only midwives?—There are no district nurses in the general sense.

15366. Dr. Broome.—Are there any in the Co. Longford?—I think not.

15367. Mr. Deasey.—Suppose attached to each dispensary you had a place properly fitted up?—Then a dispensary doctor could deal with the cases.

The Sitting terminated.

THIRTY-FIRST PUBLIC SITTING.—THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 18TH, 1904. Feb. 18, 1904.

At the Courthouse, Tullamore.

Present:— Mr. MICKS (Chairman), Mr. MURNAGHAN, and Dr. COBY BROSKE.

CHAIRMAN.—Our usual custom is to get evidence from the County Council as to what the views of the County Council may be on the subject. Are there any County Councillors present?

Mr. William Adams.—I belong to that body. There was a special meeting called, but through some informality or omission on the part of the under-secretary he named in the circular inviting the County Council to hold a special meeting for that purpose "Tuesday, the 18th inst.," a good many came, but not sufficient to form a quorum.

CHAIRMAN.—Then we have not got, formally, the views of the County Council?

Mr. Adams.—No, sir; on that account.

Mr. WILLIAM ADAMS examined.

Possibly it might facilitate matters to state that the Clerk of the Union is here.

15368. CHAIRMAN.—I think later on, perhaps. That (produced) is a copy of the queries we have issued to the different bodies. In King's County you have three workhouses—Birr, Edenderry, and Tullamore?—Yes.

15369. You know the county, I suppose, pretty well; have you yourself come to any opinion as to whether you could manage with fewer workhouses in the county or not?—Owing to the formation of the county it would be very hard to say we could do with less than three; as far as Tullamore is concerned, to have our area a good deal increased; although we have a large and populous estate I don't suppose there are half a dozen really good farms in the place, and our valuation is very low; consequently, when it is compared with the adjoining unions of Ashmore, and Mullingar, and Birr, they are double our valuation, they collect as much money as we do, although our rates appear to be double theirs.

15370. It is the soundness of your valuation that makes your rates appear high?—Quite so.

15371. You would, in the interest of the ratepayers, be glad to have a larger area for taxation if it could be managed without hardship to the sick poor?—Owing to the fact that there are several divisions belonging to other unions immediately convenient that would not, I think, run any risk of causing any inconvenience or danger to the poor.

15372. You have no direct railway communication, except in a very roundabout way, with either Birr or Edenderry?—We are very badly served with railway accommodation.

15373. How long would it take a person to reach this place from Edenderry by rail?—We have none.

15374. They would go to Enfield and round to Ashmore and up here?—I think that is the way they should go.

15375. And I suppose an Edenderry man coming here to the Asylum would be some all round?—They all drive; it is only about seventeen Irish miles from Edenderry here; Edenderry is the extreme point of this county.

15376. Now, as regards Birr?—It is the other extreme end of the county.

15377. And when Birr people are coming here how would they come?—They generally come to attend the County Council meetings; Roscrea, Portlannington, and here; and sometimes they drive a car to Banagher—five or six Irish miles—and they are here at nine o'clock in the morning.

15378. So that the communications between the poor and this place are much better than with Edenderry?—Quite so.

15379. And there are portions of the Birr Union communally near Tullamore; is Frankford in Tullamore? Birr and considerably this side of Frankford; there are divisions in Birr.

15380. How far is Birr?—Ten Irish miles, and a good road; but we have a suitable conveyance for bringing in the sick any time the doctor recommends them.

15381. If a hospital were left at Birr and at Edenderry to look after the sick would you see much hardship in having the people who are not sick, but either able-bodied or infirm—that is able to travel by railway —would you see any hardship in bringing them from the parts of the King's County in the Edenderry Union and Birr Union here?—I could not see any great risk of inconvenience or hardship, but the Guardians of Edenderry and Birr would think so; I think not, because they have dispensaries well attended by efficient doctors.

15382. I am saying if there were a local hospital left?

—There would be no hardship at all then.

15383. Because the only people would be to the aged people and the able-bodied, and they would be fit to travel by railway?—I think so, if they had the means.

15384. Have you considered at all, personally, the idea of having each county self-contained for Poor Law administration; your union is altogether in the King's County?—No; we have two divisions in Westmeath—Killeggan way.

15385. Supposing those were to go to Westmeath, and supposing that all the rest of the county should be one area of taxation for Poor Law purposes—in fact have you seen for the King's County, at a central place in the County, Tullamore—do you see any objection to that?—I could not see any if there was accommodation for the sick poor in the other ends—the Birr and Edenderry ends.

15386. Leaving them good hospitals?—I think not; we have a county infirmary here and a well-equipped workhouse infirmary.

15387. It is greatly improved from what I saw it in 1885?—It is; the Tullamore Board of Guardians did not ever grudge the amount required to keep it up to date.

15388. The fever hospital, unfortunately, is very close to the infirmary?—We have that in our minds' eye since the outcome of this Commission; the probability is there will be something done in that direction, but owing to the fact that we got into debt by expending a lot of money on the sewage plant—that cost beyond £3,000.

Mr. Graham, Clerk.—The loan was £3,200; I should say the sewage would cost £2,000.

15389. CHAIRMAN.—Now, taking up the different classes in your workhouse?—How would these parties living on outdoor relief be attended to in Birr and Edenderry?

15390. That is a point I would like your opinion on; we will get the opinion of Edenderry Board of Guardians and Birr on that point; they might be either managed by the District Council or a committee appointed under the County Council?—Where there is a will there is a way always.

15391. We have come to no determination or opinion on that, but we have heard different opinions; some people say, let the Boards of Guardians there, other people say, let the District Council do it, and other people say a committee of the County Council, and which of the three ways would be adopted would be a matter for consideration for us as soon as we have gone through Ireland?—I think the District Council would be the best; to leave it in their hands, because they see Guardians as well, and know their duties; they are painstaking and economical. Tullamore Union is very central in the county.

15392. If there were only lines of railway between Edenderry and Tullamore, and Birr and Tullamore, it would be no inconvenience at all?—We keep a good horse and two covered vehicles, and at present when there is a notification from the doctor to send for a sick person—of course there is telegraphic communication—and it is all carried out on the one day.

15393. Mr. WYNNASTON.—Have you much ground round the workhouse?—Yes. We have about five Irish acres; got it lately by exchange of the smaller hold, but there is portion of it used for the sewerage system, and the other part we use for vegetables and that sort of thing.

15394. CHAIRMAN.—Now, coming to the number of inmates you have got in Tuillamore; we heard to-day you had about eighty sick in the infirmary; that is above the average?—I don't think there are eighty; some time ago there were eighty on the medical officer's books, but owing to the late circular from the Local Government Board he can reduce it one half.

15395. The number I have got here is fifty-three?—That is about at new; it used to average eighty until six or eight months ago.

15396. At all events you have accommodation easily for eighty?—And more.

15397. The next class you have got, you have got a very large class of aged and infirm, 114?—Yes; it is a very populous union.

15398. If you became a county workhouse you would, of course, have accommodation for a great deal more than the 114; if you could get rid of some of the classes that are already in the workhouse in addition to the aged and infirm at present, you have an enormous number—the largest number we have met in a union like yours—of ninety-six children?—Yes.

15399. Can you tell me how it is you have so many children so much in excess of what they have in other counties?—The number is an exception at present; I never remember that number of children there before.

15400. Take the large union of Mullingar; they have only twenty-nine?—It is only lately we made an effort to get the orphan children boarded out, and we found great difficulty in getting suitable people to take them. In the last two or three months we have put up hand-bills round the union, and we have had three children within the last few weeks taken out.

15401. You and the Board of Guardians are favourably disposed to that?—Certainly, as long as we get suitable people recommended by the District Commissioners and deacons of the different denominations; we are very cautious who we give the children to.

15402. If there were any change in the Poor Laws would you approve of a system that would aim at boarding out children and not keeping them in a workhouse at all?—If they were all conveniently located near schools.

15403. The evidence we have got about children all over the country is that there really is not any difficulty as soon as the people understand the system and as soon as the Guardians offer what would be a fair amount?—That is the guarantee of the whole thing; the amount offered at present is not sufficient to induce people that we would like to take them.

15404. You are only offering 2s. 6s. 1?—Yes, and a suit of clothes or two; that is hardly enough; another 5s. or 1s. would do. I can speak in the name of the Tuillamore Board of Guardians; they would approve of the principle of boarding out the children as long as there is proper care taken in the selection of where they go, but even so far as that is concerned there are inspectors going about the country looking after that.

15405. They can only assist the Guardians, but the Guardians of the locality and the ladies of the district could co-operate by wise inspection?—Yes; as I think they should.

15406. By wise inspection; not continually interfering, but throwing a friendly eye on the children occasionally?—We have got very favourable reports from our relieving officers every month.

15407. If you got that large number of ninety-six out of the workhouse that would leave you a very large space?—It would, certainly.

15408. Then you have twenty-seven lunatics, idiots, and epileptics?—Yes.

15409. Is it a claim that, in your opinion, ought to be kept in a workhouse?—Most certainly not; most undesirable. I think there should be a sort of auxiliary asylum for two or three or four counties, and have them properly looked after and cared for.

15410. At present your lunatics go to Mullingar?—We contribute to Marybone Asylum, and they get some care from time to time. But we find it costs a great deal more there.

15411. I think you are under a misconception; what do you take as the cost of an inmate in the Marybone Asylum?—According to what the County Councilor who represents our County tells as it was £40 a year. Do you recollect what Mr. Corbett said?

Mr. WYNNASTON.—Yes; but I agree with the President.

15412. CHAIRMAN.—Do you know the amount?

Mr. GRAHAM.—No; I do not actually.

Witness.—But that statement had a great effect in preventing us from making application to send other inmates over there.

15413. CHAIRMAN.—What is the expense in your own union?—I suppose they come to, on an ordinary average, 4s. 2d.

15414. That would be for the food and clothing, merely?—Of course that goes to pay for all other expenses as well.

15415. Oh, no; that is where the mistake arises. Then if you take all your establishment charges and salaries, as the asylum people do in making their calculations, you will find that year's is up rather close to them. Then, on the other hand, the Government comes forward and gives 4s. capitation grant a statement, and I think you will find that your inmates are a much lighter cost as the asylum on the capitation than they would be in the workhouse?—If there was a suitable place for epileptics and lunatics, and the children were taken out of the workhouse, you would have more room than would accommodate the pauper and poor people of the county.

15416. The able-bodied are very few in your workhouse; you have only eighteen?—We never had as many before.

15417. And these are very largely women who are there with children?—At present, owing to the want of labour about Tuillamore for what we call these casual labourers, we had to admit whole families in lately. There are three or four men that generally work the whole year round stone-breaking and other work, occasionally with farmers, and they could go to work, and they made such a pitiable case, and on making the necessary inquiries we came to the conclusion that it would be inhuman to refuse them on account of the little children.

15418. Over and above that you have healthy single women who have illegitimate children?—Very few in comparison with the population; we have a very clear record as far as that is concerned.

15419. That is a claim that I daresay you consider causes a great deal of difficulty with people coming into the workhouse?—They are kept principally by themselves, and they are kept at laundry work.

15420. They are really backwards and forwards through the house a good deal?—I think, owing to the construction of our workhouse, they mix very little with the other inmates; of course the less they mix the better.

15421. There is a certain amount of it; would you be in favour of excluding that class altogether from the workhouse if a good system could be started for dealing with them elsewhere; that they should never be admitted to the workhouse at all, even to have their laundry?—I think it would be a very necessary and desirable reform to keep these fallen girls by themselves.

15422. They have their first baby, and go into the workhouse and most other women like themselves who have had two or three, and they go on having these illegitimate children, and they are rearing up a whole generation of illegitimate paupers. We have had some suggestion made to us in different parts of the country; a single woman as soon as she is about to have a baby she generally comes into the workhouse some two or three months or so before she has it, when she can no longer remain outside owing to her appearance, then she is with these undesirable women working in the laundry and elsewhere; she is with them in the workhouse; and it was suggested to us that such women should be sent to a religious penitentiary, conducted for Catholics by Magdalen Nuns or some such Order, and Protestants should have such penitentiaries also for Protestant girls, and that these women should be reclaimed so far as possible on the occasion of their first fall, and that the child should be taken and provided for until it was of an age to be boarded out; would you see any objection to that?—No; but I would very strongly approve of it, and the unfortunate girls that fall in that way and come to us you would be more inclined to pity them than be severe with them, they feel their position as keenly; there is no poverty or disgrace they feel more than that, and I know for the first child they give birth to they are more to be pitied; it is very rarely I have known one to come in a second time with an illegitimate child.

15433. That, unfortunately, is not our experience; we find throughout the country we have travelled as many as five or six—some innocent country girl is taken advantage of by some ruffian, and the partition they occupy coming before the board to be questioned; one may get a case against the putative father; you find it, you pity these more than being mixed with them. Was there ever an instance in our union where after a girl reared a child she went out and came back again? Mr. Crookes.—Oh, there was.

Witness.—I think some of these were reared in the workhouse.

15434. CHAIRMAN.—Very likely; it goes on from generation to generation. You would approve of dealing in that way with these poor girls?—Oh, most certainly.

15435. And you think it would be a fair thing, and it would be no additional expense for the Guardians to pay for these girls in a penitentiary?—Even if it was a little additional expense no Guardian would be so inhuman as to refuse to give them a chance of reformation.

15436. And you would have fewer children born?—If these ladies took an interest in them after they came to the conclusion that the mother was really reformed, to get them a suitable place they should have the prospect and the possibility of doing good for the poor girl.

15437. Mr. MURKIN.—They would feel they had some human sympathy and be encouraged not to fall again?—Yes; when they go among the older ones in the workhouse it has not a good influence.

15438. CHAIRMAN.—Then they would go to one of these penitentiaries, and in some of these there is a ward where they could have their child, and in other places, like Dublin and Cork, they could be sent to lying-in hospitals outside and brought back to the penitentiaries in a fortnight or so, so as to be under good influences all the time?—We find it impossible to be able to prove a case against the putative father; there is no corroboration; we did go as far as to bring one or two cases before the County Chairman here, and always failed.

15439. Mr. MURKIN.—Would you like to see the law strengthened in that respect; there is a law in England that enables Guardians to go further than we can in Ireland?—Of course it will be necessary to protect the accused and give him fair play. I knew a very grievous case myself when I became a Guardian first where there was a wrong name given, and as soon as the report went abroad the young fellow felt it so keenly that he left the country, and in a few months afterwards the girl admitted that she got money to say so, and the poor fellow was allowed to go scot free. I knew one case of that.

15440. Taking away three classes—300 children, thirty lunatics, and the eighteen able-bodied—would give much more space in your workhouse, and you could easily take in the aged and infirm, which would be the only class coming from Edenderry and Barri?—I think there would be plenty of room. When our workhouse was built it was built for a considerable number more than we ever had in it, and even at the commencement there were auxiliary workhouses attached to it at the time of the Famine. I would be very anxious to see harmless lunatics and epileptics taken out of it, because it is hardly reasonable to expect, under the present system, that these poor things can get proper education.

15441. Mr. MURKIN.—You have one and came in the house, a young girl of sixteen or seventeen—a nice epileptic—she is associated there with insane women?—It is very hard.

15442. CHAIRMAN.—Then the only other class we have to refer to are the tramps; you have a fair number of them here?—Indeed, we have; more than are welcome; there should be something done to give more power to the Board of Guardians.

15443. I suppose on nights before fairs—like last night and to-day—you will have a good crowd?—Indeed, we will.

15444. Supposing your workhouse became a county workhouse, and there was nobody there except the aged and infirm—a sort of large almshouse where the respectable people could be kept in one block, and married couples in another, and the less respectable in another block—supposing you had that arrangement too, would you be in favour of excluding tramps from the workhouse altogether and making any other provision for them, or what would you do?—I know it is very difficult to interfere with the liberty of the subject, but still at the same time I think there ought to be brains enough in the English legislature or among our Irish members of Parliament to suggest some remedy, because there is a remedy required. It is an awful abuse to allow these people to come in droves, pilfering through the country, and come in at night and get their supper and bed and breakfast, and go away in the morning to carry on the same practice.

15445. We have received a good deal of evidence, even in the last few days, even at Mullingar and Longford, from witnesses who did not hesitate to suggest that the children should be taken from these people when they were bringing children through the country; would you approve of that?—I would if it could be done with any sort of reason, but it would be a terrible piece of business, exposing a man and a woman with one or two children—

15446. It is not that there should be a hard and fast law, but that the Board of Guardians should have a discretionary power to make an order putting themselves in the place of the parents; that they should then board them out or deal with them as they would children under the Poor Law, subject to the right on the part of the parents to appeal against the Guardians' decision to a magistrate in Petty Sessions or some other tribunal?—It would be a good thing for the future prospect of the poor children at all events, but I think it would not be an easy matter in some instances to wrench the children away from the parents, although we know, and everyone knows, they are bound to be reared up wrong.

15447. If you thought that, would it not be a good thing to take them?—Yes, if it can be done.

15448. I mean if the law were changed; of course this Commission is sitting with a view to collect opinions that might involve a change in the law to carry them out?—I would go further; I would have the law so as you could take the children from bad parents, even residents in the union, who neglect them or either them to go out begging.

15449. The law is strong enough to deal with those?—We find a great deal of difficulty in trying to prove the cases; we certainly did succeed in one or two cases lately and got the children sent away to an industrial school.

15450. Then, as regards the tramps themselves, a great many people have suggested that these people are not profitable members of the community—that they are dangerous, and pests—some of them are decent labouring men going about looking for a job, but a very large proportion of this casual or tramp class are people not deserving of any consideration, and they suggest that they should be deprived of their liberty for certain periods and put to labour work in one or two or three central institutions where they would be obliged to work hard for a certain time, as tramps or vagabonds, and that attempts should be made in that way to reclaim them?—They should make an attempt; it is most necessary.

15451. Would you approve of some such plan?—I would, if it could be carried out at all; we have a rule but we find that when we put it in operation we cannot carry it out; that is if any one applied for admission twice within six months we would have him examined and brought before the magistrates. But the difficulty was that he would get out in the morning, and before we could get a summons or a magistrate to sign it we would not know in what direction he went, and you would not get a policeman very anxious to go and serve the summons, and if he got the summons he might put it in his pocket and not appear at all. There is something required to strengthen the hands of the local authorities to do something with these tramps; they are the greatest nuisance we have. Then we went through the form of getting them to break stones; they did more injury to the tools that we supplied them with than the stones they broke, and they appear to know the Poor Law better than we do ourselves. It is the way they live, pilfering throughout the country.

15452. Mr. MURKIN.—You think the police ought to be called in to give some assistance in regard to tramps?—I would be very glad to see them called upon to give some assistance, for they are a heinous nuisance in the country.

15453. If they had to report themselves to the police when they came to seek admittance do you think that would have any beneficial effect?—That would be only a matter of form; they would not consider it a very difficult job to tell a policeman, if they met him, "I am going down to get a ticket for the workhouse."

Mr. William Adams.

15444. Some people think that if they are left at large they might do damage to country houses!—That is the harm; that they would set fire to the hay. I know an instance where a hotel proprietor here had a large hay-rack; one of those tramps did not get a ticket for some reason or another and he went and lay in the hay-rack, and the hay was burned; we could not say whether he did it maliciously or not. And some of these bad cases they might put an end to themselves—drawn themselves—and then the Board of Guardians would be held up to execration as inhuman people; it is so difficult to manage these tramps; and some of them you could see in their countenances they knew what they are doing; they have been at it a lengthened time, and intend to continue it.

15445. The closing of the workhouses would have an additional beneficial effect; they would have farther to walk!—I think it would.

15446. Chairman.—I don't know whether you have considered whether any towns, such as Banagher, or any other town has any serious complaint about being too far from a hospital; whether they want a little cottage hospital of their own. How far are you from Banagher?—Banagher is near Birr—about six miles.

15447. Well, that is near enough; do you know any other thickly populated part of the county?—Clonsilla is six miles from us, and there is a railway there, but still when people are taken sick with an infectious disease we always send the car there; it would not do to have those travel in a railway compartment.

15448. Portlinton is partly in the King's County?—Yes; the river divides the town from the King's County.

15449. Portlinton is in the Mountmellick Union?—Yes; but there are portions of Mountmellick in this county, and quite convenient to us.

15450. Would you go in, even in the case of the Mountmellick Union, for taking part of the Mountmellick Union that is in the King's County, would you go in for the idea of the County Council of having the entire of the county under some local body in the county, and not having any body outside dealing with it?—I think you would want bodies to look after the wants.

15451. That is not what I mean; at present at Edenderry you have part of the union in two other counties besides your own?—Yes.

15452. Would you be in favour of taking all the parts of the King's County and putting it off completely for Poor Law purposes from any other county?—I would if there was a proper provision made not to have any hardship to the sick poor.

15453. Take the case of the town of Portlinton; what do you think about that?—It is thirteen miles by road, and you have a train coming from Portlinton three times a day.

15454. Have they any hospital there?—Not that I am aware of, but I think it is six or seven from Mountmellick.

15455. Yes go down as far as Cloughjordan?—Yes. This is a large county; it is not an easy county to manage, as far as amalgamation is concerned; this is about sixty miles in length.

15456. Take that part that is down near Cloughjordan and Monagall, supposing that the farthest of part of the barony of Clonsilla was part of a King's County union, if there was only one union in the King's County, these people at Monagall and Cloughjordan would have too far to come to Tullamore; that is quite evident?—Yes; there should be some provision made for them in Birr.

15458. Roscrea is where they go at present, or Nenagh; and then you would continue the hospital for them except that you would pay for them so much a head; instead of their being in the Roscrea Union they would be under the King's County Poor Law system, but being so near a hospital in another system they would pay so much a week?—That would be easily carried out if on calculation it was shown that there was no inconvenience in carrying it out, and that it led to economy.

15459. The same way in the case of Portlinton, paying to Mountmellick, and the same way as regards the portions of the Edenderry Union that are in different counties; they would come into the King's County and pay you so much a week for taking them in; do you see any objection to that?—It is very hard to form an opinion at the first look; it looks as if it was going in the way of my doing away with so many existing institutions and officials.

15460. And the cost of fuel?—And you would have more in each institution, and there would be more work for the officials to do.

15461. Of course we would only leave, we will say in Birr or Edenderry, the infirmary and sick wards there, and you would only require to have nurses and the doctor of the place, and chaplains?—Yes; and a couple of attendants.

15462. Of course I mean the nursing staff?—I don't know the exact number of what we call the ordinary infirm inmates in Edenderry and Birr, but I think if Tullamore Union was relieved of the epileptic and children and able-bodied we would have room enough for them.

15463. There are in Birr ninety-eight and in Edenderry fifty-two, and a great many of those belong to other counties; you could easily put them up?—Yes; I often go on inspection on a commission, and I see there is plenty of room; the infirmary is not half full; there are eight large wards in our infirmary, or six, and I hope you will see that we have paid sufficient attention to it.

15464. I saw a great improvement?—We do everything we can, and we have in our mind to have a heated with a steam boiler, and we are getting an opinion from Kays Parry to see whether we can utilize the steam for cooking and washing.

15465. The only other point I wish to ask you about is about whether you get much payment from persons who come in and use your workhouse or infirmary?—Well, only from pensioners; we send their certificates; and a few come into the infirmary and they may pay, but very few; we have a county infirmary.

15466. You don't get much payment?—Not as a rule; I think we have made an order on several occasions to make the patient pay.

15467. Would you be in favour of the suggestion that we received elsewhere that Board of Guardians should be empowered by law to fix an amount in their discretion that a person coming into their wards should be obliged by law to pay; we will say, for instance, a labouring man at the distillery here or anywhere you like will be earning 12s. a week, one of his children will be sick, he will send in the child to be treated in your sick wards; would you be in favour of being able to make an order that that man should pay some small thing, say 1s. a week, whatever the child would cost at home; would you be in favour of making him pay that?—I think, in justice to the ratepayers, they should have that discretionary power; I think they have it at present.

15468. It is a little doubtful, but at all events it has not been exercised, but if there were special powers given to them you think it would be good?—I think it would be honest and business-like.

15469. And don't you think that very probably the people themselves would be very glad to pay a small amount to get off the idea of being considered pauper?—I think they would forget that portion of it; I think they would be as soon considered paupers and keep the money.

15470. We find in the North of Ireland that in two institutions this system was actually in active operation and that receipts were received in one of them more than sufficient to pay for the medical staff; that the receipts were very large, and in small amount?—They must be of a different class of workmen and strikers from what we have about here, or the Northern employers must give them better pay, for they rarely get more than 12s. or 11s. a week here.

15471. At all events a child would cost very nearly 1s. a week?—It would be very difficult to get them to leave in a child, except the child met with an accident, in any kind of sickness the mother keeps the child, and if it is any kind of accident they go into the infirmary, and we have a rule there that every one who can pay must pay.

15472. As every year goes on more people are getting persuaded of the desirability of going into a public hospital?—Yes; that is increasing.

Feb. 18, 1904.

Mr. William Adams.

15433. And if you take away the unpleasant association of the workhouse from the Guardians' hospital, you will still further increase the desire of the people to have their sick treated there?—Quite so; and I think the infirmaries should be amalgamated too.

15434. If you put the corresponding liability on to the Guardians, do you think that would be fair?—It is a pay a little do the Guardians to carry it out, and if there is any weakness in the law the Guardians should be strengthened.

15435. You said just now you thought it might be a good thing to have the infirmaries amalgamated; what do you mean?—We have two infirmaries in Tullamore—one is an old infirmary established by law that we cannot interfere with.

15436. We are here to receive suggestions, and the county infirmaries come within our jurisdiction?—We have a county infirmary here that costs the ratepayers between £900 and £1,000 a year.

15437. And this people at Moneygall have to pay for their?—Yes.

15438. Is it not a hardship?—It is, and there is a small average in it, but they are very well attended to there is no doubt.

15439. I don't know whether you consider medical and surgical questions very much, but if you were to consider them you might see the desirableness of having a county hospital that would be managed on a higher level, where operations could be carried out in a way that they cannot be in an ordinary hospital?—That is the intention, I believe, of the formation of county infirmaries—that they were for surgical operations—and anything that does occur in the county within ten or twelve miles generally comes from broken arms or dislocated joints. There are no infectious diseases allowed there.

15440. We saw some chronic cases of rheumatism that had been there for months?—There was an order at the very last meeting of the governors to exclude those in future. We thought some of them were scheming.

15441. I was asking one patient a few questions with that idea in my mind, too. Then you would be in favour of the system of getting payments where it could be done without hardship?—Certainly.

15442. And you would leave it to the discretion of the local people?—Yes; policemen pay when they go in there. I cannot tell you the exact amount we receive, but in cases brought before the justices by the master, we inquire into it, and don't hesitate to make an order that they shall pay, and the moment a prisoner comes in, thinking he can lay up until his pension is due, we make the master apply to the paymaster of the War Office, and get the amount of his expenses.

15443. Mr. McNamee:—What do you think of giving Guardians power to board out aged and infirm inmates, if they could find suitable homes in the neighbourhood from which they came? The principle may work after a trial. I would not like to give an answer to that. It would be very difficult to board out old infirm people; when they get old they sometimes get contrary, and it would be very hard to get a person minding well off to take them.

15444. CHAIRMAN:—Don't you think people get more patient and better able to put up with things the older they grow?—I don't know. It would be necessary to be very particular where you board these people out, and the class you would be inclined to select would be the class that would not like to be bothered with them.

15445. Mr. McNamee:—We found in the body of the house a number of old people huddled together in a room, and it does look very sad to see them confined in this way; whereas if the Guardians had power to board them out, where they could have exercise, freedom, and fresh air, their life would be brighter?—If a person looking for out-door relief is old and beyond their work, if there is any aid in the locality connected with them by family ties and relationship, it is a great reason for us to keep them out of the workhouse, provided we learn from the relieving officer or local Guardians that they are fairly treated.

15446. You have not a power of inspection in these cases?—But if they were badly treated they would soon complain.

15447. Do you think it would be well to give the Guardians the choice of sending to a central institution the aged and infirm, or boarding them out in the locality?—I think the Guardians should be allowed to use their own discretion in those cases; that would assist in creating a greater interest to look after the wants of these people. If a Guardian is to be a Guardian, and he is selected by those whose money he is disbursing, I think he ought to have that power.

15448. CHAIRMAN:—You have a good many recipients of out-door relief in your union?—There are a good many, but those are heads of families.

15449. You pay a good deal—three Burr and Edenderry put together. Your bill for out-door relief in the last return is £2,506. In Burr it is £264, and in Edenderry £2,241?—We find it more economical, after due consideration of every application when there is a deserving case made, to grant it, and in fact we keep a very bold front to applications, and refuse more than we grant, after due investigation.

15450. What class of people generally get out-door relief from you?—Old and infirm people beyond their work; or a wife and family during the sickness of the breadwinner.

15451. Those people would get £1 6d. from you. With whom would they live?—It might supplement their way of living. They may sell stockings, or do light indoor work, and that £1 6d. is a means of keeping them out of the workhouse; or it is a working man is sick and in the infirmary, and has a wife and five or six children, we think it very hard to have the house broken up and we give them £1 6d.

15452. Dr. Hession:—How are the patients admitted to the county infirmary?—By tickets issued by the governors, and every member of the County Council is an ex-officio member of the governing body—about eighteen. They all have power to issue tickets for deserving cases. They are supplied with two books—one a book for paying patients, and you see supposed to put the necessary questions to the applicant to find what he is able to pay, and you put down 5s., 7s., or 10s. a week.

15453. Is he bound to pay that?—He is.

15454. Are those the only persons that can give tickets?—That is all, I think; that is the active governing body and the management of all denominations.

15455. Are all the members of the different denominations on?—They are. I don't think the Wesleyan deacons in Tullamore is a member, but the Protestant deacons and Roman Catholic deacons are. Dean Craig was our chairman.

15456. The county is very large, and sometimes on eighteen, or even twenty-eight, members might mean a considerable distance for a person who wants a line signed?—We guard the public against inconvenience, because every County Councillor has leave to supply a ticket.

15457. CHAIRMAN:—I suppose Dr. Hession would receive a patient on the recommendation of any doctor of the county?—I think he would; in fact he attends extern patients. It is more like a dispensary than anything else. He is a very attentive little man.

15458. Dr. Hession:—Does he give medicine to the patients that come?—I am not sure; they get medicine from Dr. Moorhead.

15459. Would it not be unfair to give medicine for the district round Tullamore at the expense of the whole county-at-large?—It would be if he gives it, but I cannot say whether he gives medicine or not.

15460. Because the whole county pays equally for the support. I thought you said very few patients from the far end of the county ever come to Tullamore?—It has been increasing of late. It has become more popular since it came under the County Council. Moreover it was looked on as a close borough; any deserving applicant will get a ticket from a County Councillor. I know they come from below Clighan and Banagher, and regularly from Frankfort. I get a few lines from a doctor to ask me to give a ticket to so-and-so, and the moment he applies at my residence I give him a ticket.

15461. Frankfort is only ten miles. Are there any patients from Moneygall?—I don't think we ever get one.

15462. CHAIRMAN:—How many from Edenderry?—I don't think there are many.

15463. Dr. Hession:—Therefore they are not served really by the county infirmary?—I don't think they are very much.

15464. What means of conveyance have you at the county infirmary?—We have none; they generally have their own conveyance to bring them in.

15465. Would you not think it a desirable thing that all parts of the county should get some benefit from this county infirmary?—If it could be arranged it would be only honest and just to every corner of the county, but it is open for them.

15466. If it is not convenient they cannot come there?—

3 X

Feb. 18, 1904.
Mr. William Adams.

—It is hardly accessible as far as Moneygall is concerned, but there are very few other portions of the county but occasionally read patients; there are never very many in it, I don't suppose it would average twenty-five all the year round.

15597. What is the cost of the upkeep of the county infirmary?—I think $900, if not over. Before the County Council got control of it a good many ladies and gentlemen used to contribute very generously, but since then they never gave 1s.; the whole thing is now direct taxation.

15598. Have your subscriptions practically ceased?—Completely ceased.

15599. Do you know how much you receive from paying patients?—No, but it is something considerable.

15600. You try to get as much as you can?—Yes. We are alive to that; in fact so much alive are we to that point that we get a fresh book printed a few months ago, that each governor is supplied with, and there are queries in it to be put to patients; and I think, in comparison with other infirmaries, we stand very favourably for economy. We are not nearly as expensive as other county infirmaries.

15601. That is not always the best economy; efficiency and economy should go together.—There is efficiency, too. With all the unfortunate people that come there with accidents and for other cases, I never heard of a complaint.

15602. CHAIRMAN.—People are very good that way. They never saw anything better!—I know myself a good deal of it is on the surface, as far as saying "I am well treated," and all that sort of thing. If you went to those when they went home they might have a different story to tell, but from the appearance of the place and the kindness of the officials, and attention of the doctor, I don't think they have any reason to complain. There is not a more attentive doctor in Ireland.

15603. We were thinking that the room for performing operations is not quite as good as it might be?—Not on the large scale you refer to.

15604. Dr. BUCKER.—Not even on a moderate scale?—The last few years it has been wonderfully improved. Did you see the sanitary annex?

15605. Those are very good.—That is owing to the kindness of a deceased gentleman in the county; the newspapers did not contribute one penny. This gentleman left $1,000 in his will to be expended for the upkeep of the infirmary.

15606. CHAIRMAN.—It was very well spent money!—There is something to the credit yet for other things.

15607. Dr. BUCKER.—Am I to understand that all classes requiring infirmary treatment are received into the county infirmary?—Certainly.

15608. Whether they can pay or not?—I think so. I never knew of a case being refused. If they cannot pay we won't insist on their paying.

15609. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—What is the proportion of paying patients to non-paying?—There are very few pay; policeman pay. If a farmer, or a farmer's son, came there that had met with an accident in the harvest time with a machine, he pays.

15610. CHAIRMAN.—Now, having regard to the fact that the whole of the county there from Moneygall to Edenderry contributes to the county infirmary, do you think it would be a fair thing to have the maintenance of the sick at Edenderry, Burre, and Tullamore all made a county charge, the same as the county infirmary is at present?—If the same accommodation was given to the sick poor in Burre and Edenderry, I would say it would.

15611. Do you mean as good treatment?—Yes.

15612. Burre has a remarkably good hospital, exceptionally good, a wonderfully good hospital, one of the best local hospitals in the country, and you would be in favour, where there is such a hospital, of making it a county charge?—I don't see how it would alter the existing state of affairs very much if it was a county charge; it would come to the same thing.

15613. It would not be very big one way or another?—Supposing there were thirty in Burre, twenty in Edenderry, and thirty in Tullamore, I cannot see that it would make much difference.

15614. And all the sick in the county would be a county charge. They are not a class that sham very much?—Very few sham sickness if they can avoid it, though I believe there are cases on record where they were detected shamming sickness; but we would expect a little more from our doctor than to allow himself to be deceived in that way.

15615. There is not the same temptation as there is for out-door relief?—They are able to make a very good case on behalf of themselves when looking for out-door relief.

15616. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Do you not think the local Guardians would have to bear the expending of their own money in their own area?—So they would; in fact some would go for divisional rating.

15617. CHAIRMAN.—Of course I mean they would have the expending of the money. Burre Hospital would be where it is. Edenderry hospital would be where it is; but I mean that the cost of the sick should be a county charge?—But would not the representation of the county have a voice.

15618. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Do you not think that the Guardians themselves would desire to manage their own particular area, apart from the county altogether?—I think they would.

15619. CHAIRMAN.—I am not talking at all of the question of management. I am only talking of charge-ability. I am saying here you have a county infirmary paid for by the entire county. That suggests the question whether it might not be a fair thing that the net all over the county should be a county charge apart altogether from the question of local management?—I think the different localities would prefer having the expenses of the sick collected in their own locality. Speaking for myself, I could not see any great difference in having it a county rate for the maintenance in the three places of the sick poor.

15620. Would you then be in favour of restricting the area of charge for the county infirmary to the Tullamore Union, which chiefly gets the benefit of it?—On condition that the others would be excluded from coming to it.

15621. Or paying for it?—But there are several cases here out of the Burre Union.

15622. You would leave the area of charge for the county infirmary on Tullamore Union, and charge the Burre, Edenderry, and other people who come here, so much per week?—I think it would be a fair way of meeting it. But speaking from my own personal point of view, I would rather leave it the way it is.

15623. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—But on the ground of fairness, it is rather hard on Moneygall or the extreme end of Edenderry to pay for the upkeep of an institution that they don't benefit by.

CHAIRMAN.—Are there any other County Councilmen to give evidence?

Mr. DAVID SMITH examined.

I am not deputed by the County Council. I am from Edenderry.

15624. CHAIRMAN.—You have heard Mr. Adams' evidence, and if there is anything you wish to express a contrary opinion on, I would be glad to hear it?—With regard to the injustice done to Edenderry by having a rate levied all over the county for the county infirmary, we think it a great injustice when we derive practically no benefit at all, and we had a couple of applications for an increase of that rate since the County Council came in. I think there was not more than one patient relieved in Tullamore from the Edenderry district.

15625. What would you think of the idea of making the maintenance of the sick a county charge, as the county infirmary, the same area of charge?—I don't think it would work out fair. I think the area would be too big.

15626. You are afraid Tullamore would get too much out of it?—Yes, as it is getting already.

15627. Dr. BUCKER.—If your sick were supported out of the same fund, where would the injustice be?—That would be a different thing.

15628. That is what the Chairman says, if the sick in Edenderry were supported out of the same fund?—Would it they have to come here?

15629. CHAIRMAN.—No; stay where they are, but be paid for as if it was a county infirmary?—Paid by the Board?

15630. No, but the actual expense of your infirmary?—I don't think we are as populous a district as Tullamore, and I suspect they would have the best of it then too.

15631. And you are more highly valued?—Yes.

15632. Is there anything else you would like to add?—Not with regard to that; of course, I have other objections with regard to the Board of Guardians.

15633. You would like now to give your evidence from Edenderry?—Whenever it is convenient.

Feb. 12, 1904.

Mr. Deak
Shel.

15544. What are your views about Edenderry?—I would be entirely opposed to abolishing the workhouse, from the bad accommodation we have to other unions.

15545. If your hospital were left, would you still object to amalgamation?—I don't think it would conduce to economy at all.

15546. If, on the other hand, a scheme were devised on a very large scale all over the entire county, some such scheme as was suggested in the questions put to Mr. Adams, if such a scheme was started, and if it were clearly apparent that there would be economy, would you still object to the closing of your workhouse, except the sick wards?—I think too large an area would be unavailable.

15547. You have a very large area at present for a leucic asylum?—Yes.

15548. These are people in sufficient bodily health to be removed. You would only have people in a similar state of health to be dealt with if your hospital was left open. In what way do you think it would be unavailable?—In the case of lunatics, it is compulsory on them to be removed there, but in the case of healthy old people, they will have a decided objection to go as far as twenty miles. There is portion of the boundary of the union not within twenty miles of the workhouse in their own county, there is portion of the boundary of the union twenty miles from Tullamore, if you proposed sending them to Tullamore, and then portion of the Co. Kildare would be twenty-three miles from Naas, which is the union that, of course, it would be proposed to send them to; and the same in Meath—it is seventeen miles from Trim—and these people don't like to go too far from their relatives and their native place—respectable old men who have to seek refuge in the workhouse. For instance, I know one man who worked at the building of the workhouse. All his family are dead but himself. He just lives immediately outside the town of Edenderry, and I think it would be a great hardship to send that man away to Naas. He takes a turn and steps out for a month with his friends, and if he went to Naas he never could get back; and I would say he would have a decided objection to go, and it would be a hardship to insist on his going.

15549. If there was a big economy in it, do you think the objection you make would be fatal to the adoption of a decidedly economical system?—I think the sentiment ought to be taken into consideration.

15550. As against a very large saving?—Where there would be a very large saving, I would not, but I don't see where it comes.

15551. If you had a large saving, would you then object?—I would always have the same objection.

15552. Do you live in the town of Edenderry?—I live within a mile of it.

15553. Mr. Peyton.—You are a Guardian of the town?—With regard to removing the villages and imbalances, I would entirely approve of having them removed.

15554. CHAIRMAN.—I don't want to be asking the same questions of each witness, but we had an exhaustive examination of Mr. Adams. You heard his evidence, and if anything struck you on which your own opinion is different, we will be very glad to hear it, and if there has been anything omitted?—With regard to the children, I would be greatly in favour of having them boarded out, but our difficulty is we cannot get people to take them.

15555. What do you effect?—£9 a year, the actual cost in the workhouse, and £1 for clothing.

15556. The actual cost in the workhouse would be more than double £9?—I think not; we are giving them the actual cost.

15557. You are only giving them the cost of their food?—And the clothes.

15558. If you take the cost of the child you have to add something more than the mere cost of food and clothing?—I think we would be willing to do so, but we took the average cost; we considered the children cost less than the able-bodied. We have a difficulty in getting them boarded out, and I would suggest if the Guardians were empowered to give money grants. Our principal difficulty is we cannot get suitable people—men with cows.

15559. That is right?—We don't like to give out a child to any person whose there is not milk, so I would suggest that if the Guardians were empowered to make money grants by way of loan to people in labourers' cottages; there are a good many labourers' cottages through the country, clean habitations, and they were empowered to make money grants and get it back by instalments; we would have no difficulty.

15560. To buy a cow?—To buy a cow. I am totally opposed to the rearing up of children in a workhouse.

15561. Where could a man with his half-acre or acre of land feed a cow?—A good many of them do; they can get grass outside.

15562. Mr. MURKHAM.—Does it not cost a good deal of money?—Not so much; they have the milk cheaper than otherwise.

15563. Where would he get his fodder for the winter?—Half-an-acre of good meadow could be bought, and he would have the milk for his own family.

15564. You say you would see no economy in doing away with some of the workhouses in the county. Would you not see a saving in getting rid of half of the staff of some of the present workhouses?—I think there would be an increase of staff with regard to providing the hospital, which would be a matter of necessity.

15565. You have a hospital already. The staff of the main body of the house might be dispensed with?—I don't see who can be taken away except the master and clerk, and you would have to provide a clerk and stewardess.

15566. CHAIRMAN.—How many people have they in the county infirmary house—a master, nurse, and couple of assistants, and the doctor and chaplain?—You would want landresses and night nurses.

15567. No more than you have got at present?—But they are able-bodied people out of the body of the house that are in the laundry now, and, of course, you would want some one in the kitchen, two or three persons; then you have a couple of workmen.

15568. Labour must be very plentiful when you draft so many as that in?—There are only about eleven, and five are taken up with the infirmary. I see a great objection to amalgamate us with any union around, because we are the lowest rated.

15569. Mr. MURKHAM.—But if the management remains as it is, how would that affect you?—We would have to take over the burden of another union.

15570. If you still manage your own area, how would it affect you being allied with another. You would only be paying for the upkeep of your able-bodied and infirm?—The president suggested a county charge.

15571. But there is an alternative to that, to continue the present system as it is: let every union manage its own expenses. How would it affect you in Edenderry?—We would be better off still.

15572. Then you see no objection to an arrangement like this?—I would see no objection if our rates were not raised, and we had not to take up the burden of those who had higher rates.

15573. You would only have to pay for the poor of your own particular area?—But there would be some expense sending away the poor. We have no direct railway communication with these places; somebody would have to pay.

15574. The expense of sending the people to a central workhouse would not be so great as the expense of keeping a staff permanently?—I don't know that that would have to be figured out yet. I am of opinion that it would.

15575. Does not your firing cost you a great deal?—The bill for firing is £230 a year, and the infirmary takes most of that, probably £220.

15576. A very moderate-sized workhouse costs from £200 to £400?—We are very well situated with regard to turf; we generally use it, with 50 tons of coal.

15577. If you get rid of that expense, would it not be some benefit to the ratepayers?—If you keep a hospital you could not get rid of that expense.

15578. The hospital only takes its share?—It takes the largest share.

15579. You see no advantage in amalgamation then?—I could not see it as far as our union is concerned. I think it would be the reverse.

Mr. MATTHEW MOORE examined.

15580. CHAIRMAN.—You have heard the evidence of your predecessor. Do you agree with his views?—I do.

15581. You are strongly opposed to amalgamation?—Yes, from long experience.

15582. And you think, as far as any calculations have been made by you or your officials, you think it would be against the interest of the Edenderry Union, owing to the low rates you have there?—Yes, and the way it is looked after.

15583. If you found your rates would not be increased, but somewhat diminished?—I am doubtful about that.

Mr. Matthew

15584. If it did happen that the calculations which are in progress of being made would show a saving, would you still be opposed to amalgamation?—No; I am afraid there would be new appointments—new clerks.

15585. But supposing, on the contrary, there were far fewer clerks?—I don't see how the poor could get here. We don't send any one to this infirmary. I am about the tenth largest employer in the district. I have thirty-five years' experience of the Board of Guardians and of the District Council since it came in; in fact I have a good deal of my time in it, unfortunately for myself.

15586. You don't see how there could be any economy in amalgamation?—I am afraid not.

15587. If you could imagine for a moment that it was possible that there are methods of bringing down taxation even in the present Edenderry Union, would you still be opposed to it?—I would not be opposed to it.

15588. Supposing there was a decided rebellion, say one-sixth on the rates, would you be opposed to it?—In a way, I don't know how I could come here seventeen miles, or how the poor would get here.

15589. Supposing there was a local body there, or a local committee, or a District Council, or a Board of Guardians continued—all these alternatives have been mentioned to us, and we have not come to any opinion as to which, if any, of them is a good suggestion—but suppose some local body were left there still, and you would not have to travel more distance?—And have control of our own district, at our own average rating, the same as electoral divisions were long ago.

15590. You would like to go back to the electoral division rating?—None or less I would. I hold, in three electoral divisions, valuation something over £1,100.

15591. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—If you continue to manage your own union as you do at present, and there could be economy shown to you, would you then be opposed?—I would not exactly, but I would not like to have the Board go a long distance where people could not be expected to go.

15592. You would not have to go elsewhere if you continued to meet as you do at present. Would you not go to the same place you go at present?—Yes.

15593. And you would simply pay a certain sum per head for the people you send to the central institution?—I don't expect to send them to the central institution. I followed Mr. Adams pretty closely about sending away these unfortunate women.

15594. You would not object to boarding-out the children?—I go in for that.

15595. And the income to be sent to a more suitable place?—Yes.

15596. CHAIRMAN.—And the aged and infirm to go to a central workhouse?—I don't know about that. I am afraid it would create new establishments. I have great experience of new officials appointed from time to time, and I have a great horror of them.

15597. The people throughout the country have the same impression, and that is the reason we are sitting here to-day, to see if we can reduce instead of increase it.—I hope so.

15598. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—If the change that has been outlined here to-day takes place the staff could be considerably reduced, and the cost correspondingly so. How would you get the infirm treated?—You would have to keep on a hospital.

15599. CHAIRMAN.—Yes?—I suppose you know where the infirmary lies. You have had the evidence of Messrs. You will have Kildare later on. I don't think it would be fair to let it in with anywhere else at the rating.

15600. Is there anything else that occurs to you?—No; I fall in line with what Mr. Sheil says.

Mr. R. B. PETERSON examined.

15601. CHAIRMAN.—Are you the same man that you were the other day at Nenagh?—Absolutely. You referred to the rates. I don't think it would be a fair thing for us to amalgamate in any shape or form unless the rates were left as they are now. The standard rate of Tullamore is 1s. 10½d., and while they got 11½d. deduced on their rate, we only get 6½d. reduction on ours. So unless that basis is maintained I am absolutely opposed to any amalgamation; but provided that is maintained, I am very strongly in favour of amalgamation in the county. The cost of Edenderry Union for establishment charges, as given to me by Mr. Kennedy, the clerk, was last year £1,570, that is mostly for establishment charges; that is 4d. in the £ on the entire union, but that by no means represents the expenditure we have to incur on the upkeep of the establishment. The Local Government Board is insisting we shall spend £1,300 on drainage and sewerage works.

15602. I believe it is the Public Health Act insists on that?—Yes; I don't wish to abuse the Local Government Board, but at all events that has got to be spent, and we are asked to spend a considerable sum on the indoor—empty wards, which are absolutely useless to us.

15603. Was that explained?—Yes; but the building must be kept right.

15604. To keep it from falling down?—The establishment charges of keeping up such a building.

15605. It would be cheaper to take it down if you don't want it?—Probably. At any rate, as we stand now, we have only got forty-two permanent paupers. Many parishes of the district, that is the part of the union situated in the King's County, are absolutely nearer Tullamore than Edenderry, and I can see no possible objection at all to removing a great many of the permanent paupers there; and it would seem to me that that would perhaps enable us to treat a few of the old and infirm of good character in the infirmary, or some little establishment at home, such as Mr. Sheil suggested. Of course the difficulty I see is that representation and taxation should go together. If you amalgamate for in-door relief only and charge us on the valuation for the county for the establishment charges at Tullamore, making that a county central infirmary—

15606. Central almshouse?—Then I should be disposed to say we ought to nominate a few members from the Edenderry district to act as governors.

15607. Or would you not be satisfied with paying so much per head. You would be rather afraid that they might get extravagant, and you would have to pay too much a head, and you would have no means of local representation to keep it down?—Yes, it does not give us any control in the maintenance of the workhouse at all; therefore I should be rather disposed to nominate governors—I am only throwing this out—for the upkeep, and establishment charges, and maintenance of Tullamore Union. Provided that is done, I see no possible objection to the amalgamation of the union, and I believe if the vast masses of the ratepayers and District Councillors understood it perfectly, and were assured from the start that there would be no economy, they would not have the slightest objection. Mr. Sheil represents the town of Edenderry, and he may think it his duty to represent the feelings of the town, which would be adverse to amalgamation because they would lose a large share of the contracts. But he takes to some parts of the outlying districts. As it happens, these outlying districts as parishes are not very far from the railway, and people can come more easily to Kildare, Portlanning, and Tullamore than from the other parts of the union. Then, of course, there is the question of the county infirmary. We pay, I understand from the Secretary of the County Council, £1,300, and I believe as a matter of fact we have nobody there, and I have asked Dr. Millin, the medical officer, and he tells me that if he had a proper ambulance he would not have the slightest objection to send a great many of his patients to Tullamore Infirmary, and from all his patients they would very much prefer to go there than to go to the workhouse hospital in Edenderry; so it would seem to me that if that central hospital were made more efficient, it would enable us to reduce considerably the infirmary—if we keep a small infirmary at Edenderry—and reduce the expense to everybody concerned.

15608. And do away with a grievance as regards the county infirmary?—Yes. The only thing I wish to add is in reference to the children, and that is, that there are thirty-five children in the union, and we have boarded-out all we can.

15609. Do you happen to know how many you boarded out?—Seven or eight now. I only mentioned Mrs. Barrett's Home, not merely in reference to education, but as showing that that kind of training did produce good citizens. Unless the law is strengthened to over the Act of 1880, we shall find it very difficult to deal with these thirty-five children in boarding-out, because parents come to the workhouse and stop them for a year, and then go out and take the children, so that unless some provision is made that we can secure the guardianship of these children—

15610. Would you be in favour of power being given to the Board of Guardians to take away from parents who are guilty as to mismanage and bring up badly their children. Would you be in favour of taking these children from the children away from such parents, but I think in connection with that the law should be strengthened in connection with the desertion of children; there should be a very heavy penalty for that. It would be possible for parents to desert these with the law in view that they would be taken by the Guardians and get rid of their own responsibility. I think the law should be strengthened and vigorously enforced.

15611. Would you be in favour of having places to which to send these people who proved their inability to be parents?—That is a very large question.

15612. To send them in places where there would be no danger of their having further children?—That is a very large question to interfere with the liberty of the subject; that is against constitutional law.

15613. You would have to get a court of law to act in that way. Would you be in favour of it?—I would be disposed to be in favour of it.

15614. Leaving it to the discretion of the body or court who has to decide it?—Yes. I have just estimated that if the establishment charges of Tallamore did not increase we should save about 3d. in the £ by amalgamation on the basis I put before you, and that would be £1,200 on the county.

15615. We should be very glad if you could favour us at your leisure with a copy of your calculation?—Certainly. I may say the public want to be educated on the subject.

15616. Persons are unable to grasp the effect of charges that are newly proposed?—I still think that out-door relief should be maintained. The work of the Board of Guardians is only a beguile since this new Local Government Act, so many duties have been put on the District Councils. I think all the work of out-door relief should be discharged by the District Councils, and there should be amalgamation in the county for indoor relief, with power to us to appoint governors. Absolutely great part of the district is nearer Tallamore than Edwinstown.

15617. Dr. HOSKINS.—Did you calculate the cost per inmate in the workhouse?—No, not in the establishment charges.

MR. PATRICK GARNEY examined.

15618. CHAIRMAN.—You are Chairman of the Birr Board of Guardians—what is the view of the Birr Board of Guardians on the question of the amalgamation of unions generally?—They are not in favour of amalgamation with any other union.

15619. Have they any view as regards the idea of general amalgamation throughout the country?—Birr could accommodate fifty more paupers than they have.

15620. Then you have not approached the question beyond your own union?—We believe that amalgamation with any other union would be a great mistake; we oppose it tooth and nail.

15621. Do you think that financially and as regards hardship to the sick in removal?—Yes; and I don't believe, no matter what way the law is changed, that by amalgamation of unions, the way Birr is situated, you can save anything to the ratepayers.

15622. There are at present 150 unions?—Take the King's County—

15623. Take the case of Ireland—there are 150 unions, if you close thirty won't there be a big saving to the country?—That depends on how they are situated.

15624. It would look as if you would have a big saving?—But how would that saving come in an Birr in an amalgamation with Tallamore and Edwinstown?

15625. You have looked into it yourself, and don't see how it could?—No.

15626. Well, what we want is to hear your views?—I think it would be a great hardship to send poor people to Tallamore. Perhaps they might not be a bright or these weeks there when they would die, and then they would have to be brought back by their friends.

15627. What happens when you send a patient to a lunatic asylum?—That is very different.

15628. What does happen when a patient dies there?—The friends generally send for them. Birr is twenty-eight or thirty miles from Maryboro', and the relatives of the deceased remove and a hearse for them, or sometimes bring them by rail.

15629. In the total expenditure on the workhouse?—£1,500 is the total expenditure for last year up to 31st of March, 1903, not counting food and clothing.

15630. How many inmates?—Forty-five paupers and fifty-five in the infirmary.

15631. That is £16 a head for establishment charges?—You could nearly send them to the South of France for that. We want to keep a grip on our expenditure.

15632. CHAIRMAN.—You are a Guardian?—Yes, a District Councillor. There is an item of £240 in that £1,500, but then we have got this £1,000 coming, and a lot of other expenditure, so I don't think it would be at all an over-estimate to say £1,500 for establishment charges, and that is nearly 4d. in the £ on the union.

15633. Mr. MURPHY.—What is the full rate?—Is 10d. the standard rate.

15634. Is it more or less now?—The out-door relief is considerably less. I have not made an absolutely accurate calculation, but the out-door relief we did do, and that has considerably reduced.

15635. Dr. HOSKINS.—You made a very strong point about the standard year—what did you say the establishment was?—About 5d.

15636. And you save 4d. by amalgamation?—Oh, yes.

15637. Would that not compensate you even if the standard rate was not taken into account?—No. I think when people manage their affairs economically they should get the whole advantage of it.

Mr. SHELL.—I wish just to remark that that £1,500 that Mr. Peyton says is establishment charge includes £240 for repairs.

Witness.—I said so.

Mr. SHELL.—He says the Local Government Board ordered us to spend £1,000. It is an understood thing. They asked us to prepare plans, do.

Mr. MOORE.—I forgot to mention that I have a great objection to paying patients coming in. I am a farmer, and made myself, and bought my land, and from the abuse I see of paying patients coming in, they might slip into the infirmary, and, perhaps, be three months there, and they only bring five miles away.

15638. Is something like that what you would object to with regard to the aged and infirm?—Yes. Take Berrisokane, that is a very small union, if that was dissolved we could accommodate the paupers; they are about forty; it adjoints us.

15639. And it is close to Nenagh, too, and it is in the same county as Nenagh?—Yes.

15640. Mr. MURPHY.—Temporary men would like to have that themselves?—I don't think so, because it is a very small union, and I think it would be a great saving to the Tipperarymen to have it joined in with Birr.

15641. You think they would not rather have it joined in to Nenagh?—I think it would be nearer in one point to Birr than to Nenagh.

15642. CHAIRMAN.—Is not all the populous part of the union much nearer Nenagh?—When you take in Berrisokane itself and Cloughjordan, I would say it is about half and half.

15643. At all events, there is no great advantage on the side of Birr?—Unless that we have room for forty inmates.

15644. Nenagh would have room for Berrisokane and Birr as well?—Well, we could take portion. We have already some divisions of Tipperary in the Birr Union—six or seven divisions.

15645. Mr. MURPHY.—When the house was built was not the population much larger than it is at present?—Yes, it was.

15646. Do you not see a waste of money in keeping a place vacant?—Not as regards the Birr Union itself.

15647. Does it not take a good deal to keep it in repair?—Very little, because it is a fine, substantial building, and we are after spending £1,000 on a wing of the hospital.

15648. CHAIRMAN.—I don't think any praise could be too high for your institution at Birr—you have a magnificent workhouse—and we have a splendid hospital away altogether from the workhouse.

15649. Mr. MURPHY.—Your infirmary is excellent, no doubt, but if you had that infirmary still retained and could get rid of the children—I would be in favour of boarding out the children.

15550. If you did board them out, would you be in favour of sending the means to an auxiliary asylum?—I would.

15551. And as regards the mothers of illegitimate children?—Certainly, I would be in favour of that, too.

15552. Having sent such classes away, you would have few but the sick and infirm?—I would be opposed to taking away the sick and infirm.

15553. But to leave the sick where they are, in that excellent infirmary, would you not think that by having a central institution for the infirm it would relieve the rates very considerably?—I do not believe it. I would like to see it in black and white first.

15554. You would get rid of the staff, the coal bill, which is very considerable, you would get rid of the register and register, and getting rid of all that cost for the healthy, would it not be some advantage?—You would think by looking at it in one way it would be a saving, but you will find in years to come there will be no saving. You may save it one way, but you will lose it another.

15555. CHAIRMAN.—How would you lose it?—If you had a central house at Tallamore you would have to have a staff for that, and then the cost of the conveyance of the poor people—would not that be an extra cost?

CHAIRMAN.—The cost of removal would be extra, undoubtedly.

15556. Mr. MURKIN.—That would be only at rare intervals. I know a workhouse that has been joined to another workhouse, there have been twelve or thirteen years' experience, and the rates are very much reduced in that particular instance, and no particular hardship was experienced in the locality?—We find the very reverse. I remember in the District Council first there was nothing but applications for pumps, it was a Rural District No. 1 charge; everywhere we were applying for pumps; we said the best thing we could do was to make them dispensary district charges, and since that was done we have had very few applications for pumps. They work with more economy when it is a county-at-large charge.

15557. CHAIRMAN.—You think the smaller the area the more careful the inquiry?—Certainly.

15558. Would you approve of restricting the area to a smaller area than the county?—I would; I would approve of electoral division rating.

15559. Are you connected with town or country?—Country.

15560. Would the town Guardians agree with you?—We had a meeting, and were equally divided.

15561. Town against country?—Yes; half and half. But when the idea goes out that it is a county charge, only Old. In the S, people are not very slow in increasing the expenditure. Then that quarter-acre section is a thing I think should be repealed, and greater power given to the Guardians.

15562. How far would you modify it?—I would say one and a half acres or two acres. We find great difficulty in relieving poor people in Birr; desiring your cases come up, and we find we cannot give it a while.

15563. We have got that suggestion from other unions, too?—I think it would be a great mistake with a fine union like Birr, after all the expense on average and the hospital, to dissolve it now, and bring all the sick and poor to Tallamore; you would have no profit in the end.

15564. Mr. MURKIN.—Not the sick. Would you be in favour of giving the Guardians power to board out the aged and infirm?—I think you would find great difficulty in getting people to take these old people; they are in the way, like; and they would be better off in the house than with people round. We are giving out-door relief, and we think that is tantamount to boarding out.

15565. Do you think it is a humane or proper thing to have these poor people closed up in a room for five or six months of the year?—I think it is better to have them in the house than out in the country, where they might be neglected.

15566. Even if it cost 6s. or 7s. a week?—It only costs 2s. 6d. a week in the workhouse.

15567. You are mistaken?—I am not mistaken. Mr. Dooley is here.

15568. CHAIRMAN.—That is only for food and maintenance?—I am only referring to the maintenance.

15569. Mr. MURKIN.—The average cost per head is at least £17 per year in the workhouse?—That is including clothes.

15570. CHAIRMAN.—The average for maintenance is only 3s. 6d. per head and in hospital 5s. 6d. We have a splendid hospital fitted up—a fever hospital with a trained nurse, and I think everything is up to the mark.

CHAIRMAN.—We don't commit ourselves to the same opinion about the fever hospital that we do about the rest of the hospital. We saw a great deal there that might be improved on.

Dr. BOGGER.—You have only two wards there.

15571. CHAIRMAN.—You have got a large building, with no proper arrangements and wards. The best part is taken up with officers' quarters and dispensaries, that have no connection really with a fever hospital; but you have got a very good building?—We did a good deal since we went there to the hospital.

15572. The ordinary medical and surgical hospital you have in beautiful order, but the fever hospital?—I suppose the Guardians don't go as much there to look after it as to the other?—There is a visiting committee that goes once a month.

15573. If you put the nurse outside in a little building and made the whole of the big building a fever hospital you would be nearer the mark, and put the dispensary out of it?—I think you would be right in that.

Mr. GEORGE HACKERT examined.

Mr. George
Hackert.

15574. CHAIRMAN.—Are you also opposed to any idea of amalgamation?—Decidedly. I would be in favour of Berriestown Union being added to Birr. I think we could have accommodation for about fifty additional inmates; and, originally, some of the divisions of Berriestown were in Birr Union.

15575. Berriestown was one of the new unions formed about 1860?—Yes.

15576. And part was taken from Birr?—Yes; three or four divisions at least.

15577. So there, at least, you think might go back?—Might go back to Birr; and we have ample accommodation for the number of inmates that belong to this district.

15578. How far are you from Berriestown?—About twelve miles.

15579. You don't propose anything with regard to Berriestown Union—you leave it as it is?—I think so; I don't see what change would be desirable. Then, as regards the boarding out of children, I am at one with our chairman and other witnesses, that it would be a very good thing, provided we could get parties to take them. That is the difficulty; we would want to pay them liberally. I am sure the influence of the workhouse are not very conducive to their future welfare. They will never become good citizens trained in the workhouse, except with very few exceptions. And, as regards the boarding out of aged and infirm inmates, I would not do that. I think they would be much more comfortable and better taken care of in the workhouse.

15580. It is an experiment that never has been tried?—I would not like to try it.

15581. We have got some suggestions about it?—I am afraid their wants would not be attended to—they get a little cranky.

15582. Would you be afraid that a large number of people who might support their aged friends would try to get them in on that system—sons and daughters who would never dream of putting an aged parent or relative into the workhouse would yet try to put them boarded out?—On occasions it might occur.

15583. You would not be afraid of any abuse in that way?—I would not. That is my candid opinion.

15584. It is merely the want of sufficient care you would be afraid of?—Then, as regards a central institution in Tallamore, I would be totally opposed to it. King's County, from Tallamore to Moynagh, is thirty-four Irish miles, and I think the unions are admirably placed, except Berriestown, and I think that might be easily amalgamated with Birr. At present there are six divisions of Birr Union in Tipperary.

I am one of the Guardians for Tipperary, and Chairman of No. 2 District Council. That is the Tipperary portion of Birr, and I think Roscrea, or a portion of it, might be suitably amalgamated with Birr, and, if thought advisable, the remainder might be amalgamated with Nenagh; that is the natural life of the country.

15683. You are not in favour of having poor law unions continuous with the county boundaries?—Decidedly not.

15684. You don't see any advantage in that?—I don't believe that there could be any possible advantages by that arrangement; I think it would be the contrary, in fact.

15685. Mr. MURKIN.—What is your objection to it? Some people have an idea that each county should be self-contained, not only as regards the poor law, but also as regards the upkeep of roads?—I don't look at them from the same standpoint. The upkeep of roads is a county charge; but my own impression is that there would be no advantage whatever, but rather a disadvantage, by having a county arrangement as regards the poor law. I don't look at the upkeep of roads at all from the same standpoint as I do the upkeep of workhouses.

15686. Could local bodies that look after the roads not also look after the poor law in their own area?—They are Guardians at the present moment; they are in the dual capacity.

15687. Do you not think the county is the natural area for all purposes?—I do not as regards the poor law. I can understand the upkeep of roads and that sort of thing.

15688. CHAIRMAN.—You don't feel humiliated by being joined with the King's County for Poor Law purposes?—No, sir; I am a borderer; I could throw a stone from where I was born into the King's County.

15689. Mr. MURKIN.—Don't you think that each county should manage its own affairs?—I am not in favour of making change. I know Roscrea, and I think it is working admirably. The arrangements in Birr are very suitable, and going on very well, and I don't see the advantage of any change.

15690. Still, we do hear occasionally that the workhouse system could be improved?—There may be cases where it might be such, but I cannot see them.

15691. Do you think these houses are utilised to their full capacity at present; don't you think something more could be got out of them?—I don't know, really.

15692. They are half empty, are they not?—We have about 260 inmates in Birr Union.

15693. Built for 1,000?—At that time they went them up to the garrets, near the sky, very often, and in sheds, and even in barracks; now a man has several more cubic feet than he had then. I remember 1,000 men in Birr Barracks; it would not accommodate under present arrangements more than 250.

15694. Notwithstanding all that, there is a large portion of the house unoccupied?—We could afford accommodation for forty or fifty inmates more, and no more under existing arrangements.

15695. Do you not think that by adopting centralisation as regards some of the classes and making suitable provision for the rest, some improvement could be brought about without adding any additional cost on the ratepayers?—So far as I know the workhouses around this district, I really don't see how they could be improved upon, except as regards the boarding out of children, and the arrangement about those unfortunate women that come into the house. I certainly would take the children from them.

15696. Having agreed to the boarding out of children, and having also agreed that unaccompanied mothers should be sent to some reformatory institution, and having also agreed that the lunatics should be put in some place better than a workhouse?—Certainly; I would like to see them in a recognised female asylum.

15697. Having got rid of these various classes, there will be very little more in the workhouse except the aged and infirm?—You have a number of patients in the hospital.

15698. Provided hospitals are continued, can you see any real objection to the Guardians of the Birr Union being empowered to board out or to send to a central institution the remaining class, the aged and infirm?—I do; there is one objection that has just struck me—it is about the burial of these people. A person comes, say, twenty-five or thirty miles here to Tallamore; it would prevent a great many from coming. Where they are within reasonable distance of their friends they generally claim their remains, and sometimes they are not buried in a pauper's coffin or a pauper's grave, in a good many instances; and I think that would be a great objection. Take from Moneygall to Tallamore, it would be a terrible tax on the poor relations.

15699. Are you going to keep up a workhouse for that?—Not for that; but I mention that among the objections I would have to a central place in Tallamore; and really I don't think, as I said at first, that we can improve on the management or arrangements; and my experience is that, that any changes I have seen always tended to a pecuniary loss. I never saw them improve things.

15700. If there is a pecuniary loss there is certainly a great improvement in the treatment?—I don't think so, sir.

15701. Have you been in the Birr Infirmary lately?—I have been in it within a month; I am on the visiting committee.

15702. You must admit that something has been done there?—There has been a great improvement I know; and I can tell you what the improvement is largely owing to—getting in the Sisters of Mercy there as nurses twenty or twenty-two years ago. They have changed the state of affairs. I heard my father, who, at his death, was senior Guardian of the Birr Union say that the state of the inmates in the hospital was something deplorable until the Sisters of Mercy were admitted.

15703. Has not what you have said just now contradicted what you said before?—I don't see where it does.

15704. You said you don't see any improvement?—Excuse me, I did not mean to say so.

15705. CHAIRMAN.—Each change caused great expense, you said?—I believe it is generally more expensive, but still there are improvements that might be equivalent to the expense. I know that there is not perhaps in Ireland a better kept hospital than the workhouse hospital in Birr; the arrangements there are admirable. I often said myself that I would not have the slightest hesitation if I got ill, and had no home of my own, to be sent there, when I saw the condition, the cleanliness, and everything.

Dr. GEORGE A. MORRIS examined.

15706. CHAIRMAN.—We learn that you consider much might be done as regards provision for treating pulmonary tuberculosis?—Yes.

15707. Would you kindly mention what you would suggest, first saying how far it is prevalent in the district?—The number of deaths which we have registered for eighteen months is 124, and of these fifty-one were from general and pulmonary tuberculosis. This did not include tuberculosis of the peritoneum, which used to be called miliary, or of the brain, meningitis, or tubercular disease of the bones.

15708. For what period was that?—Eighteen or twenty months.

15709. Dr. BIGGER.—If you had included all the other tubercular cases, have you any idea what the number would be?—If we put on that which I look on as an allied disease, caused by much the same conditions, that is, cancer, there were nine cases of cancer registered during that period, it would make sixty-five. There was one from cancer.

15710. CHAIRMAN.—Apart from the record of deaths, can you tell us how far it is prevalent in the district?—This would be for the district.

15711. Were those more than an average percentage?—Oh, yes; I think it is very much on the increase.

15712. Have you at the present moment a large number of cases under treatment?—Yes, an unusually large number in the hospital.

15713. And the death-rate for the next year, as far as you are, will not be lighter?—No, certainly.

15714. Dr. BIGGER.—In the district in which you are medical officer, is it pretty general outside the town?—It is; it is in the country.

15715. No particular district?—It is not confined to any particular district. The classes that have suffered most from it are the labourers and the farmers. Out of that number I have given you three were twenty-seven deaths occurred in the labouring classes, and in the farmers seven occurred. Then the rest of them are of various occupations; no particular trade seemed to be marked out specially for it; we had only one factory hand.

18718. When you speak of farmers or labourers, you mean the children of those?—As a rule, I mean the fathers and mothers. Two postmen were in that.

18719. CHAIRMAN.—Did they die?—They did.

18720. How long did they remain as postmen?—One of them had eleven or twelve years' service, as well as I recollect.

18721. How long had he been ill?—About eighteen months.

18722. Did he continue to act as a postman?—I think not; I think he was invalided for a considerable time. The number of adults on that was forty-six, and the number of married twenty-six. With regard to the conditions to which you might attribute the prevalence of it—first, the natural dampness of the soil; secondly, the insanitary condition of the houses, damp and ill-ventilated, and with insufficient air space, and particularly in the spreading of the disease by spitting, which is very prevalent.

18723. Do you think the disease ought to be notifiable?—Certainly; it is curable and preventible, both.

18725. CHAIRMAN.—It used to be considered that this was proof of its hereditary?—It is really proof of its infection.

18726. Dr. BUCKER.—You have noticed the same thing in other members of the family sleeping in the same house?—Certainly; the prevalent idea of the country people in treating this disease is, that they cannot keep them too close; they must exclude every breath of air, and they keep them in a moist, warm atmosphere very favourable to the growth of the bacilli.

18727. Are there any steps taken after a period to disinfect the house?—The sanitary authority, when they ascertain the cause of death, disinfect the house as well as they can with lime-washing. I have always ordered that whenever I detected the disease; and in the dispensary and workhouse we supply them with spunk fuses—as much as possible, Ventnor fuses.

18728. And try and educate them to the proper use of them?—Quite so.

18729. What would you suggest with regard to the treatment of these cases?—The best results are to be had from these sanatoria, which are all over the country.

18730. I am sorry to say they are not all over the country?—Wherever they have been tried the statistics seem to show that they are successful.

18731. CHAIRMAN.—You don't mean in Ireland, but generally?—There are a few in Ireland.

18732. You think there ought to be one in which poor and destitute people ought to be able to go for each group of counties?—Certainly so; I think it would be an immense saving to the rates. When the bread-winner is stricken down with this disease, or his wife, his family are left helpless on the rates; and we have a great many instances of that in our union—helpless families and destitute children.

18733. Dr. BUCKER.—Have you anything in your mind about the site of the sanatorium for a county, or do you propose there should be one for each county?—Well, if they take every district; we have at present twelve cases under treatment in the union; those don't represent all the cases in the district.

18734. What proportion do you think they represent?—I should say about three-fourths.

18735. So much as that?—Well, considerably over half.

18736. Of all the cases in your whole dispensary district and the other districts of the union?—My dispensary district.

18737. I am speaking of the union?—They very seldom come from outside my own district.

18738. What is the reason of that?—I cannot tell you; they have a strong objection to coming into the hospital, to begin with.

18739. CHAIRMAN.—They come more readily to their own medical attendant?—Quite so; they have more confidence in their medical attendant, and I have frequently to use very strong arguments to get them in.

18740. Dr. BUCKER.—The other dispensary districts are even worse served, because they don't get them in?—I suppose they must be.

18741. CHAIRMAN.—As far as you know from conversations with your colleagues, is there a great deal of consumption prevalent in the union?—Any of them that I have spoken to have noticed that there is an increase.

18742. Dr. BUCKER.—Then there are twelve cases in the union at present?—Yes.

18743. That would indicate a sanatorium of a fair size for King's County?—I should say one for the King's County should have at least 100 beds in it. Of course, if it were made compulsory to notify these cases, and they were compulsorily treated, as they ought to be, all grades of society would have to come in.

18744. CHAIRMAN.—If they could not be separated, the same as infectious diseases at present?—Yes.

18745. Dr. BUCKER.—Is the Notification of Infectious Diseases Act in force in the county?—I think it is; it is in force in this district.

18746. You mean to say in the town of Tallanstown?—In the urban district.

18747. Not in the rural district?—It is in the rural district also.

18748. Then it would not be so very difficult to add an tuberculosis?—It would be very desirable.

18749. CHAIRMAN.—Is there anything else except this matter of consumption you would like to mention?—No, sir, I think there is nothing else.

18750. Dr. BUCKER.—In the treatment of surgical diseases what would you recommend—operation cases and so on?—There is a surgical institution in the town.

18751. You don't encourage them to come to the union for operations?—For major operations I do not. We only operate, as a rule, in cases of urgency, not from selection.

18752. You think the county infirmary would be the proper place for the treatment of cases of operations or large operations?—Certainly, it ought to have a proper equipment—an operating theatre, with proper up-to-date conveniences.

18753. Do you think if it had a proper ambulance, or more than one ambulance, would it serve for the whole county? It would be a matter of great difficulty bringing a patient thirty miles. Our county extends from Ballymore to Shinnore, nearly forty-seven miles.

18754. Say from Tallanstown to the extreme end of the county?—Birr is twenty Irish miles from here, and Shinnore is seven or eight miles beyond, and Moneygall is further still. I would look on twenty miles as a very undesirable journey in a serious surgical case.

18755. CHAIRMAN.—You could not take a bad compound fracture unless it was put up temporarily by the local dispensary doctor?—You could run considerable risk.

18756. Dr. BUCKER.—You think it would be desirable to have any surgical hospital in the county, in any case?—Certainly; I would have an up-to-date surgical hospital, with a proper theatre and appliances—absolutely appliances of every sort.

18757. CHAIRMAN.—Have you ever considered the question of district nursing—nursing the poor in their own homes in comparatively trivial cases, too trivial for removal, but which may become cases for removal if not properly attended to, and some, perhaps, so serious for removal?—We have no system whatever for dealing with that. I would look on it as very desirable.

15758. Your fever hospital is, unfortunately, very close to your other hospital?—It is, it is dangerously close.

15759. Was it built originally for a fever hospital?—Yes; it is the best building we have, and the best ventilated one. The Local Government Board always insisted on doing that part themselves, but its proximity to the hospital renders it very undesirable.

15760. It would be most useful to you in seasons of overcrowding for an ordinary medical and surgical hospital?—Yes; at present we have neither a convalescent ward nor an observation ward. It would be an invaluable adjunct in both those capacities, and its proximity to the hospital would almost point out the desirability of having it there. The fever hospital would not require such accommodation at all.

15761. You very rarely have a large number?—Twelve beds would be quite sufficient. We had ten cases recently; with the improved water supply and, undoubtedly, improved house accommodation, we would have less.

15762. Your fever is chiefly from Killebeggan?—The last lot of cases were from Killebeggan.

Feb. 13, 1904

Dr. George A. Macbeath.

MR. EDWARD BUCKE EXAMINED.

I am from Clonsilla Rural District; there was another delegate appointed, who was in possession of a great many more facts than I am, but owing to the lateness of the meeting he failed to come.—Mr. Ewells.

15763. You can tell us what the feeling of your district is. At present you are in with the Mountmellick Union. In your District Council is there any desire to separate from your partnership with Mountmellick?—No, sir; from one particular reason, that it would entail a great hardship upon our sick poor to remove them for such a terrible distance.

15764. Supposing the sick poor still continued to go to Mountmellick, would you think it a hardship to remove the other classes?—To answer you candidly, the general feeling, as far as I can understand, is that they wish to be regarded and to be purely King's County people, but in consideration of their destitute poor they would not wish to be connected with Tallamore for that reason.

15765. You would not care to go into the Queen's County for your roads?—Not by any means; of course, we are represented here on the County Council.

15766. But for Poor Law purposes you are against having Mountmellick?—Yes; purely for considerations of the destitute poor.

15767. As regards the rating for the relief of the sick poor, do you like the present system of rating or do you think any change necessary?—No; we are considerably lower than the people of Tallamore, and that is another thing that stimulates our people's ideas to stay there, to keep our rates within the Mountmellick Union.

15768. What is the biggest village that you have got in your district?—North Portlannington. We only embrace one-half of the town in our five electoral divisions—North Portlannington, Clonsilla, Hamer Lane, Umay, and O'Donoghue.

15769. There is no place in your district that the hospital accommodation is too far from at present?—Oh, none whatever.

15770. How far is North Portlannington from Mountmellick?—The extreme end of North Portlannington would be about three miles from the workhouse.

15771. But take the town?—Any part of the town in your union?—Oh, yes, one-half of it.

15773. Do you know whether many sick and poor people pay for their maintenance in the Mountmellick Infirmary?—Mighty few.

15774. Would you be in favour of power being given to the Guardians to recover such proportion, or the entire cost of maintenance, as they might in their discretion think fit?—I would; and I think I am only voicing the views of the general community when I say so.

15775. As regards tramps, have you many of these passing your place?—I have been specially appointed to make a few remarks—at least, I believe they overestimated my abilities for doing so when they appointed me—on that particular point. To commence with, I just want to point out to you one grievance.

We are situated in my particular district between Tallamore Union and Mountmellick, and then it is a general pass-way from Abbeyfeale or from the Dublin unions; there is a regular circuitous route that gives a regular train of tramps. I might divide these into three particular classes, and the most numerous and grievous is the one with long-staffed ears and donkeys, and dilapidated donkeys, that come out at night, and they go from place to place, and not only set the people at defiance, but root up their potatoes, and take their hay in the early part of the season for their ponies and donkeys. The other class is the class that go about, and in the absence of any male attendants in the farmers' houses, go about searching for horse-hair about the stables. All in fish in their nets; they pick anything they get, and the unfortunate people about the house, in the absence of male attendants, are terrified.

15776. Do they ask for money?—They do, but in the event of not getting that, they will ravish the place, and go in search of old bottles. They are a formidable army, and I was asked to say that any way that could be pointed out to put them down—if it was possible to make it criminal—that would sweet the views of the general community, because it is becoming intolerable. Then there are the single couples that go about.

15777. You mean couples of single people?—Men and wife tramps, that go about and find out from house to house where there is some helpless female that they can really terrorise, and take possession of the house; and they will not only sleep a night there, but sleep night after night, and go out during the day, phoning and parading of what they can get, and come in at night, making a general lodging of the place. The police authorities may be very far away from these people, and the people in many cases do not know how to avail themselves of police protection.

15778. They are forced guests?—They are, indeed; and very unacceptable ones.

15779. Mr. MURPHY.—What would you suggest as a remedy?—Unless we could make vagrancy a criminal offence I have nothing to suggest. I am not very well posted on the Act, but, as a grievance, I would like to lay it very fully before our Parliamentary representatives.

15780. If the Guardians had power to detain them three or four days?—We had power in the Mountmellick Union to leave extra duties on them, and they were not carried into effect; there was too much time lost on it.

15781. CHAIRMAN.—There is a country abroad where a man going about not on lawful business is locked up; would you approve of that?—I would.

15782. Mr. MURPHY.—Do these people have children with them as a rule?—Yes, sir; they are generally attended by a train of very disreputable women and children, and these fellows, after making a night's plunder, the women go out and seek alms during the day, and these fellows back off in the sun, if they can avail themselves of it, or bed their kettles, and lie around all day, and go out at night and plunder the hen roosts and potato pits and hay fields, and, as I said before, they are a formidable body in the country.

15783. CHAIRMAN.—There are a good many of that class about you?—A tremendous amount, for the very reason that I have pointed out, that it seems to be a circuitous route for a line of unions.

Mr. Edward Bucke.

DR. MACBEATH FURTHER EXAMINED.

I would like to say I have extensive experience of these tramps, and I think the proper way to deal with them is to take the children away from them. As medical officer of the workhouse I see gangs of these every morning, the ponies and trap which this gentleman has described are there, the children are put into them and brought round, and they are trained up in vice and neglect, and they know nothing else; I would take the children forcibly from them and have the children put in proper surroundings. The men themselves and women I look upon as too far gone; jail is a comfort to them.

15725. CHAIRMAN.—At all events it would be a comfort to people outside, like our friend, not to have them raiding and looting premises?—Yes; it would be a comfort to them.

Mr. PATRICK POWER examined.

Mr. Patrick Power.

15726. CHAIRMAN.—On behalf of what Urban Council do you appear?—Tullamore.

15727. What is your view on the question of amalgamation?—I was here to-day, and I agree with Mr. Peyton, of Edenderry.

15728. You would rather approve of amalgamation if you could be satisfied that a material reduction of the rates would follow?—I believe it would, myself.

15729. That was Mr. Adams' view?—I would agree with it.

15730. Is there anything you would like to add to what Mr. Adams and Mr. Peyton have said on the subject?—No; no more than it would do away with a good deal of the officials. And, of course, with regard to boarding out of the infirm people, there are exceptional cases at the present time in Tullamore Union which, if the board allowed a sum, they could be maintained outside; these are exceptional cases; there are others that could not.

15731. You don't think the boarding-out system of old people could be carried out universally?—No; only in exceptional cases.

15732. Do you think there are such a number as would make it worth while to alter the law to enable the Guardians to board out old people if they wished?—I don't believe it would; you might not get sufficient; of course in all the unions you might find sufficient.

15733. You heard the evidence about the tramps; I suppose in the towns you don't see much of them?—No; there are a certain class—thinkers—that are a terrible nuisance; but there are exceptional cases of tradesmen whose trade has run down in other parts of Ireland.

15734. Those are the honest men really looking for work?—Yes; there are often tramps that it is a necessity for them to go into a work, but these country Guardians include these people all in one group.

15735. You would see the difference, that there were some bona fide decent men looking for work?—They include all. I have known plasterers, and carpenters, and masons looking for work.

15736. Tailors?—Yes; and men of my own business; their trade has run down in other parts of Ireland, and they would have to come to me for work; they are included in the tramp class also.

15737. We don't include them in that?—Yes; the majority of the country Guardians would.

15738. Naturally, you would treat that class of people with consideration; they are honest men, whose only fault is that they cannot get work?—They cannot get work in their own place, and if they stopped at home they would be a burden on the ratepayers in their own union; they would rather look for work than go as paupers.

The Sitting terminated.

THIRTY-SECOND PUBLIC SITTING.—TUESDAY, MARCH 22ND, 1964.

May, 22, 1904.

At the County Council Office, Rathdamney, Dublin.

Present:—MR. MICKS (Chairman), MR. MURNAGHAN, and DR. CONY BIGGES.

Mr. P. J. O'NEILL, S.D., examined

15799. CHAIRMAN.—You are Chairman of the County Public Health Council?—Yes.

1880. Did the question come before your Council as to whether you thought that former unions could, with advantage, be maintained in the County Dublin?

with advantage, be maintained in the County Council.
—Yes; the question was considered by the County Council, and the main feeling that seemed to prevail was that some effort ought to be made to relieve the congestion in the two unions of Dublin—the North and the South Dublin Unions—wherein an enormously large number of persons are housed at the present time. And with regard to the North Dublin Union, space there does not lend itself to any additional buildings. They are bounded on all sides by public buildings—towers, banks, arcades, and obstructions, in many ways. As regards the South Dublin Union, with regard to the health and well-being of the inmates of the institution would be exercised upon for the purpose of providing additional housing accommodation. My Council approached the question of amalgamation from two points of view. They believe that it would be more equitable and in the interests of the ratepayers generally that one union, or one administrative body, ought to take charge of the entire of the North and South Dublin Unions.

1908. That is that the two unions should be amalgamated?—Yes, amalgamated; and they believe it would lead to economy, and, above all, that it would enable the governing body to establish a better classification than exists at the present time. From the inquiries I have made I am inclined to think the classification is not at all satisfactory, especially in the North Dublin Union, where the space is so terribly congested. The question arises then as to whether it would be possible to relieve this congestion by adding to the area of Ballyrothery and Oulibridge, both of which have workhouses that are only partially occupied at the present time, and if that were impossible would it be possible to transfer from the congested unions in Dublin a certain number of paupers in order to avail of the housing accommodation which exists in the other unions, and, of course, the Guardians of these other unions would be indemnified to the full for whatever cost would be entailed by this transfer. I am rather inclined to think that the latter course would be perhaps somewhat objectionable, not from the North or South Dublin Union point of view, but from the point of view of the rural unions, because it is a notorious fact that certain people frequent the city unions who, happily, are very much fewer in the rural unions.

10832. What class do you refer to particularly—the men and women?—Yes, and as well as that I refer to women of immature character. It is a well-known fact that there are great numbers of these who mist of maturity go into all city unions, and the question is whether it might be objectionable from that point of view to introduce these into all forms of public life. But as all across the general belief is that some effort ought to be made to amalgamate the unions of North and South Dublin, and have them placed under one administrative board, and that some effort ought to be made to relieve the congestion in these unions, be enable the governing body to carry out better classification than exists at the present time. There is another aspect of the question, that is with regard to the wages.

1963. As regards the classification, before you leave it, did you think at all how this classification might be carried out, whether by making one workhouse for the males and another for the females, or anything of that sort?—Well, we thought it might be possible to have, say the boys of the entire union housed in one particular place—

18804. Calce., say?—Yes; and the girls elsewhere.

15856. That is, of course, within the power of the Guardians at present?—It is within their power if they had space, but they have not, of course. Then, with regard to the rate, I think it would be more equitable there should be a uniform rate—more business-like—in the two unions. There is a difference in the rates in the North and South Dublin Unions at the present time. I believe, of something like from 8d. to 10d.

15607. We will have that more fully from the desks of the members—Then there is another point I would like to direct attention to. I believe the representatives of the North Dublin Union were somewhat unfortunate with regard to the agricultural grant, which was based, as we know, from the figures for the years 1896-97, and through some unfortunate coincidences—

1880's. Economy?—It was not economy. It might have been for the time. It has been sadly otherwise since. The agricultural grant in the North Dublin Union is entirely different from what it would have been if the rate in that year had been a rate to meet conditions under the Poor Law heads.

15809. It was under the average rate 1--It was under the average rate.

18810. Mr. J. C. Jones. I happen to know how much below the average it was. The Clerk of the Union will be able to tell you that, but I am rather inclined to think there was an election in prospect at the time when the war was three years was being struck, and I suppose it sometimes tends to popularize their names with the newspapers if they are able to give a show of the rates being reduced, even though it is only temporary; and in this instance it has been a source of considerable loss to the union up to the present. My Council would be also in favour of having idiots and insane removed from the workhouses altogether. I am rather inclined to think that they are not as well cared there as they should be in most instances. Of course I do not suggest that they should be all transferred to asylums, where they should be expensively treated and guarded, as they are in the Richmond Asylum, because I do not believe that most of these patients would require the same supervision as patients suffering from acute mania, and I think it might be possible to create lunatic asylums, so to speak—15321. But at all events you would be in favour of getting them out of the warehouse?—Yes.

10812. Our warrant does not enable us to go further than that—I understand.

15813. You, then, would approve of having an auxiliary lunatic asylum rather than a full-blown county or district asylum?—Yes; I think it could be more economically managed. I have no doubt it could.

15914. Have you gone into the relative cost of inmates, say in the North or South Dublin Union and in the Richmond Asylum; did you compare them together?—No: I have not compared the figures.

19615. You are under the impression that there is a very startling and large difference, are you?—I don't think, when you take into consideration the grant in aid—the recurrent grant—that the figure would be so very startling.

15816. It might be on the other side; it might be cheaper to the ratepayers to have a man in the asylum, possibly?—I don't think it would be cheaper to have them in an asylum at the present time, because the cost of the Richmond Asylum, by reason of the enormous sum spent on buildings, is very large, and the rate per head, though not largely in excess, is certainly higher than the rate in some other asylums in Ireland, as we know.

Nov. 25, 1884.

Mr. P. J.

15817. It is higher than a good many?—Yes. That is mainly due to the enormous expenditure recently undertaken. They have spent between £300,000 and £400,000 on buildings.

15818. Have you any accurate idea of all as to the cost of an inmate in the workhouse, say a sick inmate in the workhouse?—I know that the cost in Balthethery is very small, say about 5s. or 6s. a week.

15819. What would that 5s. pay for?—The entire upkeep and the establishment.

15820. No; only the food and clothing. If you want to get the real cost of an inmate you would have to add the officers' salaries, the establishment charges, and gratuities on leave, to put it on the same level, and when that was done we have been surprised in a great many instances in the country to find how little difference there was between the two charges?—I would be altogether in favour, even if it would mean an increase of rates, of having them taken charge of by an asylum authority and removed out of the workhouse. It should be also borne in mind, especially with regard to the North and South Dublin Unions, where the congestion is so acute at the present time, that some expenditure must be undertaken to provide housing accommodation for them if the present state of things is to be maintained.

15821. That would get rid of a large number from the workhouse—the inmates?—There has been a very large transfer within the last two years from the workhouse, and the number of inmates in the workhouse has been considerably reduced.

15822. About 500 between the two houses?—Yes. I don't speak with so much authority regarding the South Union, because I understand the mentally afflicted there are specially provided for, and I have been given to understand, though I have no personal knowledge of the fact, that better provision has been made with regard to means than in most instances in workhouses, but that is not true, unfortunately. I am afraid, with regard to the North Dublin Union. I would be also in favour of increasing the powers conferred on Guardians with regard to the granting of outdoor relief. I think when old and infirm people are, through bare necessity, driven to pass the declining hours of their lives in the workhouse by reason of their domestic arrangements—an old infirm parent may be resident with a young boy or girl, a son or daughter, and they may have an idea of getting married, and don't wish to handicap the household by keeping this old non-earning individual resident in the house—I am only dealing with it from the economic point of view—I certainly would be in favour of enabling the Guardians to grant such relief in that case as would warrant the son or daughter, or keeper of the house, maintaining and keeping that old person resident in their own home; and I believe, from humanitarian motives and from all others, they would be better taken care of than they would be in an asylum or an institution. I think it is extremely hard on persons who have led honest, industrious lives to be obliged to pass the end of their days in an institution of that kind, and I think some provision ought to be made whereby the Guardians would be enabled to make such grants of outdoor relief as would enable these people to keep their aged parents in their own homes and to maintain them. With regard to the granting of relief to a woman with an old child only, she might be in just as necessary circumstances as one who had a large family, and I think it is a great hardship that she should be deprived of all right of receiving any relief from the rates.

15823. You would extend the power to give relief to women having one or more legitimate children?—Quite so.

15824. Are your opinions generally—not in detail, of course—the opinions of your Council, as far as you are aware?—There was a meeting of the Council for the purpose of enabling the members to express their views, in order that the views of the general body might be considered and the evidence of the County Council put forward. We discussed the question from various points of view and in all its aspects as regards the Dublin unions.

15825. Your general conclusion was it would be well to amalgamate North and South Dublin Unions. Did you not come to any definite conclusion as regards Balthethery and Colbride?—These were merely suggested with regard to the effort to be made to relieve the congestion in the Dublin unions. We would not advocate an abolition of Balthethery or Colbride, but we would think it desirable that the buildings which are there available should be utilized if they could be economically utilized to relieve the congestion in the North and South Dublin Unions.

15826. Did you consider the Rathdown Union as all?—The Rathdown Union seems to have a fair number of inmates at the present time. I think they have got 600 there already.

15827. They have got a large number?—I don't think they have got very much surplus space, and it has been also represented to us that their housing accommodation was pretty well taken up.

15828. So your scheme would not propose any interference with the existing state of affairs in Rathdown?—No. Of course there is a great difficulty in dealing with a union which is at present partly in one county and partly in another. For my part I would not be in favour of one local authority declaring and determining that a union in an adjoining county which serves both counties should be disestablished simply because one of the counties thought it would be to their advantage that it should be done. I would be very slow to make a general recommendation with regard to unions that were not situated entirely in our own county.

15829. Have you considered at all the questions that have been raised at a good many of the inquiries before us, the question as to whether or not the county boundaries should be coterminous with union boundaries?—I think I would be rather in favour of that, because I can see considerable difficulties arising from the contrary fact, but at the same time I think it has been found to work moderately well.

15830. For the convenience of the sick it has worked well, as far as you are aware?—Yes; I have not heard any complaint to the contrary with regard to Balthethery, with which I am more familiar. Of course now, since the Act of 1886 came into operation, the union boundary has been made the county boundary.

15831. You speak about getting all inmates out of the workhouses; are there any other classes that you think might, with advantage, be removed from workhouses; take the children?—Certainly, I would be in favour of the boarding out of children. I think the want of the workhouse strikes at any child that is reared within its precincts.

15832. Do you prefer boarding out to an institution for the rearing of children?—I would. I think they are more likely to be brought up in habits of thrift and industry, and more likely to make useful members of society if they are reared in a family circle than they will be in an institution, however well managed or governed.

15833. Would you be in favour of a change in the law; at present you can only board out orphans and deserted children. A very large number of children in workhouses are the children of vicious or drunken parents, who are rather hopeless people to put in charge of children. Would you be in favour of a change in the law that would give the Guardians, subject to some appeal, we will say, to some court or other, the right to place themselves in loco parentis and take charge of the child and board it out?—Certainly I would; because though I am a strong believer in the law of heredity with regard to the human race, still I think if there is any chance of these children ever becoming useful members of society they would best obtain that chance by contact with the world and by the example of those around them and by the example of the children among whom they would be reared and who would be under the control of their parents.

15834. Then you would give that discretion to the Guardians?—I would. I admit there is a risk, undoubtedly, in it, but at the same time I think for the greatest good of the greatest number I would be in favour of running the risk, because I am firmly convinced it would be for the best.

15835. At all events you would give the Guardians power?—Yes.

15836. As regards an appeal—conceivably a Board of Guardians might, in the hurry of the day's business, make some order which could not be sustained on very careful inquiry—you would provide for some appeal, say to the Petty Sessions Court or to some other court?—I am rather inclined to think that the local governing bodies at the present time might have the right of appeal to a committee of the County Council or some body.

15837. I am speaking rather from another point of view, as regards the parent of a child who feels himself aggrieved by the decision of the Guardians taking away the child from him; in such case would you give the parent the right of appeal to a court of law for a legal investigation of the grounds on which the Guardians propose to take away the child?—I think that would be reasonable, perhaps, from the parental point of view, but at the same time I am rather inclined to think that it is not a power that would be exercised to any considerable extent, because, unfortunately, these people do not take as much interest in their offspring as they might be expected to take when they become inmates of a pauper institution, but at the same time it is rather a sentimental than a practical safeguard, in my opinion, to give them the right, but possibly it might be an advantage to do it.

15838. If such a change were made in the law would you anticipate there would be very few children to be provided for in an institution; do you think there would be any difficulty in boarding out practically all the children that would come into the hands of the Guardians?—I would not apprehend there would be any difficulty in rural districts, but in the rural districts attached to the North and South Dublin Unions I would be distinctly inclined to think there would be great difficulty in finding a sufficient number of proper people to take charge of the children there.

15839. I suppose you know that in the South Dublin Union they board the children altogether outside the union—in the County Wicklow?—I was not aware of that fact. Outside their taxable area altogether?

15840. Yes; there is no limit on them?—Certainly, I would be in favour.

15841. I have seen in some of the Welsh or South of England unions that they are boarding out children in the North of England?—I certainly would be in favour of sending the city children into the country, perhaps outside the unions abutting on the city altogether. I think they would have a better chance if they got with the associations of city life entirely.

15842. And were reared up for agricultural labourers or some other healthy occupation?—Quite so. I think if they are allowed to remain in the confines of the city they are much more likely to be absorbed into the vicious classes.

15843. That would take the children out of the work-house?—Yes.

15844. Another class we have to think of are the mothers, or girls, who come in to be confined in the workhouse of illegitimate children. At the first meeting we held here in Dublin, some months ago, the suggestion was made it might be desirable if, instead of going into the workhouse, as they do at present, some two or three months before their confinement, where they meet with a vicious class, it would be better if these women were sent to a sort of reformatory, or refuge. The men could take charge of these institutions for Catholic girls, and it would be under Protestant management for Protestant girls?—I think that would be a most desirable change.

15845. You would be in favour of that?—Strongly.

15846. You think the rates would be well expended in paying slightly more to take them away from contamination?—Yes.

15847. It was very strongly put before me that one might expect that these girls who come in with their first children might be reclaimed?—Quite so.

15848. And would not continue to lead vicious lives, as so many of the workhouse girls at present do, having two, three, four, five, and sometimes six children dependent on them—all illegitimate?—I think that would be a most desirable change, and even if it should increase the expenditure from the rates I would be strongly in favour of it.

15849. That would take away another very large class from the workhouse?—Yes; and a most desirable one to eliminate. That is the class that gives the most trouble.

15850. And produces the taint, as it is called?—Yes.

15851. That would refer to all workhouses in Ireland, of course?—Certainly. I think that would be an enormous advantage.

15852. Then you would have left, practically, the sick and the aged and the infirm?—Quite so.

15853. These could be classified in the way you indicated some time ago, according to their respectability, and age, and other matters?—Quite so.

15854. There would be another class—the class of tramps or vagrants?—They certainly are the pests of society, and it is extremely hard to know what to do with them. I certainly have not been able to derive anything in my own mind that would at all deal satisfactorily with them. In Drogheda we suffer considerably from that class, as it is on the highway between Dublin and Drogheda, and great numbers of them partake of the hospitality of Drogheda on their way to and from Dublin—over 2,000 in the year.

15855. Mr. Murnaghan, my colleague, gave me a Bill which was introduced into the House of Commons a few days ago, proposing to deal with that class in England by depriving them of their liberty and sending them off to labour colonies, where they would be detained and an effort made to bring them into working habits?—Yes; that certainly would be a drastic remedy.

15856. It is extensively adopted in Belgium at present, where it is said to be a great success?—Of course, in the first instance, it might work a hardship, but, ultimately, when that class learned what they were likely to get by following this nomadic life, they might alter their ways, seeing that it would be impossible to follow the practices of the present time, so that I think we might not have too much consideration for them if they had sufficient warning that if they were to follow the habits they had been indulging in the law would provide this method for dealing with them; and if they then came within the meshes of the law I think they would be entitled to no consideration.

15857. You contemplate vagrant classes composed of able-bodied persons?—Precisely.

15858. A great many of the casual class are composed of persons who are not profitable labourers, who would not be likely to be employed for a full day's work, but still even they, if they were put into such a colony, could be made to work as far as possible?—As far as their capabilities enabled them. I think that would be distinctly useful.

15859. They are people who could not get work in a steady way outside?—Quite so. They can earn wages. They cannot follow ordinary occupations.

15860. Except these casual jobs?—Yes, I think that would be a desirable change, undoubtedly.

15861. I suppose you think that no smaller provision should be made for the sick than exists; even if a workhouse like Drogheda or Coleridge were closed, that a hospital ought to be maintained there if it were at a convenient distance for the sick of the locality or the district?—I am afraid no provision could be made for the abolition of the hospitals without causing hardship to the sick poor.

15862. So, even if the unions were broken up, you think the hospital ought to remain?—I fancy so. I quite understand that.

15864. Was there any division of opinion on the subject?—There was no substantial division of opinion on the subject. Of course members representing the districts which might be affected by the proposed changes might not look with the same favour on the introduction of the paupers, say, from the city workhouses into those in the rural districts, but there was no substantial difference of opinion.

15865. You were substantially agreed on the main question, that is, that the two unions should be amalgamated, and that the government should be under one body?—Quite so.

15866. You speak about the North Dublin Union as being very much congested. Suppose the two classes alluded to by the chairman and yourself were removed, the children and the inmates, would not that relieve the congestion considerably?—Undoubtedly; and that would be most desirable. In fact I believe it is scarcely possible to have satisfactory administration in the North Dublin Union as it exists at present, by reason of the congestion.

15867. Have you any suggestion to make, for instance, as regards the children for whom homes could not be found? We take it for granted that the children could be largely boarded out in the country. But suppose it did happen that some of the children could not find homes, would you suggest any provision for their temporary retention that could be made. Where would you suggest they should be kept?—Provision has been made for these children in the North Dublin Union at Cabre at the present time, where, I think, a very suitable building has been raised for the purpose of keeping them; and if the governing authority in the two unions, speaking of them in that way, found it impossible to find homes for the children when they desired to send out, I think they ought to be kept at an institution such as that; but I certainly would be in favour of mixing them with the population as largely as possible, and bringing them up as ordinary members of the community.

O'Neill.

15888. Have you any particular knowledge of the working of industrial schools?—There is a very large industrial school at Acton, within a short distance of where I live, and I visit that from time to time, and I am very much impressed with the way in which that is conducted at the present time by the Christian Brothers, and I think they make the best possible effort to bring up their boys in habits of thrift and industry, and to lay the foundation of a useful life.

15889. CHAIRMAN.—Would not such a school be available as a safety valve. We are assuming that the Guardians would, as far as possible, board the children out. If for any reason it would be found impossible to board children out, would industrial schools be available so as to relieve the Guardians from the expense of having to keep up an institution like Cebra for children that they might not be able to board out?—Certainly; I think that would be a very useful way and a desirable way, because I am strongly of opinion that it is desirable that children should be placed under discipline, and where religious discipline can be combined with the other, I think it is desirable they should be afforded the opportunity of being brought up as useful and efficient members of society, and in whatever religion they are reared or professed to be.

15890. Mr. MURPHY.—In regard to the question of the county being self-contained, that is, that it should have the management not only of its own county business, but also of its Poor Law business, have you any special view on that point. For instance, if there were an institution of an adjoining union class by, should the Guardians have power to board out in the adjoining union some of their inmates, rather than have to send them long distances. Do you ever consider that question?—I am rather inclined to think that is a question that would be favourably considered. I am aware that the question of boarding-out lunatics, which is agitating the public mind at present, has worked well in other countries, but I am inclined to think that sentiment would, in a very large degree, prevent the Irish people from falling in with a general scheme of that kind, and I am afraid it would not be found to be practicable.

15891. But if there was the other union building close to the boundaries of a county, would you think it right to give the Guardians power to board out inmates therein instead of having to send them long distances?—Certainly.

15892. You see no objection to that?—None whatever.

15893. In our investigations we have not found that sentiment to be as strong as you think. We find the people who are chronic inmates of a house have very few friends to visit them. It is only in regard to the sick that the visits are any way frequent or regular at all.—I quite recognise that point, that it is to the hospital patients that most of the visitors who go to workhouses pay their visits.

15894. My query referred to the aged, and the infirm, and the chronic sick.—The idea is to still retain the hospitals for the acute sick.—Quite so.

15895. The idea put forward by some witnesses is that fewer workhouses should be in each county; that in fact in a moderately-sized county one workhouse for the aged and infirm might be enough. Of course that does not apply to a city like Dublin.—I don't think so.

15896. But the general trend of opinion is that the number of workhouses can be very much reduced?—I would not imagine that either the inmates of the institution or their friends would be in any degree aggrieved by reason of their being removed a distance from their homes in order to secure accommodation for them. It was not in that connection that I suggested there would be a sentimental objection. The connection in which I suggested there would be a sentimental objection would be this, that if it was proposed to board out the inmates with a family other than their own, the Irish people would not take kindly to that at all.

15897. You would not approve of the boarding-out system of lunatics?—I don't think the Irish people would take kindly to it. It is a question that has not been experimented on here.

15898. It is rather a new proposal.—Quite a recent subject, but it has been found to work very well in Belgium.

15899. On the whole you think the system would be better if there was an amalgamation of the two workhouses in the city of Dublin—that it would be beneficial to the poor?—I think a change is essential, and

I can see no other way in which it can be brought about except by that means.

15900. It would afford a better system of classification?—It would afford a better system of classification.

15901. It would reduce the congestion also?—Yes, it would reduce the congestion, as well as tend to more economical administration.

15902. Dr. BRUCE.—Has your Council considered the advisability of removing the inmates from the workhouses to the county asylum?—That is a question that has been under consideration from time to time here. We have discussed the administration of the Richmond Asylum at considerable length here for some years past, and there have been some rather harsh criticisms of the management of the Richmond Asylum with regard to the want of economy that was present there; and all these questions came up for discussion.

15903. That does not touch the question very much—the cost of keeping a lunatic in the asylum compared with the cost of keeping him in the workhouse?—That aspect of the question was not dealt with exhaustively, I admit.

15904. You contribute considerably to the Richmond Asylum?—Yes, a very substantial sum, about £30,000 a year, I think; more than that ever, because we contribute for the townships as well. Mr. Blackburne has got the figures. I think our quarterly contributions amount to between £50,000 and £70,000 a year altogether.

15905. That is taken up equally all over your county, and not in any of the counties which are joined with you?—Precisely. We get a demand from the Richmond Asylum authority previous to the striking of a rate, stating they will require a certain contribution from the County Council for the maintenance of our inmates in our taxable area, and we have got to pay that demand.

15906. That is equal all over the different counties?—Precisely; in accordance with the number of inmates.

15907. You say you received a very large number recently from the Dublin workhouses?—Yes, a great number have been transferred within the past year and a half from the North Union Workhouse to the Richmond Asylum; in fact the admissions there have increased and continue to increase at a rather alarming rate, to such an extent indeed that if it goes on as it has been there will not be provision to adequately house them in the Richmond Asylum in a short time.

15908. Sending in so many inmates from the North Dublin Union—in that fair to other unions that perhaps do not participate to the same extent, seeing that these inmates in the workhouses are supported entirely out of their own districts?—Yes; but certain conditions have got to be complied with in order to secure their admission to the Richmond Asylum, and if the Guardians of the union can satisfy the medical superintendent there that it is impossible for them to give adequate and proper treatment to the inmates at their institution, they have practically little option but to receive them. It is not for them to stay in inquiry as to whether the proportion between the North and the South Dublin Union is the same.

15909. Is not it a proper subject for a County Council to consider—some way of making it equitable by taking all the inmates and putting them all on the same basis. If you are only receiving part of it off the general rate and the other part is not in proper proportion, there is something unfair?—The South Dublin Union is better situated. They have made better provision for housing their inmates than it has been possible to make in the North Union. The result is they keep a large number of them there; but that is for the local authority to decide and determine, whether or not they have a grievance against the taxing authority by allowing a larger proportion of inmates to be sent into their asylum from one union than from another.

15910. CHAIRMAN.—At all events you consider they ought to be all removed out of the workhouses?—I would be in favour of it.

15911. Dr. BRUCE.—That is to penalise the workhouse authorities for making good provision in their own workhouses?—I quite admit it is, but personally I think the provision that has been made can be used to useful purposes in connection with the administration of the union affairs generally.

15912. Is it not time that this should be put on a proper basis for all the inmates, whether in a union or asylum, so as to have an equal equitable rule?—It might be possible to give unions that had made adequate provision for the insane a capitation grant.

15005. However the County Council have not considered it as all its bearings?—They have not dealt with that aspect of it.

15004. Have they much available space at Portlanoth?—Yes, there are 400 acres of land.

15006. How many would the temporary buildings accommodate?—They do accommodate 400, but they are only wooden buildings.

15007. But they are equipped?—Yes.

15008. And nobody occupies them?—Yes.

15009. Would it not be infinitely better to have 400 there. Would that not tend to reduce your average cost of lunatics in the asylum?—The increase in numbers.

15010. Yes?—Well, I don't know. We have reached, if one might use the phrase, the grand total of 2,600 to provide for, and I don't think there would be much relief by increasing that by 300 or 400.

15011. It would not mean much, but it would be a proportionate reduction to some extent.

15012. You mentioned some time ago that there was a very large cost for maintenance?—Yes.

15013. And that the average, therefore, of the inmates was very high?—Yes.

15014. That would be reduced by the larger number?—They would be some relief on the capital charge per head, but on the maintenance charge I don't think they would be.

15016. Why?—The reason being that the patients are not so well disposed to go to a hospital which is not under the control or charge of those as they are to other hospitals in the city. I myself, for instance, have had applications in my own district, applications for notes of recommendation to city hospitals, and they particularly a hospital. I said: "I have no authority to give you any letter there; my letter would be of no use to you; but I will give you a ticket of admission to the Meath Hospital if you go, which will absolutely secure your admission there," and they said "No." That has actually occurred.

15017. Had they any experience of the second hospital?—I could not say. I don't for a moment suggest they are not properly taken care of in the Meath Hospital, because I have no knowledge of its working; but from inquiries I have made, I believe that patients are properly taken care of in the Meath Hospital, but the objection to going there is rather a sentimental one. In fact my Council were strongly considering the advisability of asking the Local Government Board to enable them to divide the contributions which they are obliged to make to a county infirmary with other hospitals which are situated in the county area, and which do an enormous amount of good in relieving the sick poor. Kingstown Hospital, for example.

15018. Would you think they should be a county charge?—If it is made mandatory on a County Council to contribute a certain sum for a county infirmary, the feeling we would have in regard to it is, the county authority ought to have some voice in deciding what the county infirmary should be.

15019. You would be in favour of the County Council contributing to hospitals generally through the county?—I would be in favour of the County Council when it is making a grant distributing that grant among the hospitals which confer the greatest good on the largest number of the community in their own area.

15020. CHAIRMAN.—What is your grant to the Meath?—£1,000 a year. There are twenty beds available for county patients in the Meath Hospital.

15021. Ten male and ten for female patients?—I expect that would be the division, but I don't quite know; but really I do not think that at any time these beds are fully availed of. I am not suggesting anything against the hospital authorities. It is simply because the people won't go.

15022. Dr. BODDIE.—Carry your argument a little bit further. Would you be in favour of having all the hospitals in the county under county management?—Do you mean hospitals other than union hospitals?

15023. I mean all the hospitals that would be wholly supported out of the rates, such as union hospitals?—

I would be in favour of enabling the county authority, if it were believed that these institutions were conferring a sufficient benefit on the sick poor in their taxable area, making a contribution towards the upkeep and maintenance of these hospitals if they desire.

15024. With regard to consumption, have you considered the desirability of establishing sanatoria for the treatment and cure of consumption?—That question was not raised.

15025. It is attracting great attention all over the country at the present time?—Properly and deservedly so.

15026. What is your own idea?—I certainly think that if a home, or hospital, or sanatorium for the treatment of that disease were established, I would be in favour of allowing the local body to send patients there, and pay for them if they so desired.

15027. The local body to pay for them?—To pay for them out of the rates.

15028. Who would be in charge of it. Who would start and administer it. What body would you propose to do that?—It is at present to be mainly supported out of the rates, I would certainly be in favour of having it under the control of a popular body.

15029. The County Council of a County?—The County Council of a county, or a joint committee of several County Councils, because I am rather inclined to think it would be hardly economical to have a home established in each county for this particular thing.

15030. CHAIRMAN.—Mind I fully you would want one in Dublin?—Yes; but I can quite understand if one were established for Leinster. In the first instance it would be the most economical way of starting, in order to see what amount of benefit would be conferred, and how largely it would be availed of.

15031. The doctors, I think, have made up their minds as to the extent of the benefit?—Doctors are an authority on the question, but even doctors without the co-operation of patients cannot accomplish everything.

15032. On the question of rating, is there anything that occurs to you?—I am not very certain.

15033. Dr. BODDIE has just alluded to the possibility of making the sick in all the counties a county charge as distinguished from a district or union charge. At present you have a county infirmary, and the £1,000 you spend on it is a county-at-large charge. Would you be in favour of having all the sick a county-at-large charge in the same way as the county infirmary and the lunatics are?—I am not very certain that that would work out equitably. I am rather inclined to think that the confines of cities would rather derive a considerable benefit from such organisation as that, because of course cities are really the homes of disease in many instances, and those who may be afflicted gravely in many instances towards the suburbs or outskirts of the city, and it would be rather hard on the remote rural districts to be compelled to bear whatever burden would be indicated on the rates by making all the sick county-at-large rather than district charges.

15034. We have had evidence from some of those outlying districts rather complaining that the people far away, in places, we will say, like Ballinagney, would never dream of going to a county infirmary, but go to hospitals close by, like Balrothery, and they don't think it is fair they should be paying for hospitals which they never use; and it has been stated by some witnesses that it would be desirable that the sick at Balrothery should be a county charge, just as much as the sick in Dublin city, who are relieved in the Meath Hospital?—I don't think distance with regard to the county infirmary has very much to say to the question. I think that the larger number of patients who go to the county infirmary—I am speaking now of the Meath Hospital—come rather from the urban districts; but I have known patients from Ballinagney to be sent to the Meath Hospital; for instance, patients who go in for a surgical operation.

15035. It is, of course, very near?—Very accessible, by rail.

15036. In a small county; but when you come to places forty and fifty miles away, as you sometimes have in places like Donegal?—Yes; but we have no district that would be separated by more than twenty miles from Dublin.

15037. Nothing further occurs to you about rating?—There is a question with regard to rating, but I am rather inclined to think that it would not perhaps come within the purview of your inquiry. It is with reference to the administration of the public health charges in rural districts.

15038. That would not come within our scope?—I rather thought it would not; but I have a view with regard to that, and I have known cases in which it has worked rather serious trouble.

Nov. 22, 1904.

Mr. P. J. O'Neil.

May 25, 1904

Mr. Joseph
Mooney.

Mr. JOSEPH MOONEY, J.P., examined.

15932. CHAIRMAN.—You have heard what Mr. O'Neill said, and you were present at the County Council when that question was discussed?—I was, but, Mrs. Mr. O'Neill, I think the ideas of the County Council were rather scattered, like my own. I had not any very exact idea of what should be done, and I am afraid I am in pretty much the same position now, and I don't know what I could say to you, or what you would wish me to say.

15933. You have heard the evidence that Mr. O'Neill has given. And anything strikes you as to that. Are you disposed to differ from him in any way?—There is one very fixed conviction I have formed, in which I think Mr. O'Neill agrees with me, and that is that the hospitals should be separated from the workhouses.

15934. That they should be converted into district hospitals?—Anything you like to call them; but that poor men or women when they get sick should not be obliged to become inmates of a workhouse before they get medical relief. I consider that a hardship on the poor people themselves. I don't think it is fair that a person who is not a pauper but is sick has to become a pauper, and wear pauper clothes, and be admitted as a pauper in order to get medical or surgical relief. I believe, from my experience of workhouses, that the inmates are largely recruited from the hospitals, when the person is cured of the disease. These hospitals are generally crowded, and they cannot keep them very well in the hospitals until they are thoroughly cured and fit to go back to work, so they are transferred to the infirm department.

15935. To the infirm ward?—Yes; and in that way it is found, although the philanthropists say they are not very well treated there, they are frequently not in a hurry to leave it; then when they do go back to their work, or into the city, they have less difficulty in seeking relief in the workhouse later on. They are more or less persecuted by the fact that they are sent to the hospital as paupers.

15936. You would cut off the hospital from the infirm ward?—Completely.

15937. And make it impossible to send a person there when convalescent?—Yes; I would treat them as Jewish-street Hospital or the Mater Hospital would treat them, for the disease, and when cured let them go back to where they came from.

15938. Or in convalescent hospitals. Would it not be necessary to establish some?—The Mater has a convalescent home.

15939. Most of the hospitals have convalescent homes now?—I hope soon they will all have them.

15940. Therefore you would say some convalescent places, Baldoonery, or some place of that sort, if it was not required, could be used to send them out to for country air. Would you approve of that, sending them to a diseased workhouse?—I would have the hospital managed altogether distinct from the workhouse. If the managers of it thought it desirable to have a convalescent home, I would let them get it, just as the managers of the Mater got theirs.

15941. Would you be in favour of their getting it cheaply, getting one of the diseased workhouses?—I don't like the notion of a diseased workhouse. There is a sort of sentiment against it. I would rather make them industrial places. I would rather like to see looms working in them, or something of that kind, make factories of them.

15942. Do you think they would be suitable for any industrial work. Could you put in machinery into those places, looms, for instance?—I think they would be as suitable for it as for the other purposes. They would not be very suitable for other. They can be made to serve industrial purposes, some of them. My knowledge is with regard to the Co. Dublin. I am entirely confined to it, and I don't see how any workhouse in the Co. Dublin could be closed. Baldoonery, although they have not a large number of inmates—they have only 160—I don't know where they could be accommodated.

15943. Is that owing to the fact of other workhouses being so full?—Yes; and besides, you see I am not a very advanced philanthropist with regard to poor people—I don't profess to be—and I have very often controverted some of the propositions of the very good people who put forward all these reforms; but I think it would be a piece of great inhumanity against the poor, whether they are few or many, to oblige them to go from a place like Baldoonery to the North Union or the South Union, or Celbridge or Rathdown, to get medical relief. I think they should get medical relief near where they live. If Baldoonery or Celbridge have to be maintained for the treatment of sick people, I don't know whether they should be closed as separate ones. In addition to the sick people, the next class would be the aged and infirm people, who have to seek relief in workhouses. It would be very hard on these people to send them twenty or thirty miles away. A great many of these are decent poor people, especially in the rural districts, and it would separate them from their friends and relations; some of them have them.

15944. That does take place over a great part of Ireland at present, owing to the size of a great many of the unions?—Yes, but if that is a hardship it would be greatly increased by closing these workhouses.

15945. It has not been represented to me as a hardship where it is in actual operation?—That is the difficulty I see about closing any of the workhouses in the Co. Dublin. I would certainly have the hospitals separate in their management from the workhouse.

15946. What do you think of the question of amalgamating the two Dublin workhouses that Mr. O'Neill referred to?—The workhouses are so very large that it seems rather a strange thing to say they should be amalgamated, but I think there might be something gained in amalgamation of the management. I think that might not be very much. I suppose one of the clerks might go if they were amalgamated, but I don't think other points would have to be retained. There might be better classification obtained by the amalgamation. One class, say the boys, might be transferred from the North to the South, or vice versa. Better classification might be got reasonably, but I believe still, if my idea about the hospitals was carried out, that the amalgamation would be reduced in both these unions. I think there would not be nearly so many paupers in them if they had not that system of transferring people to the infirm department.

15947. You think a great many of the inmates are convalescents?—They are chronic; the inmates of the hospitals.

15948. A great many people are sent out of the hospitals owing to the want of space, and are sent into the aged and infirm wards before they are quite fit to go back to their homes again, if they have them?—They are obliged to transfer them. That has to be done.

15949. We noticed that ourselves in the South Dublin Workhouse?—Perhaps before I pass from the hospitals I would like to say that of course what I have said would involve doing away with the pauper students. If separated from the workhouse the hospitals would not have any of these pauper students at all. That would, in the first instance, increase the cost, but I believe that in a very short time it would tend to reduce it, because that is another of the things which attract people, and people of a rather workless class, who should be earning their bread outside the workhouse. In the hospitals they get little pots, and they get little tips from visitors, and they get that in all the hospitals, these attendants. I believe in the Mater, or Jewish-street, or anywhere, visitors who go to see patients frequently give some little gratuity, so I don't think workhouse hospitals are much worse in that respect than others; but I believe that owing to the fact that a considerable number of the healthy inmates do hold little positions of that kind, the workhouse hospitals have tend to attract them to the workhouse and keep up the number, so I think the separation of the hospitals from the workhouse would have more than one advantage. I don't know whether I might say a word about the nursing or not?

15950. Yes?—Well, I think the nursing is being overdone. In the North Union—since I left it I am told there is an increase there—for years there was a number of women who acted as night nurses, and although they were not what is called trained nurses—and, in my opinion, there was no necessity they should be—they were respectable, sensible women, who had a considerable knowledge of the art, and who had given satisfaction for years; and I may say the Local Government Board inspectors frequently said that the nursing there was satisfactory. That was stated publicly at the inquiry a couple of years ago before the Privy Council. But since then some of these women died or resigned, and the Local Government Board insisted on trained nurses taking their places. Now, I venture to say that it is simply wasting the skill of trained nurses to make them do night nursing in a hospital which is largely peopled by the sick people, by chronic cases. Of course, I could understand, and I quite agree, that some trained nurses would be necessary for day work, but at night time, nurses in some very acute cases, most people are supposed to be resting, and they are not treated by doctors at night, and the assistance of a skilled, trained nurse is not at all as necessary at night as in the day time. I would like to see one or two trained nurses in a large hospital like that of the South Union, but I do not think that the twelve or fourteen—I forget how many it is, there is a considerable number of these night nurses—I don't think it is necessary they should be all employed by trained nurses, and I do not think it tends to the good working of the place. I am strongly in favour of the raising of the nurse. I had sixteen years' experience of it.

15948. They don't nurse at night in the South Dublin Union?—No, but the trained nurses have been put on for day work as well as night. It is the night I object to as a piece of extravagance, more especially as the cost, of course, is double that of the day; but I may say in the North Union the same as the nursing at night.

Mr. O'Neill (Clerk, North Union).—There are two night nurses.

Witness.—They did not when I was in it, but they became night nurses afterwards. The same in the South Union would undertake night nursing. But my point is, that it is not necessary to have all trained nurses at night. There is nothing for them to do.

15949. CHAIRMAN.—I don't say we agree with you. We have your views on that.

Witness.—In these any other question you wish to refer to—I have heard a great deal said about boarding-out the children. Of course you are aware in both the Dublin unions, in all the Dublin unions, the orphan and destitute children are boarded out. These are the only children that can be boarded out under the law as it stands; and then the other children of the North Union are in a very fine establishment at Cabra, and some of the children of the South Union are in a similar place, but it is not at all so good, because it is only a temporary place, bought in at Cabra where the workhouse got overcrowded.

When I was a member of the Board it was intended that the girls should be put at Cabra, as well as the boys, and for some reason or another that project has not been carried out, although the Pelletstown place was bought for the purpose of building a proper school for them. The children there are isolated, and the morals of the children have greatly improved since they were taken from the union. But I would be strongly in favour of having the children separated from the workhouse and put into schools such as those at Cabra; but I don't know whether I would go as far as to say—I am afraid I would not go as far as to say—that the children having one or both parents in the workhouse should be all boarded out. Philanthropy comes into it a little bit there, and I can conceive a decent man or woman with one or two, or three children; and though they may be poor and requiring workhouse relief, they may still have very great affection for their children, and they may be poor through no fault of their own, and I consider it rather infamous that these poor people, if they go into a workhouse or place they are forced to go into, and will not go into until all other sources of getting food have failed, that they should be separated from their poor little children, and have them sent out to nurseries in the country.

15950. It has never been suggested by anybody that such a thing ought to be done?—I understood that it was put forward that all the children should be put out to nurse.

15951. All the children that the Guardians would stand in face parents to?—But that is done, you know.

15952. But that you should have further powers in the case of vicious people who are unfit to take charge of children?—I have heard that mentioned, and I think the Guardians have the power as it stands. It is a most old, five or seven years ago. I have sometimes proposed resolutions at the South Union, setting forth that, in the opinion of the Board of Guardians, persons were not fit to have the custody of their children when they had been sent to jail or done something or another, and we took charge of the children in those special cases and refused to give them back to the parents.

15953. Would you have taken charge of the children of people who are not seeking their living by honest labour. You would not have power under that Act to do that?—There is a power under that Act to take children from respectable parents.

15954. Disrespectable is a strong word; it means a bad character?—I think it goes now far enough at all events. I would be very slow to put any further hardship on people whose only crime is their poverty.

These are poor women who have to go into workhouses; widows, and all that kind of thing, who have to go into workhouses with children. I would treat them leniently.

15955. There would be the power to give out-door relief to widows?—They may have that power, of course. But the practice in the South Union was to give it to a woman with two or more children under fifteen dependent on her for support. I don't know what alteration in the law would be necessary with regard to these children if any of them are to be kept.

15956. Do you think there are not now in workhouses a very large number of children, children of parents who ought not to have charge of children, if their future is to be safeguarded?—There are some, of course; a good many, I should say, in these Dublin unions.

15957. And that would not be governed by the law to which you refer enabling the Guardians to pass that resolution?—I think there are not very many. I think after all the bulk of these poor people with children are decent.

15958. Take tempers, for instance?—I am in a difficulty there, because there is no temperance in Dublin. There is no such thing known in Dublin.

15959. In Balmisborough they are well acquainted with it, and in Coleridge and Dunsborough there is plenty of it?—There is.

15960. And these tempers have families in a great number of cases?—Anything I say is influenced by the experience that I have gained in the one particular place, and my knowledge is not extensive with regard to these other places.

15961. Take the ins and outs. You have a very large number of ins and outs in Dublin. Do you know now the character of these people, what it is—people who come in for a short time, go out again, and come in again, exposing their children to consternation and everything else that is bad for them; would you be in favour of leaving those people the care of their children?—I don't think the best of their going in and out would be a sufficient reason for taking their children from them. Of course, if it was known that they were frequenting places where the children would learn bad habits, they should be dealt with, and they can be dealt with.

15962. Take frequenting the workhouse as a test—would you approve of that as a test, to leave them with bad associations?—I think they are fairly well managed. The children sent out to Cabra are under good supervision.

15963. I am speaking of the children in the workhouses?—They are not in the workhouses in Dublin.

15964. We saw a good many there. They are kept for a fortnight or three weeks before they are sent forward. They are kept in the probationary children's ward, as it is called, with a very unpleasant class of children?—In the South Dublin Union they are not kept.

15965. I mean in the South Union?—The boys are sent to Cabra after a little interval.

15966. A little interval, that is the point?—You must keep them for some time to see if they are free from disease. They are under observation.

15967. Under observation for a fortnight or three weeks?—I did not think they were kept so long.

15968. That is the impression in my mind; a fortnight, I believe?—They should be well looked after during that fortnight. There should be somebody to go round that would take good care of them.

15969. Workhouse officers themselves don't like the system; they don't approve of it?—Would they send them out to nurse? What is the suggestion with regard to them?

15970. The suggestion that we have got in a great many cases is that the Guardians would be at liberty to exercise their own discretion in such cases as to whether those children should be left in charge of the parents. It was further suggested to us that if the parent felt aggrieved the parent should have the right to appeal to some court of law?—I think that would do very well, but I don't think there is much necessity for alteration in the law, because the law, which I was pretty familiar with, enables us to take children from objectionable parents in a pretty sweeping way, and I would not like to see it too much extended.

15971. It would not touch the ins and outs—the ordinary run of them?—I don't think it is any harm that they should go in and out.

15972. It is not a life that is likely to bring up children well—it would be difficult for children to turn out well after such a life?—Sometimes a poor woman goes out to some relative or friend, who keeps the children while she is looking for work, and tries that on for a few days, and has to go back to the workhouse again; then sleeps in for the winter, and then, perhaps, tries it again. I don't believe in your assuming that all these poor people are cool. I don't think that is fair to them.

Mr. Joseph

19073. No, but their circumstances are very bad?—When they are very bad I would apply the law; but I would be very careful.

19074. I am sure the Guardians would be so. As regards the question of the amalgamation of the two unions, I don't quite gather whether you are in favour of that or not?—I am a ratepayer in both unions.

19075. Then you are impartial, unless you are a larger ratepayer in one than in the other?—I am fairly impartial, though I think my sympathies are more with the South than with the North Union. In the South Union we always held it would be unfair to have an even rate, because we always had a less poor or union rate on the South side. We always held in the South that we would not bear the burden of the North; but I would be inclined to take a broader view of it, and I don't think there would be very much difference in the rate when it all came to be worked out, all there was a sort of amalgamation.

19076. There would be economies?—There would be economies practised I think. For instance, all these advertisements that are inserted for supplies, there would be only one set, as there would be only one board.

19077. You would have fewer officers?—Yes, fewer officers, and a considerable reduction in the cost of printing and various other things, that would help to compensate the South Union for the loss.

19078. Does the fact of there being two workhouses in Dublin stimulate the pauper population in going from one place to another?—They do go from one place to the other. If the dietary scale is better in one than the other they go there. I think if there was one method of managing the two unions it would be desirable. In the South Union, many years ago, they used to get meat in the same way that they still get it in the North. They used to get prime legs of mutton without lap at 8d. a pound or so, and I know of my own knowledge that they were getting most inferior mutton. I had a good deal to do with the change in the South Union. I don't like to say I was the author, because Mr. John Byrne did a great deal. It was a difficult thing to carry, but we adopted the plan of buying the cattle alive, and having them slaughtered on the premises. We had a greater variety of food for the inmates; and after a year we tested the cost, and found, as well as I remember, that there was a saving of £22 per week on that plan, and I am perfectly certain we got very much better value for the money. I think, after the two boards were brought together, if something like that were discussed it is quite possible there might be economies practised which would blot out the inequality.

19079. You would not be very apprehensive, therefore, about an increase of rates in the South Union?—I would not. I don't think there would be much difference; but I would like to make it an essential condition of the amalgamation that the boards should be reduced in size. I would be very sorry to see the seventy-six Guardians of the South Union and the fifty-nine of the North in public meeting assembled dealing with a contract question or any other little trifles of that kind.

19080. The proceedings would be protracted?—I am afraid there would be all-night sittings. I think the boards are too large.

19081. You would take the opportunity of reducing this considerably?—I would; by one-half, at least. Of course, we all know that previous to the passing of the Local Government Act there were only half the number of elected Guardians. The other half were ex-officio Guardians; and in the Local Government Act at first it was intended to have only one elected Guardian for each of the electoral divisions, except in the city—of course, the city always returned more than one—but the number was doubled afterwards, before the Bill finally passed; and that was done, I think for the purpose of giving the ex-officio an opportunity of getting in. It had not that effect at all, because they did not get in.

19082. You think now you might go back to the old numbers?—Yes, I would go back, and I would have a properly qualified one, too.

19083. For Dublin, what would you have?—I think I would make it £20 or £25. It used to be £31.

19084. You would not be scrupulous about getting such a provision enacted by Parliament now, would you?—No, I don't suppose I would. It would be regarded as a retrograde step; and, indeed, I am bound to say, I don't think any great good would come of it. I would attach much more importance to the reduction of the Guardians, but I don't think it is unfair. I suppose I am a sort of democrat, and I am in favour of the extended franchise, and would let the franchise remain as it is. I would let every man have a vote, as every man has practically; but I don't think where expenditure of rates is concerned it would be at all unreasonable that the man who is contrasted with that power should be a direct ratepayer. He ought to have some property qualification. I would not make it very high or exorbitant, and, as I say, I would not anticipate any very striking change from it; and, indeed, I am bound to say, I have often noticed on some of our committees that the very poorest men are not the worst.

19085. Mr. MURPHY.—Have you any reason for asking to go back to a property qualification standard when I mean to ask us, does the present Board of Guardians show any want of efficiency or want of regard for economy that would cause you to desire to revert to the old system?—My experience and observation lead me to suggest the change.

19087. Are they inferior to their predecessors in any way—in their methods of management?—I don't like to say that. I have not, as you may have observed, attached much importance to the change, but I have said I think it is not an unreasonable proposition, that there should be some property qualification for a man seeking one of these positions. I don't say that it would work any very startling change in the management, but I think it would be a reasonable and proper thing, and that it would possibly improve the management.

19088. But do you not think it does cast some reflection on the present body of Guardians; and before you cast any reflection on the present body, should you not have some reason for doing it? You don't say they are inefficient in any way, or worse than their predecessors?—I would not put forward the suggestion at all, only I think it would tend to improve matters.

19089. You say you don't think any workhouses in the County Dublin can be done away with, and still you say you are against the idea of having the workhouses in connection with the infirmaries; how could you bring about the two changes?—In the South Union I would put the occupants of the building which is at Kimmage, the place that was provided for the lunatics, and, I am sorry to say, it is not being used for them now, it is used for the sick and infirm, about half of it. Then there is a school out of which the boys were taken, and if the girls were taken out of it, and these two buildings appropriated to the purposes of a hospital, and the patients transferred from the places they are in, I think they could be accommodated, and that place could be kept altogether distinct from the workhouse, and the people who are in these buildings could be put into the wards where the sick are at present.

19090. Here in the city it is different. Cities like Dublin, Belfast, and Cork are hardly to be treated on the same line as the rural districts or the country towns. But let us deal with Balrothery, for instance. Do you think there is any real necessity for Balrothery being retained for anything more than a hospital for the sick, considering there are only some fifty inmates, and as aged and infirm? Do you think that arrangement could not be made, that the Guardians could board out in some neighbouring workhouse, say Drogheda, the nearest place possibly, and make some arrangement to get those people taken away, and the workhouse atmosphere removed altogether from Balrothery, leaving it simply a hospital—could some arrangement of that kind not be arrived at?—I fear say it might, where there are so few; perhaps there and Celbridge. But I think Rathdown could not be interfered with.

19091. That would leave the County Dublin one workhouse, for workhouse purposes alone, outside the city: you don't see any difficulty in that on principle, if it could be worked out in detail and economically? No, except the one I have mentioned with regard to the feelings of the poor people—their being transported as somebody has said, from their own places to get workhouse relief twenty or thirty miles away. I am afraid they would feel that.

15292. If you compensate them for the outrage on their feelings by better classification and better treatment, do you not think you would make up for it?—I am afraid you would find they would not look on it in that light, but that they would prefer to get relief near the place where they belong to.

15293. That sentiment exists, but not really as regards the chronic inmates, who remain in the house for several years. We said they have very few visitors, indeed?—But I would be very careful in dealing with these people to bear in mind that there are two classes of people—the deserving and the undeserving; and I would not like to make a rule intended to strike at the undeserving ones and that would at the same time injuriously affect the deserving poor people. That is the difficulty I see in making any of these rules with regard to changes.

15294. Do you not think the deserving poor ought to get some better treatment than the undeserving?—I do; but the sending of them from Balrothery to Drogheda would affect the deserving as well as the undeserving.

15295. I don't specially mention Drogheda, but some institution where there could be proper classification. In that way, then, you could separate the deserving from the undeserving to a large extent, and you could take away that atmosphere that you complain so much about in connection with the hospitals—the atmosphere of the workhouse. If something like that was done?—It would not improve the atmosphere by sending the paupers of one workhouse to another.

15296. But would not it be taking away the workhouse atmosphere if you took away the workhouse altogether from Balrothery and left nothing but the infirmary?—But would not it be—by sending the paupers in Balrothery Workhouse at present to another workhouse?

It would.

15297. CHAIRMAN.—Another workhouse, maintained exclusively for inmates of one class?—Still, it would be a workhouse.

15298. You would not have that mixture of classes?—It would be more harmonious, according to Mr. Murnaghan's idea.

15299. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—You say you would like to remove altogether the atmosphere of workhouses from the hospitals?—Yes.

15300. A very desirable object; and one way of carrying it out would be to leave the hospitals in places like Balrothery and Colbride, and enable the Guardians to board out the aged and infirm in some neighbouring workhouse, where they could be classified, at a certain rate per head. Do you see any objection to that?—No.

15301. Would the poor dislike the change?—I am afraid they would. I don't know whether I am right or wrong, but I fancy some of the decent poor people would think they were being transported, and that it would be rather a punishment on them to send them away.

15302. Sentiment deserves respect, but even now inmates on the outskirts of unions are away from their former surroundings?—I give a great deal of consideration to the sentiments of the poor people. You would get over it better, I should think, by boarding them out in the neighbourhood and not sending them to the workhouses.

15303. You seem to think there is no great need for any further extension of the law as regards to these children. What about the children of tramps, for instance? I see myself when going through the country children following tramps along the road—would you not think it would be proper to take these children away?—I think that could be done under the present law.

15304. It is not done under the present law?—I think it could be done if the Guardians liked.

15305. CHAIRMAN.—I don't know how exactly?—I am sorry we have not the Act here.

15306. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—I suppose you are aware these children, when they grow up, begin to think the workhouses are their homes, and have no feeling of dislike to it, and, naturally, go into it?—Mr. Evans has given me a copy of this Act. Under section 1 of the Poor Law Act, 1899, the Guardians can assume all parental rights in regard to several classes of children:—First, a child which has been deserted by its parents; second, where, by reason of mental deficiency or vicious habits, or mode of life, the parent of this child is unfit to have control of it; third, where a parent is unable to perform his or her parental duties by reason of being under sentence of penal servitude or being detained under the Insane Act, 1890; fourth, where the parent of a child has been sentenced to imprisonment for an offence against any of his children; fifth, where a parent is permanently bed-ridden or disabled, and is an inmate of a workhouse; or, sixth, where both parents, or, in the case of an illegitimate child, the mother of the child, are, or is, dead. That goes pretty far.

15307. In such cases the parents of the child must be proved to be vicious?—That is, if the Guardians are of opinion, by reason of the mental deficiency or vicious habits or mode of life of the parents of the child, they are unfit to have control.

15308. But where the Guardians would not like to take on themselves to declare people mentally defective, or where they could not be proved to be vicious, what would you do with the children of these people who go travelling over the country, bringing up the young children in the habits of life they follow themselves—do you not think the Guardians should have increased power with respect to these vagrants?—Perhaps they would want a little more power; but it would not be well to be giving power into their hands to separate children from their parents.

15309. I quite agree, if there was any danger that the Guardians wished to violate the parental feelings. I suppose your experience does not make you think that Guardians would take away children from other than most objectionable parents?—I don't think so.

15310. If the Guardians had increased powers with regard to the straggling class might it not be an advantage?—I think it might; if they had some more power.

15311. You say it is the opinion of the majority of the County Council that it would be well to amalgamate the two unions of the city of Dublin. You have told us your own personal opinion?—I am afraid I cannot give you any more, because, although we had a long meeting of the Council, and spent two hours discussing the matter, neither Mr. O'Neill nor myself got any particular instructions from them, and it was a case of go-as-you-please in giving our evidence. There were no representatives of South Dublin present. I am told, so we largely represent our own opinions about these things.

15312. But, as a magistrate in both unions and as a man of considerable experience of the working of the system, you see no objection to the amalgamation of the two?—No; I think, on the whole, it would be fraught with advantage.

15313. Dr. BROOKS.—You strongly favour the separation of the hospitals from the workhouse?—Yes.

15314. How would you administer the hospitals?—I am not quite sure. If the Guardians had any control I would have outsiders as well.

15315. With the Guardians?—Yes, a joint committee; like a technical instruction committee, or something of that kind.

15316. Or the infirmary committee?—Yes.

15317. In the case of counties, I am not speaking of round the city of Dublin, how would that work for the whole county; would you suggest a hospital committee for a whole county, with perhaps two or three hospitals in it?—I think the one committee would do.

15318. Do you think also there might be an interchange of officers if they were under one committee; if more nurses were in one institution than in another, where they were more urgently required, some might be interchanged?—I think there would be an economy in that, too.

15319. Do you think by such a change there would be economy, and the administration would be more equal all over the county, and patients would be more equally treated in the matter of diet, and so on, and a certain amount of facility would be gained?—Yes, I think so. A sort of uniform treatment would be the result.

15320. If that prevailed in the city of Dublin regarding the two workhouses here, there would not be so much interchange of persons going from one to the other?—No, I think there would not.

15321. As a matter of fact do they go from one to the other?—They do; and difficulties are sometimes put in the way of the admission of these really hopeless characters—these fellows that go in and out, and all that sort of thing. When it is made too hot for them in the South Union they go over to the North and get in, and vice versa.

16022. Chairman.—If discharged from one they go to the other?—Yes, they do, frequently; and tell lies to the relieving officer.

16023. Dr. BROWN.—Is that not a very strong argument for amalgamation?—It is. Many people who are chargeable to the South Union go to the North, and vice versa. They go to the North Union one time and to the South Union another.

16024. You have outlined a sort of arrangement for the South Union Workhouse in case the hospital were separated from the rest of the workhouse. How many sick people would you accommodate in that school?—The girls are in it at the present time. The other part is used as a hospital. There is a child's infirmary in it.

16025. It would probably accommodate between 300 and 400?—I think it would. It is a very fine building, and the new place built at Kilmannah would accommodate a large number, too.

16026. How many, all told, would the two places accommodate?—I would say 600 or 700.

16027. That is considerably less than the number of sick now on the books of the South Union?—It is about the number they have now; but I should hope that the number would be reduced very speedily.

16028. How would you reduce them, because that is important?—I think the alteration would have the effect of reducing the number; and I think the transfer of the consumptives ought to be part of the arrangement.

16029. What would you suggest regarding the consumptives?—I understood it was part of the arrangement in the South Union to put them into the sheds erected for small-pox patients, and that they would do that for the present.

16030. That is for the present, I think; but would that be a desirable arrangement for the future?—No, it would not be an ideal arrangement, but it would be better than having them mixed up with the others in the hospital; but they ought to be sent out to a place in the country, and it should be made available for the patients of all the hospitals in the county.

16031. The one large consumptive sanatorium should be available for all?—Yes.

16032. Would you suggest it for one county?—I think the County Dublin would be large enough. I don't think it is good to congregate large numbers of any of these classes together.

16033. You have disposed of the consumptives, and you leave all the buildings in that area you have mentioned—the school and the lunatic building in the South Dublin Union as a hospital?—Yes.

16034. That would accommodate, perhaps, 500 or 600?—Yes.

16035. Would you make it more an acute hospital?—Of course, it would have to be open to the poor people. I don't see how you are to distinguish between the acute cases and the chronic in a free hospital of that kind.

16036. As long as they are sick you would keep them there?—Yes; Dublin hospitals won't take chronic cases, and people have to go to those workhouse hospitals, and I suppose that sort of thing would continue, even under the altered management.

16037. You said something to the effect that you would have a separate staff over them, and you would have none of the pauper attendants in the hospital?—I would do away with them entirely.

16038. And have a paid staff?—And have a paid staff.

16039. You think that would tend to economy and efficiency, too?—Yes; because these people are made permanent paupers by the fact that they get these little positions, and they get better food and tips.

16040. And they levy a certain amount of blackmail?—I don't like to call it that; but there is that sort of extortion.

16041. Do you refer to the patients?—I don't refer to the patients, but money they get from visitors, under the idea that they would be more kind to the friends of the visitors, and they get that in all hospitals. I don't call it blackmail. I know it has been said, and I believe it is true, that in some hospitals there has been blackmail levied on the patients, and the patients has to give something in order to get what he ought to get free.

16042. You may take it, it is true. In discharging patients from hospital, you would not discharge them into the workhouse. You would let them go out as they came in?—Yes, because at present they act as great levers of workhouse.

16043. You would just let them go home, and if they were destitute you would just let them seek admission to the workhouse?—Yes, in the ordinary way, just as if they came out of Jarvis-street.

16044. Do you approve of the lunatics being transferred to the asylum?—No, I have approved of that.

16045. What would you do with them?—Of course, there again, my experience is limited to the South Union, where they were properly treated, as certified by all the inspectors, at something like half the cost.

16046. What would you count in the cost?—I would count about 7s. a week.

16047. How do you arrive at 7s. a week?—I don't think it costs any more.

16048. What do you include in the 7s.?—Food, clothing, washing, and attendance.

16049. All the attendance; some of the attendance may be in the body of the house in certain circumstances. Were they included?—I have not gone into the figures particularly now, and I am speaking merely from recollection of what the cost was when I was there, but the chairman of the Board is here, and you will get it from other people, but I am under the impression that the cost for maintaining the lunatics and imbeciles in the South Union was 7s. per week, and it would cost about 10s. 6d. or 11s. in the Richmond.

16050. I am afraid all the charges are not included in the 7s. a week—chaplain's salary, interest and loans for buildings, doctors' salaries, and so on; also the clerk of the union?—The comparison may not have been fair. Those things were included in the rate per head.

16051. The rate—that is the number of inmates divided into the total of expenditures?—But then it appears that the circumstances of the South Union were exceptional.

16052. How were they exceptional?—They had a better place. They were separated.

16053. But they had not much ground. You could not give them occupation, and the best treatment for lunatics is to keep them employed?—But, of course, I had a good deal to do with the criticisms that Mr. O'Neill referred to of the Richmond Asylum there. I had, and I have, a horror of sending these poor people there, when I think they could be treated as well by the Guardians if they incurred a little expense in getting up buildings, and giving more room, and all that kind of thing; and then they could be treated well enough at much less expense. I do not like the idea of transferring them to these district asylums, where they have rather outrageous notions, I think.

16054. As chairman of the Guardians for many years, and also a member of the Asylum Committee—I was never a member of the Asylum Committee.

16055. Could you give any idea of how the difference of the 4s. could be spent in the asylum. You say it is practically 4s. a week less in the workhouse than in the asylum. 4s. a week is a large amount on one person. Each of them has to be fed?—They go in for comparatively good nursing in the asylum. They are dealing with the lunatics on a different basis altogether. Of course, it should be borne in mind that the cases in the workhouse are chronic and harmless. They are imbeciles and poor people who are not violent. The moment they become violent in the workhouse they were always transferred to the Richmond Asylum.

16056. A great many in the Richmond Asylum are of the same class?—Of late years the harmless ones have been sent there. That has gone to increase the number.

16057. But was there not always much the same class in it?—Not for many years.

16058. With the exception of a small proportion of acute mental cases, the rest of the cases were of the harmless type?—They were never sent from the union until late years unless they became violent. They were kept in the workhouse when they were admitted into the workhouse.

16059. They were sent from the city very often to the workhouse because it was an easier way of getting them into it?—When they are sent from the city direct the dispensary doctor has to certify that they are harmless, and that they are dangerous; when they go to the asylum the nearest dispensary doctor has to certify.

16060. Not necessarily a dispensary doctor at all?—When they are brought up in the police courts.

16061. A very large number have been sent to the workhouse simply because it is a more convenient way of disposing of them—it is an easier way, with less humanity in it. Is that a proper reason why they should be kept in the workhouse?—I would not keep them in a workhouse at all unless they were correctly treated, but I certainly thought the Guardians could provide well and reasonably for them in three workhouses, because they are not going to be cured. All they want is to be fed and kept clean. They are not able to enjoy the luxuries that they receive at Portlaoine.

16062. CHAIRMAN.—If they could be kept at an auxiliary asylum at no greater cost than at the South Dublin Union, would you be in favour of letting them go to such an institution?—I would.

16063. Dr. BURGESS.—In one county in Ireland, if not in more, all the lunatics in the county are kept, or are to be kept, in the asylum; therefore that county will be receiving a capitation grant of 4s. per head for every lunatic in the county?—Under Section 70 they would not receive the full grant; it is only 2s.

16064. They do not go under Section 70; they are going on bringing them into the asylum proper, and getting the full grant?—I understood it is under Section 70. I think it was referred to in your letter.

16065. The 300 patients that have been sent in from the South Union last year they are getting 4s. per head for?—One of the queries here is whether such workhouses or workhouses could, with advantage, be taken over by the County Council as an auxiliary asylum under Section 70.

16066. CHAIRMAN.—That is what I was referring to just now when I asked you could they be supported in another institution, that is an auxiliary asylum?—Under Section 70, would not you only get a capitation grant of 2s?

16067. Do you think you ought to get more?—I don't see why we should not get more.

16068. That is the evidence we have received from some members of local bodies, that the capitation grant ought to be raised for auxiliary asylums to the same as the other?—Yes; I don't see why we should not get the same. My idea was, the advantage derivable from the capitation grant would disappear under the increased cost of maintenance in one of these district asylums. It is very high in Dublin. We had an inquiry here, and contrasted the cost of Belfast and Cork, and found it went into a difference of thousands per annum—27,000 in one and £10,000 or £11,000 in the other—so there is an enormous prejudice against the Dublin Asylum, and we felt something should be done to prevent the increase of the numbers there because of the increased cost; and whether they are there or in the union, the ratepayers would have to pay for them.

16069. If you could get a report of your Committee on this point, we would be obliged—as regards the expenses of asylums and auxiliary asylums; we shall meet with an auxiliary asylum in Cork—and if you have anything definite, we shall be glad to get it?—It is in print, and Mr. Blackburne can give it to you.

16070. We shall be glad to get it?—What we had here was the cost of the ordinary district asylum.

16071. Not any auxiliary asylum?—There was no auxiliary.

16072. There is only one at present in Ireland?—It is not long started.

16074. As I understand it, the cost per head per annum in one of the asylums in the North is £24, and in the workhouse in the same locality it is something like £18, or 7s. per week. The capitation grant amounts to £10, and that and the £18 would come to £28. That would mean a saving to the ratepayers of £4 in that instance alone, so there really is not the difference in cost between the two institutions that is ordinarily accepted. Even in the case of the auxiliary asylum, the 2s. grant of £8 a year would bring it almost equal, and then there is the advantage of having these people isolated and away from the workhouse?—I think that is a more practicable proposal than talking of boarding them out, because I don't think many of them would be taken here. I think that would be dangerous, because these homeless lunatics are liable to get dangerous at any time.

Dr. M. J. NOLAN, Resident Medical Superintendent, Downpatrick Lunatic Asylum, examined.

Dr. M. J.
Nolan.

16075. CHAIRMAN.—You represent the Medico-Psychological Association of Great Britain and Ireland?—Yes.

16076. Your Association furnished us with a memorandum. The Secretary called at my office, and mentioned that three members of the Association would give evidence that was desired. What would you wish to bring before us?—I present myself before the Commission in consequence of a communication which I received from the Secretary of the Irish division of the Medico-Psychological Association of Great Britain and Ireland, intimating that the Commissioners desire further information respecting the subjects embraced in the memorandum submitted to them by the Special Committee of the said Association. I am a member of the Special Committee, and also a member of the Council of the Association, and an Examiner for the Certificate in Psychological Medicine granted to medical practitioners by that body. My special knowledge of the insane and their requirements is derived from my experience in the Limerick Asylum at intervals between the years 1863-1894; in the Richmond (Dublin) District Asylum, between the years 1887 and 1893; and in the Downpatrick Lunatic Asylum, from the latter date to the present date. I have, moreover, visited many English, Scotch, and Continental asylums, and have investigated the "Family Care" system as established at Ghent and Lievercux. Before taking up the special branch of lunacy practice, I enjoyed extensive experience of general medical work in private practice, in general and special hospitals, in orphanages and industrial schools, in urban and rural dispensaries, and in military and constabulary barracks. I desire to emphasise my general knowledge of institutions other than asylums in order that the Commissioners may feel assured that my evidence is unbiased by the limitation of points of view which they may attribute to one who they may presume to have spent his entire professional life within the walls of an asylum. I also desire to state that inasmuch as the County Council of Down have taken independent action in dealing with the lunacy requirements of the district with which I am associated, the findings of the Commission would in no sense touch me personally, though at the same time the deliberations and outcome of the Commission must of necessity be of the most profound interest to me as to all devoted to the care and treatment of the afflicted insane. Before entering into the details of the evidence which I am here to give to-day, I should like to say one word in explanation of my position as a witness. I understand from the Secretary of the Irish Division of the Medico-Psychological Association, that the Commission desires some expert evidence on the subject of the memorandum which has been submitted to them by that Association. With the terms of that memorandum I am in absolute agreement, and outside them I do not suppose the Commission will travel. The general question of lunacy in Ireland is too vast and complex a subject to be dealt with by a Commission constituted as this is. I would, therefore, desire to confine any representation I make within the limits of the question of lunacy in Ireland so far as it is likely to be affected by the operation of the Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898. Under this Act it is proposed, as a measure of common humanity, to remove the insane from the workhouses throughout the country and to locate them in institutions more in accord with their necessities. With that object it is proposed to establish auxiliary asylums, either as independent establishments or as dependent departments of the existing district asylums; in either case it is proposed to grant a capitation rate of 2s. per head per week. With over twenty years' experience of general medical work, and some sixteen years of special work in connection with insane, I submit that the sum mentioned would be utterly inadequate to provide the necessary care and maintenance for the afflicted pauper insane. I have for years emphasised the fact that the insane admitted to asylums from workhouses embrace all forms of mental degeneration; that the vast majority of them are recoverer in a state of extreme physical disease; that they prove to be the most expensive class of patients admitted to district asylums, inasmuch as they require more than the average medical care, supervision, and maintenance; and that some of them are of the weak-minded, destructive class, who require more than the ordinary supervision. There has been much talk of "chronic harmless lunatics." In my experience this class of the insane is extremely limited, and every day's experience in lunatic asylums tends to make me more cautious in placing individuals under this category. Chronically diseased, prolonged suffering. Those who are most familiar with the insane know that as years pass many mental phases appear in the same individual, and that apparently "harmless" individuals will now and again develop dangerous tendencies and become harmful to themselves and those with whom they are in association; hence it would appear to me to be a grave error to institute independent auxiliary asylums which would not be departments of existing asylums. In a poor country such as Ireland it would appear to me that the most expensive way of dealing with the insane would be to set up several classes of asylums adapted to treat the supposed stereotyped clinical forms of insanity, as differentiated by a Parliamentary draughtsman, when one knows and ascertains that the clinical features of such cases are so very variable. On the other hand, an auxiliary asylum which would be a department of an existing district asylum offers all obvious advantages to economy and efficiency. I do not suppose any very useful object could be attained by a comparison between the relative cost of the insane in workhouses and asylums, inasmuch as the accurate figures with regard to the full cost of inmates in the former cannot be readily ascertained. The condition of insane in workhouses was such that remedial legislation became a crying necessity, and the Local Government Board issued a circular letter stating that humanity demanded the removal of chronic lunatics from the workhouse wards. In the asylums, on the other hand, a great deal has been done of late years, more particularly under the regime of the present Inspector of Lunatics, to place the insane under the most favorable conditions, to promote the recovery of the curable cases, and to transform the more chronic cases into comparatively useful members of society, for it must be remembered that the latter class largely assist in the manual labour necessary to keep large institutions in order. If they were withdrawn from an ordinary district asylum, the attendant staff would have to be very considerably augmented. It may, however, be mentioned that it has been determined that the cost of lunatics in some workhouses was as high as 6s. and 7s. per week, and that this sum was not inclusive of establishment charges, which it was not possible to ascertain. The average cost in a district asylum, inclusive of all charges, is about 9s. It has been suggested that a certain proportion of the insane might be provided for by the adoption of a system of family care, or "boarding out." This is a subject to which I have given considerable attention, and I have recently visited the insane colonies at Ghel and Lierens. From my extensive knowledge of this country, both North and South, I am not sanguine that the Continental methods, which I have investigated could be introduced with anything approaching the same measure of success that they have attained in the places mentioned. No system of the kind could possibly be successful without an elaborate medical, inspectorial supervision, the establishment of which would not, I think, be warranted by the comparatively small numbers of the insane who could be safely and successfully treated by "family care" in this country. It is alleged that the increase of insanity in this country is largely due to the undue number of degenerates that remain in it, owing to the fact that healthy wage-earning members have emigrated; hence it would seem to me no easy task to find suitable households in which to place the insane whom it is proposed to treat outside asylums. Nevertheless, there is no reason why such a system should not be legalised for experimental adoption in Ireland, and if such should be done, I would hope to be one of the first to give it a fair trial, but though situated in one of the most prosperous counties in Ireland, I am not hopeful of any satisfactory results. In conclusion, I would say that the lunacy problem in Ireland should not be dealt with by any one stereotyped plan. Each district having examined into its own needs should adopt such local measures as concerned themselves for efficiency and economy. This course has been adopted in the county of Down, where the County Council have decided, after exhaustive investigation of all relative circumstances, to enlarge the existing district asylum by the provision of annexes, which would enable them to receive into that institution the insane located in the workhouses. For this purpose they have decided to enlarge the asylum, irrespective altogether of the establishment of auxiliaries, as laid down in the Act, and they have succeeded in creating suitable accommodation at the extremely moderate figure of £75 a head. With the exception of some male and female students, no additions will require to be made to the staff of the institution, and it is anticipated that the net result will be a considerable reduction in the cost per head. At the same time the workhouses will be relieved of some of their most expensive inmates, and the incidence of taxation between Poor Law districts and county-at-large will work out to the great relief of the former and to the comparative relief of the latter. This satisfactory result was speedily attained by the hearty co-operation of the Inspector of Lunatics, who were strong in their desire to see established a scheme so economical and so suitable to the wants of the insane of the district. Speaking in general terms, it would seem to me that the county district asylum in Ireland should be constituted to embrace all classes of the insane of the district, that is to say, should contain a properly equipped hospital for the acute cases and recent admissions, industrial departments for those who are competent to work usefully at trades, and have a farm to give employment to the agricultural labourers and others; and it should also provide suitable accommodation for the violent, destructive, and noisy proportion of the inmates. The average population of an Irish county asylum does not exceed 600 to 800, and for the reasons already advanced, it would seem obvious that the centralisation of that number would tend to efficiency and economy of administration. If the numbers arose to several thousands, as they have done in the large English counties, there is no doubt a series of separate establishments might be advantageous, such as a hospital for the recent admissions, epileptic colonies, chronic asylums, and a system of boarding-out family care.

15077. Your Association disapproves of separate auxiliary asylums?—Yes; the auxiliary asylums as devised under the Local Government Act of 1886 would not be a success, either medically or financially. It appeared to me that the funds would be inadequate to keep the inmates as they ought to be kept, and that there was not sufficient arrangement made for medical supervision, and it would be a disastrous thing to accumulate in an auxiliary a large number of cases that were regarded as hopeless, but who may at the same time be preserved from a certain amount of suffering and degradation.

15078. You think that there should be a resident doctor in every asylum?—I think where a large number of the insane are congregated together there should be a resident medical officer in charge. The Act laid down that sanitarians might be created, but without particular reference to the medical supervision of them. It laid down, as I understand, that they might be created as a department of an existing asylum, or as an independent asylum, and what we considered was that the grant was not adequate for the proper maintenance of them in either institution.

15079. That is 2s. per week per head?—Yes.

15080. If the rate were raised from 2s. to 4s., would your objection vanish?—Not altogether, because I don't think you can differentiate the classes of the insane so strictly as to divide them in such a way that you could leave some of them permanently in an auxiliary.

15081. You can divide them into dangerous and harmless?—Not altogether. The most chronic are often the most liable to sudden outbreaks.

15082. Do these chronic lunatics require very great personal care?—A certain proportion of them do.

15083. Owing to their dirty habits?—Yes; and what we observed in the cases admitted from workhouses was they were so physically ill that they were greatly in need of the care of the most organised department of the asylum. They were the sort of cases that took up all the time of our medical staff, and required most nursing, medicines, extra nourishment, and all that sort of thing.

15084. You have received a good number of transfers in your asylum?—Yes, we have got a considerable number in late years. Three were yesterday, I think, in the hospital wards, and some forty of these had been workhouse cases labouring under various diseases.

16005. What number have you altogether in the asylum?—660.

16006. And 121 in the sick wards?—Yes; and about forty of these were admissions from workhouse labourers under nervous diseases.

16007. Do you attribute that in any way to their treatment in the workhouse?—Not at all.

16008. Was it noticed?—It simply shows they were admitted into the workhouse infirmary, and when they became insane they were sent into the asylum. A large number of them ought to have been in asylums years ago.

16009. They were proper cases for an asylum?—A large proportion of them should have been sent years ago.

16010. Do you think any lunatics should be left in the lunatic wards of workhouses?—None.

16011. Is that the general opinion among doctors who are resident superintendents of asylums?—Yes, I think it is the general opinion. The few that are left, weak-minded people, are usually the cannals who occupy the maternity wards coming in and out.

16012. You have alluded to the boarding-out system of lunatics. That is a matter of which you have had considerable personal experience?—I can hardly say personal experience, but I have made it a matter of personal knowledge. I studied it in operation abroad.

16013. You scarcely think that system would be successful here?—I think it might be introduced, and it certainly ought to be legalized, though I doubt if it would have the same measure of success in this country as it has had abroad. I am afraid that the social conditions, and other conditions in Ireland, would not make it the same success here.

16014. Can you give us any information as to the relative cost between workhouses and asylums?—It is hard to give any actual comparison because the actual figures of the workhouse cost are not available. You can only get them up to a certain point.

16015. You can get the sum spent under all heads?—No, we have not been able to get that; but we did work out that in a number of unions it reached as much as 2s. per head, while in the asylum the average would be about 9s.

16016. Dr. Broun.—Taken all over Ireland?—Yes, I think so. Of course every year it alters a little, but in our asylum it is from 9s. to 12s. 6d.

16017. CHAIRMAN.—You have had a great deal of building these?—Of late years we have had a considerable amount.

16018. Mr. MURKIN.—That only includes the cost of maintenance?—Not the repayment of loans and interest.

16019. CHAIRMAN.—Does it include salaries?—Yes, all salaries, but not the repayment of loans; everything but loans.

16020. Dr. Broun.—Everything included, would it be under 12s. 6d.?—In or about that.

16021. Mr. MURKIN.—I think the average is about 22s. per head per year?—Not so much in some. Where you have large salaries it is larger.

16022. But more than that in others?

16023. CHAIRMAN.—Dublin and Mullingar put it up?—I don't know what their figures actually are.

16024. Mr. MURKIN.—Have you much unused space in your institution?—We are adding to it just at present in order to take in all the people who are certified insane in the district. About 800 we shall have altogether then. Our present number is 660. There are only a comparatively small number in the workhouse at present. The County Council and Asylum Committee have enlarged the asylum with the object of taking all the lunatics of the county into the asylum.

16025. Dr. Broun.—What was it led to that decision?—The County Council held an investigation into the cost, and rating, and so on, and after an examination of all the financial aspects of it, they considered that the enlargement of the existing asylum would be the most economical course they could adopt, and the most efficient results would be obtained from it. The new wings have been erected at an exceedingly moderate rate. As I have already mentioned, the cost is only something like 42s. a head for the new accommodation.

16026. That is much less than the general?—That is much less than the general, and the building is most suitable in every sense. The sanitary arrangements, and everything of that kind, are exceedingly well done. It is not an administrative block—is only a residential block—and my argument would be that all asylums ought to be departments of existing asylums. If you make asylums at all they should be affiliated with the existing asylums.

16027. Your idea in that is to save the extra cost of administration?—Yes.

16028. The same supervision would do?—Yes; here, for example, it will not be necessary to add anything with the exception of a few attendants to each side of the house. The medical staff as it is already will be large enough to cope with the work, and the storekeeper, matron, and so on, will all be there.

16029. Do you anticipate when you have these two blocks occupied the average cost will be reduced somewhat?—Yes, largely.

16030. Largely reduced?—I think so.

16031. Would you bring it down to 2s. 6d. per head?—It depends so much on the methods. It is not a hard and fast thing. For instance, the war had a large effect in raising the cost of asylums. Before the war it was much lower. But I should say perhaps that 2s. 6d. would be the average after a while.

16032. That comes very near the cost of the workhouse, and their comfort and safety would be much greater in the asylum. Do you find that the class of lunatics who are in the workhouse cannot do much labour when they enter the asylum?—A large number of them are so ill that they go direct to bed. They are chronic invalids. As a medical gentleman, you can understand they have chronic nervous disease—disseminated sclerosis and other nervous disorders—but a certain number can act as workers. The latter have been sent to us because of some excitement in the workhouse or some expression of violence on their part, and they have to be sent to the asylum. It is emphasised in this memorandum that no lunatic is always effected in the same way. I cannot conceive that anyone with a medical knowledge of the insane would agree to build an auxiliary for a certain class of insanity, a disease which alternates so much that at any moment a man who appears to be very quiet may take a fit of homicidal mania or become suicidal. You have no guarantee at all of what they will do.

16033. Mr. MURKIN.—Do they, as a matter of fact?—A considerable number of them do.

16034. What is the experience of these institutions; is it not the reverse?—I don't think there is any institution where they are confined together.

16035. CHAIRMAN.—The only one is that started in the County Cork recently; I don't know whether that is in operation yet?—If the auxiliary you mention were mine the difficulty I would have would be to select a class of people to put into it. I could only send the deranged, old, feeble people who require constant medical supervision and require a resident physician—or I should send the more chronic mental class of people, whom you want in the existing asylum, and if you remove these people from the existing asylum you must add to your paid attendants. A considerably larger number of the latter would be necessary, because the chronic insane are capable of a considerable amount of work—cleaning and other work.

16037. Why did they not go into the asylum in the first instance?—The beginning of all insanity, I think I am safe in saying, has a basis of physical illness. I think a number of them go to the workhouse infirmary out of sorts, suffering from different ailments, and develop insanity in the workhouse.

16038. Have you any knowledge that a number of them are sent there because there is no room to be got through and their friends can get them into the workhouse much more easily?—That possibly facilitates it; but still I think a number of them go into the ordinary wards of a workhouse and migrate from them into the lunatic wards.

16039. CHAIRMAN.—Have you any cases in your mind?—I know for a fact that it is the case; that a large number of them go in in such a way.

16040. They are transferred from other departments in the workhouse?—Yes.

16041. You could not have taken all these workhouse inmates without enlarging the asylum?—No; but we were on the eve of enlarging, and it was more desirable and economical to enlarge for the entire lunatic population. The committee were most anxious that the public should get the greatest advantage in the spending of the money, and they went into the matter with an open mind, and came to the conclusion that it was more efficient and cheaper to adopt this course.

16122. Mr. MURPHY.—Perhaps you were exceptionally well circumstanced for that experiment?—I cannot say we had any exceptional advantages. We have, perhaps, a little more land than some of the other asylums. We have a large farm of 170 acres that gives a large outlet for labour, and also is a tremendous help to the economical working of the asylum, as we raise a very large quantity of our vegetables, meat, and milk.

16123. What is the cost of the new improvement?—About £20 a head.

16124. For about 160?—More—for 182.

16125. That is about £15,000?—112 women and 70 men.

16126. That is about £16,000?—Yes. There were other things as well as that, and the actual was £20,000 in all. There was only £15,000 in connection with the residential enlargement of the asylum. Some £4,000 was for a farmstead and other buildings.

Dr. CONNELLY NEWMAN, Resident Medical Superintendent, Richmond District Lunatic Asylum, examined.

16128. I think the chief matter that the committee of your association wish to bring before this Commission is the question of auxiliary lunatic asylums as compared with district or county lunatic asylums?—Yes; so I understand.

16129. What is your view on the matter?—On the whole I do not think I have much to add to as much of Dr. Nolan's evidence as I heard. I was unfortunate enough not to come in time to hear him begin. He has given, as I understand rightly, expression to a general opinion that an auxiliary asylum would not prove either efficient or economical. At any rate that is the conclusion I have come to.

16130. You agree with that opinion?—I agree with that opinion.

16131. He thought that the insane vary so much in their manifestations of insanity that it would not be safe or possible to classify them as harmless or non-harmless in the way that is suggested?—I am afraid that would present great difficulties, and I fail to see what division of insane could be safely relegated to an auxiliary asylum. If the patients who are in large numbers in the insane wards of a workhouse, who are old and feeble, are to be sent to auxiliaries these people, in my experience, require a great deal more care than they would get in any asylum that is not fully equipped. I get large numbers of old and feeble people from workhouses, and they are very anxious cases. They are very often restless; they are, generally, very frail in bodily health; they require very careful nursing or else they injure themselves or get injured, or break down more rapidly than they ought to do. Therefore, I think that class of case should be excluded from the classes who ought to be sent to an auxiliary asylum. Of course the acute cases and cases that require close medical attention with regard to their mental condition, I suppose nobody would think of sending to an auxiliary asylum. I get some such cases from workhouses, but they are very unsuitable for any place except an asylum. However, I suppose everyone will acknowledge that, so there is no use dwelling on it. Again, we get from workhouses a considerable number of idiots. I don't think an auxiliary asylum is a suitable place for an idiot. An idiot who is educable ought neither to be sent to an auxiliary asylum nor even to a general asylum. There is one matter I am glad to have an opportunity of drawing attention to, and that is that there is no place for the education of many idiots who could be greatly improved by suitable education in early life.

16132. You mean an institution such as the Stewart is supposed to be?—Of course, there is the Stewart, but, though it is an admirably managed, yet it is a small institution, and it is a private charity, and is not open to the greater number of the population who could avail of it. So that one is reduced to considering what cases would go to an auxiliary asylum, to look to the chronic cases—long standing cases, at least, of insanity—in good physical health and not too old. Now such cases could be drafted out of our lunatic asylums with a certain degree of safety. I quite agree with Dr. Nolan in thinking you could never be quite sure what will happen, and there is some risk in sending people out, but if you remove that class from the asylums you will remove a class who do a good part of the work of the asylums, as Dr. Nolan has pointed out—the people who work on the farm, clean the house; the people who enable the place to be managed with a comparatively small staff of attendants, as it is managed—and if you gain by sending that class away to an auxiliary asylum you lose by the increased expenditure in the parent asylum, so that I don't see where much economy is to come in. One learns the phrase more commonly used of chronic insane; in connection with auxiliary asylums one hears of incurable cases. Now, I am opposed to calling any case incurable; I am opposed to treating any patient as being incurable. If patients are placed in an auxiliary asylum, and are to receive the minimum of care and attention, and are to have no occupation and no means of amusement, it might be cheaper, but I think it is very inhuman, and I think there are a very great number of patients who are, and as a matter of fact we feel to be, incurable, but their cases are often improvable by care and personal attention, and may be improved to a comparatively high level, whereas if they are herded together without a sufficient number of amusements, occupation, or amusements, which all mean money; if they are to be herded together without these things they will get worse, and their condition becomes degraded, which is a thing no one ought to contemplate with humanity.

16133. Do you think all lunatics ought to be removed from workhouses?—I do.

16134. You are not in favour of removing them, for the reasons you have given, to auxiliary lunatic asylums, such as are contemplated under the Local Government Act of 1893?—I am not.

16135. Then, you think they ought to be dealt with either by existing asylums or the enlargement of existing asylums, or by additional county asylums perhaps?—I think there are a considerable proportion of the occupants of our asylums who might be dealt with in another manner you have not touched upon, and that is by treating them by what has been called "family care." I do not mention that as being a particularly economical method, because, for reasons that I have hinted at already, if you remove the people who are suitable for treatment in a family from an asylum you remove the people who are an element of economy in an asylum.

16136. Whose labour is of value?—Whose labour is of value; but I think that such a method of treatment might in time be adopted in this country, as it has been in several other countries, with advantage to the individuals themselves, who would thereby be relieved from the painful and unnatural conditions of life in an institution, and, if it was done under careful supervision, with comparatively small risk to the peace and comfort of the general population.

16137. Do you think such homes could be got without difficulty in this country—suitable homes; would you look forward to getting them among relatives of the people or among strangers?—I would look forward among both. In Scotland, where a system of the kind has been carried out, there are rather more of the insane under family care in the hands of strangers now than in the hands of their own people. Formerly there were more in the hands of their own people. In some other countries there are more in the hands of strangers.

16138. Would you hope to get a sufficient number of families to board them out among?—I think that could be arranged. You asked me another question, whether I thought there would be suitable houses found for them to go to. That seems to me in this country to be the chief difficulty, but I believe it could be got over in time, and then there is an observation that has been made in other countries where patients have been sent out to family care that their labour and the remuneration received for their care has been sufficiently beneficial to householders to enable the latter to considerably improve their homes, and this has been said particularly in Belgium, where the system is largely carried out.

16139. As regards cost, have you made any calculation at all as to the relative cost of maintaining in asylum, as asylums, in workhouse, and an auxiliary lunatic asylum?—No; there are no data that I am aware of—at least I have never been able to obtain them—for ascertaining the amount the lunatic costs in the workhouse. Certain items of cost appear, but there seems to be no element for the calculation of cost comparable to what we make in our district lunatic asylum.

16140. Unless you take the whole annual expenditure of a workhouse under every heading and divide it by the number of patients, and take all the inmates to be ordinary average patients?—I suppose that would bring it out. But in every workhouse, at least in late years, the insane have received more care than the ordinary patients, as it would not be quite a fair calculation.

16141. Hardly as much as the sick?—I am afraid hardly as much as the sick.

16142. They would have an untrained workmaster or superintendent with them—one who is not trained in the care of mental diseases?—In a good many of the workhouses now there have persons who have been trained.

16143. In a few, yes?—But, of course, the number of such persons is entirely insufficient compared to the number of patients. There is very little paid in one named nurse or attendant for a hundred inmates, or something of that kind, because that person cannot always be present, and if he or she is on duty at night then the person who is on duty by day is perhaps ignorant, and vice versa.

16144. Is there anything else that I have not touched on that you would wish to mention?—Perhaps I ought to say to you it might occur to you as a possible contradiction between my opinion as to the difficulty of finding suitable patients to put in an auxiliary asylum and the statement I have made that I think suitable patients could be found to send to family care. There are, in my opinion, a considerable number of the insane whose condition is ameliorated by being returned to the surroundings of family life, and who would be fairly manageable in conditions of family life, and yet who, if heeded together with a large number of other inmates in an auxiliary asylum, would be troublesome and would tend to degenerate. Do I make my point clear?

16145. Thoroughly. Is there any provision made for medical inspection of such boarded-out lunatics?—Certainly.

16146. Are they within reasonable distance of a doctor whose duty it is to see them occasionally?—In the countries whose systems I approve of there is such provision. In Scotland, whose system I do not approve of, the provision is, to my mind, imperfect. There are two assistant commissioners of lunacy in Scotland who visit the patients boarded out throughout the country. There are certain provisions also for the parish doctor of the locality to visit them periodically, but in my opinion that provision is hardly sufficient, and I think where family care and boarding out are carried out they ought to be from an asylum as a centre. Patients should be sent from there, and there should be power of sending them back if the occasion arose—if they got ill or unmanageable meantime—and they should be under the supervision of the staff of the asylum, who are familiar with their case and with their mental condition. That is done in France and in Belgium and Germany and elsewhere, but notably in those countries.

16147. You have a second asylum in your district in connection with the Richmond?—That is so.

16148. In what way did you classify the patients that were sent there; was there any special classification made or were they just sent—pretty much the same class of patients as you have in the Richmond?—At first there was a special classification made before the asylum was fully opened, and when the patients, who were sent to Portenae, were housed in temporary accommodation.

16149. That was owing to the bad berth?—Yes; and other causes. But since the asylum has been completed the patients who are sent there now are sent of any special class.

16150. They are the same class as the ordinary Richmond patients?—Yes; they are the same.

16151. You have a resident medical officer at Portenae I suppose?—There are three resident medical officers at Portenae.

16152. Dr. BOGGER.—With regard to the relative cost between the asylum and the workhouse, you said you could not get the full figures as far as you knew; have you gone into the question of relative cost?—As far as I know I apprehend that the cost of the workhouse is less than the asylum. It must be. They don't have the same provision.

16153. How much less?—I really have not any idea how much less.

16154. What is the cost of the inmates per head in an asylum?—The cost is between £26 and £27 per year; say £27.

16155. A little over 10s. a week?—Yes; between 10s. and 11s. a week.

16156. Does that take in everything; does it include interest on loans?—Everything except interest on loans. It does not take in interest on loans.

16157. You have had very heavy expenditure, I understand?—Of course we have had enormous expenditure on building.

16158. Of course you have a very large number to provide for?—There are nearly 2,700 under my care at present.

16159. What would you say in a maximum number that should be in one institution?—I should say that 1,000 is the ideal maximum, if I may so express myself. The London county asylums—they have seven containing each 2,000. I think that is unfortunately large.

16160. If they had asylums with 2,000 could you have proper classification do you think?—I think so. I think 1,000 affords quite sufficient facilities for classification.

16161. In your hospital arrangements do you include consumptives in the asylum?—Not in my asylum. I am sorry to say we have not got so far yet.

16162. Has not it been discussed frequently in connection with asylums?—It has been frequently discussed in connection with asylums.

16163. Has your committee taken any action at all in reference to it?—No.

16164. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose insane cases could hardly go to an ordinary sanatorium?—No. The difficulty about what has been suggested in reference to special provision for consumptives, is a practical one. We are all agreed, theoretically, as to what should be done. The practical difficulty is that a consumptive hospital is an asylum would require to be a small asylum in itself; it would require to contain provision for every mental class—every social class for that matter, if you had paying patients and others together.

16165. Suppose there were an educational establishment for idiots, what size should such an establishment be for Ireland?—Speaking roughly, not having gone into the matter with any care, I should say such an institution ought probably to accommodate 1,600 people.

16167. Has the register any accurate definition; is the name not used often synonymously for lunatic?—No; perhaps it is the other way; there are more idiots than lunatics. The words are, of course, used in a loose way. A great number of patients come to me in middle life of whom I get no history at all. Some of them come from workhouses, some of them wandering at large, and so on—people of whom we get no history, and who, I think, very probably have been, if not idiots, at least imbeciles from birth, and are classed with lunatics.

16168. If there was such an institution do you think these people could be made self-supporting?—By no means all of them, but a considerable proportion of them could be taught trades and could be taught means of earning in earning their own living.

16169. Could they leave the institution and take care of themselves outside?—I think the majority of them could not leave the institution and take care of themselves, but the majority of them could return to their homes, if they had any friends, much improved by treatment and able to contribute to their own living and able to lead an orderly life.

16170. Then, of course, when they return to their own homes they would be utterly away from control; would that be good for them?—In a great number of cases it would not do. A great number of idiots, although they can be taught a certain amount of trade or occupation, are yet not fit to be at large. Those persons would either have to remain permanently in the institution or else go to an asylum; but what I think an idiot institution is particularly wanted for is not so much the protection of those people in later years or the community from them in their later years as the education in youth of those whom it is possible to educate.

16171. Have you any experience of children, deficient, who cannot take their place in ordinary schools, drifting into insanity through want of care?—I have not much experience of such cases. I know the class of cases that you mean—cases for which special schools have been established in London.

16172. Quite so?—I have little experience of such cases. They don't come much in my way. Persons are usually premonitory insane when they come to us, but I have had one such case recently.

16173. Are there many of that class in Ireland?—I should not say there are, but I cannot be sure.

16174. Judging by the number of idiots in such schools in England and the benefits they receive, would that assist you?—I am afraid I don't know very much about that subject. I know the thing has been wanted as you mention, but I cannot go into it. I cannot express an opinion as to whether the play has been worth the candle or not.

Dr. Leeper.

Dr. LEPPER examined.

16175. Chairman.—You are at present Medical Superintendent in Swift's Hospital?—St. Patrick's Hospital.

16176. It is generally known as Swift's?—It is wrongly called Swift's, because the name given by Swift is St. Patrick's Hospital.

16177. Before you went to St. Patrick's Hospital you were medical officer of a workhouse?—Yes.

16178. In that case you have had double experience that will be useful to us, both as regards cure of lunatics in workhouses and in an asylum?—Yes.

16179. What is your opinion as regards taking care of lunatics in workhouses?—When I first took charge of a workhouse I had previously had some knowledge of the treatment of insanity, and I was surprised to find the extraordinary number of acute cases that came for treatment to the workhouse in the first instance.

16180. Mental cases?—Yes. In the workhouse which I had charge of for some years there were a very large number of insane constantly resident in the workhouse.

16182. Did you try to get these lunatics transferred to the asylum then?—The moment we tried to do that we were met by the very extraordinary difficulty—the difficulty in the Act, which specifies that the dispensary doctor, and not the doctor in charge of the patient, is the person to certify that he or she is a dangerous lunatic—so you are prevented by Act of Parliament from certifying for your own patient. That was the difficulty I found. When I had a violent and dangerous lunatic and tried to get him transferred to the asylum on one occasion I distinctly remember in the justice case and the dispensary doctors came and refused to certify, on the dispensary doctor's certificate, so I was still left with the dangerous lunatic. Of course the Act is very extraordinarily worded, and says very distinctly the justices shall summon to their assistance the dispensary doctor, and, in his absence, the next nearest dispensary doctor. Then in that form I was able for some time to get insane people committed to the district lunatic asylum, but that was also very unsatisfactory, because although the patient came in, brought on by the police, you could not get him removed until the chairman and the board met and signed the order to undertake his removal, and I was still responsible for a large number of acute insane cases. Before I took charge of this workhouse one woman had murdered another in it. During the time I had charge of it, by, I think, a wholly immoral system of bribery—with tobacco and other means—I got paupers and such other people as I could depend on, with a modicum of salary, to take charge of these. By that means I prevented any such occurrence, although I was standing on very thin ice on several occasions. In later years a woman was employed by the Guardians, which was a sort of case, but, as regards the power to treat them, she was not capable.

16183. In the asylum you have at present do the inmates differ from those in ordinary lunatic asylums?—Not in their mental symptoms, but they are taken from a different walk in life. But insanity is the same all the world over.

16184. Then the mental diseases are the same as in a asylum cases?—Yes.

16185. Comparing them with the cases you had charge of in the workhouse, how would you compare them? would you think the cases in the workhouse were of quite much the same class, or were they of a different order and less dangerous class?—One is the educated class and the other is not. The workhouse class is an uneducated class. Therefore the insanity in them is less complicated in those belonging to the better class of society, because they have more mind to go wrong.

16186. Which is the more troublesome to go wrong—educated people or uneducated people?—The educated man requires much more delicate handling, but as far as the treatment of physical diseases is concerned there is just as much difficulty in the one as the other.

16187. Did you think the workhouse patients, so far as the actual diseases went, were pretty much the same class as the others?—Yes; the ordinary forms of mental diseases are just the same.

16188. And there is not any simple, quiet lunatic, patient to be found?—No; the dementia, or the weak-minded class of patient, who will hardly answer you very often, or who leads a vegetative sort of existence, is the very class who is subject to conditions of impulsive violence, in which he becomes exceedingly dangerous. Once the storm passes over they are quiet again, probably for months, before another storm occurs.

16189. Perhaps you have heard Dr. Nolan's and Dr. Conolly Norman's evidence? would you agree with them about these ordinary asylums?—I entirely agree with this evidence so far as my knowledge of the subject goes.

16190. When you were in charge of a workhouse did you find many women of feeble mind there?—I did.

16191. Did they meet with any misdeeds?—They did.

16192. Did you form any conclusion or opinion with reference to that?—I think there is a great need, and am glad to have the opportunity of saying so, throughout Ireland—in many parts of Ireland I am familiar with—to have the mental condition of the women that are classed among the healthy paupers in workhouses improved into, with a view of seeing how many suffer from absolute mental defect and how many do not. It has been an old score. Some years ago I gave evidence before the Royal Commission that inquired into the condition of Irish private asylums, and I wrote this pamphlet (produced), which I hold in my hand, which has this entry which I might read:—"The following is an extract from a Scottish blue book for the year 1837; and then in the same blue book the following extract is given on the report on alien lunatics. It is quoted here to show that the Irish lunatic system is not considered perfection by the Scottish Commissioners:—"We again call attention to the circumstance that pauper lunatics who are thus sent to Ireland are frequently, upon arriving there, placed in the ordinary wards of poorhouses, from which they soon discharge themselves and return to this country. In sending such patients repeatedly to and fro a needless expenditure of money and trouble is caused." I mention this to show my contention is that the classification of male, and particularly female, patients is not at all what it ought to be, and a great many people are treated as sane paupers that are really mentally defective, and lead vicious lives—not from viciousness, but simply because they know no better—and I think that attention in that direction would largely in future years diminish the number of insane in this country.

16193. You think the number of insane is to some extent accounted for by them?—I think it is a very large extent, not alone the nature, but the class moderately known as degenerate, the increase of which is largely caused by a want of appreciation of moral defects in these women who are frequently the mothers of very large families.

16194. You have had instances coming before yourself Dr. Looper while in charge of workhouses?—Yes.

Mr. JOHN BYRNE examined.

16195 CHAIRMAN.—You are one of the delegates of the Guardians nominated by the South Dublin Board?—Yes; the Guardians nominated me as delegate, but I would not come to give evidence, as delegate, giving their opinions, because in some respects I differ from their opinions, so my evidence will be individual. My opinion is, it would not be desirable to interfere with Dublin Union either by amalgamation or otherwise. We have vested rights in the South Dublin Union.

One, the principal, is that our rates differ materially from those of the North Dublin Union, and so protest against any amalgamation, and if we were amalgamated with Collingwood or any other union very likely the same thing would occur that I apprehend will occur in country unions—by removing the facilities for the poor obtaining relief and medical aid further out of their reach than they are at present. I think the poor have rights as well as the rich.

16196 If the sick poor were left in the local hospitals in Collingwood and those places you would not see the same objection then, would you?—Yes; for the poor becoming destitute, say two or six miles to the West of Collingwood, it would be a long way to the North or South Dublin Union. I think the poor ought not to be put at a disadvantage beyond the present facilities which the law has given them.

16197 That would be an absolute bar to any action founded on our report?—I don't mean to say it should be a bar; but it is a matter that ought to be carefully considered before amalgamating the South Union. Its country districts the workhouses are fifteen miles distant from some portions of the unions.

16198 And forty, even?—Forty in some cases. I don't think it would be a reasonable or a humane thing to double the distance for persons obtaining relief in the workhouse or medical aid. I think the evidence I am given before this Commission up to the present does not sufficiently take into account the interests of the poor and the inconvenience which amalgamation would inflict on them.

16199 We have always had it put before us very strongly at every sitting the hardship of taking relief farther away from the poor?—And my opinion is that no advantage could arise to the South Union by amalgamating with any other union, and that we are quite large enough. We have 4,000 paupers in the union.

16200 You are the largest workhouse?—Yes, very large; and it is quite large enough for any single administrative body to manage with efficiency.

16201 Were you here this morning when Mr. O'Neill and Mr. Mooney gave their evidence?—I was not.

16202 The opinion was expressed by some of the witnesses that amalgamation would be desirable?—It would be very desirable in a pecuniary point of view, as far as they are concerned, but our rates are about 1½. lower than theirs. Of course we protest against being involved in a partnership of that sort.

16203 Mr. MURPHY.—One of the witnesses said he was disinherited because he had property in both unions. He was formerly chairman of the South Dublin Union?—I am an owner of property in both unions, but I represent the ratepayers here.

16204 I refer to a witness how you was examined as one of the County Council, and he pointed out he was disinherited because he was an owner of property in both unions?—So he might be. So far as I am concerned, and others, I am here to defend the interests of the South Dublin Union which I represent, and I say it would be outrageous to amalgamate us with a losing partnership such as the North Union would be. Moreover, the removal of workhouses to great distances and the removal of the destitute from the acquaintance and the relatives who frequently, according to my experience, have taken them out and procured them employment, seeking them to leave the workhouse, would I think, be weakened considerably by the removal or amalgamation of workhouses to a large extent.

16205 Do you mean that people who go into workhouses and who are classed as able-bodied, are visited by their friends while in the workhouse?—Yes.

16206 And employment provided for them?—By their friends outside, who make exertions to procure them employment and take them out, whereas if these were miles and miles distant between the friends' residences and the workhouses, that means of communication would be weakened.

16207 Do you think there is much of such intercommunication?—I am quite aware of it in Dublin.

16208 Are not the visits very largely to the sick as distinguished from the able-bodied?—Another point in relation to children—I think children with a parent, a mother, that the Guardians ought to have power to board them out in suitable cases only. For instance, if a widow has got two or three children brought to the workhouse, I think when those children are a year in the workhouse without anything being done by either the mother's friends or relatives, that the burden of those children and the mother is likely to be permanent, and the Guardians ought to have power to board them out and pay for them the same as they have power to board out the orphan children of the county, because when the mother is in the workhouse with two or three children of from two up to seven years of age, for a year she is likely to be a permanent occupant of the place, and the children ought to be placed then in the control of the Guardians, so as to do the best for them by placing them in beneficial situations, and a proper school, and letting them be merged in the general population when they come of age. I think the Guardians ought to be able to treat them as if they were orphan children when they would be a year under their care in a workhouse.

16209 CHAIRMAN.—You look at the matter as if the children were going to be left altogether in the workhouse. Is the workhouse a place where children could be reared to the best advantage?—What else can you do?

16210 Would you rather board them out?—Yes, I would rather board them out, except for the destruction which a general system of boarding out would effectuate upon parental responsibility.

16211 In any case in which obviously there was no sense of parental responsibility, would you object to boarding out such children?—I think we ought to maintain parental responsibility.

16212 You ought to act as if it did exist?—Decidedly.

16213 Even when you know it did not?—Decidedly. You are obliged to do it, because if you were to board out indiscriminately you would find parents who would go in to get rid of their children. That is the reason why I say a woman in the house with two or three children, when the children and the women become destitute for about a year, I would then transfer their child by law to the category of an orphan, and let the Guardians deal with it as an orphan, and shall would diminish considerably the numbers of children at present in the workhouses. In the South Dublin Union we have no children in the school of all except they have a parent in the house. All the orphans are boarded out and are looked after properly, and are merged in the general population, by their nurses adopting them or getting them employment when they come to sixteen years of age.

16214 You approve of the system as regards orphan destitute children?—I do, most decidedly. I know how effectually it has worked.

16215 Knowing how effective it is for good, would you not be in favour, if there was no great risk, after your experience, of giving a permissive power to Guardians, to try boarding out where the parental relations have not been operative?—I think any weakening of parental responsibility, and including parents to come into the workhouse for the purpose of visiting their children on the Guardians, should be provided for. We must steer between the rocks on both sides, and that is a rock.

16216 Would you be willing to have some experiments on the subject, and to give the Guardians a discretion so that they might try whether in practice those dangers would be as great?—I am afraid the Guardians would not exercise that discretion properly.

16217 When did you ever know them to be guilty of any indiscretion?—I think I would keep you until 5 o'clock to tell you the whole story. I am not prepared to trust the Guardians with that, because I know how compressible they are by influence. It is human nature.

Nov. 25, 1904.
Mr. John
Byrne.

16212. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Is not it human nature for the mother to retain her child as long as she possibly can?—In some cases.

16219. Would you not say, as a rule, except in the most degenerate class, and that is the class that you would want to take the children from?—Unfortunately, the workhouses contain the degenerate.

16220. You would not wish to leave the children with such mothers. Would not it be far better to take away the children from such?—Yes; and if the child was with her for a year I would then enable you to deal with it, irrespective of the mother.

16221. CHAIRMAN.—Don't you think that that year would inevitably be bad for the child?—The child would be in the workhouse school.

16222. Is that the best place for it to be?—I think as far as the North and South Dublin Union schools are concerned, they are not very bad places for children to be. Children are much better off there than in similar places outside. I am satisfied of that. Their literary education is well attended to.

16223. I am not speaking of your schools, of course, but taking workhouses all over the country, and taking the favorable opinion which you have expressed about boarding out children?—I am already of opinion that boarding out is the proper system except for understanding parental responsibility, and you must not do that with the lower classes.

16224. Suppose there is no parental sense at all. Suppose there is only a sort of responsibility such as some public people have?—I could not suppose that, because I know it is not so.

16225. Some of these fathers and mothers have no sense of responsibility at all?—Some, and that is the reason why, if I boarded out children, I would leave them out altogether, and would put them under a probation of a year.

16226. That would show altogether they are not fit Guardians for the children?—You are not going to take up all the children who have no fit guardians. You would want very large funds for that.

16227. Who come as a charge on the rates?—Some are not. As a matter of fact I have known several cases in which the South Dublin Guardians refused to give children to the mother, who was out in the city and earning her bread in some questionable way, and when they inquired and it was reported on by the relieving officer, the Guardians refused to give the children.

16228. That was because they knew the mother was leading a vicious life?—Yes.

16229. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—You would approve of backing up the action of the Guardians in such cases?—I did back them up always in such cases.

16231. You would not care to go a step further and make it a county charge for the sick?—I don't think we need go further than the union. It would be too large an area to control.

16232. The area you have at present for the asylum and the county infirmary, you would not care to make the cost of the sick a county charge?—No, because it would be most unfair.

16233. To whom?—To the unions that are at present enjoying low rates. The rates in Cabbage Union are low, in Rathdown they are low, and it would not be fair to put a charge on them other than they have to undergo by the existing law.

16234. You have not worked out what the result would be?—I believe the rates in Rathdown Union are something about 10d. in the £; in the South Union, 1s. 6d.; in the North Union, 2s. 6d.; and it would not be fair to go to Rathdown Union and say your rates must be increased rateably and amalgamated with the North Dublin Union.

16235. I am speaking of one class only, the sick?—I think the relief of the destitute poor is all we are to be called on to meet.

16236. At present the people in the extreme ends of the county are paying for a county infirmary in every county in Ireland?—It is no great hardship in Ireland.

16237. There is some?—It is very trifling, and they have always done it.

16238. For a certain time?—Yes, since a certain time; and then they have enjoyed immunity from those high rates consequent upon their local position, and consequent upon the law, and it would not be right now to make an inroad upon their resources by increasing their rates merely for the purpose of amalgamation, and squaring things, as it were, that should not be squared except with equity.

16239. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Therefore I take it your view is that the present area of charge for rating should be maintained?—I think union chargeability is fair and equitable, and should be maintained.

16240. And the area should be maintained as it is for all purposes?—Yes.

16241. CHAIRMAN.—There should be no change in the Poor Law as regards Dublin city?—I think not.

16242. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—In regard to the question of settlement, that does not apply to the city of Dublin. It would make no difference whether persons living on the south side of the Liffey came over to the north side?—No; that point does not apply to a town, but the rating point does. That is a very serious point.

16243. You look upon that as a startling blot?—Yes, as well as amalgamating two such pauper unions as the North and South Dublin Unions, which are so large at present, almost too large for good management.

16244. One of the witnesses told us there would be considerable economies effected if the union of the two did take place?—I doubt that.

16245. In the matter of management, printing, and several other matters, economies might be effected, and when all were put together perhaps the cost would not be much more to the South Union than at present?—I am not able to say that, because you would require a certain number of administrative officers, and you won't get them unless you pay them well. You could not give the management of two workhouses to one master, and, of course, the clerical staff should be considerably increased, and besides we would have to superannuate some two or three who might not be required, at very large sums.

16246. That would be a staggering charge?—I think the amalgamation of the Dublin unions would render the concern unworkable.

16247. If you take out certain classes whose removal you advocate, namely, to board out the children and send away the lunatics?—Through the children are boarded out they are under supervision. You must have relieving officers to inquire about their well-being, and sometimes full reports are made and visits paid.

16248. That has not anything to do with the responsibilities of the North and South Dublin Unions?—Yes; we have between 300 and 400 children boarded out, and suppose you were to double that, you could not supervise that with the same staff.

16249. You could get rid of a great number of the staff?—You could not.

16251. Suppose the 300 inmates in the two institutions were removed, would not that make room?—Yes.

16252. Would not the removal of the children make room?—If you show me how to take them away, I would be with you, but I see the greatest possible difficulty in removing one or the other to give the necessary room.

16253. If provision was made for the lunatics by the establishment of an auxiliary asylum, or the enlargement of existing asylums?—The raters are not prepared to face that. They are hardly able to bear the existing taxes.

16254. Suppose it would not cost any more or as much?—That supposition is so unlikely that I don't think it worth considering.

16255. It is not so unlikely at all if you go into the matter. The Guardians are not getting any per capita contribution for lunatics in the workhouses. They would get 25 a year for them if they put them in an auxiliary asylum, and they would get a contribution of £10 3s. a year in a district asylum?—The answer is this: the Guardians spend about 4s. a week at present upon the food of the lunatics. If they were in an equipped asylum, such as you have, it would cost more than 9s. for them.

16256. Not for food alone. You must make a fair comparison. The whole cost amounts to about 6s. a week. In the Omagh Asylum an inmate costs about £25 or £24 a year for maintenance and payment of officials.

aid for everything except repayment of loans?—Omagh is very low. How is it we pay so much in Dublin.

16257. The Tyrone Committee think Omagh too costly. The last report shows that the cost per inmate was between £23 and £24. If you had a contribution of £5 for each lunatic in an auxiliary asylum it would bring down the cost below what it is in the workhouse?—Then there are no buildings. You should erect them.

16258. Could you not use the buildings of some of your workhouses?—I don't see them in any such available state.

16259. Balrothery, for instance?—I don't know how many maniacs they have in that workhouse, but I don't think that Balrothery Workhouse would be able to accommodate the overflow of the North Union, or the overflow of the South Union.

16260. Would you not agree to transfer the lunatics suitable for these institutions?—We have 200 lunatics in the South Union, and we do the best we can for them.

16261. You may take very good care of them, but do you think it is a suitable place for them?—I think they are as well off, if not better, than if they were with my friend Conally Norman.

16262. Do you not think they would be better off if they were sent in the fresh country air?—Of course it all that could be accomplished, but it would take large sums of money to provide the buildings to carry it out. We may all know what is suitable and desirable, but we may not have the capacity to provide it.

16263. Still, would you see your way to make a change that would cost no more. Do you not think the lunatics would be better out of the workhouse than in it?—Show me that first, and I will give you my opinion.

16265. We have no warrant to go into that. We are inquiring only under the Poor Law, not under the medical charivari—I am very sorry, because I have some evidence on that point. The next point is the insane. I think when Guardians, such as those of the South Union, treat the harmless lunatics to the number of 200 in the workhouse and provide decent accommodation for them, then the Guardians ought to get the capitation grant without being enforced into providing expensively equipped lunatic asylums, which, according to my view, is only necessary, and the ratepayers should be called on to provide only for dangerous lunatics.

16266. We had the advantage of hearing three medical experts this afternoon?—I heard them with very great pleasure, but I do not agree with them, because I know as a matter of fact that there are a number of lunatics in the South Union Workhouse that are harmless, and that can be treated with moderate care and moderate ability. They are furnished with out-door recreation. They have land on which they can dig, and they have a garden in which they can cultivate flowers. In these 200 people we occasionally have, perhaps every three or four months one becomes unmanageable, and when that person becomes unmanageable, we get a form filled up and send him to Dr. Conally Norman. After a while they become partly cured. Sometimes they come back to us, and there is no necessity for their being sent again at all. So there are a large number of harmless lunatics that can be treated, and are treated, in the South Union Workhouse at the low cost of the general average cost of the workhouse, and the Guardians ought to get the capitation grant for them the same as the governors of the lunatic asylums.

16267. The 2s. or the 4s. 6d.—I think we should get the 4s. 6d. because when we provide that for them I think we are entitled to it, especially as the State regards lunatics as their special care. The State undertakes responsibility for their maintenance, and ought to give us the capitation grant. There is a question how far, in the case of a person not destitute, it would be desirable to introduce a system of payments or contributions in aid of the cost of treatment of the sick or insane in hospitals or other institutions. My opinion about that is this, that the Poor Law authorities should be only charged with the relief of the destitute, and that persons in a condition to provide themselves with medical aid or hospital accommodation, should provide it in hospitals where they take patients in for payment, and I don't think the Guardians ought to be called on to treat persons who are able to pay.

16268. That is as regards Dublin?—Yes, and as regards the country, too.

16269. Where there is only one hospital in the country and no other hospital. There are plenty of places where there is no hospital within reasonable distance?—I am aware of that; there are some places where there are no places but the county infirmary. I think the governors of the infirmary ought to be enabled to charge. I believe they are enabled to charge.

16270. As a matter of fact all the sick have to go to the union hospital?—Yes, but whether the county infirmary or the union hospital treats persons able to pay for maintenance, they should pay the full amount of maintenance—not only the cost of food, but the cost of management, the cost of doctors, and the cost of nursing, and so on; as, for instance, if a person able to pay were treated in our hospital, I would not only charge him 4s. a week for maintenance, but I would charge him 10s. a week for supervision, medicine, doctor, nursing, and so on, whatever a fair price would be. With regard to tramps, we have not much trouble with them in Dublin.

16271. There are a number of night refuges in Dublin?—Yes.

16272. They take away the tramp class from you very largely?—To a great extent. But I think, as a general rule, all over the country tramps ought to be treated with consideration and discrimination, because I hold that no man is a tramp from choice.

16273. Do you really think that?—I think as to a great many of the tramps that condition is forced on them. I think if the tramps were kindly treated, and their names and addresses taken—

16274. Addresses?—Their last address; and if that is taken by the workhouse authorities and reported to the police, and a supervision is kept over them, I think it would to a great extent curtail them and bring them more under control. I think they should not be allowed to go about the country without some account being taken of who they are, what they are, and where they came from.

16275. A passport?—A sort of passport.

Mr. RICHARD ROONEY examined.

16276. CHAIRMAN.—The Guardians of the Balrothery Union are not in favour of any amalgamation as regards their union?—They are altogether against amalgamation. The first reason is on the score of economy. It would undoubtedly be an enormous increase in the rates in the Balrothery Union, where they would be amalgamated with the North Dublin Union, which, in our opinion, would be the only one they would be amalgamated with.

16277. This Commission would not dream of recommending amalgamation for any reason except economy combined with efficiency, but assuming there would be economy, what other objections do you see to amalgamation?—On the score of convenience, it would be rather inconvenient if the members of the Board of Guardians had to come to Dublin. That is not a very important point, but it is a very long distance. I have to come fifteen miles to Dublin, and other members have to come twenty-two miles to Dublin. There is no railway accommodation, and they could not attend so that they would be practically disfranchised if amalgamated with any of the Dublin unions.

16278. They would not be able to attend often?—They would not be able to attend as often.

16279. Mr. MUNDOGAN.—Where do your District Council meet?—At the workhouse.

16280. If the management continued as it is; if you discharged the duties of Guardians as you do now?—To discharge the duties of Guardians and amalgamate with Dublin, is that what you mean?

16281. Yes?—It would be objectionable on the score of economy.

16282. If you managed your own area as at present, and provided for the wants of the poor and sick?—If we did that how would amalgamation come in?

Mr. Richard
Kenny.

16282. It would not be amalgamation, but it would be the doing away of certain workhouses?—If you do away with our workhouses, which would be the necessity of holding meetings.

16284. You would have the sick to look after in your district hospital, and you would pay for the keep of others who are now in your workhouse in some other convenient place?—It would not be common sense to send the poor from our union to any of the Dublin unions.

16285. Suppose you had only a few, twenty-five or thirty, is it worth while to keep up a big institution for these?—We have more than that at present. We have 125 inmates in the house. About forty of these are sick, and at times we have got more. During February we had 130.

16286. You have twenty-five children there?—We have not. On the 15th of February we had only seventeen. I would be very glad to see all children removed from the workhouse.

16287. If the children were taken away out of the workhouse, also the inmates, you would not have very many except the sick and the aged and infirm. Now suppose the infirm were kept there for the accommodation of the sick in the neighbourhood, don't you think it would be useful if power were given to the Guardians to pay for the keep of the aged and infirm persons in some other institution, and not to have to keep up the expense of the establishment for the few that are there?—Probably it might be a good idea if we saw the thing would lead towards economy. We would not have any objection. For my part I don't see how it could be arranged, and I am sure the Guardians would strongly object to sending them, even on the score of economy, to the North Dublin Union, or to Dublin at all. Doughtyborough, of course, would be the next nearest. That is a very long distance away, too. Of course if it could be proved it would be a saving on the rates, and not a hardship on the poor, I for one would not be against it then.

16288. Witnesses say that the workhouse has a rather disagreeable name, and unless some change of that kind is made, how will you get rid of that idea, whereas if the workhouse as such were abolished, and nothing but the infirmary and district hospital kept in these places, it would get rid of that consideration?—I don't think there is that great objection so far as our union is concerned. It is principally a rural district, and principally the same class that frequents it—both hospital and the house—and I don't see that it would make any great difference. Of course I have heard Mr. Mooney's argument about that, and I agree with him as far as suggested unions are concerned. I don't think it would make much difference as regards care.

16289. You do think the children should be boarded out as soon as possible?—Certainly.

16290. And additional powers should be given to the Guardians?—Yes, some powers should be given to Guardians to board out particular children. We have in our union some children. They are illegitimate, and their mothers are in the house, and in some cases two or three of them belong to the same women; and as to these children, it is a notorious fact that all children reared in a workhouse, at least in our union, will grow up vicious and ill-conditioned members of the population; and on the other hand our experience of ten years—we have gone back so far—of boarding out children, is that not one of them has turned out in any way vicious so far as we could find. They have all turned out useful members of society; and another thing, those children who are reared in the house, it is impossible to keep them out of the house. In some cases we have had three generations reared in the house continuously. We have at present in the house some people whose grandfathers were reared in it. Unless something is done by which these children can be boarded out and kept away from the surroundings of the house, and the bad company—the principal danger is, on leaving school they are sent into the body of the house to mix with all sorts of bad characters, particularly the women, and the result is obviously, I take it, a vicious and bad one. If boarded out they would be all probability turn out useful members of society.

16291. You would be in favour of boarding out children?—Yes.

16292. And sending away the inmates. You have not many in the house?—That is a matter that I scarcely worth considering as far as this union is concerned.

16293. Would it not be better to have them in a place where they can be properly looked after?—It is a dangerous thing to give an opinion on. We have had experience of Portlaoine, and our union would be very likely about giving an opinion which would lead to building another institution. We suffered considerably by the building of Portlaoine, and I would not like to give an opinion. The Guardians have given an opinion that if such a thing is contemplated, some of the disused unions would be a good place to turn into an auxiliary asylum, say one for the whole province of Limerick.

16294. Your Guardians have decided that?—They have simply mentioned it, but the general opinion was it would be better to keep away from the question altogether if they could.

16295. They are afraid of lunatic asylums?—They are, very much. With regard to out-door relief, although I have not heard it mentioned here, I don't think it was touched on. One important point is I think the Guardians should have a greater discussion with regard to the distribution of out-door relief. We will say, for instance, at present as the law stands we can only give out-door relief to persons holding less than a quarter-acre of land. I believe that is a great hardship, and the Guardians in my union are also of that opinion. There are a great many cases, or at least a number of cases, of people holding one or two acres who are most deserving cases for out-door relief, but the Guardians are prevented from giving it to the law stands.

16296. Do you mean small farmers?—As I understand, that class of people holding two and three acres of land; they are labouring men, but when they grow old or stricken, they are not able to do anything. The land is absolutely worthless to them, and they make no money from it, and it is a great hardship to them not to be able to give them out-door relief.

16297. Are they tenants of labourers' cottages?—Yes, we have some very hard cases.

16298. Can you instance some?—I remember one time the tenant of a labourer's cottage. She was a widow. She had a family of seven children, and we could not give her out-door relief unless we put her out of the cottage. We did not do that, but through the help of some good people in the neighbourhood she was enabled to live along without out-door relief.

16299. Were they young children?—Yes; her husband died. It was an extremely hard case.

16300. She was not able to pay the rent?—She did pay the rent. Her children after a few years became useful to her and able to help her. The neighbour helped her in the meantime. That is how it was. She was a good woman, and she was able to make a little roaring fire, and so on. We are also precluded from giving relief to a widow with one child. We can only give it to a widow with two children. That has been proved to be a great hardship in some cases. The Guardians should have a discretionary power to give it in deserving cases, even to those who have only one child. It has been found a great hardship in many cases.

Mr. THOMAS CLARKE, J.P., examined

Clarke.

16301. CHAIRMAN:—You represent the Rathdown Union?—Yes; and I am Chairman of the Urban District Council of Blackrock, and I represent the Council here as a delegate. With regard to the location of Rathdown, as you are aware, it is so situated that I think it would be impossible to do without the workhouse at Loughlinstown, which serves five urban districts, Blackrock, Kingstown, Dalkey, Killiney and Ballybrack, and Bray, as well as two Rural District Councils, and which extends from the Co. Wicklow down to past Greystones, in the Co. Wicklow; so I think that this settles the question of doing away with the workhouse at Loughlinstown, the extent is so great.

16302. It is a very populous district?—Yes.

16303. Is there any hospital in the whole of that district except St. Michael's Hospital at Kingstown and the urban hospital?—And a small hospital at Monkstown, but there is no other hospital.

16304. So that the large towns of Bray and Blackrock have no hospital?—Except the Kingstown one; but St. Michael's is not available for the destitute poor who are going to be ill for any length of time. In dealing with the hospital question—I intended dealing with the out-door relief question first, but as I mentioned the hospital question I might as well refer to it now—we tried some time ago to get the hospital at Rathdown made a district hospital, because we find there is the greatest possible prejudice among the poor to send themselves to a workhouse hospital, and that the poor strongly object to go into these hospitals at all, because they think they are branded as paupers when they do go; and there is no provision made for them. They must wear the proper garb, and the decent people feel it very degrading to have to submit to that. But it was mentioned here to-day by several witnesses, I think very properly, that there should be a large disease hospital apart entirely from the workhouse. I entirely approve of that. As long as it is part and parcel of the workhouse some of the poor would almost go on the road before going into it. That is my idea in dealing with this hospital question. With regard to out-door relief, we are rather peculiarly circumstanced, having so many large towns in the district.

16324. Dr. M'GROGAN.—What about the apoplexy of St. Michael's and Monkstown—how are they supported?—By public subscription.

16325. They get no relief from the rates?—No; with the exception of a small grant we give from Blackrock Urban Council to St. Michael's, and £25 to Monkstown. That is the only thing from the rates that we subsidise.

16326. That is from Blackrock?—Yes.

16327. How much does Kingstown give?—I understand it gives a similar amount. The other urban districts contribute nothing.

16328. Perhaps they secure no benefit?—They receive equally in proportion. Recently Rathdown No. 1 Urban District Council made a contribution of £25. They were afraid it would not be approved of by the Local Government Board, but it has been sanctioned, and they have contributed £25. But the question of out-door relief is a rather serious one in our district, as there is such a number of poor, and some of them have little homes that they might not enter the workhouse at all, if this system of out-door relief could be extended and judiciously administered; and I would be greatly in favour of out-door relief.

16329. CHAIRMAN.—What class have you in your mind as being proper objects of this out-door relief?—In some cases a poor widow with a couple of children.

16330. She is eligible at present?—Yes; but it is given in such a way that it is perfectly useless to these people. The relieving officer must only give relief in kind. Where is the rent to come from.

16331. That is not the law. The Guardians can give it in cash?—They never do it in the Rathdown Union.

16332. That is in their discretion?—It is given in kind, and every deponent I sign as chairman of the Board is always in kind, but never in cash.

16333. You can give it in cash if you like?—If that can be extended it would be a very great advantage. There was a reference to where a poor woman has one child only. That is a very great hardship, because if the child is a mere baby, three or four months old, the poor woman cannot earn her bread, and if we insist for it might prevent her from going into the workhouse.

16334. These are cases in which there is absolute destitution, because there is a widow without support?—Yes.

16335. Are there any other classes?—There are those deserving old people, men and women, perhaps if their family have grown up, in many cases they won't contribute to their support. We have had several instances of that kind, of perhaps nephews and nieces, if they had no children. Instead of sending those decent old people into the workhouse, I consider the correct thing would be, if it could be arranged, to give them what they would cost in the workhouse, &c. for this old person, to board them with the family, and make them happy in their own little homes; whereas if they go to the workhouse it is mere or less of a prison. I had three cases of that kind where a benevolent lady in the district asked me to interest myself. She agreed to pay the rent of these three cases, who were taken out of the workhouse, and lived comfortably and happy. All they got out of the rates was £s. 6d. a person. These are cases in which out-door relief, to a judicious extent, would go a long way to keep these people without having to go into the workhouse.

16336. You would put in poverty instead of destitution as the test?—Yes; old age and poverty. There was another matter, about a sanatorium for consumptives, that has been mentioned. I think of all the things that cry out for redress in this country at present, nothing is so badly required as a sanatorium for consumptives. In this country, as you are aware from statistics, we lose from 12,000 to 15,000 per annum between the ages of fifteen and twenty-five, and there is no place to treat those people, with the result that they die like rats from the plague. Where one member of the family contracts the disease it spreads to all the others. We have had several cases in Blackrock in which these people have taken it in that way. It is a subject I have given a great deal of study to, particularly a system they have at Nordrach, in the Black Forest, where Dr. Walker, the famous authority, says 80 per cent. of these people, if taken in time, can be cured. Here we are losing—worse than the Poor Law—12,000 of our population, and there is no place at all for them to shelter in. I went down to Newcastle, and I spent a day there, where we got one of the wards at Loughlinstown made specially for the consumptives, and the people at Newcastle told me they had always from 50 to 70 applicants on their books, and they could not accommodate them. The disease then got rooted into the system of these people, and the result was they died. If that could be brought to a happy conclusion, to have a sanatorium for the very poor in this Co. Dublin. There is nothing we want worse. The district hospital I have dealt with. Dealing with this question of children of vicious parents, in the early part of the inquiry this morning people were under the impression there was no law to deal with that, but in reality we have put it into force in Rathdown for the last few years. Where the parents are bad characters we get the relieving officers to bring them up all over the district, and as soon as it is found out they are vicious, immoral, drunken people, we deal with them and remove the children from them, but as Mr. Byrne mentioned here, there should be some system where a poor woman goes in, her husband dies, perhaps he is killed by an accident and she is left in the workhouse, don't you think the proper thing to do in that case would be to send the children out to nurse, as the exact possibly get out of the house with them?—And also those girls who go to maternity wards—they must remain there; they won't be allowed out unless they take the child with them; there should be some means of dealing with these people. The child could be taken from them, and they could be allowed to support themselves. At present we have two people to support instead of one. Of course the argument against that would be, she might come back again in a similar condition.

16337. Do you think the more likely thing is that having had such a warning once she would be more careful?—That is my opinion, that it would not occur a second time.

16338. Mr. M'GROGAN.—I wish to add this supplementing my evidence, that the Guardians ought to be able to give out-door relief to persons who are not permanently disabled from labour by reason of bodily infirmity, as, for instance, I will give you a case: a poor man takes sick working. He goes into hospital with fever, and it is six or eight weeks, or perhaps ten, before he recovers from that fever. Meantime he is totally disabled from labour and his family are destitute, but we are not able to give that family any out-door relief, although if we were able to give them out-door relief for a few weeks until the man came out recovered in health and went to work again, we could prevent the home from being broken up, and retain the solidarity of the family. We should be able to give, in suitable cases, out-door relief to persons who are not permanently incapacitated from labour by reason of bodily infirmity.

16339. Mr. M'GROGAN (to Mr. Clarke).—With regard to the children of vicious parents, what do you do with them?—Board them out.

16340. Have you had any trouble with the parents going to the houses where these children were?—The only trouble was one woman came to my windows threatening to break the windows for taking the child. That was the only case.

16341. You had no trouble, by reason of the visits of parents, in the houses where these children were boarded?—No; we took care the mother did not discover where the children were placed.

16342. The fear has been expressed elsewhere that a parent may hunt up the child and annoy the foster parent?—No; we manage to send them to a place where the mother does not find out. I might say within the last five years there is, to my knowledge, a great improvement in the Rathdown Union. Formerly it was not as well carried out, but since the advent of the nurse to the workhouse I consider there are fewer establishments better managed, and I think the hospital portion, which you have seen lately when through it, would compare favourably with any hospital in the city of Dublin.

16334 CHAIRMAN.—All connected with your hospital, not forgetting the doctor, deserve the highest praise!—Yes, the highest praise.

Mr. A. K.
O'Farrell.

Mr. A. K. O'FARRELL examined.

16335 CHAIRMAN.—You agree with what Mr. Clarke has stated?—Yes, with everything he has stated. First of all, there is no necessity for amalgamating Rathdown Union with any other. With regard to the classes that might be treated outside of unions in other places, I think that, with regard to consumptives, there is plenty of room for that, but I am entirely opposed to boarding out insane people. I cannot see that any good will come of it. There are about fifteen insane males and twenty-five insane females in Rathdown. Several of these are epileptic. No person would care to take charge of them; they are all of such a class that there is no chance of them becoming any better. With regard to the hospitals, I think it would be just as well if the fever hospital could be turned into a district hospital. It could be easily managed at Rathdown to isolate the hospital from the establishment.

16336 Would you put fever into a new building? No, I would have it in the building it was always in; but a non-contagious district hospital might be created for Rathdown No. 1.

16337 In Broy?—No, towards Dondrum I think would be better. It might not be a very large one. There might be a better arrangement, but I think that would suit admirably, because there was a movement on behalf of Blackrock to amalgamate with us in establishing a hospital of that sort. We could not see our way at the time to go into that, but I think it very desirable that it should be done, and I agree with what Mr. Mooney was saying here to-day about the management of these hospitals—they might be managed by representation or getting the local bodies together.

16338 By a joint committee?—A joint committee.

I think it would be very advantageous, and beside I had an idea in my mind—I don't know whether it is worth talking about—perhaps they might be induced to contribute to the hospitals, and paying patients might be taken in at a reduced rate, not paying as much as in ordinary hospitals. I think there is nothing else to deal with except the tramps. I think the tramps should be registered. I think they are, to a very great extent, registered already, but there should be a thorough system of registration as regards the tramps. Of course the tramps are the product of the workhouse. I saw a few days ago a grandfather, a son, and a grandchild, all tramps, and all had been brought up in the workhouse; and there are a great many of that class of people. They are the product of the workhouse. Undoubtedly it is very difficult to know how to deal with them. I think by the judicious housing out of children the tramp nuisance will be, to a great extent, abolished in time, but of course at the present time some attempt ought to be made to deal with the younger portion of the present tramps at all costs; and I can see nothing but getting farms for them—waste ground or bog—and employing them on it, and letting them stay long enough to see if they could be induced to get industrious habits, and if they did not, certainly I would deal drastically with them as criminals.

16339 Mr. MURKIN.—You would approve of the establishment of a farm colony for them?—Certainly, I would be in favour of that. It is time to get rid of the tramp nuisance. Last week there were forty-four tramps in the Rathdown Union. It seems to be a happy hunting ground for them, though they are not ever kindly treated.

The Sitting was adjourned.

THIRTY-THIRD PUBLIC SITTING.—WEDNESDAY, MARCH 23RD, 1904.

Mar. 23, 1904.

At the County Council Office, Dublin.

Present:—Mr. MICKS (Chairman), Mr. MURNAGHAN, and Dr. COLE BINGHAM.

Rev. J. C. DOWSE examined.

Rev. J. C. DOWSE.

16338. CHAIRMAN.—You are incumbent of Christ Church, Leeson Park?—Yes.

16339. There are some matters you wish to bring before us about the Protestant children in the North Dublin Union?—In the North and South Dublin Unions. In the South Dublin Union there are on an average eight Protestant children provided with a Protestant teacher at school within the walls of the workhouse. The objection to boarding out these children is that if they are removed then there is no Protestant school for children of the same-and-sons, being Protestants; and also, frequently one or other of the parents of these children is in the house. In the North Dublin Union the Protestant children are all, to the number of about twelve, in Catholic schools.

Mr. GOGGIN.—No; eight.

Witness.—Here the children have a Protestant teacher, and are all taught in a schoolroom with Roman Catholic children. A Protestant paper woman sleeps in the room with them; they are, consequently, brought up in a Roman Catholic atmosphere.

16340. Have they a separate dormitory?—Yes. This being the condition of the children, I make the following suggestions: that a building be erected, in which the children of the North and South Dublin Unions should reside; that building situated in Castletown parish, and that the master of the parish, as at present, be chaplain to the children. The children resident in the new building should attend the National school in the district; that no distinctive dress should be worn; that the North and South Dublin Unions should, in due proportion, pay for the erection, equipment, and maintenance of the building, the salary of the chaplain, and the salary of competent persons to reside with and take care of the children.

16342. Does that include building?—I can give you the expense in connection with the paying off of the building and the maintenance of the children's board in various unions. Here is a union in Blackfield, where there are two scattered homes built. The average number of children is six, and the cost per head is £1.10.2. I am not perfectly certain whether that includes the paying off of the building or not. Here is Blackburn, where there are four scattered homes accommodating from fourteen to fifteen children each, and the cost is 10s. 2½d. a head. Of this sum 2s. 2½d. is expended on the equipment of the room so that, I should say, the average, if you diminished the building expense, would be somewhere between 7s. and 8s. per head, and that would be very much cheaper apparently than the cost in a scattered home.

16343. Do you know much about the system of boarding out children?—I am only in favour of boarding out in a scattered form. I think it the second best.

16344. You are aware of the system adopted with respect of your church?—I am.

16345. Do you approve of that?—I approve of it, if the system of inspection is rigid and frequent, and if it is not, I do not approve of it. With regard to the Poor Law, as far as I can understand, I don't think we have as full sufficient inspection, and of course the objections I give here would remain even if that were perfect, which I don't think it is, and I think money times those poor children come to the wall entirely owing to their foster parents.

16346. Do you mean that about the Protestant orphans?—No, but sometimes, of course, there are bad foster parents.

16347. Do you find the results in that case are disappointing?—Not entirely disappointing—in some cases they are—but they are under the direct inspection of the clergyman of the parish, and also of our paid inspector.

16348. Is the result, in your opinion, on the whole as regards the boarding out of these Protestant orphans, satisfactory or unsatisfactory?—I think it is satisfactory on the whole, owing to that very rigid system of inspection.

16349. Are their reports from the clergyman of the parish?—They are good; they report regularly to the Society's committee.

16350. Quarterly, perhaps?—I don't know.

16351. Is it a regular report or a report when there is something wrong?—It is a periodical report they give to the committee, but that report is very often satisfactory.

16352. What do you assume to be the inspection at present as regards children in unions who are boarded out?—The inspection, I think, officially would only be about once a year of these boarded-out children.

16353. From the union?—Yes.

16354. How do you come to that opinion?—I have heard so. I don't know absolutely, because I am not a member of any Board. It may be more frequent, but I understand there are only two lady inspectors.

16355. But as regards inspection by the local bodies themselves, by ladies' committees?—There are hardly any committees appointed; there are only two, I understand, one in Belfast and one in Cork.

16356. That is an entire misconception, and then there are the reports of the relieving officers. They need to be rather preliminary some years ago, but now they are rather close?—If that is so it does away, to a large extent, with my objection with regard to inspection.

16357. But the inspection is every day getting briske?—I think it wants improvement.

16358. I am afraid I cannot accept your opinion on the matter, having regard to your idea that they are only inspected once a year by a lady inspector?—That was my idea, yes; that was wrong.

16359. If the children when boarded out could be inspected satisfactorily, would you be in favour of the institution-reared child or of the boarded-out child?—I would not be in favour of the institution-reared child, but then these scattered homes I don't think would go under the head of institutions, because they would be very much smaller and much more homely than the institutions.

16360. But still there would be no home life there?—I think there would; they would have their home-mother, as she is called, and they would live a perfectly natural life, as the other children would, and go to the district schools.

16361. Have you visited any of these scattered homes in England?—No; but I have read an exhaustive report with regard to them, and they seem very satisfactory.

16362. If the system of keeping the children in any institution or home is continued after this inquiry, what you would suggest would be that the Protestant children of both unions should be placed in one or two homes?—Yes.

16363. At a cheap rate, and you would anticipate no further expense?—No; I am only going, of course, on these figures, but that is what I believe. I see a large number of unions in England are adopting this plan; some thirty-six up to last year.

Mar. 28, 1904

Rev. J. C.
Downs.

15355. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—I don't suppose you have any experience of country workhouses or of children boarded in the country?—Practically, not.

15357. Because I may state to you as a fact that the charge of all denominations make it a point to have regular inspection of all the children boarded out in the various unions. I myself am a member of a Board of Guardians, and I know we have frequent communications from the clergymen, and we have also a monthly inspection from the relieving officer. We have a ladies' committee, of four ladies, who make it a point to go round at least once in three months and look after the children, see how they are clothed, and their general condition as to cleanliness, and so forth—These are all surprise visits.

15358. CHAIRMAN.—All the visits are surprise visits. It would be utterly impossible to make appointments for visits—Do you not find some difficulty in getting foster parents?

Mr. Charles
Eason.

15353. CHAIRMAN.—Will you kindly mention to us anything you wish to say. We did not get an abstract of your views—I appear specially, I may say, in connection with Lady Meath's offer of a home for some epileptics. I have been deputed by the Philanthropic Reform Association to attend to express their views on that matter. I don't know whether I need say much about the proposal. I think you know in outline what it is. Lady Meath is prepared to establish a home for a small number of inmates, say thirty, provided that arrangements can be made for the maintenance of the inmates after the home is established. Now up to the present, although this proposal has been before the public now for some years, we have not been able to make arrangements for the maintenance of the home after establishment, and in consequence the offer has not been accepted, has not become practical, and we trust that as the result of the inquiries of this Commission public opinion may be stirred on the matter, and may be inclined more favourably to it, so the importance of it, and in consequence perhaps of recommendations, which I hope you will make on the subject, a sufficient number of persons may come forward to establish a home on a voluntary basis. One of the recommendations that I would also make would be that of the Boards of Guardians have not power to establish such a home at the present time they should have such power in the future. It is especially the case of some epileptics that I am referring to, and I would just like to say a few words on the principle of the question, namely, that the same epileptics should be treated in a special institution. With regard to the reasons for that—of course I don't speak as a medical man or as an expert on the matter—I am only relying on the information which has come before us from the result of existing institutions. No doubt it is well-known to you that Lady Meath has established an institution on the lines I am describing, although, no doubt, on a much more elaborate scale in England, at Godalming. Then you doubtless know that there is in England the National Society for the Employment of Epileptics, which has established a home at Chalfont, which also maintains epileptics and gathers them from all parts of England; so does Lady Meath's home. You will see in the report (produced) a statement of the different counties from which the patients are drawn. No doubt you know in Germany the system has been established to a very large extent; the best known colony is at Bethel, but there are many other colonies; that is the colony that takes epileptics of all classes.

15354. The one referred to in the book "Colony of Mercy"?—Yes. There is also a book issued by the Charity Organisation Society dealing with these institutions, which gives an account up to the date of the publication of that book, in 1882. I should also like to put before the Commission the address which Lady Meath gave on the subject at a meeting of our Association at Kilbride; that contains the argument for the project, and points out that there is no such institution in Ireland, for some epileptics, if they become destitute, are obliged to go to the workhouse. Now the special treatment which they receive—

15355. Before you go to deal with that, do you know on what basis the English home was started. How did Lady Meath come to start that; in Ireland she offered to build, as I remember, and equip a home, provided she could get undertakings from certain numbers of Guardians to pay a definite sum for the people that might be maintained there?—I think it involves a little 15352. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Not generally. There is great competition in some places for children; in fact we have applications ahead of—Of course there may be competition.

15356. CHAIRMAN.—The children are useful; they get into good farm life, and get absorbed in the ordinary ranks of labourers?—I know that in what is said, but whether these children are treated as they ought to be.

15352. As regards institutions?—Yes.

more than that; you cannot tell exactly what the maintenance of the home will cost, and what Lady Meath means is that there will have to be a substantial committee formed, who will be willing to accept the financial responsibility, no doubt relying on the payments from the Boards of Guardians; but still could she had persons willing to say: "We will guarantee, if there is any deficiency, to make it good."

15355. She wrote to the Local Government Board, asking them to ascertain would the Guardians look favourably on the establishment of such a home?—I thought it was another benevolent lady.

15357. It was some anonymous lady, and I thought it was Lady Meath?—No, I know it was not; I saw the result of that.

15358. The Guardians were in the position that they could not undertake to say: "We will send inmates to an institution that is yet in the air; we can only do it as soon as it is formed," but the resolutions of a large number of Guardians were distinctly favourable to sending them; if the time arose, and the cost was not prohibitive, they would be very happy to do so?—I will come to that when I deal with the financial aspect of the question. But with regard to the establishment of these homes, in each case they were established by persons who were willing to take the responsibility. Both Lady Meath's home and the society's home at Chalfont receive patients from the Boards of Guardians, and I believe the charge is 12s. a week. The reason why such a home is necessary is that the best treatment such persons can receive requires suitable occupation and suitable means of recreation, just as it has been stated here with reference to the barracks. It is, therefore, obvious that in perhaps none of the workhouses in Ireland can anything like that proper treatment be given to them. I suppose the South Dublin Union is as favourably situated as any for doing it, and yet I think they are quite unable and don't pretend to give anything in the way of special occupation or recreation to the same epileptics. And then with the small number scattered over Ireland, it is quite impossible to ask the Boards individually to make special arrangements. The figures for the last Local Government report work out like this:—Taking males and females separately, there are only three unions that had more than 10; there are 60 out of 141 male in five unions, and 81 were scattered over the rest of the country in ones or twos. With females it is very much the same. There were only six unions in which there were over five, and the remainder, 123, were scattered in small numbers. Therefore, it is quite plain that the same epileptics cannot receive humane treatment in the unions at present. Now there is a tendency to look upon these cases as if they were hopeless, and I was very pleased to see that Dr. Norman, in his evidence yesterday, said that even as regards lunatics he did not look on any case as incurable. Seeing that there is such a mass of evidence that some epileptics can be benefited by special treatment, it is positively inhuman to put them in circumstances which must tend to aggravate the disease and cause them to drift into the fringe wards. I suppose one reason why the public mind is so little stirred on the matter is the small number, but after all that is no consolation to the individuals themselves.

15359. What I would say would be the hardship in the South Dublin Union, where they have done all they could as far as separation goes, is that they are not able, being a pauper institution, to provide all the amenities and occupations desirable for persons of that class?—The whole question of the transfer of the cases to the insane wards causes a very unpleasant impression, the feeling that the whole thing is in the power of one or two officials. Of course there are safeguards adopted that a person should not be sent to a lunatic asylum from outside, but once they are inside the power of officials is enormous, and we know from the proceedings how difficult it is to over-ride the decision of officials.

16370. Would you say it would be wise that any case of transfer from the ordinary healthy insane wards of the workhouse to the insane should be made formally on the certificate of doctors, as would be done outside?—I trust when the Commissioners have the matter before them they will carefully inquire what are the precautions taken to ensure that persons are properly admitted.

16371. I think you may assume that a person in a healthy ward, who was found to be insane according to the judgment of the medical officer of the workhouse would himself transfer?—I would like to know what record there is of the fact.

16372. Merely the change in the books—his own opinion?—Does that come distinctly before the Board of Guardians?

16373. No, the question of classification I don't think would?—I would suggest that such an important matter as interference with the liberty of the person should be done under very stringent regulations.

16374. And you think something like what is adopted outside should be adopted inside the workhouse?—I don't so. I now come to the Board of Guardians. I would like the Commission would be able to say something like this to them, first of all, to make it clearly known that it was legal for them to send a patient to any institution.

16375. That they have already been told by the Local Government Board?—But there were some doubts, and those have been dispelled.

16376. I was not aware there were any doubts?—Then if the Commission could express their opinion strongly that it would be desirable to have an institution established so that we might be able to appeal to the public and feel that we were backed up by the support of the Local Government Board, and then the Local Government Board should also inform the Guardians that they would sanction a payment, perhaps making a sum. We have received encouragement from the fact that the North Dublin Guardians definitely passed a resolution saying they would pay 7s. a week towards the maintenance of each patient, and we believe the South Dublin Union would do the same. They have enough between them to enclose the home in contemplation.

16377. What was the difficulty about supporting it?—That we have not found the voluntary persons willing to undertake the cost.

16378. What was the extent of the offer?—It depends on the cost of maintenance.

16379. Was the offer a building or a site?—The offer was to provide a house, whether by the building or the purchase of a house. I might mention that Lady Meath through her friends has been making inquiries in all directions for work a building, but up to the present the negotiations have all fallen through from one cause or another. Her wish is to present a suitable place to the responsible body or committees.

16380. Such, for instance, as a combination between the North and South Dublin Unions?—Yes, of course, if the unions would undertake to pay up any deficiency in the cost of the home.

16381. They would have power to take a present from Lady Meath of a building to be used for the same epileptic of their workhouse?—Yes.

16382. That would provide all the necessary machinery for carrying on the institution?—I am not authorised by Lady Meath to say how far that would carry out her ideas, but I am quite certain she would consider such a proposal.

16383. They have in their workhouses more than the number necessary?—If you take them as males and females, at that time there were thirty-two females and thirty-three males in the two Dublin unions; that would just cover it if they were all suitable, but they might not be all suitable cases.

16384. They are all classed as pure epileptic?—Yes; but at any rate, considering that other unions would, I think, undoubtedly, send them, there would be no difficulty in making up the thirty.

16385. Mr. MURPHY.—The difficulty would be the analysis of the institution as the cost per head would be higher?—It is an experiment. The idea was that if the thing was once proved a success, and that it could be associated at a reasonable cost; 7s. a week certainly would not cover the cost; the lowest estimate we ventured to put before any one is 11s. or 12s., and that really stops one from carrying it out; if 7s. a week would pay the cost there would be no difficulty in starting it.

16386. CHAIRMAN.—Have you got an estimate for the working of your home?—I will give you the figures of the National Society in England. What happened at Clifton?—In 1895, the average number was twenty-two, and the cost for each was £73; in 1896, the average number had risen to fifty-six, and the average cost dropped to £43; 1900, the average number, 124, and the cost £52. No doubt all these English institutions are established on a more expensive scale than would be necessary in this country, but still we would not like to hold out the hope that it would be done for such a small number without seeing our way for 11s. or 12s. a week, and what we thought was that the Government should be asked to contribute a sum of £6, the same as they do at present for lunatics in asylums; that would require an Act of Parliament, but if that were done—

16387. A grant on the part of the Treasury?—With reference to that, I would like to draw your attention to the fact that two Parliamentary Committees have recommended such a grant, on the Cottage Home Bill and the report on Local Taxation in Ireland. That committee went very closely into the question of what services should be national and what local, and having regard to the circumstances of Ireland, they recommended increased grants for the maintenance of the classes that are permanently sick and defective.

16388. Mr. MURPHY.—But the danger is that if you wait until you get the contribution from the Treasury you are keeping back the great reform that you think so necessary?—We don't want to wait. We urge the general public to come forward. We are not suggesting that we will wait for that.

16389. Could you not, in conjunction with Lady Meath, try and find out the probable cost per head of a number of inmates, say up to 100 or 150, so that that would be likely to cost, and then place that before the Guardians throughout the country to see will they help you?—That is, I think, what we are doing at the present time. We are trying to stir public opinion, and one of the objects of making this Commission to consider the matter was that we might have at our back a definite recommendation that such a scheme would have their approval. Of course it would have to be a home that was established under conditions approved of by the Local Government Board as to management.

16390. CHAIRMAN.—What would be considered a satisfactory arrangement by the donor?—If a voluntary committee would come forward and enter into the necessary financial obligations.

16391. Jointly and severally?—Yes, I don't want to minimize it at all.

16392. That would be rather difficult to float, would it not?—It would.

16393. Do you think it is a practical proposal?—We are going to try it.

16394. How does one come to bodies that really have the material. Many of these people have the same epileptic. There are plenty of cases epileptic outside that would be glad to come in, but it will cost more than at present. We cannot hold out any hope to Boards of Guardians that they will be able to do it for 7s.

16395. It was only an off-hand opinion, I am sure, passed round the table on a particular day?—We have not quite found that. We have been before the Guardians several times. At first they wanted to limit it to 50.

16396. Why should there be any committee between the local body and the insane people?—If we could stir up the local bodies to such an extent that they would take the home.

16397. Supposing you go to the South and North Unions, and say: "Gentlemen, we will give you a house if you will maintain it and fill it with some epileptics," do you think you would be refused?—Up to the present we really did think we would, but from what you say now—

16398. It is only my surmise. I would be inclined to do it myself. I don't think you will get a committee jointly and severally to come forward and take such a heavy responsibility?—It is because we have not succeeded in doing that that nothing further has been done.

16399. You were trying for something you would not be likely to get?—The cost of maintaining the inmates

Mr. Charles

would be reduced somewhat by the work they would be able to do, but that comes into the accounts both of Clonfert and those other places. With regard to the impossibility of getting voluntary assistance, it should be borne in mind it is voluntary persons who have established it in other countries, and I don't see why the charitable resources of Ireland—

16405. A definite but not an unlimited liability?—You could easily keep it within certain limits. You can always free yourself of liability by saying you would be obliged to close the home if you could not get the money.

16401. People don't like to do that?—I think that embraces all I wanted to say about the same epileptics at the present moment.

16408. You did not give us the numbers for the whole of Ireland?—141 males and 217 females.

16403. You may say, roughly, 400 people?—That was on the 31st of December, 1901. Now I would like to make a few remarks on the question of children, because this also has been a matter under the attention of our Association ever since its formation, and the first thing that occurs to us is that the present powers possessed by the Boards of Guardians have hardly been utilised as fully as they might have been, and we fancy that Acts of Parliament are passed and the Local Government Board send out circulars informing the Boards of Guardians. They do their duty no doubt in that way, but the circulars are put away and get forgotten, and they deal with cases afterwards, quite oblivious of the fact that they may deal with them otherwise. There was an Act in 1902 extending the terms of the Boarding-out Order, and I doubt very much whether the Boards of Guardians generally have realised the powers that give to them.

16404. My impression is that they do. It is a good many people's interest to remind them of it?—We notice that in the evidence given before this Commission over the country, statements are made which show—

16405. The lady inspectors are aware of it, and wherever they go they keep pumping it into the Guardians?—Yes, and of course it is a new Act too; but I would suggest that perhaps in a short time the Local Government Board would ask for a return of the number of children sent out under the extended clauses.

16406. You mean whose stay out has been extended?—No, but who have been sent out under the extension; the extension enabled them to deal with children with whom they formerly could not.

16407. I thought you were speaking of the extension of age, not the extension of powers?—Then the children can now be sent to any school certified by the Local Government Board. We think very little use has been made of that power, and that is due in some extent, we strongly believe, to the power of vested interests on the Boards; that is the great difficulty in all these changes. The main difficulty is to try and recon-

16408. Are you aware of many schools that could be certified in Ireland under that?—No; there are not many, but there are some cases in which the children could be sent, and we knew they have not been sent; and behind that we believe are largely the vested interests of the schoolmaster and chaplain in having a certain number of children still remaining in the workhouse, otherwise their services might be more or less dispensed with. We think the Boards of Guardians should be urged to make use of these establishments more.

16409. Rather than boarding out?—No, I don't want to put it rather than boarding out, for I think where boarding out is possible it is a very good system, but then safeguards must be adopted. Now I am quite aware that there are provisions made for the inspection of children, but still in discussing it with ordinary persons, we find that the great objection is that a number of people have it in their minds strongly that the children are, as a matter of fact, sometimes not properly looked after, and they invariably tell you they know of cases of boarding-out children who have not been properly looked after, and I believe the result of the inspection by the ladies appointed by the Local Government Board has shown already that in times past the inspection has not been adequate. I wish to give credit to the Board of Guardians and the Local Government Board for the fact that they are now trying to work up inspection to the proper standard. I noticed recently a correspondence with the Local Government Board in one union, which showed that the difficulty was to get ladies appointed, and the opinion of the Board of Guardians showed that they completely misunderstood the nature of the inspection required from the ladies. At Longhrea there was a Poor Law officer, and one of the Guardians, referring to the matter there, stated quite distinctly they would be willing to have it carried out, but could not get the inspection committees; therefore boarding out will always be insisted by such difficulties, and until those difficulties would be removed the Board of Guardians should in the meantime recognise that they have alternative methods of dealing with them.

16410. Would you like to see all the children removed from the workhouses?—I am quite sure that is not practical. There are temporary and permanent causes of poverty. It is not right if a power happens to be temporarily coming to the union that that person's child should be permanently taken and sent to an industrial school and boarded out. You must draw a distinction between temporary and permanent. Then, certainly, I would adopt the boarding out, as far as possible, but that it is not possible first of all, there are a number of children who are not sufficiently healthy to be boarded out, who require special care.

16411. You mean they should be sent to the hospital?—Well, that would require institution treatment of some sort, and a foster parent will only take a child that it likes, and they won't be willing to receive a child who is not physically strong enough to do ordinary work.

16412. They take them at a very early age?—Yes, but you have children ranging from one to fifteen. You have a child of eleven or twelve that becomes an orphan; you may find it very difficult to board that child out.

16413. You then would look forward to the workhouse being a necessary asylum for a certain number of children?—No, I think other institutions should, as far as possible, be utilised. Take that question as to the Act of 1899, Section 3 of the Poor Law Act. A child of a parent who is permanently bedridden or disabled, can, under the recent Act, be boarded out; but I would like a child who comes under the second section, the child of vicious parents. I would like that child to be boarded out, but I would also give the Guardians power to send that child to an industrial school. I would urge strongly that the Treasury grant should be given to children sent to the industrial school under this clause. I would say, with regard to the question of payments, wherever you have a matter that is the interest of the whole country and not of a particular locality, that should be a national charge by a sort of county rating, a national poor rate; that the children should be recognised as not liable to be paid for by the locality in which they happen to come into the hands of the Poor Law, but they are a national interest.

16415. You would be offering the homes on one side and nothing on the other. Would not that be giving encouragement to institutional life in opposition to home life?—I think not. I think the Guardians pay 2s. or 3s. for the boarding out of children. Now if they are sent to an industrial school they will have to pay 4s. or 5s.; they won't save anything by sending to an industrial school. But then there is no expense which will deal with all the cases. A child may be already of such an age with its vicious propensities that it ought to go to an industrial school. It is a mere accident that it comes into the hands of the State through the Poor Law instead of through the police, that it is sent to the workhouse. You cannot board out a child of twelve or thirteen; at least you will find it very difficult to get foster parents to take a child with perhaps a city taint upon it, that has contracted evil habits. These children require to be sent to such institutions on the same ground that they would be sent from the police court at the present time; but I would enlarge the opportunities for the Guardians to deal with the children as widely as possible, and throwing the onus on the Guardians to study the case, and consider what is best in each case, and throwing the onus upon the intelligent public to interest themselves in it, and see that the Guardians do their duty in these matters. The whole thing is one that depends largely on the co-operation of the benevolent public—greater co-operation than in the past between the voluntary and State agencies. Then I would allow children to be sent by Boards of Guardians, for unions to combine; even by Boards of Guardians, for unions to combine; supposing you were not able to carry out amalgamation, and the Guardians decided they ought to retain children in their schools, I don't see why children should not be brought together into one union and be paid for by the union that sends them.

Nov. 22, 1894.

Mr. Charles
Bacon.

15435. CHAIRMAN.—That is the system which exists at Gile and Tim?—Not necessarily. There are three things the Board of Guardians can do—they can establish a special place for children within their own control, as at Caffee; they can combine and establish an entire institution, but they can also send the children to one of the existing institutions, where they could undertake to look after the children better, on the same idea that is being thought of in connection with lunatics, viz., or those who are committing, and under the new arrangement there will be a proper provision made, say in one workhouse, and from the other workhouses children can be sent to that place, and the unions sending them would pay a contribution. The simple statement of the fact that there are thirty-five unions where the inmates are less than 100 shows that you cannot give special treatment for all classes in every workhouse, and when the benevolent public urge that special treatment should be given to those classes, they should recognize that there is no use suggesting a thing and then not according to the only method by which the proposal can be carried.

15437. Then you have the ordinary workhouse school, you have a school separate from the workhouse, as at Caffee, you have another school, such as Tim and Gile, and have you a fourth school?—No; there would be very great practical difficulties in carrying out amalgamation. I hope something will come of it, but what I want to suggest is, that in the meantime the Boards of Guardians could improve things by combining among themselves; the aged, and infirm, and chronic sick could be sent from one workhouse to another workhouse, where arrangements could definitely be made; if they did not see their way to amalgamation straight away, if such an interchange of the various classes could take place, it would lead to a considerable improvement in the treatment of the sick.

15438. We have three schools at present. You also refer to the certified school and the industrial school as regards permanent children. Is there any other idea you had as regards children?—I don't think there is anything else to suggest, but there is this to be said about children further, that is, that there should be some means of training these workhouse girls before they actually leave the workhouse. This would be in the nature of a certified school, a home where girls could be sent from the workhouse and receive an industrial training; it has been mentioned several times. Miss Barton mentioned it in her paper in connection with the Local Government Association, and some efforts have been made in Dublin recently to start such a home in which girls could receive training.

15439. Domestic servants, dressmakers?—I don't know what form of training they would adopt.

15442. Yes, at some of the schools I am aware they do. I cannot say whether it is universal. They take what steps they can to keep in touch with the children afterwards?—I think the general public don't understand the importance of trying to help the Guardians in that matter. I believe a great deal could be done if the Guardians would encourage the assistance of the public with regard to their work in various ways, and see to it that Miss Welpy mentioned, that there should be a committee of ladies, who would undertake to visit the girls in situations, and see that they are looked after. The Metropolitan Association for Befriending Young Servants does that work for England with good results. And another suggestion was that the inspectors under the Infants Life Protection Act do the same work in looking after the children.

15443. That might be a drawback. Supposing a girl was well-conducted, she would not be anxious to have that link with her past?—If it was a lady who visited her it would not be a link with the past. I quite agree with you that it is of the utmost importance to prevent.

15443. Mr. MURKIN.—I may remark that the evidence of witnesses as to the after-care of these girls has been altogether in favour of the boarding-out system. Girls raised in institutions have not turned out, it seems, so well as those who have been boarded out. I am very glad to hear that, because it confirms my opinion very much. I have one or two remarks to make on the general question of amalgamation. Amalgamation would tend, of course, to raise the question of out-door relief. It would be necessary, if unions were dissolved, to arrange some local management. The medical relief would still have to be administered locally through the dispensary doctor. Formerly there were dispensary committees on which persons other than members of the Board of Guardians used to act, and it would be a very valuable thing if those committees were restored.

15434. CHAIRMAN.—For poor relief purposes?—Yes; they could certainly extend it to the supervision of out-door relief. If increased powers were given for out-door relief in these districts, it should be granted, subject to the supervision of such a dispensary committee.

15435. What would you expect would be the effect on out-door relief expenditure by that?—I don't like myself the enlargement of out-door relief. I believe very strongly it should be restricted as much as possible, it is so liable to abuse.

15436. Do you think if you put a number of people to look after it they won't be interviewed very much by poor people, and the result be an increase?—Every system is liable to abuse, and mistakes, and errors. We are all human beings, and our officials are liable to error, and no possible change of system will eliminate that factor from the arrangements; and the way I would say is this, to try and educate the public; let them feel that unless they will take pains and trouble to sacrifice a little of their time in giving attention to these matters, you cannot maintain a high standard among the officials, the doctors, or anybody else. I would like to see the distribution of the relief tickets taken out of the hands of the licensed trader. The excuse is that nobody else can be got to trouble themselves about it. The whole difficulty is that respectable people won't take the trouble to distribute the tickets. Apart from that everybody would agree that it would be very much better that the licensed traders should have nothing to do with the distribution of relief tickets.

15437. Where they do act as distributors it is generally in the case of country stores, where the same man sells everything?—Even in country places I should hope there would be traders who are unconnected with the licensed trade. In a city there should be no difficulty whatever.

15438. Where the licensed trader happened to be a Guardian?—It is not restricted to Guardians.

15439. Wardens and Guardians now?—Is not the appointment of wardens in the hands of—15440. It is practically disorganised. Are you altogether on dispensary tickets?—At the present moment.

15441. Because that is outside our function?—It is only as part of the medical relief. When you consider the distribution of a workhouse you disorganise the present system. I was thinking partly of my own experience when I acted for a short time on a dispensary committee. I had a book of tickets, but practically no one came to me for them.

15442. You were in town?—I was in Dalkey, and there no doubt the local trader was a most respectable man, but still I think the system is objectionable. I am quite sure if other traders in the town would act on the dispensary committee and get the tickets, it would be very much better for the poor people.

15443. Mr. MURKIN.—Are you still on the question of out-door relief?—I don't think I have anything more to say. If out-door relief were granted locally, it is clear that a person who might be sent into the workhouse when the workhouse was on the spot would be given out-door relief if sending him to a workhouse meant sending him a great distance away, and if that were done I would suggest it should only be done under an efficient local committee, who would superintend the distribution and see that only suitable people got it.

15444. It is an economical method of giving help if properly safeguarded?—I believe it is almost impossible to safeguard it. Then with regard to tramps and persons of that character.

15445. CHAIRMAN.—You have seen the recent Bill?—I have heard of it, in the direction of establishing labour colonies. I would be inclined to suggest we should go slow in that matter, and rather wait behind England. I think the present powers in Ireland ought to be brought up to the English powers, the increased powers of detention, and I would hope that one of the results of this Commission would be that the Board of Guardians would in some cases see that they are not using their present powers with regard to tramps. The methods adopted vary very largely in different unions, and on that point I would like to make this suggestion, that a great mass of evidence is being taken, and if

Nov. 22, 1904.

Mr. Charles

that evidence is not published until the whole Inquiry closes we shall have volumes of such dimensions that nobody will wade through them; it would not only assist, but the evidence would be more readable in small volumes, and it would help the work of the Commission very much, because the evidence already taken would be a guide to other localities not yet visited, showing them what sort of questions they would have to face, and what subjects to consider. We ourselves, in endeavouring to stimulate public opinion, would be very much helped if this evidence was published, because to see the reports in the local papers is most difficult. I have got some myself with a great deal of trouble.

16435. Mr. MULLENBACH.—You think the vagrancy laws as they are at present in England would be sufficient for this country?—I don't say sufficient, but as regards tramps the question is so difficult, and the question of labour colonies so difficult, that I think we might wait a little until we saw what method was adopted in England, and then follow their example.

16437. The experiment has already been in existence in England for some time?—I have noticed that the London unions do combine to a certain extent for the able-bodied, but is there the same power in this country? We know that in England the Local Government Board can authorize a great deal more than they can here. They have greater power under General Orders in England than they have here. Here I don't suppose the two unions in Dublin could meet together in reference to the able-bodied without legislation.

16438. Supposing we have legislation in regard to these matters?—I would give power certainly to the unions to combine and treat the able-bodied any way they thought fit.

16439. CHAIRMAN.—You have noticed from some of the reports in the local papers that you have referred to what the evidence has been about tramps. There is a good deal of local anxiety to have the present system changed?—Yes; but then I have also noticed statements from persons that the present powers were not used.

16440. What would you call the present powers?—They appear to have considerable liberty, and there are differences as to the amount of labour and the hours of coming in. One union won't keep them in on Sunday, another won't take them in except on Saturday night.

16441. Any of these people can take their discharge on three hours' notice?—I would certainly suggest the English law should be adopted to give power to control that.

16442. There are a large number of people living in Ireland habitually going about from union to union, some on carts and some on foot?—The general public must remember this, that if we are going to put a greater control over these individuals, it must be a greater police control. I don't say that that is an objection, but we must recognize that they will be required to verify their statements, which will mean something like the German system, of a register pass to certify where they slept the last night, and unless they are able to account for themselves they must be made liable to police procedure. If we are to have classification according to merit, people will have to be prepared to verify their statements, and have their history recorded and brought to light. We know from the Charity Organisation how difficult it is, and how people resent anything like inquiry. But with regard to tramps, there is one question in connection with taking children from parents who are unfit to have control of them. I think the utmost caution should be exercised in any such procedure, both as regards the tramps and the mothers of illegitimate children in the workhouse. In the first place, an effort should be made to carry out the reforms urged by Mr. Rodden, of Belfast, to make the putative father liable as he is in England. That would prevent a number of cases coming on to the Poor Law at all, and as prevention is always better than cure, I think that measure should certainly be adopted.

16443. An assimilation of the bastardy law in both countries?—Yes; we recognize that there are exceedingly difficult questions, and at present we have not touched them at all, but we certainly think a strong effort should be made not to take the children from the mothers. I favour the idea of a mother of a first child being looked after, apart from the general inmates, by female assistants in homes; and you must remember, in your anxiety to look after the children, to be very careful not to increase the evil.

16444. Do you think it would be likely to cause more lapses?—There is great danger of it, undoubtedly.

16445. By treating first offenders?—I don't mean first offenders; but if the idea was that all the children were to be taken out of the workhouse and removed from their parents. At present I believe children are retained in the workhouse, and the mothers go out in the hope that they may live a more respectable life; well, I am not prepared to give an instance.

16446. It may be an individual case?—Then I would like to say a word on the question of the ratings. We all know that Dublin suffers from the absence of a law of settlement for Ireland. I am not suggesting that the English law of settlement should be adopted for Ireland, but I would like to recall the Commission to suggestions made something like thirty-five or forty years ago by the late Dr. Handcock in relation to settlement. His suggestion was that a limit of fourteen years—

16447. Was that by a pamphlet?—A paper before the Statistical Society, that fourteen years should be established as a complete basis of chargeability, and for shorter periods chargeability should be complete for a different union, without actually moving the person from one place to another, so as to get rid of the very great evil that Dublin suffers under from houses being sent, for instance, to Richmond Asylum, simply because they happen to become chargeable in Dublin; to a certain extent they get relief from the Treasury grant, but lunatic should be a national charge. If there were any idea of extending out-door relief, I favour going back to the system of electoral division rating for out-door relief purposes, because it is so essential that the representatives of the locality should be made to feel that if they are indulgent in granting out-door relief they will suffer themselves. In theory I would rather extend the area of chargeability, but if out-door relief was relaxed at all, they should go back to the former system. With regard to amalgamation in Dublin, I have not considered that specially, but I would rather like to see it if it was the opinion of the Local Government Board that it would lead to greater efficiency. There are certain directions in which it would; it would be a great thing to have the rates uniform, but I see very great difficulties in carrying it out.

16448. What difficulty, now, do you see in carrying it out?—The inmates of the two unions are a very large number to look after, and if you attempt to deal with all the cases you cannot have them all properly inquired into. Yesterday there was some question about making one workhouse for males and the other for females; that is the sort of thing to which I would not care to commit myself until you had the whole thing before you. I would have no objection to it as a sub-division, certainly—a sub-division, together with my family in both unions, our large business interests are, of course, in the North Dublin Union, but we have business premises also on the South side. I quite think the evils of a sort of competition among the unions relative to cessals and in-and-outs is a thing that should be checked, but I should have thought it could have been checked without amalgamation. I want to support the statement made by Mrs. Haas, that there should be a lady inspector under the Local Government Board.

Mrs. Haas.—Ours!

Witness.—You must begin with one, certainly; but considering that women and children form such a large element in the Poor Law, I do think that a lady inspector should be appointed, and also it should be introduced in the large workhouse hospitals, where you have several doctors, that one should be a lady doctor. And then there is another small matter; although it is a small matter it should not be overlooked. It was proposed by the Irish Workhouse Association that proposed by Mr. Wyndham, that is that the Boards of Guardians should have power to meet in conference and pay the expense of such conference, so that they might interchange ideas, and I am sure a great improvement might come from such an interchange.

Mr. T. C.
Harrington.

Mr. T. C. HARRINGTON, Barrister-at-Law, M.P., Ex-Lord Mayor of Dublin, examined.

I did not prepare any notes to send you, because I thought you might ask me questions. I really have not very much time to prepare notes, but I think I am conversant with most of the subjects likely to be touched on by your Inquiry.

16449. CHAIRMAN.—The main question that affects Dublin city is the question of how many men ought to be in the city and county?—I have prepared some figures on that, but if there are any questions that suggest themselves to you, I shall not in the least

Mar. 22, 1904.

Mr. T. C. Harrington.

plain of your asking me. I desire first to direct your attention to the necessity for the amalgamation of the two unions, or, at least, an assimilation of the rates of the whole district. In London, you are aware, since 1860 the rates of all the different unions have been amalgamated—they are pooled.

16480. To some extent, the metropolitan part—They are all pooled, and the excess in one district goes to the relief of the poorer district. The absence of that in Dublin causes some curious anomalies, and leads to bad administration between the unions, that is the absence of all care in the admission of persons to the unions. If they put the idea in their mind that they are treated better in the North than in the South Dublin Union, they leave the South Dublin Union and sleep one night on the north side, and then they are in the North Union.

16481. Or if they find the dietary a little monotonous in the North they will go to the South for change!—Yes. First of all they are a very undesirable class of persons in a union, and very unmanageable, and neither Board of Guardians really has any proper control or supervision over them; the moment they become troublesome they are back to the other union again. The strongest argument for amalgamation is on the question of the valuation of the unions. The poorer portion of the city is by far on the northern side; the valuation is going down every year; a number of houses have been re-valued; the valuation has been decreased, and a great deal of property on the northern side is going into tenements. The other side is not only a richer district as far as the city is concerned, but has a rich country district, the two wealthy townships of Penrude and Rathmines, and a large rural district, and the result is that the South Dublin Union has a total valuation of £792,045.

16482. It is up this year to £801,000?—I am taking last year; and the total valuation of the North Union is £406,033, so that you have a difference of practically 70 per cent. The difference between the actual inmates of the unions is only something like 21 per cent., whereas the difference between the valuations is 70 per cent.

16483. I suppose there is no doubt about it, the North supports some of the poor of the South, and the South some of the poor of the North?—Undoubtedly you cannot take the inmates as a test, but the unfairness of the present system is that you have so large a valuation contributing to the maintenance of a smaller proportion of the poor, and there is really no reason why a man living on the south side of the Liffey and one living on the north should be paying a different poor rate. Then, so far as the administrations of the unions are concerned, it would lead to great economy. In my judgment the amalgamation would be more economical than pooling rates. When they are both administered differently we have a much larger staff of officers than would be required if we had to administer them both together. I am strongly in favour of the idea of having one of the unions entirely for females. In the management of that union you should have a larger proportion of female Guardians. Naturally the public themselves would see the necessity of giving over the management of the union largely to the female Guardians, because they very rarely interfere with the male portion of the union; where they are Guardians their efforts are directed towards the women's portion of the union. If you have one of these unions devoted entirely to females, you could reduce the staff almost by 50 per cent.

16484. Considerably?—In each union you require a man to help the matron, and a great deal of it is the difficulty of keeping the inmates apart. Then at the same time this transition from one union to another would be stopped; then the cost of advertising, accounting, clerks, and all these would be largely cut, and in the management of the children it would lead to further economy.

16485. You would have two sets of books?—Yes, but we could be managed much cheaper than the other; you would only require one clerk to supervise the two accounts.

16486. You would have one set of clerk's books and two set of house books?—In the management of children it would also be very useful, because you could have all the boys of the two unions treated in one institution and all the girls in another institution, supposing that the treatment of children remained as it is. I am not quite in favour of the present system, the divided form of treating children. You should not have boarded-out children and a school in the workhouse at the same time for the children, either one or the other.

16487. On the question of amalgamation, are you in favour of amalgamation pure and simple?—I am in favour of amalgamation, pure and simple, and I consider it as absolutely necessary for proper uniformity of rating.

16488. You could not have uniformity of rating without amalgamation?—You could not under the present Act.

16489. But I mean under any circumstances?—You have it in London by means of pooling.

16490. You would only have two unions here to pool?—That is so.

16491. It would assume a different appearance here?

—I also believe, so far as the management of the unions is concerned, there should be some supervision by the local authority over the expenditure of the unions. I will take the case of the Corporation. We are presented by the two unions with a budget every year. We cannot say a word about it. For the south side the demand on the Corporation is £64,750, for the north side, £53,597; that just shows you immediately that we have a larger proportion of the poor on the north side than on the south, consequently the poor rate becomes higher on the north side. Why, if the proportion is larger and the proportion of population to contribute is smaller and poorer, why should it have the heavier burden; it is a perfect anomaly. We have no power in the Corporation of revising any one of those figures. I am a member of the North Dublin Union as well as of the Corporation, so I speak in the dual capacity. The Local Government Board can look into any question of extravagance, but the Corporation has to strike the rate; they have no discretion, and they cannot do as we do with our own committees. When we are presented by them with a demand, we often say: "We won't give you that money," or tell them to postpone the works for another year. We cannot do that in the case of the unions. And now the difficulty is the greater because they are not held responsible by the public for the expenditure. If the poor rate is larger nobody thinks of blaming the Board of Guardians for it, but they look to the Corporation.

16492. Don't they look on you as merely collectors?—Not only see we collectors now, but we give this sum to them the very moment they make the demand, and the result is the public look to us as the administrators of it, and all the criticism comes on us, some of which we deserve and some of which we do not.

16494. They have no townships, of course?—In that case you would have only the one union, but here the question would be subject to continual change if there was any question of the extension of boundaries, but in reality our townships are portions of the city; only the canal separates them, and if you had separate unions the poor belonging to Rathmines would be sure to be picked up within the municipal boundary.

16495. The reason they made the suggestion in Belfast is because the city is extended out into the country?—Yes, if Dublin was the same I would have the whole thing as one union. If you had Penrude and Rathmines portion of North Dublin County might well go into Ballythorn, and portion of South Dublin Rural District might very well go into Rathmines; but you should extend somewhat beyond the boundaries of the townships so as to include building ground. That is all I intended to say on the question of amalgamation.

16496. The only thing I did not quite see was how any arrangement could be made for even rating without amalgamation. That is still not quite clear to me. If you have two Boards of Guardians, one spending profusely and the other carefully, you will have a good deal of difficulty, and you will have people very free in incurring expenditures on one side, because they know it comes off the other side?—You can simplify it if you have an Act of Parliament under which the expenditure in both unions should be reviewed by the contributing authorities, and that they would treat the two unions alike.

16497. If you came to work it out in practice I must say I see tremendous difficulties?—Of course there are a great deal of difficulties. The only way I can suggest to you is the pooling of it, as is done by the Metropolitan Act.

16498. That would work out in South Dublin paying so much a year to North Dublin as a contribution-in-aid?—Yes.

16499. Then there would be no inducement to economy?—Of course that is the difficulty about it. There is no inducement to economy in London except the general supervision of the Local Government Board.

Mar. 25 1894.

Mr. T. G.
Harrington.

16470. They are powerless in matters of that sort—Amalgamation pure and simple I am in favour of, and a diminution of course in the governing bodies, because the governing bodies are so large you cannot amalgamate them. I would suggest to strike out half the representatives of each, the Board is too large.

16471. The new body ought not to be larger than either of the existing bodies—Certainly not. I was going to say a few words on the question of out-door relief. The Guardians of the North Dublin Union prepared a statement of their views on that subject.

16472. Your out-door relief is administered in kind?—Yes, and very largely from the union itself, except in the rural districts. I would be strongly in favour of more discretion to the Guardians in the distribution of out-door relief for purely temporary distress. A great deal of the pauperism in Dublin is produced by the breaking up of the homes during periods of want of employment, or in very harsh weather. This winter we had a large number of people who were out of work; many of the large factories in the city, through distress of trade, suspended portion of their hands. They worked the whole time in Dublin, but with a diminished staff, and the result was some of our greatest concerns reduced their hands, and that led to distress. We tried in the Corporation to meet it, to some extent, by opening up works we would have to do in the year as quickly as possible, but of course it is a bad system and liable to abuse; but in a case of that kind I would suggest the Guardians should have more power to give temporary relief, but that that relief should stop automatically after a certain period. I would say temporary relief for a month, and it should cease automatically at the end of the month, and come specially again under review, so that every case would have to come definitely before the Board for review.

16473. Mr. MURPHY.—That exists in practice already?—Which branch of it coming up for review?

16474. Yes!—I know it does; but I am speaking of an extension of the present system of temporary relief, that there should be a little luxury in its administration during certain periods.

16475. CHAIRMAN.—At all events it would come up in a more formal way?—The relieving officer would not have the power of giving it without a special renewal.

16476. Would you be afraid that that would be rather formal if it was explained, "This is only a renewal"?—I would have it stopped, and he should make a fresh application.

16477. All the relief is given in kind—you don't propose any change in that?—No. A question that has occupied a good deal of your time is the question of the treatment of harmless lunatics. I am strongly in favour of excluding them from the unions and having them treated elsewhere, but it is a question which has to be dealt with very carefully. If you send them into an asylum with the present enormous charges in the asylums, it becomes a frightful burden on the ratepayers, one that it would be utterly impossible to bear. You have to keep a larger staff in the asylum for violent lunatics than for harmless lunatics, of course. What I would suggest is that if they are to be treated in an asylum they should be treated in a separate building, with a largely diminished staff, and not placed on the same chargeability as the violent lunatics, or the burden would be very heavy. Then I think with reference to those that the Government grant in aid should be given in their case.

16478. This is 4s. instead of 2s.—Yes. If that were done, and they were treated separately, there would be great safety for the public. We have a special grievance in Dublin with reference to harmless lunatics. If they become violent in either of the unions, North or South, and they are transferred from the union to the asylum, they become then a charge upon the district where the union exists. If you take an inmate of the North Dublin Union—say he landed from Holyhead destitute, or was an imbecile sent into the North Dublin Union—because he is transferred from that to the asylum he is charged to the North Dublin Union. Well, that is all right; but if it was a person sent into the union, say from Drogheda, or to the South Dublin Union from Pembroke or Whitehall, or any of the districts outside, if that person is in the union and becomes insane in the union, and is transferred to the asylum, he is charged not to the Co. Dublin or the district he came from, but to the city of Dublin, because the union is structurally situated in the city; that is very unfair and oppressive in the working out. Then, of course, intimately associated with that is this question of settlement.

16479. You heard Mr. Eason's views?—I did.

16480. Do you think that plan of his would be effective?—I was rather taking notes during his evidence. The question of settlement affects several lunatics, lunatics and ordinary paupers. In Dublin many of those who are sent into unions are cases of girls who got into trouble in the country, come up to Dublin to one of the maternity hospitals, and won't go back to face their people. They go into the union; they are only a few days in Dublin, and they are sent direct; very often they get rid of them from the maternity hospital by getting a cab, paying for the cab, and sending the girl to the union. We had a case recently in one of the Dublin Unions where the lunatic was discharged as Curlew, and they very cleverly paid him fare to Dublin; the moment he landed in Dublin he was a violent lunatic. He was transferred to one of the unions, and we will have to pay for him for the rest of his life. It was a great piece of economy buying him the ticket. These things are very absurd, of course. In Netley Hospital after a soldier has been there for some time they send him across to Dublin, if he is an Irishman; the moment he lands on the North Wall he is taken to the North Dublin Union direct, and charged to the union, or he is sent to the asylum and charged to Dublin borough. We have had numbers of cases of that. We have made protests over and over again to the authorities, but there is no relief whatever; we get no contribution from them. Very often they take the precaution, if he is a lunatic, of allowing the police beforehand that he is a lunatic, and to look after him, and the police are there to take him to the asylum. If he is destitute or an imbecile the moment he lands he is brought in contact with policeman, and brought to the North Dublin Union, and we have to pay for him there. We have had cases where they have been sent direct from English unions to unions in Ireland. You are perfectly familiar with that, but I am speaking more of the pressure on us from cases outside. Owing to our position, all passengers are landed at the North Wall. A large prison is situated on the north side. We have a case in the union of a girl sent from Armagh. She was confined in Mountjoy Prison for some time, and got out of her mind. She was transferred immediately into the asylum. They are not contributing for her from Armagh. With reference to the children, the present manner of treating children in unions is very varied according to the unions, and very varied in the same union. In the North Dublin Union we have a special school with a large number of children in it at Croke's Auxiliary—that school is both for boys and girls—side by side with it you have a large school for boys only at Fellestown. One of the advantages of amalgamation would be that one of these schools might be for boys and another for girls exclusively; but what I object to is this, that you have got so many different systems—one set of children are boarded out, another set treated in the schools. Both plans have their merits and demerits. I think something should be done to compel our union to adopt either one or the other in the main. There would be a residue that may not be dealt with, but I would suggest they might be dealt with by arrangement between the different unions. Supposing in the North Dublin Union we adopted the boarding-out system only, we would have a certain number of children we could not board out, and, so far as their education is concerned, I would suggest that our union should make arrangements with another union for the education of these children. But when you have the two systems you have a large staff and big expense. If they are boarded out you have a staff superintending them, and they are not always too well supervised so far as the staff is concerned. If you maintain them in schools you want a large staff of teachers larger than you would require if there had been amalgamation, and large enough to accommodate several unions very often; if you could get the unions to adopt some one plan or the other. Then the difficulty is to discriminate between the children that are to be sent to one or sent to the other; it is done on very arbitrary lines sometimes, and one child may have a great advantage over the other in the system that is adopted. I think every union should have the right of sending to an industrial school a percentage of the children in its charge. I would not give them power to send all but I would give them power to send a percentage; that would create emulation among the children themselves to get out of the union and get to some better place, where they could get a better training, because it is generally conceded that in an industrial school they get some industrial employment

Nov. 23, 1906.

Mr. T. G. Harrington.

that they don't get in the unions. If that were held up to the children in the unions it would lead to better conduct and ambition among the children themselves. There would be some compensation to the Guardians for doing that by getting the Government grant in the industrial schools for these children as if sent in by the local authorities. I will take the case of Dublin children. During the three years I have been Lord Mayor I have taken a great interest in the admission of children to industrial schools. We have quite a large number of children. It costs us about £10,000 a year, the contribution we make to industrial schools from the city rates. We have sometimes thirty or forty children at the fortnightly meeting of the Finance Committee for admission to these schools. We have a special officer paid to inquire whether the facts submitted to us by the applicants are accurate. He has to go round and visit the people and their friends, and find out whether the statement given to us is true. We are very rigid, because a number of the people in Dublin who pay the rates are so poor that we are very particular about giving an advantage to one man—to relieve him of the expense of educating and supporting his children at the expense of men who are perhaps as poor as he is.

16481. Do these children go before a bench of magistrates?—The children go before a bench of magistrates, but the magistrates cannot admit them into any school without our order.

16482. You mean the magistrate makes an order to admit?—They do, but we look into it ourselves.

16483. If a magistrate were to make an order that a certain child found begging, for instance, should be placed in an industrial school, would his order have as much effect?—That is so; it would have no effect if we did not admit the child. He would have the power of sending him to a reformatory, where, as a matter of fact, we would have to pay more for him. Of course I am totally opposed to the system of sending children to reformatories, which is too freely indulged in by magistrates—children, even for asking for a few coppers.

16484. They would not go to a reformatory?—Children begging go to an industrial school, but if children give a little annoyance, are seen throwing a stone, for a very trivial offence magistrates send children to reformatories for five years, and they are lost for ever. If the boarding-out system is adopted by a union the great proportion of its children should be boarded out. If that left a small residue, that ought to be dealt with by some arrangement either with a National school or another union, or some other way by which these children would be dealt with without an expense staff for the case; keeping up a staff for two systems leads to a great amount of expense and no beneficial result, as far as I can see.

16485. What system do you really think the best?—The two of them have advantages. In the boarding-out case the children assimilate with the population, and are more free very often from the bias of the union, and in many cases they settle down in the homes of the people; they are adopted by the families who have them, and we have actually had cases in the North Dublin Union where they supported the family.

16486. Is your opinion in favour of the boarding out if you can get good homes?—Yes; and then I would give the Guardians a discretion to send the other children to schools, wherever they could be sent to schools.

16488. I am aware of an industrial school that raised a great many difficulties?—I can assure you that must have been sometime ago, because now they are in such a hurry. My complaint is that they are bribing people and offering rewards to them to send children. I have met cases where they offered him, for a hard to get children sent to them because they had not been able to keep up their average and were afraid of losing their certificate. I had to prohibit the sending of children to some of the schools on that account. In addition to that, I should suggest in the case of girls trained in unions, after they come to the period at which they cannot very well be kept there, the Guardians might have the power of sending them to learn the duties of domestic servants in any school that should have been established. I have been trying in the past year in Dublin to establish such a school, and I do hope we have succeeded. When a girl comes to fourteen the Guardians might lawfully get control of her for a year or two while she is learning domestic training; and in the case of a boy, they should have the power of paying a small fee and apprenticing him. The whole difficulty with children arises just at the time they come out of the unions. In the case of boys, only in very few unions have they got industrial training, and they are only able to take the lowest positions, and that is the very time at which these children ought to get some training and some chance of a start in life. In the case of girls, they see nothing in the union which would fit them for domestic work, and very often they don't get enough of it in the industrial schools. I think when they come to be discharged, if the unions of Ireland and the local authorities would combine to establish a place where servants could be trained, they would do a great service to the country; a great many of our girls pick up domestic duties very rapidly; it would do a great deal to lift the whole tone of the domestic classes if such a school were established. I am sure if the unions had the power to contribute they could do a great deal towards the establishment of such a home, and it would not be a dream upon any particular community.

16489. You, of course, have an intimate knowledge of other parts of Ireland as well, especially Kerry and West Cork, where there are very poor districts. In some parts of Ireland that we visited, where there were also poor districts, evidence was given to us about the great hardship on very poor unions, where perhaps 1d. in the £ produced only 250. Our attention was called to the impossibility of the ratepayers keeping the institutions, especially for the sick, in anything like the condition they ought to be in?—That is so, of course; a good deal of the expense of the union is really swallowed up by the officers. You have to pay a master—you must pay him a fair salary—and an unscrupulous Guardian of Cashmere, a good many years ago, made a calculation, and proved to the satisfaction of his Board that if they had lodged the inmates of the union at a local hotel they could have done it less expensively for the year.

16491. And these people were very urgent in their request that some reorganisation of the grant should be made?—Naturally. Take Dunshaughlin and these unions: the proportion of the poor to the population is very small, and the proportion of the poor to the valuation is still smaller, while in these poorer districts the rates are tremendously high, the valuation of the district is very small, and all the people are poor or live in a struggling condition; and really the line of separation between those who have to go into the unions and those who have to maintain them in the union is very slender.

16492. Do you think it would be fair to consider the question of reorganisation?—I think the whole system of union treatment ought to be an amalgamation of all the unions and a national rate, but subject to that the poorer districts should get some relief.

16493. If we could not go quite as far as a national rate, you would at all events go for some assistance towards the very poor unions out of the Government grant, or otherwise, that would enable them to keep their institutions at the minimum pitch of efficiency?—Certainly; our unions, so far as they are workhouses, ought to be abolished altogether, and kept only for the sick and infirm, and they ought to be in the poorer districts kept up as quiet as well as in the richer districts; you cannot do it now. The tramp question is a very difficult question. It varies in different portions of the country, and I don't think anybody could give you any advice on the question, except that you should keep a history of these tramps, and give the power to the unions to refuse a man who has been a persistent tramp and been in a great many institutions.

16494. In the North they go in for taking very sharp measures. They are rather disposed to call in the aid of the police?—It means that if these men are housed in the unions the public are safe, but if you refuse them admission to the unions, there is the danger to public property outside.

16495. The tendency in England seems to be to deprive these undesirable of the right of going about the country; that is a big question?—That is a big question if it came to be made a national question.

16496. You would rather reserve your opinion on that question until it was raised in some other place?—Yes.

16497. Dr. BOGGS.—There is the question in the North Dublin Union of "remand children"?—Yes, it is a very extraordinary question. Children either of 16518. CHAIRMAN.—You are the Chairman of the District Council of Colbridge No. 21—Yes, sir.

16519. We would be very glad to know the views of the Council on the question of the amalgamation of the Dublin Unions?—I think I might say the members of our Council, and of the Board of Guardians of Colbridge, are unanimously opposed to the amalgamation. I think you will see from the reports given by the Local Government Board Inspectors from time to time that they have often gone as far as to term Colbridge the model board of Ireland.

16520. I noticed seeing these reported?—There have been reports from time to time, and we have laid out considerable sums of money in improving our hospital and workhouses.

16521. I think you may take it that your workhouse is of a higher type of efficiency than a great many other workhouses in the country?—It is generally acknowledged to be well done.

16522. Partly, in some places, not in the body of the house, it is very bad; but the hospital is very nice?—And all those improvements done to the hospital have been paid for directly by the rates, and we think it would be certainly a great injustice to our ratepayers if other people are to reap the benefit of that by amalgamating us with any of the other unions, whose rates are, in some cases, more than double ours. It has been suggested that we have accommodation for more inmates. We have, and if you thought well of it, and gave us some extra area.

16523. From Kildare or Dublin?—From Dublin, I would suggest, or part of Meath. I have heard that they are thinking of doing away with Dunshaughlin. There is a district in the Co. Meath, about Dunboyne, that is very close to us. Colbridge is in Kildare, but it is just at the extreme edge of Kildare. Kildare is a very large county, and there are only three unions in it. It is very close on forty miles long.

16524. How far are you from Dunboyne?—About six miles from the village. Then there is a big tract of country from Dunboyne along by Maynooth, on towards Kildare; we go right away to Enfield. There is a big tract of Meath country there that if Dunshaughlin were done away with they would have to go to Trim, but it is quite within easy reach of Colbridge.

16525. If your hospital were maintained at Colbridge, would you still object to have the remainder of the workhouse closed?—We would object, very strongly.

16526. On the rating ground?—Primarily on the rating ground; and in addition to that, badly on the rating ground would not strike the Dublin unions. I think they would rather die of starvation. They would not mix with the class of people that are at the Dublin work, and I think they would rather die at the back of the ditch than go into them.

16527. You have about eighty infirm in your house?—Yes. Most of the infirm we have are of a poor class, well farmers.

16528. Labourers?—Labourers, and people of that sort, who have gone in through misfortune, not through any misconduct or anything of that sort.

16529. How far are you from Naas?—We are about twelve miles from Naas.

16530. That would be the natural place if there were amalgamation for the Kildare part of the union?—Yes.

16531. The village of Colbridge would be almost the centre. How much of Kildare goes beyond Colbridge?—It runs into Leixlip; that is about two miles nearer Dublin, along that one strip of District.

16532. Have you considered the question of the location, whether it would be desirable to remove them from your workhouse?—We are very free from them. I am glad to say, but whenever we do have them there they are always a great source of trouble to us. We would be very pleased to be rid of them.

16533. You think it is hardly a suitable place, a workhouse?—I don't think it is. They require too much extra attention, and if they don't get that they are not properly looked after.

16534. Have you many children in the workhouse?—We have no children in the workhouse. We have no difficulty whatever in boarding them out. We board them out extensively well. The children we board out have come back to us. The people that they are boarded with either adopt them or else they get situations for them. We have a ladies' visiting committee, and they take charge of those children if the people don't want to keep them, and they get situations for them. We have not had, in my recollection, a single case of a child coming back.

16535. You have twenty-five boarded out and only four or five in the workhouse?—They are there because their parents are there, and we cannot get them out of it.

16536. Do you happen to remember anything about these children that are there, what type they are. Are the parents temperately disposed, or are they chronic alcohol-drinkers?—The parents are there, I think, mostly from misbehaviour.

16537. Would you regard them as suitable people for the care of children?—I would not.

16538. Would you be in favour of any change in the law which would enable you to separate the parents and the children and board out the children?—I think it would be a great advantage if the Guardians could do that. There are five children in the place, and three of them are in charge of their mother, who is a very dissipated character.

16539. You have naturally a large number of tramps?—We have.

16540. Have you thought over any method by which the evil could be mitigated?—It occurred to me that a proper system of police supervision should be instituted over this class, and they should only be admitted on a ticket signed by the sergeant or head-constable of police, who should keep a register giving a full description of each such case. Particulars could be furnished to the county inspector each month, and from his office to the Local Government Board, or the police authorities, and by this means the whole number of what may be termed professional tramps could be identified in a short time.

16541. And registered?—Yes; and stringent measures taken that to dispose of them, getting rid of them perhaps by transferring them to some industrial institution, because we suffer principally from these professional tramps.

16542. They bring families round with them in many cases?—Yes, we have the same cases coming back week after week; they go to Naas, come to us, and then to Dunshaughlin and Balrothery, and back again.

16543. Mr. MURPHY.—Are they of both sexes?—Yes, they are.

16544. CHAIRMAN.—And some children?—Not often; there are sometimes children.

16545. We have seen a good many children in going around?—They don't come to our workhouse very much.

16546. I suppose you would have no hesitation in saying that those children ought to be removed from the charge of their parents?—Certainly; they are brought up to thrive from the time they are able to crawl about; they are living by it.

16547. That would relieve the workhouse of a very large number. Then you would have practically only the sick and aged and infirm?—We never do have any children.

16548. Except a few?—Very few.

16549. Do you keep a teacher?—We do.

16550. That you could dispense with if you were not obliged to make any provision for children?—I think it is a mistake having children kept in any workhouse.

16551. There is a difficulty about people who are destitute for short periods, people who are out of work for a short period, and have to get relief from the rates with their children. Have you thought of what you would do with the children in those cases?—In those cases we give them outdoor relief.

16552. They may not be eligible for that?—In any case, where they are eligible, that is the system we always adopt.

16553. For instance, an able-bodied man and his wife, with children depending on them, you could not give them outdoor relief?—No; but then they don't require it unless the man is laid up.

16554. If the man was out of employment?—There is plenty of employment about our district unless they are laid up or unwilling to work.

16555. You rather suffer in the other way, not enough workmen?—I would not say that. We have plenty of available labourers and plenty of employment for them, and most of our Guardians are scattered over the union, and whenever these cases crop up we have always somebody in attendance able to tell us the circumstances of it.

16556. Mr. MURPHY.—On the question of outdoor relief, have you any views to put forward. Would you care to have it extended in any way, or to have the charge brought back to divisional again instead of union rating?—We might be allowed more discretionary power.

16597. Many Guardians say that the wider area encourages extravagance!—I don't think it does in our district, I must say.

16598. Dr. BROOKS.—Regarding the treatment of the sick, you approve of the hospital being separated from the workhouse?—We don't have many people drifting from the hospital into the workhouse. People able to afford it, when they come into the hospital, if there was any means by which they could pay for the treatment they receive, they would be quite willing to do so.

16599. Would you approve of making provision for that class with pay wards?—I would make it more an infirmary than a workhouse hospital if we could.

16600. Is there any means of separating it from the workhouse?—They are fairly distinct as it is.

16601. Separate entrance and separate administration?—I would not be inclined to put them under a different administration.

16602. Keep the administration as it is?—I would.

16603. You state the poor of Colbridge would not care to come into a Dublin workhouse?—I don't think they would come in.

16604. Perhaps there might be a section of the poor who would not care to go into any workhouse?—Few of them care to go into it, till they can't help it.

16605. Even for treatment?—For treatment; with as they are using the Colbridge Hospital and Infirmary much more than they used to.

16606. CHAIRMAN.—It is a most useful hospital?—It is.

16607. Dr. BROOKS.—A nice operating room?—That was all built and paid for out of the rates.

16608. What you would like to see would be some provision for paying patients?—Yes, I would.

16609. You have not any available space that could be used in that way?—I don't think we have, unless we partitioned off portion of it.

CHAIRMAN.—That you could hardly do, having regard to the way it is used.

16610. Dr. BROOKS.—Have you any ideas on the treatment of consumptives?—I think it is a mistake having them mixed up with the ordinary people in the workhouse.

16611. Would the Guardians be willing to pay to a central institution for the treatment of consumptives?—I think a central institution would be a very excellent means of disposing of these cases.

16612. For the Co. Dublin?—I don't know that you want one for the Co. Dublin.

16613. CHAIRMAN.—For whatever area would produce a sufficient number of cases?—Yes; but in Dublin there are a lot of incurable hospital, independent of the workhouses, that these people drift into.

16614. Dr. BROOKS.—We are speaking of the early cases that might possibly be cured?—I think we would be quite willing to contribute to one if there was one for the Co. Dublin, if it was thought necessary. I don't if it would be necessary to have one for each county.

CHAIRMAN.—No, but Dublin County population is so large.

16615. Mr. MURPHY.—You say your Board of Guardians and yourself are opposed to any scheme of amalgamation?—We are.

16616. Do you think it is undesirable or proper to keep forty or fifty old men housed up for the winter in a stuffy room such as we saw at Colbridge?—I don't quite grasp your question.

16617. What place have you for these aged people from October until April except a room for them to remain huddled in all day, confined in a smoky atmosphere, without recreation or employment of any kind. Do you not think some change is needed in that respect?—I think it rather a mistake to try and make the accommodation for that class of people in workhouses too luxurious; if you do you will find the numbers increase very rapidly.

16618. It would not be luxury to have the people employed at some useful occupation, where their time would not be dragging as it is most in the day-room of a workhouse?—Most of the people we have are not fit for any employment.

16619. You have men there from fifty-five to sixty-five years of age?—Well, these men do all the work about the workhouse; on a fine day they work in the ground and garden.

16620. You have not very much land?—We have a goodish garden and a good bit of land at the back of the place.

16621. Do you not think it would be well if these poor people could be put on a large farm, where they could be occupied during the day?—I think you would have to have a good many labourers to work the farm. Most of the people we have are quite incapable of working.

16622. Men from fifty-five to sixty-five, of average bodily health, are not incapable of doing work?—We have very few of that class in Colbridge.

16623. CHAIRMAN.—You have a large number of the aged and infirm class?—We have, but they are just their labour.

16624. They seem to be able to do something. They would not be men who would be hired out for a day's wage?—Well, they do a good deal about the place there.

16625. Mr. MURPHY.—Don't you think it a dull monotonous existence for these men?—I am quite sure it is.

16626. Do you not think now that we are trying to bring about some reform it would be well to try to improve the condition of the aged and infirm?—I fail to see how you could suggest to improve them.

16627. Suppose we could take away all the children—as you have already properly done—as far as you can, from the Colbridge Workhouse, and board them out; supposing the inmates—you have not many—would be to a proper place for their keeping, you would have nobody then but the aged and infirm and the sick, retaining your good infirmary there. Could not some arrangement be made whereby the Guardians would be empowered to pay for the keep of these aged and infirm in some healthy place—some large colony or another, where they would have occupation and some little of the pleasures of life?

16628. CHAIRMAN.—Constant occupation!—That would be a sort of system of transportation.

16629. Mr. MURPHY.—Not necessarily. Colbridge might be selected as the place itself, if you could get land enough?—Nearly all those people who are in the Colbridge Workhouse are natives, and have their friends and relations in the district, and those people go to see them from time to time, and I think it would be a very great hardship on those infirm aged people to send them away to a different county where no one would know their names.

16630. Do you think the visits of friends, so few and far between, would compensate for the other advantages of health and air?—I don't say their own friends; but somebody from a parish poor over so a Sunday to the workhouse, and everybody knows what goes on about their homes, or late homes.

16631. Inquiries on the subject show that the visits are to the sick, but very rarely to the chronic inmates?—There are a great many visits to the inmates in the Colbridge Union.

16632. CHAIRMAN.—Chiefly to the sick, would you say?—No; I would say about equally.

Mr. WILLIAM ROBERT, R.P., examined.

Mr. William Robert.

16633. CHAIRMAN.—Mr. Walsh has just explained that you are all unanimous in thinking that no change ought to be made at Colbridge?—Yes; as far as I know we are all unanimous against amalgamation on several grounds.

16634. The only thing you have to say is that if some of the Co. Meath were thrown into you, you would not object?—We would not object.

16635. But you would object to be thrown into the Neas Union?—You may as well throw us into the Cork Union. Some of our union is twenty Irish miles from Neas.

16636. You yourself at Colbridge are twelve?—When I am in eighteen; the Colbridge Workhouse alone is twelve Irish miles.

16637. Where is your own residence?—Glenalla. It goes to Hollywood Rath, in the Co. Meath, and Keshide twenty-one Irish miles from Neas.

16638. What union does that place that is twenty-one miles from Neas belong to?—Colbridge Union.

16639. How far is the most remote part of the Colbridge Union from the Colbridge Workhouse?—It would be about ten Irish miles.

16606. What is the most distant part of your parish?
—Edridge, I think; that is on my side, the North-West side.

16607. That is the only change that you would look forward to if there were amalgamation, that change of going part of Donoughmore into yours. Is that the only conceivable change as far as you see?—I don't know that it is capable of very much more change; we keep our union very well up-to-date, do it better than many at least we have got credit for it. Keep our taxes down and our poor well looked after. Our rates are low.

16608. The hospital is very good, but do you think yourself that the able-bodied side of the house is all that might be desired. Do you go round it often?—
Not often; I went several times.

16609. I think if you were giving a close eye to it you would see a good many things that could be improved?—Indeed you could, and elsewhere as well as here; but it would not be judicious to improve it too much or you would have all the laborers of the county in it.

16610. Don't you think it would be an improvement to make them work more than they do, not to be sitting in large numbers in an overcrowded room?—There are no large numbers in it to start with.

16611. I beg your pardon?—Of able-bodied men.

16612. Of the class called aged and infirm, there are eighty?—Nine out of ten of those are not able to do anything but smile and work in the garden. There are some of them not able to get out of the cots where they sit, and others not able to get out of bed; that is my experience of them.

16613. They are not what you would call an able-bodied lot of young fellows, but they are men that some work can be got out of?—It would surprise you how little they do. There are no able-bodied men there fit to do anything only dodge about the garden and lead cabbages.

16614. What we felt in going round these institutions was that it was a very wretched thing to see a large number of men sitting round a fire and doing nothing all the day but that?—It is a wretched thing if they were able to do anything.

16615. They could do a good deal, and would be all the better of doing something?—Yes.

16616. Mr. MURPHY.—Many older men outside are at work?—Those are not able to work; if they are destitute, what can you do with them?

16617. CHAIRMAN.—Give them something to do?—If they are not able to do it?

16618. It is very difficult to do anything for them in the workhouse, but we have heard from a number of villages that if there were one institution for a county where the aged and infirm of a county could go, and they could be kept at such light work as they are able to do, it would be better for them and for everybody?—
I don't think it would; in fact we have no able-bodied men practically in our union except a tramp that will come in and go out again.

16619. Is not speaking of men in the pride of their youth and strength?—No; but an aged man of fifty-five or sixty-five, if in good health, would be able to work, but we have not them.

16620. They get stiffer every year sitting round the fire doing nothing?—They are not there.

16621. Then we were under a mistaken impression.
We thought we saw them?—They were not there, any able-bodied men.

16622. Not able-bodied, but able to do some work?—
I don't know what they could do except lead cabbages.

16623. Mr. MURPHY.—Look after cows, feed cattle, or do something useful?—I would not like to own the cattle they would be feeding; they would not feed much cattle, those lads. We have plenty of accommodation; we have more accommodation than we have people in.

16624. That is probably due to the management of the house?—In fact we never keep children there. We always board them out, and send them out to workmen and laborers that have a cow; and then there is a ladies' committee, who see the children are all well cared for, and sent to school, and cleanly dressed; and they are brought in a couple of times a year and inspected. There are plenty of applications for children.

16625. CHAIRMAN.—You board out all you can?—
Yes; we have only two children, and there is a schoolmaster.

16626. What do you say about boarding out the old fellows?—Well, unless you had a guarantee, it would be a case of getting rid of them.

16627. You would not approve of boarding them out with their relatives?—I am afraid you would have a good many on the books; every one would be looking for it.

16628. People who would never think of going on the poor rate would be desirous to get it?—Indeed they would, and to get it easy.

16629. Mr. MURPHY.—You did not say anything about the tramps?—I don't know very much what could be done with tramps. I heard you asking our vice-chairman about people suffering from phthisis or consumption, and what you would do with these, and with leprosy, and all that sort of thing. I would be for sending them to a central place—Donoughmore—where there is a beautiful little workhouse, in the Queen's County. It speaks more than all the evidence I could give of the effect of amalgamation. Some sixteen or eighteen years ago the Guardians were mad to get it dissolved, that it would be a great piece of economy.
They did get it dissolved, and what are the facts. It happens to be an unfortunate taxpayer in the district, and the taxes are increased. I pay more taxes because of the amalgamation with Roscrea Union, and some of the poor people have to go sixteen miles to hospital, whereas they could go five or six miles to Donoughmore, and the little union is lying derelict, a beautiful little union, one of the soundest in Ireland, that cost £25,000 or £40,000 to build. There is a union that could be had for a song. If that was taken up and used by several unions for consumptives, I think it would be a great benefit. It is in the midst of a fine country, with fresh air. I would not like to have consumptive people in a workhouse hospital; but with regard to amalgamation saving the rates, I think it would be a step in the wrong direction.

16630. Certainly, as regards the Colbride rate?—I regard this as a practical proof after eighteen years.

16631. Have you heard what the members of Rathdowney, and Borris, and other parts of Donoughmore Union think about amalgamation?—I know their opinion from what they tell me. They tell me it is a hard grievance, they are sorry for breaking up the union.

16632. When we were up in the North there was a union that had been broken up in the Co. Tyrone—Gortin—and there the people are very glad that it was broken up.

Mr. MURPHY.—Quite so; a great saving to the ratepayers of the late union and no complaint of hardships incurred.

16633. CHAIRMAN.—They took a better course at Gortin—they sold the building for stores for building material, and it was knocked down?—They did not sell in Donoughmore, for they were going to make an industrial school of it, but the scheme did not come off.

16634. It is in a most convenient situation?—Yes, within one and a half miles from Ballyreagh, and they cannot use it. If you have amalgamation, it means more staff to the place you amalgamate with,
and it means more officers.

16635. Mr. MURPHY.—Does it not mean lessening the staff?—What it means in this minute exemplified where you are. The county surveyor here had £500, now he has £1,000, and it is the same way with every other officer in the place. I certainly would board out the children; I would not have them reared up in the workhouse; there is an able school workhouse children.
The children in the Colbride Union are all absorbed into the population, and any farmer can get a chap here or there. Who would take a workhouse child?

16636. Why not follow the same course with the old men?—You cannot get old men to thrive on; they would die.

16637. The infirm that you have got there for three or four years, and that you never hope to get rid of, might it not be well to try a plan of boarding them out, or in a place with a large farm, where they would get some occupation and fresh air?—They would not be cared for; they are better cared for in an establishment like that, where they have a doctor to look after them, and a master to look after them; and old men, when they get beyond a certain age, require as much attention as a child to keep them cleanly.

16638. CHAIRMAN.—We don't see much of this care bestowed on them in the infirm wards—we see them too often dirty and neglected?—It is a wonder, and they having the nuns to care them; some screw loose; it is not that they have so much to do; you have a schoolmistress there for two children.

15653. I suppose the schoolmistress confines all her energies to the children. As regards the old men, I allude to the infirm, not to the sick in charge of nuns?

Mr. John Field.

Mr. JOHN FIELD, F.R.C.S., EXAMINED.

15655. CHAIRMAN.—I don't know that there is much, Mr. Field, that you can add to what your two colleagues have said; they have enlightened us considerably on the views of your Guardians—they are against amalgamation?—Yes, strenuously against amalgamation. We have only three unions in the county, and I think it would be a hardship on the sick poor to change any of the unions.

15656. To be moved to a distance like Naas?—It would be too far. We certainly would be inclined to take in more of the County Dublin than we have, because we have accommodation.

15657. And Meath?—We had the Brackenstown portion of it before, and we felt it a great inconvenience to lose it after putting up buildings.

15658. How much did you lose?—£2,000 or £10,000.

15659. Did you get any compensation?—No.

15660. No district in any other locality?—No; this runs very convenient to Colbridge; a portion of Dunboyne would be more suitable to come to Colbridge than to Trim or Navan, because it would be nearer.

15661. And good roads?—Good roads; Brackenstown is within three miles of Colbridge, and it is tedious to Trim.

15662. What union is that?—Dunshaughlin.

15663. How far is it from Dunshaughlin?—Ten miles. I would be for putting all the hospitals under the County Councils.

15664. You would make them district hospitals, and put them under the County Councils?—Yes; we are working that way with the infirmary in Kildare, where you have a certain number of County Councillors and a certain number of outside ratepayers on the committee.

15665. You meet at Kildare once a month?—Yes.

15666. And you would meet at Colbridge once a month for the Colbridge Hospital?—Yes.

15667. And in that way out it all, as far as management is concerned, from the workhouse?—Yes, I think it would be advisable. There are a good deal of people coming in who pay a little.

15668. Do you think all the rural workhouses in the country could be dealt with that way?—That would be my view. We spent a lot of money for the last eight or ten years; nearly up to £3,000.

15669. You spent a lot on your hospital?—And the house generally. We have a water supply and every accommodation necessary for a workhouse.

15670. Mr. MURKIN.—Is it not desirable to have the spending of public money in the hands of the representatives of those who contribute it?—Yes.

15671. And yet you would take it away from them?—No; the same people that are managing it at present would be managing it in the future.

15672. I thought you wanted it given to the County Council?—A portion of the County Council and a portion of outside ratepayers—you would have some members of the board on it and some outside members.

15673. You would be giving people a voice in the management of it that did not give anything to the start of it?—Are they not paying rates? I would make it a county charge. In Colbridge we pay for the Kildare Infirmary, and send nobody at all there.

15674. CHAIRMAN.—You think the Kildare and may return the compliment, and pay for Colbridge?—There are thirty beds at Kildare at present, and there is room for twenty more.

15675. And the Colbridge people have a good enough infirmary at home, and don't need to go to Kildare?—They don't need to go to Kildare; it is well equipped in every way.

15676. I suppose it is as good as Kildare Infirmary?—I think I might say it is better, for I attend Kildare. We have adopted the boarding-out system for a number of years. In Mr. Robert Kennedy's time it was commenced, and has continued ever since. We have two children at present. Certainly, the tramp class ought to be dealt with.

—I would send the children out to the National School, and have no schoolmistress.

15677. The board could do that?—I am not on the board now, at least, I am not one of the officers. Mr. Robert Kennedy was the Chairman, there for twenty years, and took a great interest in things.

15657. What would you do with them?—We have an enormous number of them there.

15658. What change would you make in the law?—What I suggest is that there should be a farm taken in some county for two or three counties.

15659. And they should be kept there?—Yes, and made work; and in the summer time, when the people would be busy, hire them out to the farmers; and I would make it an Imperial charge in the way for the greater portion of the tramps are three years, and in years' military men; they have been trained in nothing but smoking and drinking; they are a useless class, a terrible tax on the country, and most of the petitions and burials are caused by these men. We had two cases of burning in our district that tramps did, and we had to pay for them—they lit fires there, and the place took fire, and the newspapers' had to pay to them.

15660. Mr. MURKIN.—Is that statement of yours not an argument in favour of doing away with a great many of these workhouses—are not these workhouses an invitation for these people to come?—They are, more or less; but it is the law.

15661. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose you would change the law, and shut the workhouses against tramps, and, instead of that, send them to a colony?—Yes; I would give magistrates power to contract them for a certain limited time to this place. I would be against taking their children from them, unless you took them up themselves. If you took the children from them, so many would come in.

15662. You would not like to take the children unless you took the parents?—No.

15663. Mr. MURKIN.—You think the unmarried mothers care little for their children?—I don't think they do; they have them for begging purposes.

15664. CHAIRMAN.—And, then, if they do care for them, you think they don't treat them wisely or well?—No, they should not have control of them. I send them in the country about—they are a terrible tax on the people. Where they get a couple of women, they are inclined to levy blackmail on them; they won't take food, but money.

15665. Do you happen to meet many of this class in certain?—Yes.

15666. They don't go much to the workhouses—they camp out, and there is a considerable number of this class?—There are. We are central from Navan to Trim, and Dublin to Mullingar, and a lot come that way.

15667. Mr. MURKIN.—You could hardly do anything with them?—I would empower the magistrates to send them to a colony, for they are not alone a tax on the country, but a bad example to the others.

15668. If they don't go to the workhouse or do any illegal act, what could you do with them?

15669. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose they are vagabonds, without any lawful occupation?—Yes; they sell coal and sawpans, and force people to buy them, they buy them to get rid of them. I would be against any change in the law with regard to representation, but I would reduce the number of Guardians; the less Guardians you have the more business you get through. A small number of Guardians manage the place, but when there is an appointment, others come in, and manage over their heads. I would certainly deal with the tramp class very strongly. We could accommodate a great deal more people than we keep in Colbridge. There are only three unions in Kildare. A large portion of our county goes to Blaney which could be accommodated in Colbridge, because we have a railway from Maynooth on to Cabray, and could take in portion of Johnstown and Enfield, and we could take Trimbour from Naas; it is nearer to Colbridge than to Naas. Portion of the County Kildare in the Ballinglass Union could come into Naas; it is a kind of a scattered county.

16671. Colbridge is too near the border, and Ness is too near the border of Wicklow?—Yes, and you have Edenberry on the border again, and Athy runs very close to the Queen's County and Carlow; portion of the town of Athy is in the Queen's County; the Barrow divides the two. We protest very strongly against our union being done away with, because we spent a good deal of money on the union, not anticipating it would be done away with.

Mr. JAMES WALSH, J.P.

16672. I might make a remark I forgot to make before, I have been told that some of the Dublin unions are inclined to advocate that if Colbridge is kept in vogue, sending drafts of people there from other unions. I think it would be a great misfortune to us; they are not the class of people we want in a country district. I don't think they would improve the tone of our workhouse at all. Mr. Field has just said that a large portion of the County Meath might be amalgamated or joined on to Colbridge. There is also a big district of Clonsilla very much nearer than some of our present districts. If our area was extended, and we were left as we are, we would be extremely happy.

Nov. 22, 1894.

Mr. John Field.

Mr. JOHN FIELD.

We can take Clonsilla, Blanchardstown, Palmerstown, and Clonsilla, and we could take a large portion of the County Meath.

Mr. John Field.

Dr. J. C. McWALTER examined.

16673. CHAIRMAN.—You were kind enough to offer us some further evidence?—I just wish to say a few words about the amalgamation question. It seems to me that there are such a number of difficulties raised about the amalgamation of the two Dublin unions that it might be wise to see if any plan short of absolute amalgamation could be devised. I think, really, what is required is a uniform rate. I happen to be a member of both boards, and visit them both nearly every hour day, therefore, I have a fair idea how it would work if they were amalgamated. I don't think it would make for efficiency at all. My experience is, there is so much work to be done in each union that very much essential work is passed over; and, necessarily, if the two were joined, a large amount of work would be passed over. On the South side we have a weekly meeting of the Dispensary Committee and on the North side a monthly meeting, and although the number of persons is much the same, the drug bill on the South side is much smaller than on the North. There may be other reasons for that, but I think one reason is, it is known when the committee do meet every week, they look into these things more carefully than a committee meeting once a month.

16674. Do you mean to say you keep down the supply of drugs and instruments?—They are very carefully looked after, and a requisition is not made unless the demand is perfectly justified.

16675. Then the committee do reduce occasionally?—Yes; we never strike out a thing, but it is well known these things are looked into very carefully. The chairman is a rigid economist, and if a 1s. 6d. ink-bottle was wanted, he would see if he could not cut it down to 1s., and people who send in requisitions know the thing will be closely scrutinised. Lately, when we have not been looking into it so closely, having changed the day, we found the bill going up rapidly. The same thing must occur with regard to other articles.

16676. You would attribute a good deal of that efficient management to frequent and regular meetings of committees?—Yes.

16677. That would be rather an argument for the appointment of committees?—It would; but still, after all, the revision of committee work must come before the board.

16678. Do they ever interfere with committees?—They do; that is one of the constant grievances. If something unpopular is done at the committee the matter becomes known, the Guardians are whipped up, and the recommendation is defeated.

16679. That would be only a little temporary blessing?—No, it occurs very often. Guardians who attend committees every week, know if they do something unpopular it will be defeated, and, therefore, they are anxious the work should be done by the whole board.

16680. Do you think there would be a better chance then?—They know that once a thing is passed it is not so likely to be over-ruled.

16681. There are no motions to rescind?—There are, but persons are not anxious to go back on a resolution of the whole board. It seems to me in Dublin the demand is for a uniform rate.

Dr. J. C. McWalter.

16682. How would you work it so as to secure a uniform rate and at the same time maintain two unions?—Now, we have no power to strike a rate. We make a demand on the City Council for a certain sum, which, as a matter of fact, represents, it may be, 2s. 6d. in the £ on the North, and, perhaps, 1s. 6d. on the South; there seems to be no reason why that would not be spread uniformly over all; and then, in order to see what guarantee you would have for efficiency and economy, it should be pointed out separately that the sum which the North side received was more or less than 2s. 6d., and that kept constantly before the public and the Guardians and the Corporation would immediately draw their attention to the fact: "Either we have paid up a sum equivalent to 2s. 6d. on your valuation, now you require more than that," and they might have authority to require to get a very good reason before they would increase it. It seems to me, also, that certain departments might under such a scheme be united.

16683. How are you going to carry out the rating?—You have North Dublin with 3,000 people and South Dublin with 4,000 people in the house?—The South Dublin Board of Guardians demand from the Corporation £40,000, and the North Dublin demand £50,000. In making out the city rates they say: "We require £80,000 for poor rate, that means 1s. 11d. all round, you shall pay 1s. 11d. uniformly, everybody." I don't see that there is any insuperable objection to that method.

16684. I think you would find a good many objections raised?—Of course, interested persons; but take the Corporation as a whole.

16685. Take the ratepayers of whatever side might be injured, you find the expenditure of the North Union is so much and of the South Union so much; the people in the South Union find they have to pay very much more than the cost of their own union, and then they have no control nor no right to interfere with the spending of the money in the North?—My view is—you must point out to the persons the sum they are already getting.

16686. Point out to whom?—If the North Union began to get rather expensive, and demanded a sum from the Corporation which represented a higher rate.

16687. About how much a year do you spend in the North Union?—About 2s. 6d.

16688. How much a year altogether?—It is roughly about £50,000.

16689. And in the South how much is the rate and the amount?—The rate runs up to rather over £100,000; there is a charge from the County Council and the City Council and the proportion which the Local Government Board allows to; as a matter of fact the demand from the Corporation of Dublin is less from the South than from the North; that is because they have a richer area.

16690. You would only have uniform rates within the county borough—not for Rathmines and Pembroke?—I think that would meet the case of Dublin only, because the others are bound to be different as it is.

16691. Then union rating goes by the board there?—Well, we make a demand from that Council.

16692. You will have the people of the city of Dublin paying far more rates than the people in Rathmines and Pembroke?—Yes; but they do now.

16693. I am talking about the poor rate; you will have them paying the over-expenditure of the North, and Rathmines and Pembroke not contributing; is that what you propose?—No; I propose that that portion of the poor rate which is payable by the Corporation of Dublin at present shall be made a uniform rate on all the houses properly under the Corporation; you will have then the same rate—North and South—necessarily. Of course, as regards Pembroke and the like, they remain as they are. This is, to a certain extent, only part of the question, but it seems to me a simpler plan, and one more easily passed; if you try to reform everything there will be such a number of objections.

16694. We have not heard the objections you refer to?—The South Dublin Board are strongly against the whole thing.

16695. They are, on the rating question?—Yes; and the North Board are not altogether of the same mind, and the Pembroke people are inclined to object also; but if you confined it to the city of Dublin—

16696. You would reduce the area of objection?—Yes.

16697. Do you know the valuation of Dublin—of the part of the city that is on the North and on the South side?—Roughly, the North is about £460,000 and the South, £300,000.

16698. No; the county borough part?—On the North side it is £450,000, and on the South, £275,000.

16699. Your proposal would not give very much relief to the North?—If we had a uniform rate in Dublin—that is the principal thing outside the city—you are bound to be different; you cannot make it uniform. Mr. Harrington pointed out that it would be a good thing having one workhouse used for males and another for females; that suggests itself as a good thing, and it is the only good reason that can be suggested for amalgamation.

16700. Do you think that is a reason sufficiently strong to make you expect amalgamation?—I don't; I think it is impracticable on account of the number of people I hear objecting.

16701. We have not heard these objections in public, but you seem to be impressed by them yourself; what are they?—They are prejudices; nobody wants the North, and only a portion of the North wants the South.

16702. You are on the two bodies, and ought to give an unprejudiced opinion; what prejudices have the South against the North and the North against the South?—The difference between 2s. 6d. and 1s. 9d.

16703. That is money again?—It seems to me very strong when you have money and prejudice combined.

16704. Mr. MURKIN?—Your proposal does not get rid of the prejudice?—But still, after all, it would be a comparatively easy method. If the Corporation got it, who pay over the money, you can, to a certain extent, overlook these objections.

16705. The change you suggest is one rather from the point of view of a ratepayer than from the standpoint of a reformer. By amalgamation improvements might be effected?—That is so; but to my mind it is very doubtful if there would be any real sound advantage; when you take 4,000 in one workhouse and add them to 3,000 in another it makes an enormous body to deal with, whereas in two halves it is not properly dealt with.

16706. If we got rid of several of the classes—children and inmates—you would not have that overgrown institution?—My view is that it would be possible to combine those; you have only eleven or twelve Protestant children on the North, and on the South eight.

16707. CHAIRMAN.—That was suggested to us this morning by witnesses—I think that would be very desirable; then we have Protestant hospitals on both sides; these might be amalgamated, and by amalgamation you might have a certain amount of room; if we made an arrangement between the North and South that the Protestant male and female hospitals should be amalgamated and the Protestant children amalgamated we would have a certain amount of room, and if we got some of those country hospitals and sent our convalescences there I imagine it would be a great reform without much difficulty.

16708. Mr. MURKIN.—If the management could be placed under one body it seems to me it would be more simplified—I look on that as a very desirable question; it is, theoretically, simple; but the difficulty, as regards Dublin Poor Law, is that the Guardians don't take sufficient interest in the thing, and that is more likely to happen when you are dealing with small people than when you are dealing with 4,000; the buildings must remain, and when you have, necessarily, two separate establishments I don't think there is much gain in effectiveness.

16709. You could get rid of a good many of the officers?—That is a point I am very much inclined to doubt; with the exception of the clerk on each side, and assistant clerks, we pay comparatively small wages; we made several valuations attempts to raise the wages of our clerks, but the Local Government Board would not let us; there may be a nominal saving at one or three hundred a year.

16710. You could get rid of a good many of the male employees if you had women in one workhouse?—We would have a number of women employees there.

16711. Less than now, with the advantage of separation?—That is a strong point.

16712. Look at the amount of inspection that is required in such a place as Dublin?—That is a strong argument in favour of it, but whether it would be sufficient to overcome all the difficulties which certainly would be raised; my fear is that attempting to do so much we may not accomplish anything.

16713. There has not been any very strong expression of opinion against the change so far?—Of course if they have not come before you it would not be far a million it.

16714. In fact many witnesses who have expressed views are rather favourable to making the two unions one, having both under one management?—But when you have £20,000 on one side and £60,000 on the other that is a good deal of money to put into the hands of one board. If you do away with one clerk you can increase the salary of the other; you contemplate having two buildings two miles apart.

16715. That thing exists in Belfast; they have 4,000 inmates in the workhouse there, and there is no complication of the kind you fear there?—You propose to have 7,000 inmates.

16716. The proposal is to take away about 1,000 from the institutions—children and inmates?—I am not counting children; they are mostly in China row.

16717. You have 500 in the city workhouse?—But so many children as we could send out under the existing law we have sent out.

16718. But still there are a large number there yet?—There are; but to put all those practically under the one board I cannot but think that any little saving would be lost; I am unconvinced about making the expenditure when such large sums are involved. A workhouse up to 3,000 could be economically managed by a board, but 5,000 probably not.

16719. CHAIRMAN.—In practice it would not work out that one Board of Guardians would deal with 7,000; would it not be committed?—Committees don't seem to work so well.

16720. The admission must always be by a committee?—But we make a board of that; they have the powers of the board; the whole board can attend; it is not a named committee.

16721. Dr. BRUNN.—Could you not have the same thing?—We cannot get men to attend to office; we have sixty members in the North, and Mr. Cogan says about four is the average attendance at the Admission Board.

16722. Would the reduction in the number of Guardians increase the attendance; when there was a greater responsibility on them they might attend better?—Yes; but we cannot deal with an inmate number very well.

16723. But still it would not be in the one institution; in all probability you would have a lesser number to deal with in each institution?—But, after all, take it that a committee did the work, if you are dealing with 7,000 you would have double the number.

16724. If you had two committees?—You would have one committee admitting women and another admitting men?

16725. One committee for the North and another for the South?—Would you propose having different Boards of Guardians?

16726. You would have one Board of Guardians and different members acting, according to the convenience of their residence to the North or South sides?—Then, practically it would remain as at present, except in name.

16727. You would have one Board of Guardians and two committees—one committee for attending the buildings on the North side and the other on the South side—and the report of these committees would come before the Guardians in the same way as you deal with Cabra. A union may have as many buildings as you like; the fact of there being additional buildings does not complicate things, as far as the board is concerned?—My experience is that a committee lends itself to jobbery; a committee meets and makes a certain suggestion, and when that comes before the full board to be considered, if not agreeable to the majority of the board the members are whipped up to out-vote it.

16728. That does not occur with the Admission Board?—That is a board, you see; on the North the dispensary work is done by a committee who have all the powers of the board.

16729. Dr. BROWN.—Could you not do the exact same with other matters?—If you delegate the powers of the board.

16730. CHAIRMAN.—No delegation?—Either it is a board or a committee; if it is a board having the power of a board you practically give into the hands of a few men the power of the great number, and therefore their actions will not be sufficiently under control, and improper things are likely to be done; if, on the contrary, it is a committee the committee's action is over-ruled.

16731. There is only one board meeting day for the North Dublin and one board meeting day for the South Dublin?—There are practically two days if you take the Admission Board.

16732. The Admission Board is not a board?—I may be mistaken, but I understood the board had power to meet on a certain day for a specific purpose.

16733. They may meet as a board, but it is usually as admission committee in all other names I know of?—The board have power to meet on Monday for certain specific business to admit people; they are therefore an Admission Board; they have also power to meet on Monday for dispensary business, and they have full power as regards dispensary business only.

16734. That is under some special order?—Yes; there is a special order.

16735. But without an order they can have their work prepared for them by a committee and deal with the recommendations of their committee?—But the objections to the committee are that its suggestions are over-ruled by the larger board; therefore the work of the whole board is more satisfactory, but, on the other hand, there is too much required to be done on one committee, and people get tired, and it is badly done. We were very anxious on the South board to have probationers trained there who might be eligible for situations as qualified nurses. There are a number of young women in Ireland who are very suitable for a position like that; the last advertisement we had in the South we wanted five nurses, and there were six applicants only.

16736. That is a matter you need hardly go into with us, as you have absolute power to raise that with the Local Government Board?—There are certain facilities that might be suggested to boards to train nurses.

16737. There is nothing to prevent it being done now; the law is big enough for it?—The only thing is, when we suggest it how do you know the Local Government Board will accept our training.

16738. It is very simple; if you write a resolution and have a conference with the Medical Inspector it can be put into shape at once?—The nursing question depends so much on the supply of nurses. I mentioned before the necessity of temporary relief. I am strongly in favour of that. We find an ordinary case of a man with six children who happens to be thrown out of work; we have nothing to do but take them in; three children cost 2s. 6d. a week each, that is for the food only, and 2s. a week then for their teaching extra; that would be, at least, 18s. a week additional on the rates, and we have not power to give it towards rent, or any relief at all. It was suggested to send certain children to get technical education to industrial schools, but I was not sure whether it would be within the power of this Commission to make any recommendation that Guardians might have power to obtain technical instruction for the children. We have, both on the North and South side, made an application to the Department of Agriculture, and they say they have no funds for that purpose; we find that although there is a great demand for lads at the age of fifteen—we can get rid of any amount of them—once they reach twenty or twenty-five they are useless; they have no handicraft or trade; they come back to the house. My experience is that people in the workhouse are much better off than 30 per cent. of the ratepayers, or 50 per cent. of the Dublin poor. I am rather afraid they will see James's-street too often; they get so fond of it; they are better fed, clothed, and housed.

16739. That struck us strongly in going through the workhouse how very comfortable they were, and they had a good dietary?—We are giving those Irish bacon in the North Union, and 90 per cent. of the ratepayers don't get it, and we give them cream and butter. Are we to build a convalescent hospital and over-feed them and give them nothing to do?

16740. Still you would do that for the sake of stamping out consumption?—Yes; but I suppose it would make a great increase in the rates; twenty people die in Dublin every week from consumption, and there are three times that number sick.

16741. They would only need to go into the sanatorium for a comparatively short time and be taught how to make themselves innocuous for others?—That is the theory; less than three months would be no use; that would be 750 people.

16742. They could not all get it at once?—If it was only 200 that would be a grave matter for the rates, and if you over-fed them they learn such habits that they would not be good citizens afterwards.

Mrs. McDONALD CONGRATE, P.L.C., EXAMINED.

16743. CHAIRMAN.—You are appearing on behalf of the Poor Law Officers' Association; there was a letter from Mr. Denis O'Connell that you were nominated by the Poor Law Officers' Association of Ireland to give evidence?—The first point that they asked me to take up was the appointment of Poor Law officers and the reduction of untrained persons from such positions; what they seemed to wish, I should say on their behalf, is that a master of a workhouse has some very incompetent person forced on him who has probably never seen a workhouse, and is supposed to do work which he is quite incapable of doing. They wanted me to say that they would wish a sort of apprenticeship, that they might be promoted from a small workhouse to a larger one, and so on, with the hope of eventually being made master or matron.

16744. Make it a public service transferable from one workhouse to another?—That is it exactly; and also that trouble is so great in a workhouse if the officials are related to the Guardians; they do nothing but annoy the board if they find that they are in a little difficulty, and they would like to have a record kept of their conduct by the master and matron, and have their salaries raised according to that record.

16745. Or lowered?—They did not ask me to say it was to be lowered; but it should be raised according to their merits.

16746. Mr. MURKIN.—Without regard to the Guardians?—Without regard to the Guardians.

16747. Do you speak on behalf of the Poor Law Officers' Association?—Yes; and not as a Guardian. They find the people are quite unskilled who are sent in; have no technical training. In the prisons service they refuse to take women who have not been trained in something special—either laundry, nursing, or cooking.

16748. CHAIRMAN.—What apprenticeship would the people in small unions undergo?—I suppose you would put them into a kind of probation for a certain number of months.

16749. And none of them should be connected in any way with the Board of Guardians?—I think they feel that very strongly; several workhouse officials have said to me that the workhouses cannot be efficient otherwise.

16750. Would the appointment still remain with the Guardians?—In the Prisons service it remains with the Prisons Board.

16754. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—You would like the Local Government Board to make the appointments?—That is my personal opinion.

16755. CHAIRMAN.—I don't think the Local Government Board would like the task?—There are certain rules under which the Guardians advertise, namely, that a man must be under a certain age—under thirty-five—and I have often seen very tatter'd old gentlemen come in who said they were only thirty-five. If they have no friends among the Guardians they feel that their salaries are never raised. One woman made a bitter complaint to me the other day that her salary had never been raised because she knew nobody on the board.

16756. One of your own officials?—Yes.

16757. Then she had, at all events the pleasure, of your acquaintance?—Yes; but I am not fond of raising salaries, and I am not talking now as a Guardian. There is no maximum rate that they come to. I knew one man who was a brother-in-law of a Guardian who was put in at £1 a week, and very shortly afterwards we raised him to 30s. a week; he was put in in June, and in September we raised him to 35s. a week.

16758. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—The Local Government Board would not now sanction that?—It did happen.

16760. I think five years interval is necessary at present unless some exceptional reason is given for the increase?—And then the better protection of officers against dismissal; there is a great feeling among the officers that people have spite against them; it is a great word they use. If they don't please the Guardians in some one particular they are very much in the hands of the Guardians.

16761. Is it not very much the other way; is it not that the Guardians put up with officials through weakness or good nature?—I don't think that is the case; I think they are allowed to do things if they are friends of the Guardians, but I don't think the Guardians trouble a great many of them as to efficiency or inefficiency.

16762. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose these are your own opinions; you are not now speaking with any direct authority to make that statement?—One of the men mentioned it in speaking to me; we both agreed that that was a very serious part of it; that you could not get a workhouse into an efficient state unless the officials saw there was some use in working; that they might hope to be promoted.

16763. Do you think the Poor Law officials now would endorse that evidence of yours?—I do; because I have gone through it, Mr. President, with those who asked me. The next point was the transferring of officers from union to union, both in promotion and as a result of want of harmony amongst the officers; it is still going entirely on the feeling that it should be a Poor Law service for them, and then when the time came for their superannuation that they should get it as a right.

16764. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—That is going a little above the Civil Service even; the Civil Service officials cannot demand their superannuation?—These people are allowed at the end of their work a certain amount of money, which is supposed to be put by for them.

16766. Nearly always?—I had an experience of that a good many years ago; there was a woman who was a maternity nurse, she had grown old and delicate; one Guardian in particular wished me to go and speak to her and talk to her and tell her that she would come to grief in some way, as she was getting old; this man, in particular, said "She will get so much superannuation." So I put a notice of motion on the paper that she should get it. To my horror, the man who had asked me to go stood up and opposed it. However he passed; she got it, but still he opposed it.

16767. Does not that show that the Guardians acted fairly in giving the money?—No; because she had had her whip out; she had canvassed the board; and had she not canvassed the board she would not have got it.

16768. I hope you have not that low estimation of your countrymen. I think the general experience of the country is that they deal fairly with their officers. I know an instance myself where the Guardians tried to add years and years to the service?—I know they do often, but the case can be otherwise—that is what the Poor Law officers complain of—that they don't get it by right; they get it by favour. With regard to the inmates we find it impossible once anybody has been in the workhouse to get places for them, because the tendency in the workhouse is to become degraded, and it is the settled conviction of the public that the workhouse demoralises those who are obliged to enter it.

16769. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose no one likes to take a failure if they can get a person who has not failed?—Exactly; I suppose that is it. A great deal of this is due to improper association and improper classification in the workhouses of the North Dublin Union.

16770. Don't you think it might be due simply to the fact of failure without regard to where the inmates come from?—Sometimes it arises from illness; in the North Dublin Union we have eight acres of ground, and it contained on the night of the 15th of March 2,457 people, at 32s to the acre; the result of the increase of inmates has been that the open spaces have been gradually covered with temporary sheds. In the admission ward sometimes as many as three have to sleep in a single bed at night. Amongst the other portions there are no day rooms.

16771. In what part of the house does that happen?—The admission ward, where there are three in a bed; it is chiefly the women I am speaking of; it is the same on the men's side; I have taken all my figures for the 15th of March.

16772. Was that in some of the out-houses or the main building?—The admission ward.

16773. Those are not the hired houses outside?—No; only the able-bodied sleep there; these are generally the people who come in for hospital treatment.

16774. Would they not be sent at once by the resident doctor to the hospital?—Not if there was no bed; Dr. Kennedy was complaining bitterly to me the other day that during the day the doctor comes down and says "I have left you three beds for to-day," and during the day the three beds are filled, and then there is no place to put them until the doctor comes next day. Among the other evils there are no day rooms; inmates have to spend all their time, living, eating, and sleeping in their wards; this is unhealthy, and prevents proper supervision of the ward and the absence of a dining hall, and the issuing of ration to each person throughout the house leads to great waste.

16775. These seem rather cases affecting the management of a particular workhouse; it is hardly one of the matters which we would go into?—I thought that was what you wanted. Shall I say then that the overcrowding—

16776. That would be a reason for amalgamation, in your opinion?—Yes; but in the first place we should get rid of the lameness and epilepsy; that would give us eight wards and a day room, and make a very great difference. The blind also could be sent—we had ten of those in the house on the 15th of March—and then remove the consumptives.

16777. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Have you many of them?—I don't know how many we have, because I would have to go through the hospital to find out; but we have a fair number, and so strongly did we feel about it that a little while ago one of the Guardians had a notice of motion to take a house in the country to put them into, but then it was decided that he should withdraw it until after this Commission. Then able-bodied men and women absolutely get no work to do, as far as I can find out, in the workhouse.

16778. CHAIRMAN.—Are you familiar with other workhouses besides the North Dublin?—I am very familiar with English workhouses.

16779. Your experience of English workhouses is that they do no work there?—No; they are kept much better at work. In consequence of my visit to English workhouses we started wood-chopping. We had an enormous industry here, and we loaded in £10 a month for money received from wood-chopping, and the old men delighted in it, but it was, unfortunately, stopped. Then the women, I think they should be allowed to have two nights' and one day's work. I wrote to some workhouses where they had their female employed, and in Sheffield they have got entirely rid of their female.

16780. They get them somewhere else?—Exactly; but that would not matter to us. They sent us their stout (produced). That is a history which is laid before the Guardians when anybody applies for admission. The form in Belfast is even better. Most of the witnesses seemed to think that the women who drag about children with them should be treated as criminals. In the North Dublin Union it was my bad at one time—terrible—dragging children about, taking them out in the morning and bringing them in at eleven o'clock at night. The work for ladies' part women in another great trouble; these girls get twelve hours' sleep, and when we get them admitted, when they come back to us we ask what brought them back, and they say the work was too hard.

16778. That is rather as regards the interior management of your own workhouse?—Then will you take the classification of hospitals; in amalgamating the North and South Unions it struck me there could be a training school for nurses, and so we might get rid of pauper help, only allowing the paupers to come in and scrub in the morning and do the cleaning, and the probabilities might do the nursing. I am told in Birmingham it is made a kind of out-door relief; these women get that work to do as a kind of out-door relief.

16779. That is the scrubbing?—Yes; then they are paid so much an hour, but they are never allowed in the house after one o'clock; therefore they never touch the food. If the two Protestant hospitals were amalgamated it seems to me it might get rid of pauper help, which is a very considerable drawback.

16780. Is in your experience that a good deal of nursing duties are discharged by the paupers?—It is, unfortunately, and the serving of food.

16781. Under classification?—In large wards you cannot see all the way down. A civilian complained to me the other day that a relative of his had been ordered an egg, and he never got it; he had come out of the house at the time, so I had no power of looking into the matter, but it was a pauper who had taken it, I said not tell you. That leads to the selling of eggs and other things in the house, and our infirmaries are served almost entirely by these people; one of our paupers has been found with 49 in his pocket in the police station, quite drunk. They go out and stay out for a certain time, and when they have spent all that money they come in again. I know of a trained man in the hospital, and the pauper attendants, five of them, struck; they would not have the trained man. The worst evil connected with the workhouse is the pauper attendant; quite the worst; they do the work and get the officials in their power. My personal experience with reference to the high death rate of infants, having watched it very closely to see what was the matter, is that no nursery should contain more than twenty babies, and even that is too high a number.

16782. That is no ward?—No ward; more than twenty babies should not be near each other. My own opinion is that the terrible death rate we have comes partly from that. I think there should be better classification in the nurseries, and I very often think it would be well to separate the mother from the child.

16783. Mr. MURKIN?—In what respect should the classification be changed?—I think respectable married women and the young girls might be together—girls under twenty-four with their first children—so that widows who are not well behaved should be in a class by themselves, and another set of women who come to us repeatedly should be a class to themselves; there should be, at least, three classes. I think the company of the respectable married women would be good for the young girls.

16784. Chairman?—Are many of that class, unfortunately, obliged to come to the workhouse—what we call the really respectable people—driven by poverty?—Yes; we have in the nursery constantly respectable married people.

16785. Have you found out the reason why that class has to come to the workhouse; is it through drunken habits?—Yes; directly or indirectly, it is always through drink. I would not call a woman respectable who was a drunkard herself, and I don't think she should be with the young girls. I think there is a great tendency to get rid of the babies when they are not wanted.

16786. You mean they are purposely careless of their children?—Yes; about a fortnight ago that was discovered in one of our nurseries—a woman absolutely tried to get rid of her child. Of course she was stopped at once and separated from the child. She shows at once why the small nurseries are necessary; you could not watch twenty or eighty babies or mothers with babies. In my experience and that of several women Guardians the classification of hospitals is an important part of it.

16787. Therefore you would like to classify according to respectability and disease combined?—Yes; I won't touch the disease.

16788. The doctors must have them classified according to disease; you would classify them according to respectability?—I would, decidedly.

16789. That is not done in general hospitals outside?—But they don't take in the classes the workhouse has.

16790. Don't you think they would take in any interesting diseases?—Yes; but the class they will not.

16791. Don't you think your hospital in the North Dublin Union, so far as orderly conduct on the part of the inmates, is well managed?—I think it is as well managed as it can be.

16792. As well managed as any ordinary hospital?—I don't know, because I don't know many ordinary hospitals; but a little time ago we had a discussion about a question of classification. There were consumptives that I thought should not be put in hospital with respectable women. An officer thought it was a very good thing to have the consumptives all together independent of their characters. We fought very hard at the Board, and the women were beaten, and then the officer, who had taken quite a strong part against us, came to me and told me she found we were perfectly right. There was one woman who had been sent to her ward to be treated, and she became acquainted with two young girls, and they presently left with the woman who I had objected to being put there, and she carried them away.

16793. That might have happened in any hospital?—I feel in making the fight I was justified.

16794. One should do as much as one can to segregate ill-conducted persons, but it would not be possible to have respectability considered in hospital wards where you have only so few wards. You would have to have an enormous institution to sub-classify all the diseases according to the respectability and situation in life. Are not all your wards crammed full, and three in a bed waiting to get in?—Our hospitals, no, but in the almshouse ward.

16795. You have not empty beds?—If you amalgamate you can classify, and I must say I would like them to be classified.

16796. One can always do that in a sensible way. You have been quite right in what you suggest about keeping certain objectionable women from the young girls. Putting them of a different end of the ward might have been sufficient separation, if there was a good nurse to keep an eye on them?—I think much mischief is done in workhouse hospitals.

16797. Mischief will be done anywhere?—I think that is all I have to say. We women are particularly anxious to have a woman inspector. We receive nothing but kindness and goodness from the gentlemen, but we would like a woman inspector in our workhouses. We always find inspectors more than anxious to help us in every way they can—16798. Where do you feel the want?—I feel it. I chiefly want amongst the infirm, and there I think a woman inspector would be a great help.

16799. Who would go round and pay?—I—Surprise visit.

16800. A few visits in the year. What would she do now?—She would see whether the wards were comfortable enough for an old body, and see to the clothing of the people. She would do what the man does, and does very efficiently, but I would like a woman. I think we women are trained to housekeeping.

16801. Don't you think some of us men know something about it, too?—We are trained to the little things that men are not trained to. I should feel incapable of doing Dr. Rigby's business. We would like a woman inspector. We also feel very strongly, and would like a woman relieving officer appointed, in many places, for a woman to go round and do the duties of a relieving officer sometimes would be very important; for instance, going to a mother with her children.

16802. Then you would not be able to go to the father?—Well, the man could go to the father.

16803. Then you would have a woman inspector for the female side of the house?—I think the old man would be very comfortable with a woman inspector, too.

16804. What I wanted to see was what a woman could do that a man could not do?—When I go round I take down the beds and look after the washing and the linen.

16805. I always did so when I was an inspector!—All your inspectors do everything that is good and kind—I am not saying a word against them—but still we feel we would like a woman inspector; the clothing, and the food, and the babies, and if the women Guardians are driven out, as we probably will be, then there would be a woman to look after the poor.

The Sitting was adjourned.

THIRTY-FOURTH PUBLIC SITTING.—THURSDAY, MARCH 24TH, 1904.

At the County Council Office, Dublin.

Present:—Mr. MOCKE (Chairman), Mr. MURNAUGHAN, and Dr. COREY BOGGER.

Mr. JOHN McDONNELL, J.P., P.L.C., CHAIRMAN.

15606. CHAIRMAN.—You are a Guardian of the North Dublin Union for a very long time?—Yes, sir.

15607. The Guardians have been considering the question of whether amalgamation between their union and the South Union would be beneficial—what is your own opinion in the matter?—I think it would be beneficial. In fact, the case has been so clearly demonstrated that I don't think I could add anything to the evidence already given.

15608. Did you hear the evidence that Dr. McWalter gave last evening?—I did.

15609. He had some middle course?—I don't endorse his evidence in that respect.

15610. Would you rather go in for amalgamation pure and simple?—Decidedly.

15611. With a head not larger than the present board?—Yes.

15612. Would you look forward to seeing much practical benefit apart altogether from the question of saving?—The first consideration with me is the interest of the poor. What I would suggest would be that one workhouse be turned into a hospital, pure and simple, and that should be the South Union.

15613. Do you think it is not a little too large?—There are magnificent buildings there, fine grounds, and all the rest, and together with having it as a hospital, I would transfer those who are tottering on the threshold of the hospital, the feeble and infirm, up to the hospital, and then afterwards it might be considered how far you might go with the maternity cases and babies.

15614. You would rather have that plan than the division of sites that the ex-Lord Mayor, Mr. Harrington proposed?—That would not work at all, sir.

15615. What objection would you see to that?—When a man wants to leave and get his wife and children out, how is he to gather them up?

15616. I suppose they would be gathered for him—telephone across?—I don't think it would work. The first thing is to provide for the sick.

15617. You would not be able to effect such a reduction in officials if you kept both sides there?—To my mind the first thing is what are you going to do with the sick? Would it not be far better to have the sick in one hospital?

15618. You have a splendid female hospital in the North?—We have; but when those people are becoming convalescent, where are they to go? The ground is very desecrated; you are bounded by buildings and walls; you have not a mouthful of fresh air for the convalescent to get; and, besides, the place is so congested that the air they are breathing is not pure.

15619. You would not say that of the air in the new hospitals?—No; but I consider where you put so many people on a certain area the air cannot be very pure. You have the smoke coming from the railway across on that bit of ground they have; they cannot get a pure or refreshing breeze.

15620. It is on a high site?—It is, but it takes a lot to drive away the smoke.

15621. You generally get good, sweet, pure air in the hospital?—Oh, yes, that is all right; but you have no place for the people to walk about. Then, besides, on the south side you could have a convalescent ward as well.

15622. If a number of almshouses were got out of the workhouse—leaving and others?—You have 1,372 cases in the North Union.

15623. That is including feeble and infirm?

Mr. O'Neill (Clerk).—Yes.

15624. You may say 800 in the extreme cold weather?

Mr. O'Neill.—Fully that.

WILSON.—Then the South would, at least, have 1,500.

15625. They have 1,300?—That makes 2,800.

15626. If you take the feeble and infirm of both, you won't have much space afterwards in the South Union if it is turned into a hospital?—There are 150 out children.

15627. They are included in that total. What is your view about the girls who come in there with illegitimate children; do you think they ought to continue to be received into any workhouse, or would you be in favour of sending them to penitentiaries or reformatories?—That would be far better if it could be done, if they would be taken, instead of letting them into workhouses at all. I don't know that you would get an institution to take charge of them; there might be some difficulty.

15628. Each religion would have its own institution, and take them in at so much a head from the Guardians?—At that particular time they are very petted, and not so easily managed; it would not be easy to get them to submit to discipline.

15629. There would be more chance of their being disciplined in an institution like that, under religious influence, than in a workhouse, where they come and go and scold all day?—Then, if there should be a maternity ward there, there certainly should be a classification.

15630. If you had no maternity ward at all in a workhouse, if those girls went, as a matter of course, to some religious institution, they generally come out the workhouse two or three months beforehand, and then they remain often for their lives afterwards, going backwards and forwards, and there would be a chance of breaking them off—taking away the consequence of their lapses, and starting them afresh?—That would be a capital arrangement, and they would be more likely to return back home again; but once they get the air of the workhouse we cannot make any improvement; in fact, they go out, and become, in many cases, more depraved.

15631. That would take a very large population out of the workhouse if that class and the children could be taken?—It would. You want a good deal more space than you have in workhouses. Besides, in the North Union, if you take a lot out of it, you want a place to put those that are able to work in, to do something; you will get a man very well able to do a lot of things.

15632. You have a large city population that keeps coming in and out?—Yes. If you gave them employment in the workhouse, you would have that class in the North side, and they would not be in such a hurry to come in.

15633. Do you think they come in from laziness in many cases or is it inability to get work; do your porters come in?—On the North side you have all the markets, and you have a good many coming in from the markets.

15634. That is, men who are porters?—Yes.

15635. And when business is slack, they come in, or when they lose a job from tipping?—Yes, come in to brace up, and go out again.

15636. If they cannot get immediate employment they go in with their families?—You have gaily porters coming in, but they scarcely ever come in unless when they are broken down.

15637. Do you find many of the corner-boy class in the workhouse?—Unfortunately, we have a good many, and they are put in positions they should not be in at all, because they are handy and smart and quick.

They are put as nurses, attendants, and scrubbers, and if they were put to harder work they would not be so ready to come in.

16832. Can you tell me anything about the night shelters there are in Dublin?—We have two on the North side.

16833. One at Bow-street—that is still working?—It is.

Mr. O'NEILL.—It closes in the summer for two months, cleaning up.

16834. What other is there at the North side?—That is the only one.

16835. Then there is one at the Theatre Royal, on the South side?—Yes, and there is Carlostree, Brookfield-lane.

16836. That is Dr. Spratt's?—Yes.

16837. From whom would we be likely to get good evidence about these shelters?—One of the relieving officers at the North side.

CHAIRMAN.—I know pretty well the procedure of Bow-street.

Miss WOLFE.—Clark-street is in the hands of the Sisters of Mercy.

16838. CHAIRMAN.—This one at Poolbeg-street?

Miss FUCHS.—That is managed by a Protestant committee. I think Dr. McVittie could get you information.

16839. Do you know anything of your own knowledge of the Mendicity Institution?—No.

16840. It is still working?—Oh, it is.

16841. They get them to do some light tasks, and give them their food?—And they sleep in the night refuges very much.

Mr. O'NEILL.—They help them to a great extent to get back to their own towns and residences.

16842. The residence of a great many would be Dublin?

Mr. O'NEILL.—Well, no; I know many myself that come up to me from the country, and they get a note from the manager, and have been sent back to their own towns.

Mr. A. CARROLL.—If it is shown that there is a certainty of getting work they will pay their passages.

16843. CHAIRMAN.—The casual poor of Dublin who are not in the workhouses must be between the Mendicity Institution and the night shelters?—The casuals that come to the North Union are principally from Balbrithery direction.

16844. These are tramps; but I mean the men and women that come in when they are out of work?—They are a class of people that take their children out in the daytime, and they are begging about the streets in the day, going from publichouses to publichouses, and they come back at night, and sleep in the workhouse, and they do that night after night.

16845. Regular mendicants, using the shelter of the houses?—Yes; I have told the master that he ought to warn the people that they could not make this a sort of resting-place at night.

16846. Would you be in favour of depriving these people of their liberty for a year or two years, and putting them into a place where they would be obliged to work, as a sort of punishment for their vagrancy and want of good habits in life; it has been suggested by a great number of witnesses?—I don't see how it can be done; the liberty of the subject comes in.

16847. If a man does anything wrong they lock him up; are these people doing sufficient wrong to be locked up?—That is a matter for the law.

16848. Would you be in favour of making a law that would deprive them of their liberty?—Certainly.

16849. And taking their children from them, so that they could be properly brought up?—Certainly; save themselves and save their children.

16850. Do you think that class is increasing, as far as your observation goes?—I do.

16851. Taking a big city, would these people make a considerable amount in a day?—Yes.

16852. Their begging would be successful?—Yes; £s. or 7s. at least.

16853. Then they go in, and get their bed and breakfast?—And supper at night.

16854. Do they go in in time for supper—what time is it now?—There is no particular time fixed. As for the matter of bathing, it is never done at all.

16855. You could not give them a cold bath, of course?—Then, there is the danger of bringing in disease from the city.

16856. It is desirable to have that class kept out of the workhouse proper, and lock them up with a view of reforming them. I heard mention of the feasibility of sending children of that class to farmers' houses, but I doubt that. The children would be well trained?—What training would they get in farmers' houses? They won't be drilled.

16857. People who advocate boarding out say that what they want is to be put in a position of life where they can make their living easily. If a boy goes to a farmer's house he is taught to do various things about the house and land that enables him to become an agricultural labourer; he is not taught to be a tradesman or anything of that sort; don't you think that is a good, healthy life?—If you take the parents and put them into institutions it may be done. There is a great spirit of independence abroad. If a boy has been wandering about begging, it won't be so easy to bring him into a farmer's house to work.

16858. The older they become, the more unmanageable; then you could put them into an industrial school or a reformatory?—A reformatory is the last place I should send them to; there they meet boys of the most vicious class.

16859. Do you know anything about the after life of the reformatory boys?—No more than what I see in the papers. I see a number of the boys turn out badly. One or two bad boys amongst a lot will do an immense amount of harm; no amount of supervision will take away the taint.

16860. That is one argument against having them in large bodies; would it not be better to have them in small houses?—You must remember on the North side the class of people you have to deal with; in the South side they have a number of small farmers towards the mountains.

16861. They are not tied up to board out in their own union?—I know that; but the South side is particularly well situated in that way.

16862. But they send to Enniskerry and other places in Wicklow?—I don't know what places we could send to on the North side where we have that class of farmers at all.

16863. Send them to Tyrone. From Wales they are sending them to Cumberland and Westmoreland?—If we could select the district.

16864. There would be nothing to prevent you sending them to districts where labour is wanted. Send them to farmers of the same religion?—That would be far better, because they would be cut off from all associations. They would have to make their home where they were, and that would be far better than any institution.

16865. I know your view is very strong about the lunatic accommodation in the North Dublin Workhouse. You know it ought to be better, but you have not room to make it better. You would be glad to say all lunatics removed from the workhouse?—Decidedly.

16866. Have you formed any opinion whether it would be better to send them to the ordinary district or county asylums, or to some institution, such as was recently started at Youghal, not so well equipped, and a cheaper asylum? If they would be taken in the asylum, where there are doctors and nurses, to my mind that would be the best thing to do.

16867. If it could be done without additional expense in building?—If not, I would suggest a disused workhouse. If you take a disused workhouse, suppose you get the building free, a proper staff of doctors and nurses would not cost as more than they are costing us at present; that is, provided we get the building free.

16868. The building will always require some structural alterations?—But I would prefer an asylum by far, because they are continually changing. A man might be pretty right to-day, and to-morrow he may get violent.

16869. You draw a clear line between two classes of infirm—those you call the feeble infirm and the healthy infirm?—There are men with such spirit that they are walking about when they ought to be lying down.

16870. Your view is, that feeble and infirm should be always placed in proximity to the hospital?—Quite so; they may be all right to-day and ill to-morrow.

16871. As regards the healthy infirm?—I would give them some work to do; something to dole at.

16872. Mr. MURPHY.—Do you think it would be worth considering the establishment of a home in the county—the disused workhouse in a suitable locality for the aged and infirm?—Most decidedly.

Mr. John

Mar. 24, 1884.

Mr. John
McDonnell.

16979. With sufficient land to afford employment and some occupation—I think that would be a capital idea.

16980. At present large numbers are huddled together in a day-room in an atmosphere heavy with tobacco smoke and other odours. This should be changed.

16981. CHAIRMAN.—Bad air and over-crowding?—But you have no exercise ground in the North Union—the place for them is between two walls—the boundary wall of the railway on one side and the boundary wall of the workhouse on the other.

16982. CHAIRMAN.—A shocking place, like an elongated hall-alley.

16983. Mr. MURKIN.—If there was some workhouse that could be done without in the county where that class could be sent, and could have some occupation and a little exercise, so necessary for health, do you not think it would be worth considering?—Decidedly.

16984. Dr. BROOKS.—Would you be in favour of separating the hospital, if possible, from the workhouse?—I don't see how it could be done.

16985. Is your workhouse it would be very difficult, but generally speaking?—Oh, yes; generally speaking, I would say; but it could not be done in Dublin.

16986. If you had a separate entrance from Broad-street, could you not separate it in that way?—I don't think it is a proper site for a hospital at all. I think all the hospital cases ought to be together, North and South, to that I hold fast—all together, in the one building.

16987. Supposing there was amalgamation, would you think that that building might be obtained in the South Dublin Workhouse?—If you compared the two sites, you would never dream of having hospital patients in the North Union if you could place them in the South Union.

16988. Would you be in favour of making the hospital in the South Dublin Workhouse and keeping the North for the healthy?—Decidedly; I think I suggested that.

16989. That would do away with the pauper inmates attending in the workhouse?—Certainly.

16990. I think you mentioned that the corner-boy class very frequently acted as attendants?—Very often.

16991. And I believe they do nursing duties?—And various other duties, because they are quick and sharp, and know a good deal about city life; handy men, and they levy blackmail wherever they can.

16992. So that it would be better for the unfortunate patients?—To take them out of their hands altogether.

16993. And it would not be an indictment to that class to go into the workhouse?—It would not; there would be a better system of nursing and better care.

16994. Would you suggest any difference in the administration of the hospital if such an arrangement was arrived at?—I don't see what change.

16995. You would not make it a district hospital?—What would that mean?

16996. Separating it from the workhouse, and a separate committee to manage it?—You would not be separating it from the workhouse so long as you keep the feeble and infirm there.

CHAIRMAN.—Unless you looked on them as sick.

16997. Dr. BROOKS.—The buildings in the South lend themselves for separation?—If you make a district hospital you would want to leave it open for the whole county.

16998. No, the present area?—What benefit would that confer?

16999. In several ways—in the first way it would remove the workhouse taint?—Then, by all means, call it a district hospital.

17000. Would you be in favour of the Guardians appointing a committee composed largely of themselves with some outsiders on it?—I don't see how that would work.

17001. There is a section of the Local Government Act that enables that?—Well, as long as the board would not be too large that may work satisfactorily, but I don't believe in a board as large as we have at present.

17002. You could make it as small as you like; I am only speaking of the proportion, say, one-third of outsiders to two-thirds of direct representatives?—Would these be by co-option.

17003. Of course, by co-option?—That would work well.

16994. You would be in favour of it?—I would.

16995. Mr. MURKIN.—That provision already exists, but it has never been taken advantage of. Do you not think the Guardians are very well able to manage their own business?—They are.

16996. Why would you bring outsiders in?—You could pick out here and there a man of great experience among the poor.

16997. I think from what we have seen of the Dublin Guardians that they don't lack experience in any way?—We are on our trial, to a certain extent, perhaps, if we had the power it might be availed of.

Sir, MURKIN.—You have the power.

16998. Dr. BROOKS.—You have not the means at present?—No. About the consumptives, I would like to say something on that point. This country not being very large, I think we should have a national hospital for the whole country; one or two for consumptives; they are growing daily in number, and require immediate attention.

16999. The sick do not care to go far from their own neighbourhood?—No matter what part of the country you go to you cannot get more than sixty miles from the sea.

17000. CHAIRMAN.—The amount of consumption in the country is very great, and the evidence we have got is rather in favour of having one for a large county and, say, one for two or three smaller counties, if combined together, pretty much as in Lancashire system. You have to take into consideration whether you have better air in the north or in the south.

17001. Dr. BROOKS.—Pure air is all you want and a dry soil. You would be in favour of siting a consumptive hospital or hospitals?—It should be looked into at once, to my mind.

17002. CHAIRMAN.—A doctor whom we met at Crag-hill has started a sanatorium in connection with his hospital, and the results are wonderfully good; and, in giving his evidence, was very anxious that there should be a large number of sanatoria, and the only advice he gave was that they should be put up in a very temporary way, for if this disease was grappled with simultaneously all over the country, that temporary buildings would be enough to eradicate the disease, and this is from a man who has a very large experience. Dr. Moorhead?—Don't you see the rapid strides the cattle disease was making in this country; they would not grapple with that for a good while—grazing compensation—but then they went and attacked the mares, and it is now nearly blotted out; and, in like manner, if you take consumption, in a very short time you will nearly eradicate it. I know a case at present where there is a child ten years old sleeping in a room with three other children, and the child has phthisis. We tried to persuade the parent to let the child go somewhere, and he would not, and they have the other children sleeping in the same small room.

17003. At all events you would like sufficient accommodation to be provided for dealing with the disease?—I would. There is another thing that is wanted very badly, and it is a lady inspector for the unions; that is badly wanted.

17004. Mr. MURKIN.—In what way?—Amongst the females particularly, examining the underclothing and backs. Of course you will meet an odd gentleman like the chairman, that is very strong at that point, free time to time.

17005. Guardians in some of the unions complain that lady inspectors were too impetuous?—Another reason is, we have some lady Guardians in the North Union, and they have done good work since they came there.

17006. CHAIRMAN.—Have they done much about the interior of the institution?—They have, but the difficulty is when they bring forward recommendations to the Board of Guardians; we sometimes don't see our way to adopt them, although they are based on sound sense, and not very extravagant.

17007. What kind of recommendations would they make on these special points?—Oh, clothing; for instance, when you send the cheaper article to wash two or three times it is no good, but if you get a better article it will last longer.

17008. You have drapers on the Board who ought to be able to assist you in the choice of a good article?—Gentlemen of a particular trade generally go in for bits of their own trade. If I belong to a certain trade, and a man deals with me for an article, and he is a contractor, perhaps I might be inclined to recommend him. Then if a lady inspector comes round, if she sees the way to make recommendations after an inspection, if they come with the force and authority of your Board, they never will be questioned, they will be carried out at once, so she could assist the lady Guardians in that particular branch of administration. The lady Guardians have a hard card to play in the North Union.

16028. I was asking one of the ladies what the lady inspector would do that the male inspectors do not or could not do. I found it a little bit difficult to quite understand it. I am only anxious to know. I am not at all saying that it might not be a very good thing, only I wanted to know what is the precise reason in your mind for suggesting it?—That she would make such an inspection as she would make in her own family life—see the women, how they were dressed, what clothes they had on.

16029. Do you think she could go very far in her own home that way?—I presume you would send some person of practical experience, some married woman with experience of her own family; it would not do to send a fee lady.

16030. A married lady would have her own family to look after?—Some of the lady Guardians say that in the hard weather some of these women are out in the snow very badly clad.

16031. That is a thing any of us could see in going through?—If a lady inspector was appointed I would expect her visits would be pretty frequent, at least once every three months; six months is too long a period altogether.

16032. Then one lady inspector would not go round very far?—Six months' inspection would not be worth that, because in the time coming on preparation could be made.

16033. Don't you think the lady Guardians ought to be able to do as much as there is to be done?—Yes; if assisted by the male Guardians, it could be easily carried out.

16034. Or to communicate with the Local Government inspectors?—They will be at the back of the books together if they do that.

16035. I always found plenty of Guardians anxious to consult with me for the benefit of the workhouse and of the union?—Yes, and you gave us every assistance in your power when we were trying to reorganise.

16036. Why should not any Guardian, lady or gentleman, confer with the inspectors?—It would look out amongst the officials.

16037. I don't mean make complaints of particular errors and faults, but anything in the system that would require amendment; something not in the nature of personal complaints so much as something to improve the system?—I am giving you from twenty-five years' experience what I consider would be a man impressed, when I was able to go round the wards myself, but what could I do on the female side? I wish we had more lady Guardians, and they would every assistance, and that can only be given by a lady inspector. You have a lady inspector of boarded-out children.

16038. You think the lady Guardians have done great service for your workhouse?—What is the consequence now? we have a Visiting Committee principally composed of lady Guardians; now we have an opposition Visiting Committee composed of the male Guardians, that are diametrically opposed to the views of the lady Guardians.

16039. Mr. MURKIN.—Is not that a bad spirit to assume?—Very bad; that could be allayed by a lady inspector.

16040. Is it not perhaps the idea of the male Guardians that the ladies are going outside their ordinary duties?—Not at all. The lady Guardians are more particular in inspecting food, such as butter and things of that sort, than the male Guardians are, and they think they are too faddish, and that people in humble dwellings have not those fine things to eat, and when we are paying high prices for the best article, we ought to get it.

16041. And the ladies insist on the article being of the quality contracted for?—Decidedly.

16042. That is very proper?—Until they were thwarted.

16043. CHAIRMAN.—Is that the main question on which the two Visiting Committees differ, the question of supplies?—Supplies, and other details of the place; it keeps up a lot of friction. I think Dr. Biggar knows something about that.

16044. What I was more thinking about was trying to meet in a systematic way any defects, not so much condemning a particular person for what may be the fault of the system?—How can a male inspector do a necessary inspection amongst female's garments, and bedding, and so on.

16045. What inspection would a lady inspector make?

she goes into the female ward, what could she do practically?—She would be as use at all if that is all she would do.

16046. What would she do?—Examine the beds.

16047. That is always done?—I know some inspectors that come to the North Union examine five or six beds at one end and five or six at the other end, but the spaces in the centre would not be touched at all.

16048. There is not much use in turning down every bed, but taking samples, as a practical man would?—If you put a lady inspector there she would not make that slipshod inspection.

16049. Would she do more than examine the beds?—She would strengthen the hands of the lady Guardians to carry out necessary reforms that are cropping up every day.

16050. Such as?—Suppose it came to her knowledge that there were two Visiting Committees, and she brought that under the notice of the Local Government Board, I presume they would point out that that should not be the case.

16051. I don't know; conceivably it may result in good; one often feels a little fractious does some good?—I merely ask you in your experience to think the matter over.

16052. I am very anxious to think it over, and the reason I am asking so many questions is that I would like to find out the reasons?—Some of the lady Guardians will give you better reasons than I can give you.

16053. Mr. CORNELL.—Would you allow me to ask Mr. M'Donnell his views on the extension of out-door relief?—Some years ago we had a winter exceptionally severe, and we went to your Board to see what could be done in the way of employment, and you gave us a sealed order to give out-door relief to the heads of families and establish a stone-breaking yard.

16054. CHAIRMAN.—Because the workhouse was over full?—Yes; we started a stone-breaking yard in Brunswick-street, did not ask the men to work too hard, and we put a man over them, and paid them 8s. and 9s. a week. There was another one at Cabra.

16055. The ground of that relaxation was altogether because the workhouse was full?—I would suggest, if there was a season of exceptional distress, that that might be done.

16056. Would you do it largely to prevent the houses being broken up?—I would, and take away that thing of out-door relief; once people get a taste for out-door relief it is very hard to break them off.

16057. What safeguards would you have for this extension?—I would give the out-door relief, as we do at present; it is very closely watched. We have struck out a road as well as we could. A woman with two children gets so much, and a larger family so much more; of works well—and where there is illness in the family we give meat for beef tea.

16058. Mr. CORNELL.—Would you extend the relief to a woman with one child. Are they not frequently in as much destitution as a woman with two or three children?—They are; they certainly should get it, but a good deal would depend if she had a child twelve or thirteen years old. It might be given until she was able to get into a situation.

16059. CHAIRMAN.—If a girl was at school the mother might be able to do some charring, but you would like them to have the discretion to give out-door relief where there was one child?—Yes, and where the woman is industrious.

16060. Mr. CORNELL.—It has been proposed that there should be amalgamation between the North and South Dublin Unions. Do you think one Board would work?—Certainly.

16061. With the large number of 135 Guardians, would one Board consisting of that number work?—Not at all; you could not have more than sixty at the very outside.

16062. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose the average attendance would not be more than a dozen?—It is larger, 50 per cent. at least.

16063. Mr. MURKIN.—Would you be in favour of the suggestion in case of amalgamation to have the women in one workhouse and the men in the other?

CHAIRMAN.—If the sites were equally healthy, you would agree with that?—I could not get over the idea of having one hospital for hospital patients, and a building, if a suitable one, for feeble and infirm as well; nothing can change me from that.

16064. Your main reason is that you think the south side is so much superior and healthy, you want to get the sick there?—Certainly.

16065. But if the two buildings were equally good, and the sites equally good, would you not see a great benefit in having the males in one and the females in the other?—Certainly; but in the South Union would not that be the case?

15997. Mr. MURTAGH.—Still they would be in proximity to each other?—Yes; if it could be done, so much the better.

15998. Mr. Carroll.—Would you not be in favour of one uniform rate for the two unions?—Yes, and amalgamation, that follows naturally; there is no reason why, because the river divides the city. I don't think there is such an anomaly in any other part of the kingdom. That was done in the dark ages of the Poor Law.

CHAIRMAN.—It was done when there was electoral division chargeability, and you had all over the county startling differences in rates.

Mr. J. J. GOGGINS, F.R.C., examined.

Goggins.

Mr. Chairman, we thought it advisable at the Board to gather a committee together for the sake of saving your time and our own, and by having the amalgamation of the opinion of the majority of the Board, that we might be able to arrive at a more correct answer to your queries. I believe Mr. O'Neill has already handed to you a copy of these answers, and whether it is necessary for me to read them to you; my impression is that it won't be necessary. I will merely add that where we mention Dunshaughlin Union, of course we might not be able to get that union, but we might get Balrothery for the sick and epileptic, and imbecile poor, or consumptives.

15999. Mr. Carroll.—There might be an objection raised in consequence of Dunshaughlin being in a different county, but Balrothery is in the same county?—I don't know if I would be at liberty to make a few remarks respecting what occurred at yesterday's meeting here. I think it would be wise to correct two or three mis-statements, because sometimes misrepresentations go forward, and it is better to have it out. Now, in the case of the children at Calce, we had the question raised at our last Visiting Committee—we visit monthly—suspecting three five or six children that are Protestant children. I raised the question myself, having seen a reference to it in a paper in the city, because we were not going to lie under the imputation that these children were either unfairly or ungenerously dealt with. We were, on that occasion, inclined to think that everything that was stated in the paper was not quite true; in fact there was never an occasion before on which the religion of any child was raised as being under a certain master. When we had 120 Catholic children under a Protestant master there was never a word about it at all. The Protestant master has been superannuated, and now, for the first time, because these six children are with us the question is raised that perhaps they are in an atmosphere in which they should not be. Mrs. McDonnell Consigns in here and will tell you, as I do, that we did our level best to locate these children in homes of their own religion. As the number was so small we thought we would be doing them a service by transferring them to a good Protestant institution, where they would be well cared for and breathe their own atmosphere, but we were opposed, and although we were quite willing to give extra pay for these and make every provision for safeguarding them, still the opposition came along, so that the idea falls to the ground that we want to retain them or deal unjustly with them. Respecting the home suggested by Lady Meath, the Guardians of our union are quite in favour of doing all we can for Lady Meath if she gets the home. We have already had a flattering memorandum from her, saying she is thankful for the offer we made her at so much per head at any time she will start the home. As far as our boarded-out children go, and as far as the committee of inspection can see, they are regularly visited—well, I should say, perhaps half-a-dozen times yearly—but we know very well the relieving officer visits them every week, and the children we saw within the last fortnight or three weeks were all in splendid condition, and quite at home with the other occupants of the home. We saw them both at their homes and at the schools, and they seemed well kept and well cared for, and it reflects great credit on the people who took them over; and I am happy to say there was an application for half-a-dozen children at the same time from various people to take them under their care.

16000. CHAIRMAN.—You have not found any difficulty in getting homes?—No, the people don't take them exactly to make money out of them; they are all fairly well-to-do people who want children here and there, where there are no children; and also to make up a certain number in their homes for company to school with the other children. I think, as regards amalgamation, if it could be brought about, the children of the two unions could be well disposed of by having the imbecile children at Calce, and if Balrothery were put in order you could have all the boys of the two unions put there, and that would dispose of the children in a healthy locality.

16001. I think you were here when Mr. McDonnell was speaking about the children. Would you be in favour of taking their children from a number of these respectable or bad parents?—I would, if it could be proved they are not capable of minding them or bringing them up morally or in a decent condition, making them useful members of society.

16002. Would you be in favour of extending the boarding-out system, or would you rather like to maintain institutions?—I think up to a certain period the boarding-out system would be well, and the children could be taken then and put into some industrial schools or training establishments.

16003. At what age?—From fourteen up.

16004. Why would you send them to learn trades? You must always agree with children as to these last. Every child will not take to agricultural pursuits. One boy will take to mechanics.

16005. There is no reason why he should not?—No reason, but that their bent is not that way.

16006. As you bend the twig?—But still it will go back. They have inclinations like our own. A man, as a rule, never follows his father's profession in trade or commerce.

16007. These, of course, are boys who are children of the State. But do you think these children ought to be put forward and put into positions better than the poor class of rascals could put forward their children to?—If they have the intellect it would be a pity to keep them back.

16009. I don't know whether you are so much in the city, but in a very large portion of the country there is a great dearth of agricultural labourers! There is at present, at any rate, until such time probably as the country will be brought back into agricultural business.

16010. I mean as things are at present there is a great want of people to do farm work in the country?—There is, and even in the case of kitchen gardens there is a great want.

16011. Don't you think it is a good thing to bring the workhouse children to it?—Certainly, as many as will take to it. We have sent out several from our auxiliary to various parts of the country, to farmers and others. We don't keep them back; if they are to be taken we give them every opportunity to go.

16012. That is a cheap way of putting them forward in the world?—It is the best way to make them mingle with the people, children at Clontarf and Beldrye. Several of them have got positions on the railway and tramway, and are gradually getting absorbed into the population. They are all well settled and do for. I just answer Mr. Egan, that, as far as the North Dublin Union is concerned, the children are well attended to, and a regular ladies' committee look after them, and sometimes other Guardians go with them. As regards the consumptives, we ought to have a home, and I don't think there ought to be any delay as regards the consumptives getting a home.

16013. That is an institution for curing them?—Yes, a diseased union; and furthermore, if possible, there should be one in each province.

16014. When we have statistics as to the next number, I suppose you have a sufficient number?—Exactly; but as regards the employment of the lady inspectors, I have no objection to all the lady inspectors you can get, but I fail to see what good a lady inspector can do with a nation of the union, and a heavy staff of ladies like the ones at Cabra, who have the look and lay on every-thing.

15876. Are you a member of the other inspection commission?—I am not an attending member of it. I happen to have gone with the ladies the last time; whether I am wanted on or off their show I cannot tell. I suppose eventually I will be excommunicated.

15875. Mr. MURKIN.—By the ladies or the men?—I am afraid that I have gone between the two and will get landed. As regards clothing, we have a fair assortment of drapers on the board, and they are all capable men and very well able to look after the quality much better than any lady inspector who is not in the business. As regards butcher experts, we have half-a-dozen, at any rate, contractors' brothers and contractors themselves; we have a fair share. We are a fairly well mixed business board, that know their way about; they don't want to be told much.

15877. And they insist upon the articles being up to the quality?—Oh, yes, as a rule. We insisted on a late occasion, when it was thought to impose upon us, to run an article of sheeting. We were told that it could not be made here, and we insisted on it, and we were fortunate in being able to get it made here, and I am very glad to be able to say, get it made outside Harold's Cross, a vastly superior article to the other one. I don't think the board ever allow anything to go on credit. Several things may be said, and have been said, against them, but I think on the whole they have done their business faithfully and well.

Nov. 28, 1904.

Mr. J. J. Goggin.

Mr. JOHN CAROLAN, F.R.S., Chairman of North Dublin Board of Guardians, examined.

15878. CHAIRMAN.—You have been Chairman for a long time of the North Dublin Union?—I think about sixteen years. I think this is the twenty-eighth year that I am a member of it.

15879. Are you in favour of the amalgamation of the Dublin Unions?—I would be; it would be difficult to amalgamate them, but still when it would be worked out I think it would be beneficial to both unions.

15880. Have you thought at all how you would divide the buildings, what classes you would put in the present North Dublin Union and the present South Dublin Union?—I have not, indeed.

15881. You would leave that to be arranged subsequently. Mr. Harrington suggested yesterday that the males might be put on one side of the river and the females on the other?—At one time there was a proposal to transfer the female children to one union and the male children to another, but it fell through.

15882. Mr. McDonnell suggested to-day that the workhouse of the South Dublin might be used for an hospital for the sick and feeble infants?—They have a good deal more room there and better air space; our air space is all done away with.

15883. These are matters you think might be left open, as far as you are concerned, until a later period?—When amalgamation takes place it can be regulated. On the north we are so congested we have built on every space we could build on.

15884. Two or three people in a bed?—No.

15885. Mrs. McDowell suggested to me yesterday there were three in a bed?—I don't think that is possible; the bed would not hold more than one. They may be so close together that it might seem as if there were more than one in the bed.

15886. Mr. MURKIN.—So that everybody has a separate bed?—Oh, yes.

15887. CHAIRMAN.—If there were any case otherwise it would be an entirely exceptional thing?—I never heard of it. I don't think it could possibly take place.

15888. The lunatics have not very good accommodation in your workhouse?—They have not. We would like to have these lunatics removed out of the house. We treat them as well as we can, but the accommodation and the situation of the poor people is not what it should be at all; it is one of the points I would be most anxious about.

15889. Would you send them to the asylum or some subordinate institution?—The asylum would perhaps bring the charges very heavy, because their working was to be very expensive; if there could be any possibility of an institution where they could be removed to.

15890. You are taking the cost of their food and clothing only in the workhouse?—Their food and clothing.

15891. You would have to add all the establishment charges and other expenses to bring them up to the same level that the asylum inmates are shown to have cost?—Quite so.

15892. Mr. MURKIN.—You think if the cost could be made nearly equal to what it would be in the asylum, it would be better?—Our cost is £18 4s. 6d. a head.

Mr. O'NEILL.—Establishment charges, laundries, and everything; and in Cabra, for the children, £12 17s. 1d.

15893. Mr. MURKIN.—We have been told that it is not very desirable that a very large number of these unhappy people should be placed together. I think the institution has been placed at a thousand by qualified persons. Do you think it would be better, on humanitarian grounds, instead of sending them to the asylum, to send them to an auxiliary, away from association with the noisy and violent class?—I think that would be a far better arrangement. So far, of course, as the inmates of that department in our union are not of the violent class, with better surroundings, and in a separate institution, they really might become better in their mind and health than when plunged in the midst of a lot of violent lunatics.

15894. I think there is an experiment in that direction in the South of Ireland, and the estimated cost per head was placed at £15. If you could get an institution of that kind for the Co. Dublin?—I think it would be very desirable.

15895. CHAIRMAN.—Is there any other matter in addition to the various matters that have been discussed in the last couple of days that you would wish to mention?—No; I think the various subjects have been very well discussed and very properly got before the Commission. I don't think I have anything to add. Of course the boarding out of children has been discussed. That has always been approved of by the Board. The working of Cabra under the nurse leaves it a very superior institution, and when the children come to the proper age they are provided for, and none have returned, and the reports that have come back have been that they are all doing extremely well. And as regards the boarding out of children, I have always been in favour of it, and the children have been placed with people and have grown up as members of the family, considering the man and the woman as their father and mother; and they become absorbed into positions that really belong to their class.

15896. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you think the boarding-out system, where it can be carried out, is much superior?—I think it is a very good thing, because these children when they grow up become absorbed in the population.

15897. Dr. BRENN.—Do you know how many of the children that have been boarded out returned to the workhouse?—Not in the number of years I have been there. I have known but very few instances where they have returned.

15898. CHAIRMAN.—Do you happen to remember any case in which they did return, anything about the individual cases?—I do not.

15899. You could not recollect whether they were boarded out at a late age or an early age?—On that point I could say it was when they were boarded out at a late age they came back, because the nurse had not proper control of them; they were beyond her control when she got them.

15901. CHAIRMAN.—That would be a reason rather for sending them not too near the house?—There is a rule that if these people turn up at the house to inquire for them when they are sent out, that they are not to get any information where they are boarded out; but they traffic around the country and find out where they are. There was a good move made some years ago. The children originally that were boarded out were dressed all in a uniform, and they were known, and in fact were objected to at the National schools, and they were known along the road that they were workhouse children by their dress; but that has been changed, and the Board now allow a certain sum yearly to the nurses to dress them in ordinary costume. In fact their clothes used to be branded N. D. U., and it was a great mistake. Some farmers, and other people that sent their children to the National schools, objected to their being associated with them.

Dr. Forrester examined.

Dr. Forrester.

17025. Dr. Brogan.—We would like to hear your views upon some of the subjects that have been discussed here?—As to the advisability of making a hospital of the North and South Unions?

17026. CHAIRMAN.—Do you think as a medical man it would be desirable to provide better accommodation for the sick and feeble infirm?—We are in a dreadful condition in the North Union as far as the feeble and infirm are concerned; the women are in a very bad way. A great number are kept out of the department that should be there; there is no room for them.

17027. You have not three in a bed there?—Oh, no. In the healthy infirm I don't know how they stand. I have only charge of the feeble infirm; there are not three in a bed. I don't let them into the department because there is no room, but outside the department I should not wonder if there was something like you say. I know there is a tremendous congestion, and something must be done about it.

17028. What do you think of amalgamation as a remedy?—I think it would be a very fine thing, and we should deal with a number of points by it. An immense deal of classification could be carried out. For instance, one thing I raised a little trouble about lately was the remand children. We have only about a dozen or so in the house usually, and these children should be at school with a schoolmaster over them. It is not fair to have them wandering about; and if there was an amalgamation or arrangement with the South Union, it would be worth while, if there were twenty or thirty of these boys under restraint for a month or so, that they should be put under charge of a schoolmaster.

17029. Do you think a workhouse is a proper place to have remand children in?—It is not, it is a very improper place, but they are sent there by the magistrate, and they are taught every villainy that they don't know already. Some of them come there quite innocent, but don't leave it in that condition. They must get amusement, and their amusement is tripping the sticks from the old men.

17030. Their capacity for innocent enjoyment?—It is immense, and the old men don't appreciate it. Then there is the epileptic question. As far as I know, there is no machinery whatever for the education of the sane epileptics. Take the case of a little child, and as far as I know there is in Ireland no machinery to teach it its religion or the alphabet unless it is taught at home. I think that urgently requires to be seen about.

17031. Have you charge of the sane epileptics at present?—I have.

17032. About how many have you in the workhouse?—From twenty to thirty.

17033. From what age to what age?—The youngest is ten or eleven, a little girl.

17034. At what age did she come in?—She only came in recently, therefore she knew how to read and write when she came in. I believe some of the other inmates are teaching her the catechism.

17035. It would be hardly safe to send her to a school?—They won't take her there.

17036. I mean to your workhouse school at Cahra?—They won't take her. I sent her there, and she was returned the same day.

17037. Does she get many fits?—She gets them fairly often, perhaps two or three times a week.

17038. Do you think it would be safe to have her there at Cahra?—It is not considered right to have an epileptic child amongst other children, and I sympathise with that idea, but there I have this little girl absolutely by herself. It is not right. She is perfectly sane, and a nice child.

17039. Dr. Brogan.—In the course of a year or two what do you think her condition will be?—I don't know, but it will most decidedly not be improved knocking about the house amongst the epileptics.

17040. Is she likely to drift into insanity?—She is more than likely. The Guardians did everything they could. She was sent out to serve people to be boarded out, but as soon as they found she had fits they sent her back.

17041. CHAIRMAN.—Did you ever try to send her to people who would be willing to take an epileptic patient; that would be a good thing to do?—It may be.

17042. Dr. Brogan.—I suppose the person she was boarded out with had the same recommendation as far as ordinary child?—I don't know about that.

Mr. Carroll.—There was extra money paid for the boarding out of that girl, and I think the woman she was nursing with fell ill.

17043. CHAIRMAN.—You did not try anything else?

Mr. Carroll.—I think nobody else was tried.

17044. CHAIRMAN.—Is she the only child you have got?—Yes; the others would be seventeen and eighteen, up to sixty.

17045. Dr. Brogan.—Do you have many at that age?—No. I had two little boys a couple of years ago, and they were taken out by their people afterwards; still if there was a proper institution they would all either be at school or at some employment, helping to support themselves in a proper institution.

17046. CHAIRMAN.—They would not be eligible for the Stewarts?—It is rather an expensive institution, and besides they are not insane.

17047. Dr. Brogan.—About your lunatics generally?—I am strongly of opinion they ought to be removed; the accommodation is not of all what it ought to be in them, and there is no chance of proper exercise or education for those who are able for it. They are in a bad way. They ought certainly to be removed to a lunatic asylum.

17048. What about consumptives?—They should certainly be separated.

17049. CHAIRMAN.—A sanatorium?—A sanatorium, either provincial or—

17050. According to the requirements of the district?—Yes; their views must be met to a certain extent, because if they are asked to go too far they won't go. We have the Catholics and Protestants separated, and they are scattered still more in the present hospital, the four or five acres. I don't know how many are in the Catholic hospital. We have no means of separation in the Protestant hospital.

17051. Is it fair to the other inmates to have them exposed to the contagion?—We separate them as much as we can; they are not isolated, but they are washed as much as they can be. Their clothing is regularly looked after.

17052. It is the religious difficulty which exposes the rest of the Protestants to the infection?—That is the position. I don't know how it is to be got over.

17053. Dr. Brogan.—Do you try to separate them in the ward?—As far as I can I do.

17054. CHAIRMAN.—They are in a small room at the end of the ward?—They are in the same room; on the female side I had a room, but it was taken for idiots. I tried to get the end of one of the other wards, but I could not acquire it.

17055. Dr. Brogan.—The Guardians had that said discussion?—They had, I believe; but I did not get it.

17056. CHAIRMAN.—If you were considering this question apart from any religious difference, I suppose you would put those consumptive patients in with the other consumptive patients of the house?—Perhaps so.

17057. Is it not just on account of the religious question you are exposing all the other Protestants to the risk of infection?—That is so; the Protestants in that one ward—it is a large ward, a fine ward, one of the best wards in the North Union—are very well watched, still the sooner something is done the better.

Dr. Brogan.—If you got a small infirm ward adjoining it would remedy it.

17058. CHAIRMAN.—Or even if you gave up the religious classification the danger of infection would vanish?—Yes.

17059. Owing to your crowded condition it is just a question whether the rest of the Protestants are to be exposed to the infection of phthisis, or whether patients who have phthisis are to be exposed to the danger of having their religious convictions damaged with it?—If I could get the end of any ward, I thought the matter before the board.

17060. Dr. Brogan.—There is nothing to hinder it being carried out?—Nothing, except the immense overcrowding; no department can spare twenty yards of space.

17032. They have an institution outside to which they send patients at night?—It makes no difference; we are always crowded up again.

17033. Mr. MURKIN.—When the good weather comes, won't you get some relief?—Some little relief, but the old people are there. I had them counted the other day, and I think there were nearly old women alone in bed the whole day on a hospital diet. Of course, that won't be so bad in the summer time, but it shows the condition we are in.

17040. If the Guardians were empowered to board out these feeble old people with neighbouring unions, would not that be all right?—It would; that is a deal; but something must be done.

17041. Dr. BROWN.—You are so built round in the North Union you cannot extend the buildings?—You cannot do anything.

17042. Mr. MURKIN.—Unless by elevating the building?—If they built two towers on the top of the main building, holding six or eight beds on each side, that would do for the Protestant phthisis cases.

Dr. BROWN.—But that is only a temporary arrangement, and it would be a pity to go to a large expenditure for a temporary arrangement.

Mr. CORRELL.—They have no room to build. They were obliged to get land from the asylum for some recent buildings.

Witness.—I would approve of Mr. McDonnell's idea of the sick infirm being on the South side, and the North ought to be big enough for the rest. I think it would be better than the sex separation; I would have all the hospitals together.

17043. Dr. BROWN.—One apothecary would do!—Dr. FETTER.

Yes.

17044. It would be a saving of staff?—I think it should be worked more economically after a time.

17045. And more efficiently, too?—I think so; certainly a better classification.

17046. CHAIRMAN.—The hospital of both Dublin unions is almost altogether a chronic hospital?—Very largely, not altogether. We get in bronchitis and pneumonia and accident cases.

17047. Not many?—Not many accident cases; but sometimes, if the other hospitals get crowded up, they will have to pass the cases on.

17048. The hospitals are mainly, almost altogether, chronic?—They would be, in the main.

17049. Such hospitals are necessary in a large city like Dublin?—We could not do without them. We get people sent up from the country who have got money to pay their fare, sent from other hospitals to us.

17050. You think there are enough general hospitals in Dublin?—It is the hospital for all Ireland; they come there from everywhere.

17051. Except Belfast?—I think I dressed a man's head in Jesus-street Hospital who was hit by a bullet in the riots at Belfast some time ago. He took the first train to Dublin.

Dr. CALES POWELL examined.

17052. CHAIRMAN.—We have had a good many of the Guardians giving evidence to-day on the question of the amalgamation of unions; that affects, of course, the housing and the classifying of the sick a good deal. Have you considered the question of amalgamation from that point of view?—I have, in connection with the Dublin unions; although a great number of improvements have been carried out within the past fourteen or fifteen years, still, every little improvement was practically only a patch on a very bad foundation. In the North Dublin Union, practically every plot in the place is defectively constructed.

17053. Even including your own hospital?—It is very good, but there are a great many defects in it.

17054. Such as the passage being on the wrong side?—In the first place, it is surrounded by large, high walls. There are bad sanitary arrangements.

17055. It was built at a time before sanitary arrangements were attended to?—There were no sanitary arrangements supplied when it was being built. At present, in the North Dublin Union, the area is about eight acres, and there are 2,800 people housed on it, including hospital cases. In connection with the sick people, I would strongly advocate a joint district hospital for the whole city of Dublin, the North and South Unions.

17056. Where would you have that?—There is no chance of it in the North Union.

17057. So you are driven to the South?—And I don't know, except you cleared all the healthy people out of the South, that you would have room there for a hospital.

17058. That is what Mr. McDonnell suggested to-day? If you would separate the hospital altogether from the main, I would advocate pay wards; no matter how little a patient pays, very often it is only a week, yet it is something.

17059. It is up to a good deal?—It is up to a good deal.

17060. The people feel more a privilege they have to pay a little for?—I think so; they don't value it at present in the majority of cases.

17061. We found that at Bonmahon and Linsinn, in the county infirmaries, they get a substantial revenue each year from small sums?—Quite so. Then the nursing of the union hospitals at present is certainly very defective.

17062. You have not enough of nursing hands?—The inmate helpers there should not be in hospital wards under any conditions.

17063. Have they to be employed to do some nursing duties at present?—They have to attend on the nurses, for instance. In the female Catholic hospital, where the nurse are, you have each man on a landing having charge of fifty beds; she is supposed to nurse them and give them medicine; that would be quite impossible under the present arrangements. Of course, in a large number of cases, they are chronic, but still they are getting medical treatment, and require attention. Then there is not proper classification at present in the union hospitals.

17064. As regards disease or character?—Of acute cases in the female hospital of the North Dublin Union, there are about 200 patients there, there are about forty-five of them acute. I hold it is a needless expense, and you are taking up space which should be allotted to acute cases, in having these old, feeble chronic cases in the hospital at all.

17065. Where else would you have them; you have forty-five acute, could they be on one of the floors?—We have them in the wards in the hospital of which I have control at present. I have the acute surgical in one ward and the medical in another ward, but they are in the one building, and under the same nursing. I have all the chronic cases, but not in the same wards.

17066. Mr. MURKIN.—What would you suggest?—That all the acute cases in each hospital should be separated from the chronic cases.

17067. CHAIRMAN.—That you have done?—Well, I have done it as far as the wards go, but they are under the same nursing; they should not be seen in the same building.

17068. Mr. MURKIN.—You would make them distinct in nursing and building?—I would; it would not entail so much expense; they don't require the same hospital diet or nursing.

17069. CHAIRMAN.—That you would be able to carry out with more economy if they were all transferred to the South Dublin buildings?—I believe so.

17070. You could sub-classify there?—I could.

17071. Dr. BROWN.—You have your consumptive cases separated?—I have, but they are in that building; they are separated by a landing.

17072. How many have you?—In the female Catholic ward there are twenty or twenty-one.

17073. Practically the ward is full?—It is full.

17074. CHAIRMAN.—About the saving of their food; can you not, as a matter of fact, give the acute at present such diet as they require, and the not acute cases such diet as they need?—We have to give the chronic cases hospital diet.

17075. You can diet each patient according to his requirements?—I can, as far as the hospital diet goes.

17076. How many hospital diets have you got?—There must be eight or ten. I use three or four of them, with extras afterwards.

Mr. MURTAGHAN.—And many of these 200 could do with a less expensive diet than the acute—I believe so.

17072. CHAIRMAN.—Then even the cheapest of your diets—I believe it would be cheaper to have them on infirm diets.

17073. And you could put them on infirm diet—I believe so, if there was a proper system of classification.

17074. But even as it stands, you could give direction for such dietary for certain patients—I could, but not in the hospital.

17075. Why could you not do it in the hospitals?—It is against the regulations.

17076. The regulations are elastic enough to meet that?

Dr. BIGGER.—You can make another dietary. The hospital dietary is only a matter for convenience sake, a matter of book-keeping; you are not bound to it; you do change it by adding extras.

17077. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Still, you would see an advantage in having a separation of the acute from the chronic?—Certainly.

17078. Both in the matter of nursing and dietary?—I believe so.

17079. CHAIRMAN.—You have them separated as regards wards—I have; but they are in the one building, with the same nurses.

17080. Dr. BIGGER.—You think if there was amalgamation you could have an acute hospital for the two unions?—I believe so; and I would strongly advocate a school for nursing.

17081. CHAIRMAN.—Would you have a sufficient variety of cases for the instruction of nurses?—We have a larger variety of cases in the North Dublin Union than in any hospital in Dublin.

17082. Of acute cases?—Yes, every kind of acute. Of course, we have not fewer there.

17083. Surgical?—Plenty of surgical cases. There is a good deal of operative work done there.

17084. Many major operations?—I have done obstetrical hernias there.

17085. That is a thing you had to do in a hurry, but if you had a big operation you would send them down to the Richmond?—No; I have sent nothing out since I got the operating room; we have the place fitted up very well. In dealing with consumptives, I consider no consumptives should be admitted to the union hospital.

17086. Or to any general hospital?—Or to any general hospital. And, speaking generally of this disease, the death rate from it is something frightful.

17087. Without any actual precautions at all being taken?—Practically no effort at all being taken. The death rate from tubercular disease is increasing every year in the Dublin registration area. For the year 1902 the death rate was 46.9 per 10,000, while all the infectious diseases put together was only about eight or nine per 10,000; still, there is really no serious effort made to check it, and cases have come under my observation, members of the same family, where they have really one contracted it from the other; no doubt in my mind about it. To deal with that, I would certainly advocate a sanatorium for the whole North and South Dublin Union for all consumptives, and I would advocate that the disease be notifiable compulsorily.

17088. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Don't you think that will arouse opposition?—Everything will arouse opposition.

17089. CHAIRMAN.—You think it necessary in the interests of public health?—Very necessary.

17090. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—But it is such a strong step?—I don't consider that a disease which is accountable for such a death rate as 46.9 per 10,000 of the inhabitants—I don't consider it would be a strong step to make such a disease compulsorily notifiable, when all the other infectious diseases put together are accountable only for eight or nine. I would not say a strong step, but a very justifiable step.

17091. CHAIRMAN.—People used to have a great objection to the notifying of that disease, because it was regarded as an hereditary disease, and they did not wish to have a family trait announced, but now it is recognised not to be hereditary?—Yes.

17092. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Don't you think advocates of notification would have to make a stronger case than they have made up to the present to get Parliament to assent to that change?—Very little attention at all has been paid to tuberculosis: the people have not been educated on it. The public health authorities have taken no steps to put the matter in a proper form before the people. Imbeciles, epileptics, and harmless lunatics, I would advocate that they would be sent to the district asylums, but in different departments; and in advocating that, I believe it would be about the cheapest way to deal with it, because at present they really get no treatment in unions, they are simply housed and fed; they have no work; and when they go into the unions, instead of its tending to improve them, they get worse and worse from their surroundings. Children in unions is another matter of which I have some practical experience. I consider that all children should be boarded out.

17093. CHAIRMAN.—Have you considered what would be the youngest age at which one might safely board out children?—I have. My experience of women in the North Dublin Union Workhouse tends to show that in the majority of cases it is impossible to make them take any kind of proper care, and, therefore, I would advocate that they should be separated at an earlier age than at present. We wean them at about ten months; then they are separated at two years.

17094. Are many of the children in your workhouse bottle-fed?—A great number.

17095. I suppose you consider it would not be safe to send them out to be bottle-fed in the country?—So right off.

17096. Have you heard of any inquiries that have been held showing the danger of that?—I don't think there would be any danger.

17097. An inquiry held by Dr. Bigger in the South Dublin Union some little time ago?—I did; but they are isolated cases.

17098. Dr. BIGGER.—The death rate was over 50 per cent.—What age were they then?

17099. Children under a year old, mostly under six months?—The death rate from infants at that age amongst the poor people is an enormous death rate in the city.

CHAIRMAN.—This would be outside Dublin.

17100. Dr. BIGGER.—These were boarded out, as boarded in the city at all. Your death rate, I know, is pretty high in the North Dublin Union?—It is very hard to calculate.

17101. But it is not more than 30 per cent.—I would not say so; but children are admitted there practically dying, and you cannot calculate the death rate.

17102. CHAIRMAN.—You would board them out at as early an age as can safely be done?—Quite so; and I would advocate that the Guardians have power, on the advice of their medical officers, that the children should be sent out at whatever age they think fit. In the North Dublin Union at present there are some of girls; they come up from the country with illegitimate children; they are admitted from the Rotunda Hospital; and the Guardians have no power to send them back. There are twenty-eight unmarried women in the nursery, and eighteen or twenty are from the country, mothers of illegitimate children; it is impossible to manage them.

17103. Cannot the lady Guardians manage them?—I don't think anybody can manage them. The men have control of them, but they are very glad to get rid of their children, most of them.

17104. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Have you any suggestion to make in regard to them?—I would suggest that the Guardians have power, in every case getting admission to the union to send them back to their own country, and not alone these women, but all people getting admission to unions from other unions. Guardians should have power to send them back. There must be some hundreds in the North Dublin Union; I believe that is really the source of the overcrowding in the place; they are people outside the union.

17105. Would you admit girl-mothers to workhouses?—Oh, no; I would not have any children at all then or the mothers.

17106. CHAIRMAN.—Do you think they would be better in a separate institution?—They would.

17107. Dr. BIGGER.—You get a larger proportion than you should get of that class on account of your proximity to the Rotunda?—Yes; they come deliberately up.

17108. CHAIRMAN.—I presume from the Coombe they go to the South?—Yes, but I have known cases to come from Kingsbridge direct to the North Union—they come from Cork and Kerry and Limerick. In the Coombe Institution you have up to 600 children, but that is a place where I would advocate technical instruction for these children; they are really doing nothing at present, practically nothing, and I believe they are kept there until they are fifteen.

17115. Not fitted for domestic service?—Not fitted for anything; and I would strongly advocate technical instruction.

17116. We have had evidence to-day from Mr. Goggin that the after-life of these children is very successful?—Well, numbers of them have come back into the North Union.

17117. You come across big numbers of them?—I have known other institutions in the city that they get admission to afterwards.

17118. Dr. Bosman.—Which class do you refer to?—Females.

17119. To the ones brought up in Calver School or boarded out?—Brought up in Calver School.

17120. Have you found many of the class that have been boarded out coming back?—Some, not very many. I believe the boarding out is the best.

17121. Mr. MURKIN.—You think it is only right and proper that these girls should be instructed in domestic economy and doing household duties?—Certainly.

17122. Is not that being done at present?—The mass have not proper facilities there for training. I would have hospitals separated from the unions; I believe that these hospitals should be managed by the committees, and the medical staff should have representation, and that would tend to economy and better working.

17123. Dr. Bosman.—Why do you suggest that?—At present, in arrangements or re-arrangements in the hospital, the medical staff are not in touch with the board; in general hospitals they are.

17124. CHAIRMAN.—Are there any public hospitals anywhere—county infirmaries, or any of these institutions supported out of the rates—on which the medical staff are members of the governing bodies?—Well, there are institutions partly supported out of the rates that the medical staff are on; we have not at present the privilege of being present; I have experience of that.

17125. Dr. Bosman.—Do you think, after all, it would rather prevent friction than cause it?—Certainly; I believe so.

17126. You would understand each other better?—Quite so; and it would be a great help to the governing body.

17127. CHAIRMAN.—So few doctors could spare time to sit through a long board meeting?—It would be only a matter of sitting for the time the hospital business was on.

17128. Dr. Bosman.—For that reason you think the administration should be somewhat separated from the general administration?—I believe the administration of the hospitals should be separated altogether from the workhouse, even if the present workhouse in Dublin are left as they are; I believe the hospitals should be under separate management.

17129. Mr. Carroll.—With regard to these pauper students, do they sleep in the wards where they are attending to nurses?—There is no one sleeping in the wards but patients.

Mar. 26, 1900
Dr. Caleb Powell

Mr. ROBERT MCGOWAN, F.R.C.S., examined.

17130. CHAIRMAN.—Now we would like to hear your views?—Well, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, there was a committee of our board, the North Union, appointed, and they had a consultation about the queries that came addressed to us, and they came to certain conclusions, which were placed before the board, and the board approved of them, so I am merely reiterating the conclusion they came to.

17131. Mr. Carroll.—The Commissioners have this memorandum as to the proceedings of your board before them?—Quite so; I am entirely in favour of the amalgamation of the two unions; we recommend that for all purposes, except for management. We go in entirely for equalising the rates.

17132. CHAIRMAN.—How could you have any amalgamation if you had separate management?—Well, we could classify the inmates very much better.

17133. Mr. Carroll.—As I understand, your idea was that the County Council would collect the rate of the two unions when you furnished the account?—Quite so.

17134. CHAIRMAN.—You mean to say, contrary to all the evidence given hitherto from the North Dublin, which was in favour of absolute amalgamation and the transfer of all the sick to one side or of the one set to one side of the river, that you would only go in for amalgamation to the extent of having amalgamation of expenses?—The principal object would be to equalise the rates.

17135. And you would have the two Boards of Guardians meet still?—I don't suppose you would.

17136. Then it would be amalgamation, of course?—Amalgamation certainly. We recommend the removal, if possible, of the imbeciles and epileptics and consumptives, and that would give us a good deal of room. We are entirely congested; I need not tell you that on night acres to have 2,500 people we are entirely congested.

17137. Mr. Carroll.—Are you in favour of the answer to No. 4 query as to out-door relief?—We certainly require more powers with regard to the extension of out-door relief. We certainly would be anxious to relieve persons out of employment, with families depending on them, and having no means of subsistence, so that their little homes should not be broken up.

17138. Mr. Carroll.—Mr. McDermott gave evidence to-day that that should be subject to a labour test—that the able-bodied men who are out of employment should have employment given to them, and be paid for it?—Yes.

17139. And they should not go to get out-door relief unless they were willing to work?—Quite so; the Guardians should have discretionary power to pay the man for a limited time.

17140. CHAIRMAN.—Did your committee make any estimate as to what would be the probable expenditure under such increased powers?—Well, the valuation of the union is £266,000.

17141. Yes, but how much would you be likely to spend on additional out-door relief if such additional powers were given?—I don't know.

Mr. Carroll.—As far as I am instructed, I don't think they have made any estimate.

Mr. O'Neill.—No, they did not.

Witness.—Certainly, I would recommend that the children out in Calver should be taught some technical knowledge, to be of advantage to them when they are taken out to farmers, for instance. I have known cases where boys were brought out from the union, and they were of service to the farmers, and they were assimilated to the population around. They got married, and even reared up families.

17142. Mr. Carroll.—Do you go to the extent of saying they should be taught trades?—Trades; no; but something in the way of the Technical Board; they could be taught the elements, for instance, without actually going into trades.

17143. As regards the girls, I suppose they should be taught?—Domestic economy, certainly; I have known several of these girls taken out to farmers' places, and they were certainly very valuable; they were taught to be helpful, and they cooked fairly well.

17144. CHAIRMAN.—Where were they taught cooking?—In the convent at Calver; I have known cases where they were appreciated very highly. In going over the accounts with the clerk I was struck very much; in 1894 I found the rating was 2s. in the £, and now twenty years after we are less, though we have something like 800 more inmates.

17145. The valuation of the union has increased enormously?—Yes; I suppose that is the explanation.

17146. You have got in Clontarf and Drumcondra?—That is true.

17147. And the valuation of the city property is up a good deal?—Yes.

17148. Did you see whether there was much diminution, if any, or was there an increase in the amount spent by the Guardians under the Poor Law? There was not much difference, I gather from what you say, in the rate, but was the expenditure a good deal higher?—I think it was something like £28,000.

17149. What was it twenty years ago?—£28,000 odd.

Mr. Eugene M. Gough.

Apr. 24, 1894
Mr. Eggar
Mr. Gough

Mr. O'Neill.—About the same thing, and it struck me very forcibly; the valuation has gone up over a third.

Witness.—We are told in certain quarters that we are not economic in our dealings, but this would rather show that we are, and the inmates are better treated, I am sure.

Mr. JAMES CHOLLEN, x.p., p.l.c., examined.

Mr. James
Chollen.

17150. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the Corporation as well as of the union?—I am, sir; the principal thing that I just want to say is I was present when Dr. Powell was giving his evidence, and it is with regard to the women coming from the country districts. When the unions were first organised railways were not in existence, and this thing could not happen to the extent that it has now, because there are facilities given to this class of people, and people interested in these women may promise them anything, and get them on the railway and pay their fare to Dublin.

17152. Would you recommend that the Guardians should have power to send these women back?—That is what I am coming to.

17153. CHAIRMAN.—Or charge the country districts?—I think the legitimate thing to be done would be to send these people back; although it might not be a reasonable thing to do, yet, in justice, I think it should be done, because the men who are guilty of bringing these women to this state would be very likely to be got at in some shape or form, but when they come here they remain a burden on us, and we have to support themselves and their children, and very often they go out and come back in the same condition; it is a horrifying thing; and it is degrading on the men of Dublin to have to support other people's misconduct in other districts.

17154. Mr. MURKIN.—The suggestion has been made in other places that the law should be altered; I think it ought to be altered; the same as in Scotland.

17155. You think the Guardians ought to get the same power?—We ought to get the same power that they have in England or Scotland; they can send them to us from England or Scotland, but we have no power to send them to England or Scotland, or anywhere else. No later than last week we had a case from England. I don't think it is right at all. As I said before, the railways were not in existence when the workhouses were established, and there are facilities given now that were not in existence then, and it is made easy for these people to transgress in this way. It might be well to give us power to charge the country unions from which these people come, but the thing would be to give power to have the law altered.

17156. To enable you to recover the expense of sending back the people?—Yes, sir. I am just as much interested in the one union as the other, and, with regard to amalgamation, I am entirely in favour of amalgamating the two unions; I am a ratepayer in both, and have been a member of both. And I think that it is an unfair thing too, that because the Liffey divides us we should have to pay a larger poor rate on the North side than on the South side, although we are for the poorer district. The error dividing us should not, I think, be the means of assessing us more rates than we would have to pay if the two unions were amalgamated, and, along with that, we would have other advantages if we had amalgamation with the South Union. We cannot, no matter how well disposed we are, or what intentions we have, we cannot do anything more for the benefit of the deserving poor on the North side than we have already done. We are built in, as you are in this room; we are surrounded by the Midland Railway and the Lanesby Asylum and the hospital; we cannot move; we cannot enlarge, and it is impossible to improve the place.

17157. By amalgamation improvements at the South would relieve the North Workhouse?—Yes; because they have a good deal of space in the South Union;

Mr. O'Neill.—We had 2,700 odd inmates in an average for that year; now we have 3,300 in an average; but our contracts are much cheaper than then; our ration is about 6d. per lb.; but, 6d.; stacking pieces, 5d.; they were much dearer then.

but with as every room or place we put up we are making the place more congested and worse. I don't think there is a rod of ground in the place that is not covered with houses, and that is not as it should be; no matter how solid our medical men may be, or what attention they may give, it is impossible to have the place in the state we would wish to have it. With regard to the diet, I think the dietary should be the same in the North and South; there should be a fixed dietary in both unions.

17158. CHAIRMAN.—By amalgamating them you will have that?—It would follow from amalgamation, but if there is no amalgamation I think it is a mistake to have different dietary in one from the other, because the people will go from one to the other, and I would wish to say also that my opinion is that when men come to fifty or sixty or sixty-five there should not be any question about their treatment or food; they should get what was best to prolong their life. I don't think they require medical treatment—that is the infirm people. I think they should be all in a place by themselves, and should be allowed to live as if they were in their own homes; I don't think there should be any restrictions on them when they come to that time of life.

17159. You would give them privileges?—I certainly would; I don't think the laboring man or artisan who has worked to sixty or sixty-five years should be turned into the ordinary workhouse with contents of the city.

17160. You would give him privileges in going about?—I would; and I think there should be a home or house somewhere—a distance from the workhouse—that would not be classed as a workhouse, where the men should be allowed just to live out their lives.

17161. That might make a good deal of expenditure?—I don't think it would. There would be no medical men required or nurses, except one or two to superintend the place; these people are healthy, the same as most of us perhaps when we arrive at that age; we would not require much attendance, but to get food that would suit our age. I don't think it would cost a lot at all; there would not be a nurse or medical man required; it would be only deans that would be coming on these men. With regard to housing on, I certainly think it would be the best system—far better than retaining children in schools or institutions. I think they are far better to mix with the community, and they would be more likely to become useful citizens. I find in my experience that a good many of these children brought up in schools very often turn out very clever vagabonds; some of them, at all events. But when they are sent out amongst the small farmer class they are very likely to be amalgamated with the community and become useful citizens.

17162. Mr. MURKIN.—Owing to the force of example?—Yes; that has a good deal to do with it, and in the North Dublin Union we have no means of teaching them trades or businesses, because we are too much confined and cramped for space, but it is quite different in the South Union; it is a large industry, and they do admirable work there in the way of weaving and shoemaking and tailoring. If we were amalgamated with the South I believe it would be for the general benefit of the community both of the ratepayers and of the poor; that is my firm conviction. There is another statement I would wish to make, that is that the Guardians should have power, if they so desired, where men were industrious and had worked well during their life, to give them a small allowance, not to be called out-door relief, but by some other name, so long as it would not be very much over what it would cost in the union, because I know charitable organizations do a good deal to keep people up by giving them a small sum weekly. And if that could be approved of by law you would keep a good many people out of the union that are in it now—something like a small pension to men when they would come to sixty-five years of age.

Mar. 24, 1894

Mr. James
Coolidge.

17153. CHAIRMAN.—You know the original idea of the Poor Law was that no man should starve or be in danger of starving or be destitute, and that relief should be only given under these circumstances; you would wish to enlarge the law so as to enable the Boards of Guardians to supplement the means of those who had not sufficient for their comfort—I would; that is my idea.

17154. As a ratepayer, would you be afraid of the consequences of that?—I would not if there was proper supervision.

17155. What would you call good supervision?—To get an honest man at the head of the department if you can get him.

17156. As a relieving officer?—Something that way.

17157. The relieving officer would have the power of bringing these cases before the Board of Guardians; I don't know whether in your Board of Guardians the application for relief at all comes the Guardians for their relief?—Sometimes you will meet cases if you are any way active going through the district; you will know of cases.

17158. Apart from that, do poor people, either by themselves or through their friends, ask the Guardians to support applications for relief?—Not that I am aware of; there are rules that the relieving officer cannot deviate from.

17159. I am aware that your relief is very tightly administered in Dublin, and it is all given in kind, but in making your recommendations you have only in view the city of Dublin and relief in kind?—That is it; but what I would be glad to see is where a man has been known to be an honest working man all his life—say he is up to fifty or sixty years of age—that that man should, as a matter of right, get relief either inside or outside, and if he chooses to be outside he could do with less than inside. You would be surprised what they do with a few shillings—these people—if given at the proper time; he should have, at least, what would keep him from starving and enable him to live outside the house, and that would do away with a good deal of the congestion in the workhouse. With regard to lunatics and epileptics and idiots, they should be treated, I believe, in a different place from the workhouse altogether, and the Guardians, I think, should be empowered to pay a certain amount to any institution which would be different, whatever institution was established. There is one about to be established by Lady Meath; she is writing, I think, to establish a home provided the public will support the people in it, and I think it would be a very wise thing for Boards of Guardians to get rid of these people if it possibly could be done, because they cannot be treated in the North Dublin Union; it is too crowded; they have not a place for them. With regard to the medical officers, I think it is very unfair that a medical officer should, at the end of his life, be dependent upon a Board of Guardians for his retiring allowance. I think a medical officer, if he has served a reasonable time—the same as any other official in most public institutions—should be entitled, as a matter of right, to get his compensation or pension. In some instances if he displaces the Guardians or some of their friends they may come down on the medical officer and try to injure him. I think that should be put beyond their power.

MRS. EGAN, P.L.O., EXAMINED.

17160. CHAIRMAN.—Your views that you wish to give us are chiefly in reference to the boarding out of children?—Yes; I think Mr. O'Neill, the Chairman of the County Council, carried almost all I had to say, except one or two points. There is one thing in connection with the children reared in the barracks schools that I have always deplored very much, and that is they are all right enough as long as they are there, and, if they are very good boys and girls, when they go out I suppose they are right enough, but most of us are a little wayward, and the children may lose their situation, and then they have no place to return to but the workhouse; they see a home where they can stay a week or a month until they get a situation, but I say these children from Cahir, when they lose their situation or become ill, they have nowhere to return to except the workhouse; they look on it as their home.

17171. It is a refuge that they know their way to?—And after one or two visits they lose their whole sense of shame, if they have any; but I don't think they have when they are reared at Cahir; they return there again.

17172. Is it that which makes you rather inclined to prefer the boarding-out system?—That is one reason, but not the sole reason. The boarding-out system I know very intimately; I have been living in Dublin since I was thirty years, and when I lived out at Buncy I knew the children; it was quite easy to know them, because they were glad in a certain way, and I knew them now to be respectable men and women who have got married, and they told good situations, and in some cases I know where little boys that I knew as children are the support of the old people who reared them.

17173. Dr. BROOKS.—Do you find many of the boarded-out children come back to the workhouse?—None; I never knew of one; they get absorbed into the population.

17174. Is it a common thing to see children that have been reared in Cahir coming back?—Frequently; there is scarcely an Admission Board that they don't come, and some of the boys have developed into tramps.

17175. And have these children been for years in Cahir?—Oh, yes; reared there.

17176. What happens to the girls?—The girls return there, and some are inmates of the workhouse now, though they are quite young women.

17177. You really think because they have been brought up in an institution that they look upon the workhouse as the same institution?—Exactly; they have no other idea of home.

17178. Although the institution may be separated by miles it is still an institution?—Yes; they have no home to return to; once they get a situation from Cahir and lose it they must return to the workhouse.

17179. Was it ever suggested that there should be a home in Dublin where boys that are earning only a few shillings a week could go and sleep and be looked after?—Yes; there is such a one here in Abbey-street.

17180. Are they really as well looked after?—I believe so; I have attended the annual meetings and heard the reports, and from some observations I made myself I think they are well looked after; but these boys reared in an institution like Cahir are not in touch with the world outside; they know nothing of these places; they have only one little line of thought—they are in the world and not of it. They are completely isolated from the outside world; I don't think they ever heard of these things.

17181. You really think they feel awkward when they mix with other children of the same age?—Certainly; they are quite new to the world outside. There is one great difficulty with us in the North Dublin Union; the children of these tramps—these in and out children—who come in one week and stay a day or two, and these are others who are even worse, whose parents come in for a night and go out in the morning and take them out begging and street-singing, and come back there again about eleven o'clock at night; poor half-starved children; these we can do nothing for at present. If the law could be amended so that we could take these children and compel them to be sent to an industrial school there might be a chance.

17182. CHAIRMAN.—Or boarded out?—Boarding out won't do for them; if you sent them ten or twenty miles from Dublin these parents would tramp after them.

17183. Or fifty or fifty?—Any distance; they think nothing of walking down to the King's County or even Galway.

17184. Would you be in favour of capturing these people—these tramps?—I am afraid they cannot be reclaimed; I would not attempt to do so.

Apr. 24, 1904.

Mrs. Egan.

17185. They could not exercise the habit if they were locked up!—But when they were released they would exercise it again.

17187. Well, lock them up again?—Yes, if you could keep them locked up; but if you capture the children young they could be reclaimed.

17188. If you put them into one of these institutions won't they gravitate back again in the way you have described so graphically?—In an industrial school they are not so closely kept in as in Cebra; in an industrial school they are more in touch with the outside world.

17189. In what way?—They are brought out more into the world; the instruction they get is of a superior class; it is broader.

17190. Would they not be instructed in the same books and hours and time-table?—No; I think not. I have been in Arizona, and find the boys were more intelligent. They teach them agricultural work, and make good assistant gardeners of them. I have known many boys who came from Arizona and went to gentlemen's places under good gardeners, and ultimately became gardeners themselves.

17191. Mr. MURPHY.—I doubt if in an ordinary industrial school there is an opportunity for such teaching—I know in Arizona they do.

17192. Dr. BRONER.—Have you known any of that class to go back to the workhouse?—If they are straight-limbed and strong coming out from an industrial school, if they don't settle down to regular pursuits, they become soldiers or sailors; they don't go back to the workhouse. It must strike anyone who goes to a large workhouse that the main population of both men and women, especially on the men's side, are those half-grown creatures, stunted in mind and body, who are never good for anything, and after a while drift back to the workhouse—people with no spirit or strength, wrecked in body and mind, and poor and stunted. If you look around any day you will see that class around you. I have often observed it myself, and especially on the men's side, but everyone agrees that the industrial school boys, if they are sound and strong, if they don't settle down to regular pursuits, become either sailors or soldiers, and go away.

17193. CHAIRMAN.—You prefer seeing them brought up as agricultural labourers and kept in the country?—Certainly; and when you board out a workhouse boy I think they make very excellent agricultural labourers. Mr. Maurice Butler, who is one of the oldest Guardians in the union, told me that the best agricultural labourers and the best working men's wives around the Blackrockdown district were the boys and girls he had known boarded out from the union in his time, and I heard Mr. John Daly, of Baldoyle, say the same thing, and I have given my own experience that the boarding out is much better; I should not let them ever drift back to town, because there is too much temptation for them; they meet some one or other, that will bring them back into the old habits and vices.

Mr. O'Neill.—We have very few boarded out at present.

Witness.—Some of the older nurses in the North Dublin Union were not desirable; the children were good enough that they reared, but the houses were not what you would wish to place a child in; sometimes they had large families of their own of young children. As a rule all the new nurses are very desirable; they are middle-aged women, whose own daughters have got married, and they take a girl or two as company in the evening time, and send them regularly to school, and keep them neat and clean. Then an unmarried man and his sister will take a couple of boys or girls, and in all these cases they are very well looked after; in fact our nurses have improved very considerably within the last five years. There are very few now in which houses you would not be quite entitled to leave the children; in fact some of them are really ideal homes for children; I am quite pleased with all the new nurses, and Mr. Quigg, the relieving officer of the Baldoyle and Howth district, displays great discrimination in the selection of houses for children; they are almost all well looked after; the new nurses see a vast improvement on the old ones; the houses are more suitable, and a great many of the new labourer cottages are very nice and clean, and there is more accommodation and altogether a better tone about the place than in some of the older houses. But then there is another point—Miss Fitzgerald Kennedy recommends committees; I have discussed this matter with several people who have a local knowledge, and they say that they think the women would rather resent so many ladies coming in and out of their houses, they would regard them as busy-bodies, and very often the women who take up that kind of work are not the most desirable; they are not women who have any sympathy with the people, who are only what Mr. John Daly described as busy-bodies—people who have nothing else to do, and take this up to fill up their time. There is one point that must be borne in mind, that is that there is no one more keen to express sympathy and appreciate good manners than the Irish peasant, but they want to find it out for themselves; they don't want it to be forced on them. They don't want you to force it on them and impress them with your superiority; they will very soon find it out for themselves and express that feeling. You are not to rush in and assume that the whole place is your own; if you come in quietly and say "Good morning," and don't bustle about until they seem to realize the fact that you are there, they are very nice and polite, and give you every information, but if you go against the grain they become sulky; I find that sometimes with the relieving officers. These are things that must be always borne in mind in dealing with the people; they will follow a lead, but won't be driven; of course I am of the people, and have all my sympathies with the people, and know them thoroughly, and know the subject intimately. Now, Miss Fitzgerald Kennedy has complained of the clothing of our children.—

17194. I don't think you need mind going into that?—She says they are the worst clad children in Ireland; that is rather a sweeping statement.

Mr. JOHN O'NEILL, Clerk of the North Dublin Union, examined.

Mr. John O'Neill.

17195. CHAIRMAN.—Now, let us hear all about the agricultural grant?—Well, sir, in the year 1896 and coming on to 1897 I prepared the usual estimate of rates for the Guardians.

17196. And they adopted it, of course?—No, sir, they did not adopt it; the estimate that I thought would bring them through fairly for the year—that is the estimate of what rate we wanted to raise. Of course we had in view about £7,000 or £8,000 that we got from other grants.

17197. Take the lump sum?—£24,000.

17198. Did they reduce that?—The estimate was £24,860, and they reduced that to £24,142; that is a sum of £716 short of the estimate.

17199. Was that the usual procedure on their part; was it usual to cut down your rate a certain amount?—It was customary to take 1d. or 2d. off the clerk's estimate, but this was on the largest scale up to that time; in fact the North city rates never went below 2s. in the £; 2s. 2d. was about the usual sum that would bring the North city through, and an average of about 2s. 5d. or 2s. 6d. would be the average for the rural.

17200. What was the poundage they knocked off?—5d. in the £ was taken off.

17201. Mr. Carroll.—Has not your board suffered from that ever since?—In 1911, in the £ was the rate they struck that year for 1907-08, and they had to strike a rate of 5d. higher in order to meet the deficiency, which amounted at the end of the year to £8,000.

17202. CHAIRMAN.—You calculated on their knocking off a couple of pence, and they knocked off 5d.?—They knocked off 5d.; but it happened, unfortunately, to be the year 1898, which was taken as the standard year; if any other standard year was taken, or even that for expenditure, it would be fair enough. Under these circumstances the agricultural portion has been losing every year ever since £4,000 under the agricultural grant.

17203. Mr. MURPHY.—Did the Guardians place before the Local Government Board these exceptional circumstances?—They did, but they did not bring it forward until it was too late; the Act of Parliament was passed, and then they passed a resolution when they discovered that the standard year was fixed for 1898, and they went back on the figure, and the resolution was adopted by the board and sent on to the Local Government Board in case any amendment is made in the Act; they are very anxious, if it could be done, in making your recommendation.

17204. You would be anxious that this particular uniformity should be brought forward?—Yes; should be redressed.

Mr. Carroll.—It is a practical loss of $4,000 a year over stated.

17205. Dr. BRUCE.—That affects the whole union at present?—Yes; the agricultural part of the union.

17206. It is no relief to the city rates?—No; I mean that the rural district lost that year, say $2,000, consequently they would at present time lose $1,000 a year.

17207. Your total reduction of the rate was $7,000?—Yes, $7,340.

17208. CHAIRMAN.—You put down the loss to the rural district as $1,000?—I did; the loss every year since to the rural rates.

17209. Dr. BRUCE.—If your estimate had been passed it would have been in excess of the requirements?—No, sir, it would not.

17210. CHAIRMAN.—You always put on a little to be landed off?—I did not happen to put it on that year. I wanted to make it as close as I possibly could, because there were a certain number of members of the Board going out at the time and seeking re-election.

17211. Mr. Carroll.—Was not that the root of the whole thing?—Yes; the election was coming on in March, and they said they would make a trial to make the north city rate 3d. less than ever it was before. Next year they had to pay it up; it was 2d. 4d. The valuations of our union, there were various valuations given to you—

17212. CHAIRMAN.—I have got this year's—$400,343. The north city has increased very much, by $39,263 in the course of four years. Our demand was $53,567 for the north city, and I see the demand on the south side was $44,350, which leaves a very small difference.

17213. You heard Dr. M. Walter's suggestion. Do you think that that met the views of your Board of Guardians? He wanted to equalise the rates only on the county borough parts of the union, leaving out the townships and all the portions except the city?—I don't think that would do so well. The demand for the townships of South Dublin was $33,344; that leaves $18,000 altogether as their demand for the year, and our demand for the year was $22,362.

Mr. Carroll.—I don't think that sub-division would work well.

Witness.—I don't think it would.

17214. Mr. MURKIN.—What is the amount of your expenditure under out-door relief?—In 1903 the cost was $2,530; that is provisions, clothing and the very lowest scale of contract prices, because we bake our own bread, and have our own tea and sugar and meat at one-third less than we could purchase them for in the shops.

17215. CHAIRMAN.—So that they really get value for more than $2,000. If you give them cash for $2,000 they could not buy the goods you give them?—You would have to give them $3,000 to purchase that amount of goods.

17216. Mr. Carroll.—There is an increase in the number receiving out-door relief beyond that of last year?—Yes, there is a very great increase, 1,730 against 1,597. Our average cost with regard to provisions and clothing has gone down very considerably recently. It is only 2s. 7d. in the last abstract. It was 3s. 3d. for the corresponding period last year, and it was up to 4s. and over, but that was owing greatly to the economy with which the Guardians now receive and consider contracts, taking the smallest and lowest price of every tender; the meat and grocery tenders are sub-divided.

Mr. JOHN LONG, B.L.O., examined.

Mr. John Long.

I don't know whether I can add much to the information you have already received about the North Dublin Union.

17217. CHAIRMAN.—Anything you think has not been mentioned before?—The wind has been very well taken out of my sails already. I would like to say something on the question of amalgamation and a few other things. I am quite in agreement with all that has been said with reference to the amalgamation of the North and South Unions for various reasons; not that I believe it will impose any additional cost on the South, because I believe with greater economy and better management the rate will be reduced all round eventually. Our rates are coming down already; on the north side they are down a 1d. this year, and the expenditure has very much decreased. But I cannot know what argument could be used against amalgamation of both unions unless that it is the Liffey that divides us. I don't know any other argument. The people can pass to and fro; they can go to the south side if they choose. One night's residence on the south side will qualify them for the South Union, and one night's residence here will qualify for the North. We are obliged to admit them for being one night in Church-street, which is a great lodging-house street. I know there are many idle people who could be working, men who are more or less in relaxed circumstances, that make it a pleasure to go to the North for a while, and when the Guardians begin to get tired of them at the Admission Board, they go to the South, and vice versa, and I think there is a certain amount of abuse in connection with that system. There is one thing I would like to express on the gentleman present, and that is the great necessity of reducing, by these means or other, the fearful congestion in the North Dublin Union.

17218. Amalgamation is your remedy for that?—It would tend to reduce it, but there are other remedies I would suggest; the principal would be that a sanatorium should be provided for both North and South Unions, and in that institution I would remove the consumptives in the first instance, and it might be made available for convalescents. People are turned out of hospital before they are properly healed, and the result is when they go out they are not able to work. There is no place where the medical officer can send them to restore the body of the man, and the consequence is they leave the institution very weak and delicate and unable to work. If a sanatorium such as Balthorey could be dissolved and turned into an institution such as I suggest for the accommodation of these people, as convalescents and consumptives as well, and also as a district hospital for Balthorey, I think it would serve the three purposes very well, and it is not so far from the city, half an hour would bring a motor ambulance in and out. It is in a very fine part of the country, altogether isolated from buildings, or villages, or residences of any kind, and there is a fine breezy atmosphere in the district. One of the most difficult problems in connection with the North Dublin Union is the disposal of those women coming from the country.

17219. I think we have a full set of that?—My suggestion—I don't know what value it would be—would be, that there should be a State allowance to provide for them. The children whose mothers come up from the country should be boarded out, we cannot get rid of them; they refuse to go with their children.

17220. I don't think it would be a wise thing to ask for a State grant for illegitimacy in Ireland?—Well, who is to provide for these children? It would be unfair to the Guardians of the North Dublin Union to expect them to board them out.

17221. Mr. MURKIN.—How would it be to ask for further powers for the Guardians to recover from the putative fathers for the support of these children?—I always advocated that. I suggest that the supposed fathers should be made responsible, if possible, for the maintenance of their children; and even if the case should fall against them they should certainly be brought before the court as a warning to others, and I think the evidence of the mother, with the evidence of some others as to their keeping company, ought to be sufficient to establish a case. I mean in the case of a first child.

17222. Would not that be going a little too far?—Is not that the rule in England?

CHAIRMAN.—I should not think so.

17223. Mr. MURKIN.—The subject is so delicate that public opinion finds little expression, and more harm than good might come of intervention?—It is a great evil, and should be grappled with somehow; and it is a great injustice to the ratepayers of Dublin that they should have these people on the rates, and young girls well able to work cannot be got out of the place. As regards tramps, I don't think the evil is so great as some people imagine. There have always been tramps in Ireland, and there will always be poor people going about the country, but there should be a broad distinction drawn. The able-bodied tramps, I believe, are a great nuisance in the country and a great danger. I believe that these are people who, to a great extent blackmail and terrify the people as they go through the country.

17224. CHAIRMAN.—What would you do with them?—I would have them photographed, or something like that, at the various unions, and their names ought to be taken and given to the police, and the police should deal with them to a great extent—I mean the abominable criminal classes. They could be dealt with under the Vagrancy Act without further additional powers. I don't think they are very much trouble to the unions here in Dublin.

17225. There are some in the rural districts?—Yes; they cannot beg or blackmail here in Dublin very much. But we have the casual class, who are very frequent visitors to the house; but they cannot be dispensed with, because there will always be a labouring class in Dublin who cannot get employment and must be admitted for a night's shelter. They have to be placed two in a bed very frequently in the casual wards. Some short time ago we found one ward occupied during the night by seventy inmates that was intended for forty; the place was altogether over-congested. At that time we provided a house in the locality to remove some of the people out to—to accommodate forty people—that is a very objectionable practice to be sending 150 or 150 poor wretched women through the streets, morning and evening, to these places outside.

17226. Mr. MURKIN.—If the Guardians had power to board out their inmates, the Guardians in Dublin could arrange with unions in the country to take their inmates?—I think the congestion in the North Union would be very considerably reduced by amalgamation, and removing the harsher fraction to an auxiliary union in the country. I don't think they should be kept at all anywhere convenient to Dublin, and I think one large district union could accommodate a very large number of them. It makes little difference to these people what part of the country they are in. They have nobody to visit them, and by removing these people and removing the congestive ones, which are rather numerous in the house, and should never be left there at all—there is neither an accommodation for them in the North Union—you will very much relieve the house. There is one smaller place in the North Union which contains at night 150 males, and it is very low and dingy, and there are old wooden beds in it, and it is a miracle to see how it has escaped so long from fire. I feel very nervous, as a member of the Board, at its condition. There are no means of exit at one end, and if a fire broke out it would burn like a match-box; and I don't know that twenty people could be got safely out even through the windows. Then, again, there are several other sheds about the buildings, shutting out the light from the wards, which ought to be removed also. I have always considered that want of amalgamation between the two unions was a considerable loss to the ratepayers. These sheds cost £1,000 to erect, and they will have to be removed. They are not fit for habitation at all. There are a great many things to be said on behalf of amalgamation, but I always considered that one of the Co. Dublin unions—for I think there are too many in the country—could be dispensed with, and make it a nucleus for the people I have spoken of; and Ballyreagh I believe a very suitable place for that purpose, as well as using it as a hospital for the district.

Mr. W. C. CRIMMIN, Chairman of the South Dublin Board of Guardians, examined.

Mr. W. C.
Crimmin.

17227. CHAIRMAN.—You are the CHAIRMAN of the South Dublin Union?—Yes.

17228. You have had to listen to a great many arguments that you did not perhaps quite agree with?—Well, yes, sir; but still I did agree with a good deal of what I heard.

17229. What is your own view on the question of the amalgamation of the two unions?—I think it would be unfair to the ratepayers of South Dublin.

17230. If it meant an increased rate, but if it did not mean an increased rate, would you see any objection to that?—I would answer that by the deliberate answer of the Board of Guardians of the North Union in answer to Query 3: "We recommend the amalgamation of the North with the South Union for all purposes except management." My Board thoroughly agree that it would be impossible without amalgamation.

17231. I did not understand that answer, and asked several Guardians, who explained that by saying it did not mean anything but amalgamation, pure and simple?—You must take what they wrote. It seemed to me a thing that could not be done, and I voted against it, and we had a discussion with a good many Guardians, and it came to this, that they said what they were in favour of was amalgamation, pure and simple.

17232. Would you see any objection to amalgamation if there was no additional expense to the South?—Yes. It is not the expense I look into so much, it is the management of both institutions. How are you going to manage them, might I ask. You should have two masters, one clerk might do, but the amount of extra work you place upon him would certainly entitle him to 50 per cent. of an increase of wages; the same with the medical staff, and the same with the nursing staff.

17233. You mean to say amalgamation would not mean any saving in establishment charges?—No; none whatever.

17234. Assuming that, do you think there would be saving under any other head, people who go backwards and forwards from one union to another?—They are doing that at present.

17235. Do you think that would stop if you put it under one Board?—I don't think so.

17236. They could not go backwards and forwards; they would only have one place to go to?—At the same time, according to the evidence which I have heard here to-day, given by the Guardians of the North Dublin Union, what they call the roving population find no difficulty whatever in getting in there at any hour; we are altogether different.

17237. What is your latest hour for admission?—We don't let them in at all hours unless they have a ticket from the relieving officer, or give a good proof that they are destitute.

17238. I suppose very likely these people have tickets?—It does not appear, because no relieving officer would give a ticket to a man who had left that morning.

17239. The way they get it is they get it only in the morning and present it late in the evening?—Then the relieving officer is not doing his duty. He should ask the question where they slept last night.

17240. But they don't always give the right answer?—He ought to know if they are coming to him every day.

17241. Then you think there is more casual admission in the South Union than in the North?—I do believe that.

17242. And for that reason you would be unwilling to see the affairs of the South Union managed by a Board partly composed of the men of the North?—That is my chief reason. Our predecessors, Guardians who occupied the position we do, about forty years ago, devoted a great deal of capital expenditure to improve the buildings, and the ratepayers since have paid off those capital sums, and I think it would be unfair to call upon the ratepayers of the South Union now to contribute and pay a share of the capital expense of buildings of the North Union, which were erected in or twenty years ago.

17243. You think if any amalgamation did take place there ought to be a valuation of the property of both unions and due consideration given to that?—I would not go as far as that.

17244. You are aware that when there is amalgamation between unions at present, under the existing law, that these matters are all gone into?—Yes, I am sure they are; but we have been working for some years past for the purpose of improving all our departments, and especially our hospital department and infirmary department, and I say that if we were stopped now, by the introduction of a new body, from providing for the wants of our own people, it would be a great pity. Nor in mind that between all unions there is only an imaginary dividing line. I heard a good deal made of the river Liffey. There is only an imaginary line dividing the North Union from Dunsheaghlin and Ballyreagh Unions, and I say it would be just as much unfair to us, as it would be unfair to them, that the North Union should amalgamate with them. It would be unfair to the Guardians of Rathdown if we wanted to amalgamate with them.

17245. Mr. MURKIN.—Is not the interest of the citizens common in everything as regards the Poor Law?—Yes.

Mar. 24, 1904.

Mr. W. C. Coleman.

17294. Then why should it be unfair?—You must take into account that the municipal rate is confined to the borough; poor rate is a union rate.

17297. CHAIRMAN.—Would you be willing to have an equalisation of rates on the north and south sides of the city?—If it went that far I would, but I don't suppose it would.

17298. The proposal was made by Dr. McWalter, who is a member of both Boards. Your opponent would be making an argument against any amalgamation in any sense, anything that would disturb the existing state of affairs.—Unless you could close the workhouse. I would like to see every workhouse in Ireland done away with.

17299. Do you think you could go a long way towards closing the Dublin workhouse?—I could by substituting a small hospital in their place. I mean the Co. Dublin workhouse.

17300. I mean the city of Dublin?—You could not close them, there are too many inmates.

17301. There are almost all debilitated?—A good deal of them are sick; we have 1,300 supposed to be sick.

17302. Between the two unions you would have over 2,000 sick?—I am sure we would; that is disgusting.

17303. Really sick, I mean?—I think we are represented to have 2,000 sick; we have only about 250 who demand active medical treatment. The city hospitals treat as very well. We find from experience that they are only anxious and willing to take in all cases of serious illness, especially where medical aid would be of any avail. It is only where medical aid would be of no avail that they discharge them, and these are the cases we generally get.

17304. You look on your hospital as mainly a chronic hospital, and the acute cases are in the general hospital?—Yes, that is my experience. I would like to classify, to see three classes, but two in particular—the epileptics and the lunatics—taken out of our workhouse; and I would say that there is no department in our workhouse I have studied so closely as our lunatic department. We have done everything under the circumstances to relieve the lot of these afflicted creatures. We have them located in the most favoured, healthy, and cheerful positions available; they have allotted to them fairly large and spacious recreation grounds; they have heating pipes in the dormitories, so that the warmth can be received by each and all alike. On the female side there is a laundry, where a number of healthy patients are employed; another portion are engaged knitting and repairing clothes. On the male side there is land attached to the department, where a number of the healthy patients are employed, and we have sent out these a great number of the best-educated and selected inmates of the house, in order to show them how to do their work, and to show them good habits. We grow all the vegetables of the department in this ground. I consider this a great boon to these debilitated creatures, as it keeps their minds otherwise than dwelling on their sad state. I would venture to say our lunatic department is the best cared for of any of that kind in Ireland, and a reference to the reports of the Commissioners in Lunacy will prove my assertion; yet I consider this or any other workhouse a most unsuitable place for lunatics, so proper classification cannot be carried out, which is admitted by all authorities as most essential for the successful treatment of the insane. I think it is most improper to have imbecile children, able-bodied lunatics, however harmless, and those suffering from acute disturbances of the mind, sleeping together in the same dormitories, and using the same utensils and recreation ground. I am told that some of these healthy lunatics have very vicious and almost unspeakable habits, which must be very demoralising to the young, and I think equally so to the old, whose minds are weakened by disease. This state of affairs I think must continue as long as they are left in the workhouse, no matter how anxious the Guardians may be to remedy it, as there is not a sufficient number of each class in any one workhouse to have separate divisions and a separate staff of attendants in charge to each to look after their various wants, as existing in all asylums. Then we have also a few cases of phthisis streated amongst them, and we have no special arrangement whereby those could be isolated.

17305. Dr. Broome.—They have none in the Richmond?—However, taking it all round, I think the best thing I could do, and I think our Board is fairly unwise, is that these three classes should be removed. I have not exactly made up my mind where we should put them, but the conclusion to which I have come is that we should place them in some sort of an institution—call it a distinct asylum, if you like—but that institution should be built on a less expensive scale to those erected within recent years—plain buildings.

17306. CHAIRMAN.—Or you would take an empty workhouse if you got it?—Yes, it would suit admirably with a smaller staff, professional and otherwise; when I say otherwise I mean a staff of a workhouse who, for instance, would take a known lunatic or lunatics into a garden, and work with them and show them how to work. I don't believe in a staff of officials who are paid to keep their hands in their pockets, and look about and supervise, and do nothing for them, as they have in some of the institutions I know.

17307. Mr. McWalter.—You would have working officials?—Working officials, by all means, to show good example to the inmates; many well spent. The applicants are a class I would also like to see out, too; they are the only class that have not proper accommodation in our workhouse. I believe every Guardian in the union would like to see them out. We have about seventy altogether.

17308. What do you think should be done about them?—The Committee of Month some time ago was in communication with our Board, and we did agree, under certain conditions, to offer a fixed sum per week per individual.—As we offered.

17309. CHAIRMAN.—The North want 2s. better?—I am sure our Board, when they see the arrangements that will be made, will not for the sake of 1s. or 2s. oppose it, but I am only telling you what they did do. I certainly agree with Mr. McHenry also, that the sick is all hospital should be treated by themselves, no matter whether there is a distinct entrance to that hospital or not. In our union the hospital is the great center for the house—they go to the hospital, they are transferred then to the infirmary and the healthy wards, and stay there.

17311. CHAIRMAN.—Did you ever do that in your union at all?—We have made order after order: "To be discharged when well," but the doctors say they are not well, and when they are discharged from the hospital he sends them to the infirm wards, and the result is that is evaded, and although some people may come in there with the best intentions of getting medical treatment and cure—

17312. Under what power does the doctor transfer them to the able-bodied portion of the house?—He must make room for others coming in sick.

17313. Under what power does he transfer them to another part of the house?—I am not aware; the matter is here.

Mr. Fraser, Master.—He can class them where he likes. He may consider them convalescent, and send them to the infirmary as not sufficiently fit to be discharged.

Witness.—We would certainly have room if the lunatics and epileptics were taken out. We would have one of the finest hospitals in Dublin, even compared with one of our city hospitals. We spent a lot of money on it, and that money has been paid over. I would have no lunatic attendants whatever attending on them. They may go there to wash the place or scrub, but they should have nothing whatever to do with the distribution of food or the giving out of medicines.

17314. Dr. Broome.—You would not allow them to sleep in the place?—No; we find that our healthy wards at the present time are occupied by a number of those who are doing nursing duties, and those nurses bring food to the wards at night to their friends and comrades.

17315. Which is the patients' food?—Well, they may not be denied of their food, but perhaps some of them cannot partake of it; they get it whether they eat it or not. I would have those properly nursed.

17316. Do you really believe that would be a saving to the union?—Yes. And about our nursing staff, we are making an attempt to get all our nurses to live in the house, especially the night nurses, and I think it should be a general rule, many of them are married women attending to their families by day, and the result is there is a great temptation to sleep at night.

17317. You are making an attempt to try and isolate all cases of consumption?—Yes, we have all the female cases isolated as well as we can under the circumstances.

After 24, 1904,
Mr. W. C.
Graham.

17258. They are not well situated at present?—They are not, but we are making an attempt to remedy that.

17259. Would it be possible to put them in the same building as you are putting the females?—It would be possible with a little expenditure.

17260. It has been done before?—I would recommend a general hospital for the treatment of consumptive people outside.

17261. Would that be for your union or both unions?—The county and city at large.

17262. You would recommend a sanatorium, and in the meantime those others might be very useful?—We are going on slowly.

17263. In the meantime these cases are very infectious?—We are doing our very best; as soon as we have the women transferred there we will try to see what space is available to transfer the men; we must do the one first.

17264. I think you are making wonderfully good work?—Now, as regards out-door relief, the official answer to the question was that our Board of Guardians are of opinion that greater facilities should be afforded, which would enable them to exceed the present limits for the distribution of out-door relief. I am a dissembler from that reply. I am not able to agree with them there, consequently I give their answer first in order to explain. I believe when you are dealing with the question of out-door relief you are treading on very slippery and dangerous ground. We must not forget that there is a great difference between being needy and being destitute, and so augment the income of the needy at the cost of a class similarly circumstanced, would be discouraging thrift, and would be demoralizing and injurious to the community at large. I am in favour of granting old and infirm people out-door relief, or some similar assistance, but I would on no account give out-door relief to people who say they cannot get work, or to families who may be deserted by their father, or to families whose father is in prison; if you do so you will destroy the obligations of the fathers to support their children, in fact you would take away all responsibility from them. Even the present system of granting out-door relief to widows with more than one child is not in favour with me, although I would be slow to recommend its abolition, because at present the very fact of being a widow with children confers on them the right to out-door relief, whereas I believe if the workhouse test was applied to them, not one in ten would avail of it.

17265. Mr. MURKIN.—Would not your views, if carried into effect, cause the entrance into the workhouse of many children?—I don't think so.

17266. Wouldn't the children starve if the father was in jail and the mother unable to provide means for their livelihood?—You must bear in mind at the present day when they go into the workhouse, the very fact of going into the workhouse deters the father from leading such a life and being taken to prison; it would also deter the father from going away, because the father would be brought back and prosecuted for deserting his wife and family.

17267. Surely if the father is in jail he is away already. Are the children to starve in the meantime?—Let them go into the workhouse.

17268. Then don't they get accustomed to the workhouse, and lose that spirit of honest pride that we all would like to see more widespread than it is?—That may be, but you must protect society. It is unfair to call upon the general community to support a lot of people like that.

17269. But by giving opportune aid, might you not be saving the ratepayers of the future a good deal of money?—You may save the ratepayers, but you must look to society at large.

17270. Would you not be saving innocent children from the taint of the workhouse, and the dangers of evil associations?—You may, to a certain extent.

17271. Is not that a matter for deep consideration?—It is, but I am only giving you my views.

17272. CHAIRMAN.—Your view is that destitution ought to be a condition before you give out-door relief, not merely poverty?—Yes, destitution; not merely poverty or being needy.

17273. That is the present law, and you think it wise?—I think it is wise. There is another question I am very much interested in, and that is a system of providing for an old-age pension.

CHAIRMAN.—I am afraid we could hardly go into that.

17274. Mr. MURKIN.—Is not that an extension of the out-door relief to which you are so much opposed?

—It is; but I would put it in such a way that I would make each individual member of the community subscribe to it.

17285. Where would you get the money?—If you make every Post Office in the country—

17286. CHAIRMAN.—There has been a special inquiry on this subject, and it would be a very wide field for us to take up, and we have no power or qualification for taking it up?—We are also interested in the question of the law of settlement. I am informed by some of our most experienced relieving officers that at least 30 per cent. of our inmates should not be properly charged to the South Union. Then taking it again that, that there are some of our inmates in other unions who should be charged to us, say 5 per cent., I believe if we had a law of settlement, properly organized, we would have at least 25 per cent. less inmates in the house.

17287. Dr. BROOK.—How do you arrive at your 5 per cent?—That is from the other unions.

17288. How do you arrive at that?—It is only an approximation.

17289. CHAIRMAN.—There is greater poverty on the side of the water, and therefore you think there are fewer?—I don't mean exactly North and South Unions, but I mean the country unions.

17290. Dr. BROOK.—You have calculated 30 per cent. by your relieving officers. How have you calculated your 5 per cent?—It is only imaginary. In my workhouse I have ever been in I always find there are some people from Dublin.

17291. Remember there are 250 unions?—If I allow 5 per cent. for what is there which should be chargeable to the South, of course it is only an approximation.

17292. It is not even an approximation, it is altogether imaginary?—I would not agree with Mr. Cross when he said we should charge those to the district to which they come from. I think that would lead to a very complicated business and a lot of law expenses. I think that as soon as people would find out that such a law was in existence the whole thing would cease, or very nearly cease. There is one class I would like to make a settlement for: young women from the country, who come up to be here for their confinement; I would make those an exception. I would not be a party by any means to send back those with their children to the places they came from, because if you do so the temptation is so great I honestly believe they would rather do away with the child than take it back. I would be very slow to send back such a class as that.

17293. Would it not mean a great deal of expenditure and a large cost for transport?—It would at first; you must bear in mind that for the last ten or twelve years we had in Dublin a great number of public works, where a lot of money was expended, and coming on district times we saw the different condition showing what an interest they took in these things, and the result was it all got published in the press, and you had a regular influx of country people coming here to get employment, and, to their grief, when they came here they had no employment, had nothing to do but go to the workhouse. That class is still with us, unfortunately.

17294. Mr. MURKIN.—You think some change to the law should be brought about which would enable you to send them back to the places from which they came?—Yes, some change. There is another question also that we are very much interested in, the question of the able-bodied in the workhouse. We find we can get no return whatever, not even the cost of their maintenance, out of them. And I had a scheme. I was reading about the House of Industry in Townsend-street, which was established many years before the Poor Law Act, and had the same intention as the Poor Law Act. I believe if you could pay them a certain amount of money for their labour, and deduct the cost of their maintenance, it would be the means of encouraging them to work, and also making them better fit to earn a living outside. They would be more inclined to do it, and I am of opinion that there is no individual so destitute as a man or woman who spends three months in the workhouse when they take their discharge; they have no money in their pocket, and no friends or associates to call upon, consequently there is no individual so destitute. I was glad to hear from you on Tuesday that there was about to be introduced into the House of Parliament a Bill to deal with that class. If that Bill was extended to Ireland it would meet all my views in reference to that matter. To form a labour colony and make them work would be an admirable thing.

17295. The experiment is on its trial in England, but not on a very extensive scale?—So I understand.

17296. Do you think that would be a relief to the rate and a blessing to the poor?—Leaving out the question altogether of the relief to the rate, it would be altogether better for the community at large that these people should be made to work.

17297. And better for themselves, too?—I think so. The next question I would like to raise is the payment for relief. I am of opinion that there should be greater facilities for enforcing the existing law of making children pay for the maintenance of their parents, and parents for the maintenance of their children, in hospital, no matter how little they might pay; and that should go further, as we find that a great number of patients in our hospitals who die are assured for very large amounts in burial societies.

17298. CHAIRMAN.—About how much would the average be?—Some of them are insured in different societies. Some draw £20, some £30, and nearly less than £5.

17299. Mr. MURKIN.—Is that practice any way extensive?—Merely every case.

17300. CHAIRMAN.—How much a year premium do they pay?—Generally by the week, from 1d. to 1s. a week, and I think we should be concerned to obtain from these societies payment for their maintenance while they are with us. We have not that power at present, I understand.

17301. Dr. BROOKS.—Would that not very soon check the insurance altogether. Would it really benefit you very much after a few years?—The way I would deal with it is this—

17302. CHAIRMAN.—They would put the insurance in evidence, so that you would not be able to get hold of it?—They might do that, but the class of people who have their parents insured are people who are very well-to-do generally, and whom, for some difference or other, the parent refuses to live with. If such a law existed these children would not let their parents go in at all; they would keep their parents with them. The next question is the question of tramps. In reality we are not much concerned with tramps; we do have some. I would divide that community into two classes—one, the tramp by force of circumstance looking for work, whom I believe to be an honest man. I should facilitate him in every possible way, but before he would start from any given point to readi another, I think he should receive a passport from the officer of Constabulary from the place he starts from, stating on the face of the pass the destination he was going to. I think that pass should admit him into any of the workhouses along his way, where he would receive his supper, bed, and breakfast in the morning, and be allowed to depart early. The other class I would deal with harshly in this way, that I would register them, and I would make them give forty-eight hours' notice before they would take their departure. I believe if that scheme be adopted it will break down that nuisance very soon.

17303. Practically none would give forty-eight hours' notice. What do you think would happen to them. Would that be the end of your legislation on the matter. Would you simply give the Guardians power to require forty-eight hours' notice?—That would be a preventive of the tramp nuisance altogether.

17304. What would they do?—They would turn their attention to something else.

17305. Sleeping out?—No.

17306. Would you not be afraid that they would sleep out. There are a great many towns they go through, where they have not a workhouse to sleep in, and they get a low lodging?—They have always plenty of money.

17307. You would merely oblige them to go to the low lodging in the place where the workhouse was?—My idea is that after a few years it would do away with the class altogether. If you form a labour colony then by all means send that class there. I would also take the children of tramps away from them. I believe that a tramp is not a suitable individual to have charge of a child. I would take them away altogether. In reference to the boarding out of children, we board out all orphan children.

17308. A good many of them in the Co. Wicklow?—Yes, Wicklow, some in Kildare, and in the Co. Dublin. We would recommend additional power being given to our Board to board out children whose parents are in the house, and who for some reason of mental or bodily infirmity are likely to remain in the house.

17309. You think they ought to forfeit the privilege of having charge of the children?—Yes; and also the children of the infirmal pauper.

17310. While the children are in charge of the State through a Board of Guardians or otherwise, do you think it desirable that the parents should be at large. Supposing that the father and mother, or father or mother, had children, and they were deemed not fit persons to have charge of their children, and the Guardians took charge of the children, do you think at the same time that the parents should be allowed to go out freed of their burden?—Would it not be better to leave the parents out without the child rather than with the child?

17311. Or would you be in favour of saying persons who have so misconducted themselves should go to the labour colony?—Yes, if necessary. I believe it is the only right thing to do with children, much better than to rear them in any institution, no matter how good.

17312. I suppose your idea of a labour colony is that it should be conducted on kind principles; nothing in the nature of a penal settlement?—No.

17313. A place where people should be made comfortable, and work, and confinement would be the only disagreeable thing?—That is all.

17314. Mr. MURKIN.—Work, and restraint, and discipline?—In my opinion that would very soon change the social life altogether.

17315. CHAIRMAN.—There is a great difficulty for a large number of the poor class of work people from want of strength, or other cause, of getting employment?—There is, but that would be a case where medical relief would come in.

17316. I did not mean so bad a case as that, but a man comes to you for a job; you look at him, and if you see him a poor class of man, you say: "That man will never give me a day's work," he would not be snapped up?—There is a danger there.

17317. A large percentage of the population is not really fit?—No.

17318. Mr. MURKIN.—But these people, if they have been well-conducted and industrious, and have children, the children generally give respectable fathers and mothers help when they can?—Yes, always; I heard Mrs. McDowell Congreve speaking about lady inspectors. I don't quite agree with Mrs. McDowell Congreve; no doubt a lady inspector might do some good, but she could do no more than our present inspector, Mr. Bourke, because the last inspection that he made of our hospital and house, not only did he examine to see was the clothing clean, but he examined the bed-clothes to know was there any vermin of any description; not a single thing but he examined, and did everything that a lady could possibly do.

17319. That is my experience of the way in which inspections are done and ought to be done?—And these outside we spoke of a while ago, I think before they should be discharged from the workhouse they should also give twelve hours' notice. The way to deal with that class is either to keep them in or to keep them out.

Miss WELBY, P.L.C., EXAMINED.

There has been such a multitude of questions put, and such a reiteration of the same arguments, so if you would allow me I will just say shortly my views. As a woman, I do believe a lady inspector would be of great use, because I lay down as a principle, and I am satisfied I could prove it, that all women Guardians go for thoroughness, efficiency, and economy, and when they had a woman to work with them, as their more direct representative with the Local Government Board, a great many improvements would be the result. Now if one or other of us write any complaint to the Local Government Board, we are at once put in a hostile attitude towards the others. When I first became a Guardian and went through the South Dublin Union I noticed everywhere the trace of the man's hand and over so many inequalities.

17320. CHAIRMAN.—The trace of the master hand?—Oh, no, not the master, but the man. I said everything here has been derived by man as if women were not under consideration at all; yet the larger number in every given union, generally speaking, are women. Again, I must say it was with women that in a drawing-room meeting the idea was first started of having a lady inspector for our boarded-out children. The Board deemed very much to it on certain grounds, and our lady inspector has met with a good deal of rather sharp treatment as far as words go, but all the same her report had the effect of stimulating the relieving officers and causing the children to be removed from very undesirable nurseries, and has proved good. But the part of workhouse administration that interests me most is everything regarding the children, and personally I would be very glad if the children formed a kind of department by themselves outside the workhouse; outside almost, in a certain sense, the Poor Law administration, and that they were brought more in touch with female helpers. Now the question of these poor girls, that class is largely recruited from domestic; they come from all parts of Ireland, and fall into rags in Dublin because they have no helping hand, and I think we want very much for our boarded-out children for their after-life, and our institutions children, if we are to have them, we want committees to look after them. Look at these Poor Law questions, it is all done from a very narrow standpoint; each union looks upon it from its own little circumstance, and we don't deal with it as a great national subject. I have been reading quite lately what is carried out abroad—the Elberfeld and Leipzig system.

17321. You have not got the people here who are bound by the Kaiser's authority?—This springs from individual benevolence.

17322. The duty is imposed on citizens and they cannot refuse to undertake it. They have to become relieving officers and take charge of a certain area?—They do it voluntarily.

17323. They are invited, but the office, although unpaid, is compulsory?—There is no question of compulsion, it is all a voluntary matter; it all arises out of the feeling that we should rather help one another, and not allow anybody to starve, and the consequence is that without any Poor Law application or administration, there is an assistance for the poor which seems to me most effectual.

17324. You know that has only spread to a couple of towns?—It is spreading.

17325. It has been in operation for fifty years or more, and still it has only got to a small number of places?—Even so, does not that lessen the country very much.

17326. But whatever you think of the plan, you would find it very difficult to get in Dublin, or Belfast, or Cork, or Limerick men who would give up their time to home-to-home inquiries, and pursue these inquisitorial inquiries which would be resented in this country in a stirring way?—We dwell too much on what would be resented in the way of interference, because our people are not different from others, as we are rather apt to believe ourselves.

17327. They are accustomed to very stern discipline in Germany?—We are not as amenable to discipline as they are, but the result seems a general relief of the poor in a very effectual and economical manner.

17328. You have, of course, read at the same time that it has been considered by the Poor Law authorities in England that the system could not be put into operation there?—Public bodies, like Poor Law authorities, move very slowly.

17329. I am speaking of Royal Commissions and committees?—What does not seem valuable today will to-morrow or later on; here we are in a big city like Dublin.

17330. Your idea is that the Elberfeld system ought to be applied in Dublin?—I would be very glad if it could be applied, even in the district, hints from it. About children, I have found lately in our union that we have groups of children whose parents are undergoing imprisonment. Yesterday I was asking the master. I thought they were cases brought in by the relieving officer, and I wondered why it was they were not dealt with through the police court, and children, as not vicious themselves, but of vicious surroundings, were not passed on into industrial schools, but the master told me it was generally through the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children they came there. Could they not be dealt with concurrently with the prosecution of the parents and passed on to an industrial school?

17331. We felt that ourselves a good deal lately?—I think that with regard to Poor Law matters we may say broadly there is a great deal of ignorance; they know that there is a huge establishment, that relief is given, and they believe there is a great deal of extravagance and waste, but individually they don't take a very keen interest in the matter. Another thing is this, that there are some who cannot, and what must be done with them? I don't agree with people who say that the children of the ordinary tramp class should be boarded out; that is to say if children aged from seven to the baby in arms are found with a tramp, a provision was passed that those children should be taken from them.

17332. What would you do with them?—Could we not have a short period industrial school in which children could be sent.

17334. But still there are a tremendous number of people with insufficient means of supporting life. Are we to go on supporting these people and letting them increase their class, or try to take some steps to put an end to them?—Yes, and at the start we must be severe; some must suffer. I got a little girl belonging to the tramp class into a situation, but she was not twenty-four hours in it when her mother and father followed and took her away; frightened the people. We have inn-and-outs coming very much; if there was some kind of outside relieving house.

17335. Would you not meet that by saying no children should go to the workhouse?—Yes; and at once send them to a school and not let them idle their time there for a fortnight. Then there is the other big question. I don't think you like us to enter into many things in the way of detail, of internal administration.

17336. Complaints as to details in a particular workhouse need not, we think, be gone into?—I believe myself there could be a great deal of economy in the internal administration of workhouse, if you had not the rigid rule of following uniformity of years and years ago; there is a waste of food.

17337. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Would there not be the danger of peculation?—No; what I mean is that there should not be the uniform distribution of food to each inmate. I mentioned that to you last June.

17338. CHAIRMAN.—Would there not be the danger of peculation?—I judge, not from personal experience so much, as from what has been done with very good results in other workhouses, saving time and ton of bread in England, and I always think that what has been done elsewhere we could do here.

17339. I think there is no doubt about it that under bread there might be a saving, and I would agree as to the desirableness of having joints carved in the hospital wards, if one can make general rules.

Dr. KEMP.—That is the very thing that is done in the North Dublin Union.

17340. CHAIRMAN.—That hard-and-fast line of relief always struck me as most wasteful, but the other can only be carried out where you have responsible officers to take charge of it, and take the food as they see fit and do it out?—I would quite agree with what the Lord Mayor said yesterday about the need of training our children, but I think they can only be trained outside in homes, and also boarded-out children should get facilities; throughout the country there is an appreciable number of deformed children. I don't know if the Poor Law in any way empowers a Board, for instance, to apprentice such, or give them the means of getting a trade. We should, as far as possible, work so as to make every boy or girl of the community self-reliant and self-supporting. I would be very pleased if there was a kind of general co-operation and thoroughness in the administration of the Poor Law, and one branch did not overlap another. We need something like the Charity Organisation. And show all things, of course, improve the housing of the poor. When you speak of a sanatorium for consumptives, a great deal of that arises from the wretched tenements, and the prevalence of drinking habits among the people.

Mr. WILLIAM STREETER, F.R.C.S., examined.

Apr 24, 1904

Mr. William Stretcher.

17341. CHAIRMAN.—You represent the rural portion of South Dublin?—Yes; I am also a Guardian.

17342. For what part of the district?—Rathfarnham, Whitechurch.

17343. Have you been here much to day. Is there anything particular you wish to say yourself?—My ambition is to reduce the number in the home.

17344. Is there much labour wanted in your part of the country?—There is a fair amount of labour.

17345. You can get a man whenever you want him. You are not short of men working?—Occasionally.

17346. What wages will a man get in your part of the country?—The average wages would be about 12s., the weekly wages would be about 8s.

17347. Does he get any diet?—No. Lord Masey's weekly wages is 10s.; the small farmers give 12s. to 14s.

17348. Not constant employment?—It is principally constant; wet and dry it would average 8s., but that is not the point I want to draw at here at all. What I want to put before the public is that the Legislature that passed that Poor Law for this country did us a great evil.

17349. That is what Daniel O'Connell said?—Did he? I don't agree with Daniel O'Connell's views on other points, but on that head I do. It is a cancer eating the life out of the country. On one side we have a lot of paupers, we have the able-bodied, and a good sprinkling of officials, and these poor classes are living well. They neither sow nor spin, but they have the best portion of the rates.

17350. The officials tell a good deal?—They say they do; well, the majority of ourselves do. I think if the evil could be got under.

17351. How would you go about doing it?—The first thing I would do would be to give an old-age pension. It is a ridiculous thing to say that people after spending their years keeping up this establishment here—I hold the working man creates everything—he is keeping up that establishment, and then at the end of his days, if he is unfortunate, he has to break up his home, and as he goes there, and his wife is put in one portion of it and he is put in another. I am told it costs 4s. 5d. or 5s. to keep these people, and if they got 6s. outside they would live in the lap of luxury; but I believe it costs 15s. or 21s. a week, taking everything into consideration.

17352. They cost a great deal more than 4s. 5d.—They cost from 15s. to 21s. a week.

17353. Supposing you say 12s. 7.—The actual food they consume is 4s. 5d. Now the attendance, the buildings, and the interest on the money, make a good deal. If that money was capitalised for industrial purposes a good deal could be done with it. I think it is a very foolish idea of the present Government to tolerate the present system so long, that they would not allow half the money that costs for poor rates to create some industry. I believe if we had a native Parliament the present system would not stand five years. Why not follow the system in America. I have some friends in America, and they laugh at what I tell them. There are able-bodied men must either rook hog or die. Here in the South Dublin Union they are marched and marched out in the morning for fresh air. They come in for their breakfast; then they are marched out, and at the dinner hour they come in again, and still all this power and energy is locked up, it is no practical use. I suggested when I went there last to take a farm in the neighbourhood of Crumlin; I was bounded down. I believe these able-bodied men ought to be made support the sick and the children, get some value out of them. The Guardians said they could not have them going to and fro to the farm, but I would expose them as much as possible. I would put these men to work the streets.

17354. Then the poor fellows who would lose their job as scavengers would be applying to you?—That difficulty would be easily got over. I know people in my district who are worse off than inmates in the home.

17355. I am sure you do. Plenty of them never get such dietary, I am sure?—They will get no dietary; the dietary here is 50 per cent. better. There is another point: there is a premium on death. I heard the late chairman say that the workhouse is full from the hospitals, and that has to be kept supplied, and now this is a thing that ought to be done away with. I believe any money derived from dead bodies should go to the rates. No official in the institution should receive any fee or reward on account of any individual dying. They get 51s. or 27s. for a dead body, but when that amounts to hundreds a year—I am speaking of the supply to the School of Anatomy—the officials that are in receipt of that at the present time, I would go to any extent to compensate them, but I would have no official receiving money for that purpose.

17356. Do you mean to say the money is received by individuals?—It is received by officials. I believe the doctors claim it by Act of Parliament. I believe that ought to be wiped away; it is a scandal in any civilised country.

17357. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you mean to say the officials sell the dead bodies?—I say they receive a reward for a certain number of dead bodies. There is a general horror among the people outside.

17358. CHAIRMAN.—Have you anything at the back of all this. Have you any knowledge?—There is no knowledge required.

17359. What do you know about it?—I know these bodies go down there, and they get 51s. 7s. or 30s. each for them.

17360. Who gets the 27s. 7s.—It is divided. Dr. Keene—I think they is 7s. 5d. paid for a body—5s. goes to the porter, and 2s. to some one else.

Witness.—Who is this gentleman speaking now? The dead-house man gets that.

17361. Dr. BROWN.—What is the next point?—The next point would be the children. I would board out all the children. But as regards the tramp question, I think you might go a little too far with it; it reminds me of a little touch of South Africa to interfere with the children. I believe there is no child but would wish to be reared with his own parents. It would be a great cruelty to deprive a man of his children because of having to change his residence from time to time, and ask for relief in the North or South Dublin Unions.

17362. Mr. MURKIN.—If he leads a life of habitual vagrancy and does not do work, do you think he ought to have charge of any children?—Philosophy says that there is a reason for everything, and everything has its reason; and you must bear in mind that the laws of this country decree that man to want. The farmers were made hard up they could not afford to pay him; the landlords must get their rent regularly. I don't believe this tramp question is so prevalent in any other country. There is what you call a pauper in England among the trades classes, but the farmer in this country is so wretchedly poor. There was a time he could only employ a certain number. The agent came round and said: "This man is doing so much work. I must get so much more rent from him."

17363. CHAIRMAN.—You are a farmer yourself?—I am not, sir; I belong to the industrial classes.

17364. Mr. MURKIN.—Would you not wish to see these men back again to the ways of ordinary occupation and industry?—Certainly.

17365. How could you do it?—By reward—not compulsion—you will never coax an Irishman back by compulsion. I heard this gentleman speak about a colony. I hope it will not be run by officials on the same lines as other institutions.

17366. What do you propose?—I want the Guardians to have power to buy a farm and to make them reared their own maintenance. If a colony gets into the hands of officials it will eventually get into the hands of the wrong officials; but put it under the direct control of the people and then it would work.

17367. Would you favour the colony if it was under a local governing body?—Yes, directly from the people. Another thing I might mention. There ought to be popular representation on the Local Government Board also. There are going to pass a new Bill through, and the best thing you can do is open up the circle.

17368. CHAIRMAN.—Yes, I understand you?—It would be for the benefit of the whole system, and I think if there was more attention paid to the industrial question in this country, we would not have half the paupers. For the last five years, practically speaking, we were under the control of the doctors above. The doctors bore the show in all these institutions. Here, some time ago, two patients from our district came in; one was about seventeen or eighteen days in the South Dublin Union. He saw a doctor going in and never saw a doctor until he came out. Some time after a man went in suffering from temporary insanity. He was placed up two or three stairs. I went to see him and complained of where he was, but the doctor would not attend on account of professional etiquette. I am like Lord Brougham. I don't believe in etiquette, and I asked could I bring in an outside doctor, and I was told I could not. I think we should have power to bring in an outside doctor.

17369. Did you bring that proposal before the Board

Mar. 26, 1904.
Mr. William

of Guardians?—I intend to bring it forward. As regards these houses that come up from the country, in my own parish we had a parish priest who was very sturdy on this question. If these people were sent back from whence they came, I don't think they would go to the extreme of destroying their child. I don't see why the ratepayers of North and South Dublin should bear the expense of all the acres of Ireland.

17370. CHAIRMAN.—You think a law enabling you to send them back would be a proper law?—Certainly.

17371. Mr. MURPHY.—Would not these poor people be exposed to the publicity they seek to avoid?—We are over that age of sympathy in this country; this sympathy is keeping us back. And I believe in the housing question. Since I went there we built 450 cottages in the Co. Dublin, and I believe that elevated the people. I have been in places and seen as many as nine sleeping in one bed, and the bed was never cold. Some were working by day and some by night at Inchicore.

17372. CHAIRMAN.—Inchicore means good wages. Why had they not better houses?—These latter-day philanthropists never went near them. I think there could be a good deal done for a certain class of people if the clergy of all denominations were roused among the people and tried to educate them. But the whole cry in my district, and has been for years, is, "Go to the workhouse," if your finger only aches. We have a lot of people on out-door relief, and if the thing was capitalised it would nearly support an industry. It is all for want of industry that the tendency is to pauperise in this country.

17373. You think the proper provision to make for the relief of the poor would be to get these employments?—Get them employment; let them be self-supporting and self-reliant.

17374. That is the point which was at issue when the Poor Law was started?—They went the wrong way about it. The late chairman is very anxious to raise the qualification of Guardians. I go in the totally opposite direction. There are four or five or so up there whose valuations does not exceed £20—I am not speaking of myself—and I think we are as good workers as any other men on the Board. I don't know what class of legislature we had when the Poor Law Act was passed. We have people that relieve their sons and their cousins. I think when a person gets into a relative situation, and he is a Guardian of the poor, he ought to retire; he ought to clear out.

17375. And make room for some other man?—Undoubtedly. I don't know whether that sanitary department of ours is wrong or right.

17376. Dr. BROWN.—Is there plenty of labour for these people in your district?—Whether there is employment or not they manage to live outside the workhouses. There is plenty of sick laid at Dollymount; why not march the penniless down there to that and make good ground. There is another place at Sandymount. It is said they would break away and not go back to the union. That is the very thing we want them to do. I believe it would have a great tendency to relieve the congestion. They are locked up there, and once they are locked up they have no desire to go outside. In the districts I came from there is plenty of mountain land. What is the reason we could not get them up there. Suppose we started in April and engaged them up there.

17377. CHAIRMAN.—Did you never think what an additional cost to the unions their boots would be if they were taking these fenced marches?—Is that the view you take of it. I don't believe in that question. Supposing they did wear out an extra pair of boots, so could have them make the roads, or something practical.

17378. Mr. MURPHY.—You would make them useful—you want to encourage them to work?—But I would not like to force them by coercion.

17379. Still you would like them to be kept employed?—Reasonable employment.

17380. CHAIRMAN.—That would be a difficult job walking from James's Street to Kilmashogue Mountain?—Not at all. Supposing they worked until 4 o'clock and returned, what great difficulty would there be. There are plenty of buildings lying idle there, and we could camp them out there.

17381. Dr. BROWN.—That would be a labour colony?—It would not be the labour colony he speaks of. I think this gentleman has a labour colony in his eye the same as Spike Island.

17382. CHAIRMAN.—Oh, no; some place where it would be a pleasant place to stay?—There are other men that some practical value could be taken out of them, and we could put them to some industry, but the Local Government Board has tried us up to sight. We cannot give money for out-door relief. If the children were taught some industry it would be a very good thing—knitting and cap-making—but the only device is to strip the ratepayers all along the line.

17383. If it is considered that it is time to change, Parliament can make the change?—I think it is time to change the whole system. The old-age pensions should go along with them. I would give it to deserving people.

17384. How much a head would you give?—Nothing less than 7s. 6d. or 10s. a head. It would all depend on their previous circumstances.

17385. Mr. MURPHY.—Would the ratepayers be willing to give that?—There are other funds outside the ratepayers. Look at the money being spent in foreign countries, in Egyptian expeditions, or the Transvaal. I don't think there is much profit out of the Transvaal. We could make the lawrence and discontinue pay it. Those are the people I would like to make pay; it is the feeder of the whole thing.

17386. Making them pay all the poor said?—No; they should pay towards the support of the institution; 80 per cent. are in the workhouse from the effect of the mosh liquor. I think they ought to subscribe something to it. Mr. Guinness gave £50,000 to the hospital and ignored as altogether, and there are a part of his victims in here. We want to get money at a very cheap rate of interest from the Treasury, if we want to do anything for these poor people.

Dr. DELANEY EXAMINED.

Dr. Delaney, I am one of the medical officers of the North Union. I merely came with regard to the question of amalgamation of the two unions. There has been an inequality for many years between the North and South Dublin Unions as regards the ratings. I don't think a geographical division can be said to be an economical one, and I think on both sides the rate ought to be equalised, even if amalgamation were not to take place. I maintain that the care of the poor, and sick, and destitute is the case of the whole community in which they happen to be, and I would regard the city of Dublin as being one whole community, and equally chargeable for the maintenance of the destitute poor in it. That would be one reason why I would urge the equalisation of the rate—the general relief it would give would be a great benefit. The difference in maintenance in the North and South is considerable, 4d. or 6d. per pauper per week. There is no other city in the kingdom, with the exception of London, that has two ratings on different sides. Glasgow may be taken as similar to Dublin as regards the river, but the rating is uniform.

17387. CHAIRMAN.—You are aware, of course, the reason why there are the two divisions in this city; it happened by accident. There were two buildings, the House of Industry on this side, and the Freezing Hospital on the other, and these buildings were taken over for workhouses. Glasgow has two workhouses?—Yes, but it has an equal rating.

17388. Are you sure of that?—I was told by a gentleman that that was so. In passing the Act of 1860 and regulating the standard rate as a scheme of payment from the Equivalent Grant, the Government fixed in Dublin 1s. 9d. for the whole city. They forgot there were two ratings in the city. Then they made it on the average of the whole city. If they have made a standard rate for the whole city they have given legislative sanction to the principle of a uniform poor rate. The north side of Dublin is very much crowded; has a population of 10,000 over the south side. We have a fair number of registered tenement dwellings, consequently our population is very much congested, and it is a poorer population. The causes of it are very many, but the chief causes are due to the fact that on the northern side of the city all the produce gardens are. The people then crowd into the markets and get employment there. They are temporarily out of employment and temporarily employed again, and in that way become chargeable on the North Union. I don't think these people who crowd into the cities ought to be sent back again to the country districts. I do think that a small rate is aid for the rural districts, for the aid of the urban district, to be distributed by the Local Government Board, would meet the difficulty, and save the urban district from the expense caused to them by the influx of the country population to the towns and cities.

I saw in yesterday's evidence some of the gentlemen seemed to be in favour of having a separation of the hospitals. I would be very much in favour of it. I would have to each thing as a poorhouse. I would have simply the poorhouse hospital or public infirmary, and take in all the sick there.

17308. CHAIRMAN.—What would you think of moving all the sick to one workhouse and lodging all the healthy in the other—sick, feeble, and infirm in one workhouse?—I would keep the feeble and infirm by themselves.

17309. Are they not a class that become sick very soon?—Yes; but the weakness and debility of old age would only clog that hospital.

17310. Supposing you took the South Union for sick, you could have some of the buildings assigned for feeble infirm?—That would do; but I would have the able-bodied people kept out altogether, and I think if there was a greater extension of out-door relief it would cure a lot of people running in and out. You have made a lot of paupers yourselves by forcing people to come in. For instance, there is a law that if a woman has one child and she is destitute, she is not able to get any relief, but if she has two you will give her something; you will feed these but not two, and the stopping of out-door relief very often brings a whole family into the hospital, and then they become poorhouse birds for the future. I think about 10 per cent. in out-door relief of what is sent would keep every single one of these people out of the union, except drunken tramps that have to be dealt with.

17311. Dr. BROWN.—It was stated the workhouse was largely recruited from the hospital?—All rubbish from the Dublin hospitals is sorted into my side of the house; unsuitable operations. People that are sick and cannot be nursed too long. I don't mind that, because it is the business of the public hospitals to do temporary immediate work. We don't have fever but all the medical diseases. You cannot have a public hospital such as the Richmond or Mater nursing them all through convalescence except they have plenty of rooms, which they have not most of them, and then they come in to us; but they do more than that, they send in their cases of accident, broken thighs, broken arms, and hips.

17312. Old fractures?—No, new fractures. They sent in a man with a broken skull who died in twenty minutes. I would not be for the amalgamation of these two unions under one building and administrative; you would be concentrating too much. We would like to have a poorhouse hospital in the best air we could. For the poor probably the north is better situated than the south, because it is more in the middle of its own district; but both of them are more suitable than if stuck out in the country. In the north we had great fighting about the boarding out of the children, and the Cabra institution was started because they were not satisfied with the boarding out. The children came in dirty, and there were all sorts of complaints which might have been obviated; if the clergymen, and the Guardians, and the relieving officers were to visit them there would be none of these complaints. But we built Cabra as a children's hospital, and now I think they are doing work far and away better than any out-door relief, and they are not getting a pauper taint on them, that people are so talking about. The children at Cabra look like children of an ordinary National school.

17313. Dr. BROWN.—As to the after-life of these children?—We had some industries in the union and were getting up others, but a workman's deputation came down and made the Guardians sweep it away because it was interfering with work outside. The Guardians were idiotic enough to listen to them. We had shoemakers' shops in Arana, and the boots were brought in into a room not as big as this. A Commission like this ought to do a good deal in the direction of making such labour useful.

The Sitting terminated.

THIRTY-FIFTH PUBLIC SITTING—TUESDAY, MAY 3RD, 1904.

At the Courthouse, Naas.

Present:—Mr. MICKS (Chairman), Mr. MURKAGHAN, and Dr. COEY BUCKER.

Mr. Stephen J. Brown.

Mr. STEPHEN J. BROWN, c.s., examined.

17395. CHAIRMAN.—You are familiar with the scope of our inquiry, so it is unnecessary for me to make any statement. Are you representing the Council?—I was one of those who was nominated by the Council, being Chairman of the Council, to give evidence on this subject.

17396. You have in your hand a list of queries that we have put to the various bodies?—I have.

17397. Perhaps the briefest way would be for you to make a statement?—I may mention, in the first instance, that our Council did answer the questions, but owing to an unfortunate accident the replies to these questions are not forthcoming. If they should turn up I presume they may be sent in to the Commission.

17398. Certainly?—With reference to No. 1, the Council were of opinion that it would not be expedient to dissolve any of the unions which are contained in the county.

17399. That is Colbride, Naas, and Athy?—Those are the only unions the buildings of which are situated in the county, but there are two other unions partly within the county—these are Edenderry No. 2 and Ballyinglass No. 3. And the Council were of opinion that if the idea were to prevail that the county should be as far as possible self-contained, that it would be desirable, if the portions of those other unions, which have not their buildings in the county, were added to some of the other unions.

17400. You considered the question of its being a self-contained county for Poor Law purposes?—We did.

17401. And your opinion is rather in favour of it, if possible?—It is rather in favour of it, but we were not able to take a large enough view of it—how it would affect the other counties—but as far as our own county is concerned, we considered it would be a great advantage.

17403. At the inquiry which we held in Dublin they expressed themselves hostile?—I should say it was not at the County Council, but by committees to which it was specially referred, these questions were considered. It was intended that they should come up again before the County Council, but owing to the unfortunate accident to which I have referred, they never got further than the committee; but I just remember there was no representative of Colbride present at the meeting at which these things were considered. We thought a considerable portion of the Edenderry Union might be joined to the Colbride Union, which, if the Dublin portion of the Colbride Union were taken away, would be compensation.

17404. That is the Kildare portion of the Edenderry Union?—Not the entire of it; portion of it would go naturally to Athy, as also Ballyinglass No. 3. We had all the areas and out, and population, and everything in our replies to these questions; they have all disappeared, and I am not able to reproduce them. I could show you on a map how it would work out.

17405. You were not in favour of closing any of the three workhouses?—We were not; they are all, I think, very well-managed institutions.

17406. You don't propose to close Ballyinglass Workhouse, but to take the Kildare part away from that union?—Ballyinglass is in Wicklow—we have nothing to say to that—but the committee who examined the matter were of opinion that it would be desirable that Ballyinglass No. 3, which is a very small area, should be added to Athy No. 1. I may mention that the representatives of Ballyinglass No. 3 itself are opposed to that. They would rather remain as they are, for a very good reason, that their rates are lower than in Athy No. 1.

17407. Are they closer to their hospital?—I don't see; portion would be nearer Athy and portion near Ballyinglass.

17408. Then Edenderry, if you take away the Kildare part, would that virtually mean having to break up the union?—I think not. I think the King's Co. portion is very much the larger portion. We don't know how that would affect the remainder of it. Edenderry is a very small portion of it. Both Ballyinglass No. 3 and Edenderry No. 2 are very small portions of these unions. Our suggestion is that hospitals should be separated altogether from unions; that comes in later on.

17409. Now you are taking up the answer to No. 11.—We did not think that even in the event of the union being dissolved that the workhouse could with advantage be utilized for an auxiliary asylum. Our Council almost immediately after its formation took up the question of auxiliary asylums, and we suggested that the dissolved prison buildings at Naas should be utilized for that purpose. There was an elaborate report prepared by our county surveyor, in conjunction with Dr. Smyth, perhaps I might hand that in—showing what the possibilities of making it an auxiliary asylum were, and that building, if an auxiliary asylum was thought of at all, is still available.

17410. Not used?—And not used; but having regard to what has taken place since then, I do not think, and the Council does not think, that an auxiliary asylum for those joint districts is now necessary at all. There was at that time about 100 inmates in the various workhouses, and most of those have since then been provided for in the district asylum at Carlow.

17411. You have the top number of these inmates and lunatics inmates here—about thirty-four?—The numbers are given in that table. There were then thirty-eight in Naas.

17412. Have you reduced?—That has been considerably reduced. Colbride and Athy have been almost cleared out; and Carlow, thirty-six. I don't know how Carlow stands. I think a number in Carlow have also been transferred to the asylum.

17413. There are a good many there still?—But there are still, I believe, a considerable number—a fair number—in Naas, and what we think now is that: by means of some internal alterations in the asylum, not entailing any very great expense, that sufficient accommodation can be provided for those who still remain.

17414. And a further institution is unnecessary any way?—Is unnecessary; and we think that if the increase in lunacy continues, and if the asylum should become overcrowded, the question might be dealt with by the application of the Scotch system of boarding out pauper lunatics. It would not be a very large application, but it certainly could be found we have a sufficient number of suitable cases for boarding out to relieve any congestion.

17415. With their own relatives?—We think they would be better with strangers; there might be certain cases in which they could be left with their own relatives, but as a general principle we prefer strangers. One of the great objections to the auxiliary asylum is the capitation grant—the fact that the full capitation grant would not be available in an auxiliary asylum—has having regard to the fact that we have now disposed of almost all our lunatics in this county at all events, there seems to be no occasion for it.

17416. We have received statements that if an auxiliary institution were established, the full capitation grant ought to be given to them about?—We are also strongly of that opinion, and made representations to that effect at the time we were suggesting this project as an auxiliary asylum; we urged upon the Government that it would be desirable to change the law in that subject. I will pass to No. 3 now, dealing first with (c). We thought it would be desirable that the children should be, if possible, all boarded out.

17417. At present you have a considerable number of children in the workhouse?—Yes, there are a considerable number.

17418. On the 1st of January—27 in Naas, 27 in Ards, and 5 in Colbridge?—The Council were unanimous in thinking that if possible all children in the workhouse should be boarded out.

17419. That would require, as you know, an amendment of the law. Have you followed out that, and joined to the objections to that as well as the arguments in favour of it?—I don't think we did. I think we considered the arguments in favour of it. The fact that these children would be so much better brought up in the country with something like home-life surroundings than in the workhouse. It is a well-known fact that workhouse children seldom turn out worth anything. To the end of their days they seem to carry the stamp of the workhouse.

17420. And to reproduce their kind?—And reproduce their kind; and where the boarding-out system has been tried it has been found very satisfactory. We think, if possible, it should be extended; then of course it would give a great deal more space for classification and other purposes.

17421. The position is at present that an unmarried woman or a married person goes into a workhouse with her child or children. By law now you cannot separate them; therefore you would want to pass a law giving the Guardians power to separate children from their parents, and to board the child out?—Oh, yes.

17422. Your Council were in favour of that?—Our Council were in favour of making such changes in the law as would enable all children to be boarded out.

17423. That is to say all children who were in the hands of thieflike or non-productive parents—parents who could not support their children, or put them decently on as citizens in the world?—Quite so.

17424. But if you come to a case where a labouring man and his family would have to take temporary shelter, owing to great stress, what would you do with the children in such a case?—In the application of any such principle, there would be a discretion in the Board, and I apprehend no Board in such a case would permanently separate the children from the parents.

17425. Your idea was that no child should be retained in the workhouse?—Except for a temporary period.

17426. If you make a provision for a temporary period, it will be very hard to know where to terminate that period. The reason I am asking you is this, that a suggestion has been made by previous witnesses that in such cases, if boarding out were not considered possible, owing to the shortness of the period, that such cases might be committed to an industrial school instead of to a workhouse temporarily until the parents were allowed to have them again?—I think that would be a very good idea.

17427. So as to keep the workhouse clear of children always?—That is the main point we dealt with. We did not go very deeply into details, because we thought those were matters perhaps which would be better dealt with by the representatives of the Poor Law Boards themselves. The point upon which we insisted was that the retention permanently of children in the workhouse necessitated staffs of schoolmasters and schoolmistresses, and so on; that that should end, and by a combination of boarding out, and what you now suggest—though I don't know that it occurred to us at the time—sending them to industrial schools, that the workhouse might be kept clear of children.

17428. At present there is a habit of remanding children, or sending children to the workhouse temporarily while their parents are in prison, or while some Cruelty to Children Act prosecution is going on, or even when a child is remanded on a charge itself?—I am aware of that.

17429. Would you be in favour of having children in that case remanded to an industrial school, so as to class workhouses altogether to children?—I would—personally I would—it would be very much better than sending them to the workhouse.

17430. But for ordinary children who come in periodically on the rates, your Council are strongly in favour of boarding them out?—Yes. The question of combining unions and classification of different classes of paupers in the different workhouses, of course that really means the question of union rating.

17431. Possibly county rating?—County rating, I mean to say. The Council were in favour of that principle.

17432. They were in favour of a self-contained county for Poor Law purposes?—A self-contained county for Poor Law purposes, and if possible utilising the workhouses for different classes.

17433. In the way you are speaking now you get rid of the leprosy and children. Come now to the Suggest class of all, the aged and infirm. Would you be in favour of making one institution, what you might call almost an almshouse arrangement, for the aged and infirm, where they could be classified according to respectability?—Yes, that was one of the ideas.

17434. You would not be in favour of diminishing the number of hospitals for the treatment of the sick in the county; you would have your three hospitals still. Supposing Colbridge were broken up, you would still leave at Colbridge a hospital for treating the sick?—Certainly; if the building could be utilised as a hospital; there is some doubt on that, whether it would be satisfactory without almost rebuilding.

17435. I am only taking Colbridge as an instance. Assuming you could have a suitable hospital there, and you could take out of that institution all the other classes except the sick and infirm, would you be in favour of sending the infirm to a central institution, say Colbridge itself?—Yes, that was the idea we had; that the county should be self-contained, that the workhouses should be for the use of the whole county, and a certain classification should be made, one class in one, and another class in another, and so on, but we did not go into the question as to in which.

17436. No, but as a general principle?—As a general principle we were in favour of that.

17437. There is another class we have not touched upon, that is the girls who come into the workhouse to have illegitimate children?—We did not go into that question. Those are questions which perhaps would be better dealt with by the representatives of the Poor Law Boards.

17438. But you have had such wide experience of local government in the Poor Law and other matters, that I am sure we would be glad to hear your own personal opinion. If you felt at liberty to give it. We have had suggestions that in future workhouses and workhouse infirmaries should be closed to the admission of girls who come in to have children; that instead of their going to the workhouse they should be sent to a refuge, or penitentiary, or whatever you like to call it, under religious management, according to the religion of the girls, and that if there were not a lying-in ward available in the institution, they could be sent to the nearest available lying-in hospital. The girl who comes into the workhouse now a few months before her confinement, that she should go to one of these refuges and be under good influences for that period, instead of being herded with women who had two or three or more illegitimate children in workhouses, as they are now; that she should be in that penitentiary, that her baby should be taken charge of there, that an effort should be made to put her in a situation as soon as she was fit for it, where she could pay for the cost of keeping her child, and possibly herself, while she was there?—That system might be worked very well in large cities, where there are institutions either already existing or which could be easily established for the purpose.

17439. There are a very large number in Ireland?—There are, but in counties such as this it would mean the establishment of a new institution.

17441. I mean even if you had to go to a place like Kilsberry, would you see any objection to sending them to Kilsberry. These people being able to travel, they generally expiate themselves some two or three months at all events before the event comes off?—If we had these institutions existing, I have no doubt that girls would be better taken care of perhaps in them than they are or can be in the workhouse.

17442. They are very rarely reclaimed in a workhouse?—Yes, that is what I say—once they go into the workhouse it is practically all over with them, and it might not be so in such institutions as you describe; but the difficulty I see in the establishment of such institutions.

May 3, 1894,
Mr. Stephen J.
Baron.

May 3, 1904,
Mr. Stephen J.
Brown.

17443. Of course there are a very large number in Ireland?—I should say not sufficient at all for the requirements.

17444. I am not sure of that, and what keeps this number so very large is the fact that the girl who falls once goes into the workhouse and keeps on having children there; the number of first lapses is not so large. The number of illegitimate children is many times more than the number of fallen girls?—Well, I have no doubt that if such a system could be arranged it would be better than the present.

17445. Would you as a newspaper—I am not putting it higher—think it a prudent and wise use of the public rates to pay for a woman there with a chance of re-employment rather than pay for her permanently in a workhouse, and for the stock of children that she generally raises there?—You would have no absolute immunity that she would not fall again having entered those institutions, but I have no doubt she would be more likely to be reformed. I am not able to form any idea of the relative cost in such institutions.

17446. Assuming the cost would not be higher than the cost of a patient at the hospital?—Assuming it would not be higher, I certainly would be in favour of some change of the kind.

17447. If a girl falls and has an illegitimate child, does she in many cases have to go back to her family?—As I told you originally, I have not much experience of the internal management. I have never been on a Board of Guardians, and have very little experience of the internal management of a union, and I would prefer not to hazard opinions or statements.

17448. You don't remember any case yourself in your ordinary experience of life in the country of girls with illegitimate children going home?—I do not.

17449. Or whether a girl with a baby at her heels would be likely to get employment as a farm labourer, would she be taken into a farmer's house, for instance, with a baby, as a labourer?—I should say not.

17450. I find that it is to be some custom; so great is the dearth of labour that they will take them?—I don't think that would be the case here, but there are a number of gentlemen here representing different unions who will be able to answer you and give their views on that question.

17451. Is there anything else under Query 3 you would wish to say?—I think not.

17452. You have not alluded to sub-heading (a)?—I thought that was included in the general question of classification.

17453. You meant it to cover that?—I meant (a) and (b) to be covered by that.

17454. Now Query 4?—We have to some extent discussed the changes which would be necessary—county rating, and then the various buildings used to the best advantage for the whole county.

17455. Would you make it county rating for the sick of each locality. You would keep up Celbridge, and Athy, and Naas hospitals, and the Co. Kildare Infirmary. Would you make all these distinct charges local charges or a county charge?—Our suggestion was that the hospitals should be separated altogether from the workhouse—if possible, different buildings altogether, and that they should be all under the same system.

17456. That would make a very heavy cost if you went into new buildings?—I fancy it would mean some cost at all events, unless in the event of the dissolution of any of the unions that any of the buildings would be available. At any rate if the inmates and children were removed from the workhouse there would be very much more space available, perhaps to have the hospital in the workhouse ground itself, although there are many objections to that.

17458. We were there this morning, and it is full of patients? I don't say for one moment that the infirmary could be dispensed with, but this institution is maintained by the entire county, and people who are outside the radius which the Co. Kildare Infirmary serves naturally feel it a grievance that they should be maintaining that institution whilst they are also maintaining their own district hospitals. What we say is that all the hospitals in the county should be under the same system and maintained out of county funds, and be under a common system of management. The Kildare institution is a most useful institution, and could hardly be dispensed with in the locality it serves, for that locality is at such a considerable distance from the other union hospitals.

17459. Instead of making it a local area charge, you think it would be better to have the whole of the cost on the county?—I do thank it would.

17460. Any other question of chargeability or rating that you would like to refer to?—Question 6 we did not go into; we thought that was largely a question for the representatives of the unions.

17461. No. 5, you don't want any more hospitals than there are in the county. The re-establishment of the Kildare Infirmary practically gives you four hospitals in a line from top to bottom?—I think the number is sufficient and the distribution is fairly good. In addition to those that have been mentioned, there is a private hospital called the Cottages Hospital, at the Curragh, maintained out of private funds.

17462. What class of people are removed in that?—I believe they are mainly people about the Curragh.

17463. Not soldiers?—No; it is not a military hospital in any sense. I don't think soldiers on active service would ever be received there, but persons connected with the camp—camp followers—and persons from Newbridge, I believe largely.

17464. The inmates at the Curragh are received into Naas Workhouse?—I believe so.

17465. So that it would be people of good character that would be received into this cottage hospital?—I should say more but people of good character. The tickets are in the hands of subscribers, and I suppose they make some inquiry before giving tickets for admission. I don't know the number of beds; it is not very large, but I believe it is always full.

17466. Whereabouts is it exactly?—It is on the Newbridge side of the Curragh.

17467. It is altogether a voluntary hospital?—It is a voluntary hospital, maintained by contributions.

17468. Under what management?—A committee of subscribers.

17469. You don't happen to have a report of that institution?—We have never seen a report. They don't publish any report except perhaps a statement of the sums subscribed. They may send a balance-sheet to subscribers, but it is not published.

17470. Then as regards Query 5?—That is the one I say the Council did not go into fully. We thought it better to leave it, as it was concerned mainly with the internal management of unions, to leave it in the hands of the representatives of the unions. No. 7: we thought it would be most desirable that there should be a system of payments in aid of the hospital treatment of the sick.

17471. Both in county infirmaries and unions?—Both in county infirmaries and unions, we considered they should be all under a common system, the county infirmary and the workhouse infirmary.

17472. What governing body would you have it under?—The County Council was suggested as a governing body acting through committees.

17473. Did you go into the question of the extent to which you would look for payments in aid?—We did discuss that question.

17474. In three or four instances that we have met they had the rule of leaving the amount to the discretion of the committee and medical officer in consultation. They would get to know the circumstances of the people. For instance, a workman's child might come in, a man who might pay a little. The absence of the child, it was argued, from the family would mean a saving at all events of 6d a week, if nothing more, and they would charge the lowest possible amount, sometimes just the absolute amount that would be saved to the family where the family was in low circumstances, and from that on up to the full amount expended. Would you be in favour of giving a discretion to the governing bodies of county hospitals under the County Council or Board of Guardians, that they should be empowered by law to charge such sums between those limits as in their discretion they thought fit?—That was the general idea. It would be impossible that in every case the full cost should be charged, and in some cases we came to the conclusion that where the hospitals were availed of by people really well-to-do, in addition to paying for their actual cost of maintenance, they should pay a sum towards the cost of their medical treatment.

17475. Up to perhaps two guineas a week?—Yes, it would be a graduated scale.

17476. In some county infirmaries we found that practically the cost of the medical salaries was met by the receipts from these paying patients. At Licham and Bannahall they were very large!—That has not been done in the county infirmary, but the medical officer is allowed to charge, I think, fees to patients.

17477. That he can send his private patients in, you mean?—I think people who are able to pay and become inmates of these hospitals, I think the doctor in certain cases charges fees.

17478. You are not sure of that?—We have not yet devised a regular system for the management of the Kildare Infirmary. We have been told that there are general regulations about to be prepared, and we are waiting for those rather than start on an isolated system; but some of my friends who attend the Kildare Infirmary more often than I do will be able to tell you whether that is so or not; my opinion is that it is so.

17479. Then they virtually would be his private patients?—Yes; pay to the committee only the cost of maintenance, and pay the medical fees to him. I may tell you we have had in contemplation for some considerable time that question of making a set of regulations for the Kildare Infirmary, but for the reason I tell you it has not been carried out.

17480. The only thing we have not touched on is, I think, the tramps!—With reference to that, the suggestions made by the Council were that there should be some system of registration for tramps.

17481. Every tramp should have what virtually would be a passport?—Yes; and these habitual tramps would be known persons, to whom certain special powers could be applied by the Guardians, such as the power of detaining them for a certain period when they did enter the workhouse, and obliging them to work.

17482. One Guardian who gave evidence suggested this passport system, too, with the further detail that a photograph of the tramp should be on it!—That might be a useful means of identification.

17483. If he were not a bona fide traveller in search of work he would not be eligible for support from the poor rate, then he would become a person to be dealt with by the police, is that your view?—Our view was—

17484. He has a passport, we will say; that passport in ordinary tramp cannot get, and if a man is wandering without a passport he is liable to arrest by the police!—That was not the idea we had. The idea was that by means of this registry the habitual tramp should be a known person, and when a habitual tramp presented himself at the workhouse, the Guardians would have power to detain him for some certain period and put him to work.

17485. As in England, they have power to keep him a certain number of days, increasing according to the number of times he goes there!—And compel him to work; that would prevent many from applying at all, and those who did apply and entered the workhouse, it would be the means of getting them back to work again.

17486. You would not go as far as this witness to whom I alluded, who said that if they had not their papers they would be about without lawful reason, and should be dealt with by the police, and either put into prison or a labour colony?—That was a different idea to the one which any Council had, but it there was labour colonies established that would be working out the same idea in another way—that there would be power not merely to detain him in the workhouse and compel him to work, but to send him to some place—a labour colony, such as you suggest—where he would be compelled to work.

17487. The idea that seems to preempt the foundation of these labour colonies seems to be that no people should be allowed to go strolling at large, loitering, committing, but if they say they cannot get work they should be put where they can get work, and be made to work, and these institutions made, as far as can be, self-supporting!—I would be thoroughly in favour of that. It would be producing the same thing by even a better means, because the casual work they would be put to in the workhouse might not be as good as the organized work in the labour colony. I don't know where you propose to establish these labour colonies.

17488. The thing is quite in the air; there are two or three Bills on the subject before Parliament at present!—But in the meantime the power to detain and make them work in the workhouse might be effectual while you were waiting for the establishment of labour colonies.

17489. Are you in a position to speak on any of the medical questions—the internal management of hospitals, and the separation of consumptive patients?—

No, sir; of course every one has agreed that consumptive patients ought to be separated, but I don't think it would be practicable to establish consumptive hospitals in each county; they should be central ones for certain districts.

17490. According to the number of people who would be likely to go?—I am not very much in favour of joint boards from my experience of them, but still in that case I think it would be hardly practicable to establish consumptive hospitals for each county, at least at all events.

17491. Was this meeting at which those questions were discussed summoned on due notice that this particular question was to come up?—It was, and copies of the queries were sent to each member of it.

17492. Amongst the members of the Council were there any members of the Boards of Guardians?—There were.

17493. Were there many of that type on the Council, men of experience in the work?—There were some representatives of the Boards of Guardians.

17494. Anyhow the result you came to was that you could not do without any workhouse in the county?—That was the opinion of the committee.

17495. And you think at the same time that the hospital and workhouse should be separate?—Yes.

17496. To carry out that view, would it mean the establishment of more institutions instead of getting rid of some that exist?—It would, that is if the hospitals are absolutely separate; but although we were in favour, if possible, of having these separate buildings, that was not made a sine qua non—that the management of them should be separate is what we considered essential, the management of the hospitals and of the unions, with, if possible, the buildings separate.

17497. But anyhow you did think it would be well to separate the sick from the ordinary pauper?—Yes, certainly.

17498. In this county I see by the latest return that the number classified as aged and infirm was something under 300. Do you think it would be wise to keep up three institutions in a county for such a number as that?—If a system of classification was carried out by which the aged and infirm would be put into one place, and another class kept in other institutions, 300 would apparently be a sufficient number to keep up one institution.

17499. You are quite of opinion that the children should be boarded out where it could possibly be done?—Yes.

17500. And in regard to those who would be temporarily taken from their parents, it was suggested that they could be sent to an industrial home. Do you not think it would be better to give the Guardians power to have certified homes in the neighbourhood, where these children could be retained temporarily?—You mean private dwellings.

17501. Private dwellings kept by people of good character, who would be certified as proper persons to keep these children until a fixed residence was obtained for them?—The suggestion about sending them to industrial schools was not made by our Council. It was suggested by the chairman and accepted by me, the plan of sending them to separate homes would be more in accordance with the views of the Council. I am not in favour of institutional life wherever it is possible to avoid it.

17502. Your Council seem to have decided that they preferred to enlarge the area of union rating to county rating in regard to all Poor Law purposes?—That was one of our suggestions.

17503. Any reasons given for that?—I don't think there were any reasons set out in the memorandum.

17504. Our experience so far is that when you widen the area you lessen inspection and increase the cost. We found that amongst our inquiries, especially in the North of Ireland, that the larger the area the less careful the management, and consequently the greater the cost. Did that idea occur to the Council at all when considering this matter?—No, sir; the idea was involved in the question of classifying the inmates in the different institutions. If different institutions were used for the purpose of classification it almost necessarily involved the question of county rating as opposed to union rating.

17505. Could not the Guardians of the different unions have power to pay for the keep of their inmates in this central institution without infringing at all upon the present management?—It might be done in that way, but I don't see how that would work very well. If the three workhouses that exist in the county were used for the classification of inmates for the needs of the entire county, it would appear to us to involve the question of county charges.

17506. In what way?—In the first place these workhouses should be under common management, if they are to be used interchangeably, as to speak. If all the paupers of one class from the entire county are to be sent to one place and all of another class to another place, I don't see how you could work it out except under common management.

17507. Could not the accounts of the institutions be kept and the cost per capita of the inmates found out, and then the Guardians of the different unions be asked to contribute their share?—It could be done that way, but you would lose the benefit of amalgamation. If they were all under one Board there would be a great saving of the cost in getting supplies.

17508. The central institution would be all under one management. The only other institutions you would have would be the infirmaries, where they are at present?—I don't think it would quite work out that way.

17509. It seems to me that according to the number of aged and infirm, these people who are entitled to support out of the public funds, only amounting to 300, one house ought to fully supply the wants of those 300 people?—But there are other inmates of the workhouse besides the aged and infirm; would they not remain in in other institutions?

17510. I thought the idea was that the children should be boarded out and not allowed into the workhouse at all, and I thought the lunatics should be sent either to an auxiliary asylum or to an asylum?—But there would remain other classes besides the aged and infirm, I think.

17511. What other classes would you have?—There are able-bodied paupers, and I suppose those women that come in temporarily, and other temporary inmates.

17512. The headings are sick, aged and infirm, mothers having infants, children, lunatics, idiots, convales or tramps, and all other classes, and the all other classes are practically the able-bodied, and they would come largely under the heading of men-and-children—people who are eligible subjects for labour colonies or such institutions?—There are a number of able-bodied inmates in the workhouse.

17513. There are not 4,000 in all Ireland out of 40,000—not one-tenth—and a great many of those are poor girls who have gone wrong and remain in their old age in the workhouse?—I have no notion as to the number that would remain after you took away what are classed as aged and infirm.

17514. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—The number, according to the last Census before us, was—sick 337, aged and infirm 294, mothers 59, children 51, lunatics 51, total in the county, 792 of all classes?—I did not hear those who are able-bodied.

CHAIRMAN.—Twenty-two at Athy, six at Colbridge, and three at Neas.

17515. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—They are included in the total of 792?—Certainly, if you take away the sick, and aged and infirm, there is very little left.

17516. In regard to the area of management, that seems to be a subject to which the Council has given considerable consideration. Have they any reason for suggesting that the management should be taken from the Board of Guardians?—No, they did not suggest that.

17517. Your recommendation was that it should be by a county committee?—No, that is with regard to hospitals only. Our idea was that the hospitals should be placed under a common system. The present system is altogether anomalous; the idea of the whole county paying for one institution, which only serves a limited area, as well as its also paying for its own institutions.

17518. That only applies to the county infirmary?—It applies only to the county infirmary.

17519. Just for the sake of doing that, would you take the whole thing out of the management of the present men who have been doing the work. Is there no other way of balancing the matter?—I don't think the present system has been altogether satisfactory. There is a provision for converting these into district hospitals; that has not been availed of.

17520. How has the management not been satisfactory?—I am not prepared to go into details.

17521. When a suggestion of that kind is made by a public man it ought to be backed up by some strong evidence. Your recommendation is that the work of the management of the Poor Law system should be taken out of the hands of the Guardians, and given to a committee appointed by the County Council?—Yes, that is the recommendation of the Council.

17522. Was anything said at the meeting as a reason for such a recommendation?—I have already stated that I have myself no intimate knowledge of the management either of unions or union infirmaries, but personally speaking from myself, and without referring upon any particular institution, I have been given to understand that the management of the union hospitals under the Guardians has been in many cases not satisfactory.

17523. Could you give particulars in any way, because so far as I know I have visited every hospital and infirmary in this county?—I did not make any selection upon this county at all. I am speaking of the management of hospitals by Boards of Guardians.

17524. I naturally thought you were speaking about the hospitals of the county you live in. I have visited the workhouse infirmaries of twenty-one counties in Ireland, and I must say they seem to me fairly well conducted, and some extremely well?—I have read some reports by medical authorities from which the opposite conclusion might be drawn.

17525. Then you have nothing to support your suggestion upon that the management should be transferred from the Guardians to a committee appointed by the County Council?—It is not based upon the management of any of the union hospitals in this county. Any charge that is advocated is not confined to this county alone, but is for the whole of Ireland.

17526. Had that the general support of your Council?—It had; not of the Council, but of the committee specially appointed.

17527. Of how many members did the committee consist?—Some seven or eight.

17528. Have you many tramps in this county?—I have already stated I have little or no knowledge of the internal workings of unions. I have never been a member of the Poor Law Board, and those questions will be fully answered for you by gentlemen who have more intimate knowledge than I have. But I may say that at times there is a very considerable influx of tramps.

17529. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose last week you had a few?—Last week, and on occasions of that kind, we are very freely visited by them.

17530. Dr. BROGAN.—Was the committee that considered all these questions a representative committee of the County Council?—It was; it was the Finance Committee, a standing committee; it was referred to them.

17531. Was it a full meeting of the committee?—It was not a very large committee, only four or five members present.

17532. Was it a unanimous decision they arrived at with regard to putting the hospitals on a county basis?—It was.

17533. CHAIRMAN.—Did their report come before the Council afterwards?—It did not come before the Council for the reasons already mentioned.

17534. Dr. BROGAN.—Will it come before the Council?—It can be found. If the Commissioners thought it desirable we might go into the whole question again, but we have gone into it very fully and carefully.

17535. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Was Mr. Minch present?—He was.

17536. Dr. BROGAN.—Regarding the cottage hospital, is it supported entirely by the subscribers?—It is.

17537. Has it anything to do with the members of the Hunt?—I think not. It was established originally as a memorial to the late Lord Drogheda. There was a subscription, which supplied the capital funds, and then it is maintained by annual subscriptions since then.

17538. I thought perhaps it was maintained largely for the treatment of servants of the household?—I think not. It is called the Drogheda Memorial Hospital, and was established by public subscriptions in memory of Lord Drogheda.

17539. Is it a small hospital?—I think there are only about eight or ten beds in it altogether.

Mr. ROBERT KENNEDY, M.C., A.P., examined.

May 5, 1904.

Mr. Robert Kennedy.

17542. CHAIRMAN.—Are you a member of the County Council?—No, I am not. I was formerly Chairman of the Colbridge Union, and I was an elected Guardian there for about forty years.

17543. And you are Lord Lieutenant of the county?—Yes.

17544. You have seen these queries?—Yes.
17545. Is there any subject in particular that you would like to express your views on?—Well, I came here chiefly to say how very desirable it would be to have Colbridge Workhouse and all workhouses more or less as district hospitals. We worked for years at Colbridge, and our whole object was to make it into a district hospital—to get people of all classes and ranks into it—and with great success. I may just give an instance that when we found that the vehicle for taking people into the workhouse was a sort of coffin on wheels, we got a cab and did not put "Colbridge Workhouse" on it, but "Colbridge Infirmary." That was our policy, and when the Local Government Act passed I wrote to the late chairman asking him to induce the Board to come under the Act, and make the workhouse into a district hospital.

17546. They did take some steps?—He promised to do it, but I never heard what they did.

17547. Some steps were taken, but some difficulties arose?—And my object in coming here to the Commission was this, that living in the country and in that union for years, I look upon it that it would be disastrous to do away with Colbridge Workhouse, because it really is at present a district hospital, and read by a great number of the better class people, and they have confidence in it.

17548. You speak from the point of view of the sick?—Mainly for the sick.

17549. Not as regards what you might call able-bodied?—There were no able-bodied people at all in the workhouse; in fact we had a difficulty in getting women. We had to pay for women to do the work. We improved the hospital, and I speak, I am certain, for all the steps of the district from one end of the union to the other, that they would look on it almost as a disaster if the workhouse was done away with, because it would be practically doing away with the hospital. What I would point out to the Commissioners is this, that the County Council, and I think the County Council in Kildare, so far as I know, are a very economic body, they certainly don't wish to increase rates, that they elected as soon as they were appointed that there was not sufficient hospital accommodation in the county, in Naas, Athy, and Colbridge, although the hospitals there had been greatly improved, and they made a fourth hospital at Kildare; they re-opened the infirmary there. In doing away with Colbridge Workhouse it would be doing away with a district hospital.

17550. It never has been suggested that there should not be a hospital at Colbridge. It has been suggested that the able-bodied could be removed to other centres, so that the entire of the building could be used for the sick?—That would be all; in my day there were no able-bodied at all.

17551. What would you do about the aged and infirm?—I would leave them there.

17552. You have in the hospital about seventy patients?—Yes.

Mr. JAMES STUNDERLAND examined.

17553. CHAIRMAN.—You are also a member of the County Council?—Yes.

17554. And you are, as we know, a member of the Committee of the County Kildare Infirmary?—Yes.

17555. You have heard the evidence of Mr. Brown and Mr. Kennedy this morning. I don't know whether you would care to go in detail through the various questions, or whether there is anything you would like to take up specially out of what has been said?—Well, I had not the privilege of being a member of the Finance Committee, so therefore I was not at their meetings; we did I see the questions agreed.

17556. Are you a member of the Board of Guardians?—Yes, Athy.

17557. You remember the evidence of Mr. Brown on the question of the hospitals. How far would you agree that they should be under county management or union management?—I think I would prefer these under the Guardians, that is in the different divisions.

17558. And then you have among the aged and infirm people who are able to be up and to be about—you have about eighty of these?—Yes.

17559. You would leave these there, too?—I would. I am looking to the future. I don't look for the present. I am of opinion that in years to come our population may increase. I hope it won't go on decreasing. The country is more or less going back now because people cannot get work. I believe that applies to a great many parts of Ireland, but I look for the time when men may not remain as it is now. When it gets a better price there will be more tillage, and the population may increase when the people are better housed, and therefore the Commissioners ought not to act on the belief that our population will go on decreasing. I look forward to better times, particularly when the people become peasant proprietors, that the population, I hope, will perhaps increase. Our policy at Colbridge, during the forty years I was there was to do all we possibly could to make the workhouse into a district hospital solely, and to do all we could for the poor, and in doing that I am satisfied we were doing good to the extent, because when the hospital was going the shorter time the patients were in and on the rates.

17560. The aged and infirm are there practically for the rest of their lives. They are not in any cases hospital patients?—Yes; I would leave them there.

17561. But they are not sick?—No, certainly not.

17562. Why would you leave them there?—There would be a staff there.

17563. A different staff altogether?—Of course, I did not care so much if they were removed as long as the hospital remained.

17564. Mr. MURPHY.—You would see no objection, if the hospital remained, to have the able-bodied removed to some other place?—No, except this, that a great many relations go and see them. I was always myself personally a great advocate of outdoor relief, and the Board in my days were of the same view, but then we looked very carefully after the people outside.

17565. Do you not think it rather a gloomy existence for these old people to be kept in the house during the day passed up without any exercise or fresh air, or occupation, nothing to shorten the day. Would they not be better removed to some place where they could be classified and occupied?—Certainly, if you could do that.

17566. If that could be done you think it would be an improvement?—Yes, except that their relations could not go and see them.

17567. Have the old and infirm any visitors?—Oh, they certainly go and see the sick in hospital.

17568. They go and see the sick very frequently, but as regards the chronic cases, they have very few visitors?—I think the old people have not. I will just give the Commissioners an instance of the use of the hospital. The wife of a man in my employment, with four or five children, went there, and I thought it was a hard thing that the poor thing should die in hospital away from her children and family, and I went to see her, and told her I would try and get her a nurse, but she preferred, although greatly attached to her children, to remain and die in the Colbridge Infirmary Hospital. I don't think a greater compliment could be paid to the management of the Guardians than that; she died there.

17569. At Athy, for instance?—Under the Athy Board of Guardians.

17570. And Naas?—Under the Naas Board of Guardians.

17571. And Colbridge the same way. Then the county infirmary. What would you do as regards that?—I would have it under the same management as it is, appointed by the County Council; but as regards the Kildare Infirmary, it serves a larger area than five miles.

17572. From what distance do your patients come?—The principal come from five miles, but they come from all parts of the county.

17573. Do you ever get them from Colbridge?—The north part of the county don't send so much; they are nearer Dublin, and send their patients there.

17574. And they have a good operating-room in Colbridge, and good facilities for operations there, so there is no reason why they should come south; but do you get patients from the south of the county?—Yes, from Athy and Monasterevan.

Mr. James Stunderland

Mr. James

17573. Castledermot?—Yes; they take a good deal of patients from the Athy Union, from Monasterevan.

17574. Would you get them from Castledermot off the railway line?—Very seldom.

17575. Did you ever get a patient there?—Not to my knowledge. I quite agree with Mr. Brown that Bellinglass No. 3 should be added to the Athy Union, because it is more convenient for the patients there. It is very hard for patients to have to go five or six miles for a dispensary doctor when there is one in the town where they live. One side of the town of Castledermot is in Bellinglass and the other side of the street is Athy; and I also agree with him that Eldersley should be added to Colbride.

17576. Would you like the whole county to be self-contained for Poor Law purposes?—Yes.

17577. As regards the conversation this morning about girls who go into the workhouse to have illegitimate children, what would you think about that?—I think there should be a home for these people to go into.

17578. Would you retain the workhouse for them still, or would you rather send them to a refuge under religious management?—Yes, under religious management somewhere, and then board out the child and let her go back to service and pay for the boarding out of the child. I think that would be better.

17579. As regards the children in workhouses, are you in favour of having them boarded out altogether?—I would have them boarded out altogether, with or without the consent of their parents.

17580. And you would have legislation to enable that to be done with lunatics, and idiots, and epileptics?—I would have them removed to an asylum.

17581. Then the other main class that you have in workhouses would be the aged and infirm—what would you do as regards them?—I would board them out as far as possible.

17582. That would be outdoor relief practically?—Yes, or a place for them separately.

17583. One workhouse set apart for them, you don't see any objection to that?—I don't see any objection to that.

17584. Casuals and tramps, what would you do with them?—I think the Guardians should be empowered to retain them for a certain period, say three days, or longer.

17585. As in England; there is power given recently to Guardians in England to retain them. You would approve of that power?—I would approve of that, and that they be empowered to prosecute them, and that they have to do certain work, and if they did not do that I would prosecute them.

17586. Have you heard at all of this new idea of labour colonies. It has been suggested that a big farm should be taken—two or three for the county, or something of that sort, and that these tramps, and people who are hopping in and out of the workhouse, unprofitable labourers, raising families and propagating pauper children after them, it has been suggested that they should be sent to these institutions under the name of labour colonies, and detained there under a magistrate's warrant as long as was thought necessary?—I certainly would approve of that.

17587. Do you see many of that class strolling through the country?—Yes; there is a regular stream of them coming along the roads from one union to another.

17588. Are there many, as far as your observations go, that are going through the country with carts and things that don't go near workhouses, and manage to camp out?—Very few.

17589. Up at Eldersley we got evidence that there were great numbers of them going through that part of the country in their carts with their carts and never going into workhouses?—They are not in our part of the county.

17590. And they consider them a most objectionable class?—I think the tramps are the most objectionable.

17591. If all these classes were dealt with in the way you now express your approval of, practically no one would remain in the workhouse but the sick, if they would become district hospitals, and that you approve of?—I approve of that.

17592. Mr. MURPHY.—Do you think it would be better to take out the aged and infirm from these institutions they are in at present and put them in some place where they would have some recreation and occupation?—I think it would. I think it would be wise, too.

17593. It would lighten the monetary and give them an interest in life if they had exercise and occupation?—I would approve of that.

17594. Seeing that there are only about 320 aged and infirm in the county, would you not think one institution in Kildare for that particular class alone would be enough?—I would.

17595. Supposing there is another way of providing for them, and that infirmaries are kept where they are at present and improved, do you think that would be an improvement?—I think it would.

17596. Dr. BROWN.—Did you consider the question of the tramps and consumptive patients?—I did, at least in my own mind, and I believe there is a great want of as hospital in this county for consumptive patients.

17597. Do you know if there are many consumptive patients?—I believe there are a good many.

17598. Have you thought out how the hospital might be provided, and under what management it should be placed?—I think it should be helped by the State, and I think it should be under the management of a committee appointed by the County Council—a representative body.

17599. Whose would the rate be raised, would it be a county rate?—It should be a county rate, but I believe the State should help in the matter.

17600. As far as being a county rate, it would be on the same basis as the county infirmary?—Yes.

17601. Would it not be well to have all the hospitals on the same footing?—I think it would be better to have the county infirmary and the consumptives on the county, because it would be the only one for the county, and would serve the whole county.

17602. How is the county infirmary managed?—By a county committee appointed by the County Council.

17603. Are there many local members upon it?—There are a good many.

17604. And they take a keen interest in it?—They do.

17605. Supposing the other hospitals were on the same basis, with local committees for supervision, and looking after details?—I would imagine they are under local committees when they are under the Board of Guardians.

17606. But for the purpose of getting the rate on a more equitable basis?—But you see the hospital at Athy serves only for Athy, whereas the county infirmary serves for the whole county.

17607. Are there not operations performed in the Athy hospital, and in Naas, and in Colbride?—There are some slight operations.

17608. I think there are large numbers; for instance, in Colbride there is a very good operating room, just as good as you have in the county infirmary.

Chairman.—Is it that they have spent some money on the Colbride operating room.

17609. Dr. BROWN.—And all the cases requiring operations from the neighbourhood are treated there and borne by the local rate?—In other hospitals it is borne by the local rate.

17610. Kildare Infirmary is kept up at the expense of Colbride and Naas—is that correct?—Oh, yes; but then Naas and Colbride have the privilege of sending their patients there.

17611. If they don't avail themselves of the privilege?—They can do it; perhaps they prefer sending them to Dublin.

17612. You think because they have the privilege, although they don't use it, it is all right?—They have the privilege.

17613. Would it not be economical to have all the hospitals on one basis so that nurses could be changed from one institution to another. You did not think of that?—I did not consider that.

17614. Would that alter your opinion in any way if you saw there was some economy in it?—If there was economy in it.

17615. And also putting the hospitals on one uniform basis. Would not that be an advantage, and making it a county rate with local committees, the county hospital out of the rate, and the county sanatorium out of the rate, and these district hospitals out of the rate?—I believe myself it would be more economical to have it a district.

17616. Why?—I think the people would try and keep down their rates in their own district.

17617. Why not then have the county on the district rating?—That is the county infirmary?

17513. No, the county rate. You have a county rate for other purposes. The same thing ought to apply in one case as in another?—I think it would be more economical to have it on the whole district rating.

17519. Not always; it is not always an advantage to have a hospital worked on too narrow lines?—No.

Mr. N. J. STENNETT, M.A., J.P., examined.

Well, in answer to these queries, I prepared a short statement. I did not follow exactly the order of the queries, but I prepared a short answer, I think, dealing with all the points, and submitted it to our board, and they agreed with them and suggested some alterations.

17521. CHAIRMAN.—Is that the Naas Board?—The Naas Board of Guardians (No. 4), which includes part of the County Wicklow. Of course, this is only a summary. The first question is the question of amalgamation. I don't think, really, that question arises at all. I don't think there is any demand for it or that it has ever been suggested in this county until this Commission was appointed. I don't think it arises unless it is deemed advisable in some way to join some portion of the Coleridge Union with the neighbouring Unions of Dublin and Meath. That I am not in a position to go into at all; but as for amalgamation, what seems to be forgotten is that to make a sick person or aged and infirm persons travel a greater distance than they now have to travel to get relief is a virtual denial of relief, and if they must get relief that most infallibly increases the outdoor relief, in which our board have the strongest objection on account of its abuse, and therefore to speak of amalgamation as if dealing merely with figures and not to think of distances is not to deal with realities. In parts of our union, in the County Wicklow, they have to come from five miles the other side of Blessington. To tell a person, who is aged or infirm or sick that he will have to go to Coleridge to get cured is a denial of relief to the very persons who ought to have it at their hands, and that, I think, settles the question of amalgamation.

17522. It never has been suggested to us that the number of hospitals should be reduced in Ireland?—No; but I have heard the suggestion since I have been in the room, and I have followed the questions and the answers given to this Commission in other places, and in every union the question of amalgamation or abolition of workhouses has been suggested.

17523. Of workhouses as workhouses?—Very well, but that involves the suggestion that the aged and infirm in each district should have a further distance to go.

17524. Yes, it does?—Very well, I shall wait until some witness here comes and proves that in this county my union is so small that it would not be a very great inconvenience, and, in fact, a denial of relief, to make the aged and infirm and sick travel a longer distance.

17525. Not the sick?—Well, either one or the other. From the very nature of the case you must give relief to the infirm near at hand or you must increase the outdoor relief.

17526. Suppose Naas, for instance, were made the central union of the county—were made the headquarters for the aged and infirm of the county?—Do you mean that no aged and infirm should be received into the others?

17527. Into no other workhouse?—What then is the aged and infirm person living near Athy to do?

17528. They would come by train to Naas?—What about the expense of that?

17529. The question is, would the expense counterbalance the saving of abolishing the salaries of all the side-bodied part of the house at present?—I, personally, should be most strongly against that, and not only that, but it would be impossible to test it. After all, the test is supposed to be destruction. How can we, living in Naas, test or know whether persons living a few miles from Athy would be destitute or not?

17530. It would be the relieving officer of the district that you would have to rely upon, as at present?—Not at all; you might as well abolish Boards of Guardians.

17531. How would you test the destination of a person living at Kilbride, County Wicklow?—Because we take care that either the local Guardian or somebody locally is consulted as far as possible.

17532. Surely you don't mean to say that the people from Kilbride or Blessington are never admitted into the local Guardian has been consulted?—Not at all;

17533. However, as far as the County Infirmary is concerned and the County Sanatorium you would have them county charged?—On the county rates; and as Mr. Jones regards a place for the sanatorium, I would suggest the Sandwell Crag—fine fresh air and a good dry soil.

but you suggest that the statement of the relieving officer should be accepted.

17533. On what else do you ever go?—Upon local information and inquiries made.

17534. Are not the people from those places, as a matter of fact, admitted into the Naas Workhouse without the Guardians having any knowledge of the fact until it comes up before them on the register for approval?—We don't admit a person permanently.

17535. But do you ever turn them out; is it not a fact that the relieving officer admits a person and he remains permanently; can you give me an instance where he has not?—You better ask our clerk.

17536. I am asking you, because you have such a strong opinion on it?—No; but I point out this that if you make aged and infirm persons come a long distance to be relieved they may not come, and they may ask for outdoor relief.

17537. It does tend to increase that?—Then if we rely on outdoor relief it is almost impossible to exercise local supervision. It is a matter rather outside my memorandum, and it is therefore rather difficult to give an answer straightway; but you asked me how we tested a person in the aged and infirm ward apart from the statement of the relieving officer. The case of destitution or not comes up on the report of the Master or on the examination of the list as to whether he is able to pay or not.

17538. The Master, of course, is living in Naas, and knows nothing about these remote districts?—I think I am right in saying a list is sent round by the clerk, and the local Guardians do inquire.

17539. There would be no difficulty in sending such a list round to the Guardians of the county?—I think, if you ask me, our districts are, if anything, too large for the purpose of supervision, and unless you have supervision of the Poor Law there will be an enormous increase in the rates. With regard to the suggestion of classification I think that, if possible, the aged and infirm and permanently incapacitated who are not sick, and therefore don't require the daily attendance or constant attendance of a doctor, should be under separate treatment with a separate regime, and in separate wards, as far as possible.

17540. Again, you would not agree that a central institution for the county would meet that?—No; I would be absolutely against that.

17541. Such central institution would admit of such classification as you recommend?—It seems to me to alter the whole basis of the Poor Law, and, with all respect, I don't think such a suggestion is involved either in the warrant appointing the Commission, or indeed was ever intended by Parliament that altering the whole basis of the Poor Law should be conducted by an inquiry of this kind—a Local Government's Commission. If you do that you must alter the whole system of election of Boards of Guardians.

17542. That may be faced?—That was never intended under this Commission.

17543. You have your opinion of what was intended; you must permit us to have our opinion?—At any rate I can say that I don't think it is the proper way to alter, radically, the whole basis of the Poor Law.

17544. You recommend this improved classification. How would you carry that out in the Naas Workhouse?—To be candid, I should like, if possible, theoretically.

17545. Practically?—I had better take it in steps, because there is a question whether the money is forthcoming, and there is no use speculating about district hospitals if we have not the funds to build them.

17546. I am not speaking about district hospitals, but this question of aged and infirm and those who don't require hospital treatment; how you are going to give them a better regime?—A more liberal scale of diet than side-bodied paupers; but what I wish to avoid is this, I wish to avoid persons being treated as sick and getting a better treatment as sick who are only aged and infirm. I think there ought to be a uniform scale of diet for aged and infirm, and they should be kept in a separate ward, and that the curable sick should be under the doctor's hands, and to them should be permitted to order special food and, shall I add, special drink.

17647. He has that power at present?—It may be rather liberally applied to the whole body of aged sick and infirm. Mr. O'Grady, who is here, has taken a special interest in the very large increase in the consumption of spirits in our workhouse, amongst others, by the aged and infirm, and certainly, I think, there is great room for economy in that regard. When you have persons, as we have found, who have been constantly getting almost daily allowances of spirits and porter, who have been years in the workhouse, who certainly would never have got it outside in their own homes, I think that special treatment should be confined to the sick. And there are other matters. I think there should be uniformity of treatment and diet in the aged and infirm wards, subject, of course, to the discretion of the doctor.

17648. That is what does exist you are aware?—I think there ought to be some stringent rules; there are a great many workhouses where I think the sick and infirm are not kept separate; sick is a very wide word—I mean by it a curable person.

17649. Do you think these aged and infirm should come into workhouses; would you approve of leaving them altogether in the same wards as they are at present—I mean people who come in who are rather respectable old people—and respectable people, would you leave them together, as at present?—I was just going to answer that question. I fail to see, and I am confirmed in my opinion by the report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons, how in the case of the past lives of persons you can distinguish between the deserving and undeserving, and the respectable or non-respectable; you cannot do it; you can only judge of their behavior in the workhouse. I am confirmed by the report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons on what was called "The Outrage Houses Bill." They reported there, and the "Committee of the Royal Commission on the Aged Poor" reported the same things, "that to judge the character of applicants for relief and to prepare a system of classification by past character would present the greatest difficulties."

17650. You would not attempt to classify them?—I think it would be extremely difficult; you can distinguish the tramp class, of course, and the vagrant, and the in-and-out class, but how are you to define the deserving and the respectable?

17651. The reason I asked you is that you use the phrase in your memorandum, "the deserving infirm." I wanted to get at your definition of that?—If they have a long distance to travel there would be many deserving amongst them.

17652. You would not be able to sort them?—No; I don't think it is possible. As regards the treatment of the aged and infirm, I say it is against the principles of the Poor Law that the treatment of the aged and infirm should be much better than that of the same class outside the workhouse. It is right that they should be properly treated and with due regard to their age and infirmity, but if you establish a system of treatment which is higher than they receive in their own homes you are virtually encouraging people to come to the workhouse.

17653. That we may take as an axiom?—Yes; but I should like to see that carried out in practice. With regard to the sick, I say theoretically it would be most desirable to have all the sick treated in separate hospitals, but the question is whether that can be done; the workhouses are there, as has been pointed out; some of them are not full, and if the lunatics and epileptics and the children are taken away there will be more room left for the sick, and the question is how we could possibly get from the Government, or from anybody, money to build separate hospitals outside. I agree it would be very desirable there should be separate hospitals, and I think these separate hospitals would probably be largely subsidised as the hospitals in Dublin are by private charity, but unless the Government give us money I confess I don't see how these separate hospitals would be built, and therefore I am driven to think you must keep the sick, if possible, in separate wards or perhaps in separate buildings in the existing workhouses, and be under district management. There is no doubt that that is the more economical method of management with a smaller area, and I heard the suggestion from one of the members of the Commission that you should have county management and county rates, and local bodies managing them.

17654. Dr. BOONER.—A hospital committee composed of members of the County Council and other members?—If the rate was a county rate.

17655. CHAIRMAN.—You must not assume we are expressing our own opinions when we put questions?—I have no doubt some one else suggested it. No; but a local committee which was powerless over the rates would not have much stimulus to exercise any great supervision.

17656. With regard to the Kildare Infirmary, does it get much from voluntary contributions?—I think there was a capital sum subscribed to put it in order, but I don't think there are large annual contributions.

17657. You seem to anticipate that if there were separate hospitals they might receive voluntary contributions?—If there were I should largely hope to see paying patients. I should be very glad to be sent there. If there were separate wards we should have banners started to support them and we should have separate buildings where people would go and pay and be taken away from infection, but now the only people interested in the sick in the county are practically the Boards of Guardians.

17658. MR. MURTAGHAN.—Might you not carry the question of hospitals too far; is not the natural place if one can afford it when he gets sick, his own home?—The doctors are inclined to think that with trained nurses and scientific appliances and daily and nightly attendance, having regard to the danger of infection, the best place is the hospital.

17659. Where the case is not infectious?—If it is a surgical case it is often better treated in rooms attached to a hospital, as is universally done in Dublin.

17660. Is an institution like that a good place in which to place a child?—There is often no room for a nurse in a small house, and country doctors' attendance must necessarily not always be daily. But I don't see the possibility of getting funds for these separate hospitals.

17661. CHAIRMAN.—Therefore you would let the present buildings be used as they are?—Unless the Government are prepared to come down with the money.

17662. Assuming that was not done, would you leave it with the Board of Guardians or with a district committee similar to that suggested in one of the sections of the Local Government Act?—You must always remember that the Board of Guardians are responsible for the money and have to fix the rate, and the majority of people after all will be the destitute pauper, and I think, in the interests of the community, the Board of Guardians should have the controlling power.

17663. Under the Local Government Act they should be two-thirds of that number?—The doctor, I think, and two or three competent persons would be very desirable; of course, the remainder I make don't apply to comprehensive hospitals, which I hope will be a county affair.

17664. Or even larger perhaps?—The only question is if the disease is infectious; probably if there were such hospitals established it might be derived out altogether, or largely diminished. The question is whether such hospitals should not be rather temporary structures than permanent stone buildings. However, I leave that for the experts to decide on. With regard to non-dangerous lunatics and epileptics, they should certainly be removed from the workhouse; it is the law now, and I understand the Boards of Guardians can call upon the County Lunacy Committee to take them into the lunatic asylums, but we have had the greatest difficulty in getting the County Asylums authority to accept our lunatics, who are not dangerous lunatics, although they get 4s. a week per head for their maintenance. They say they have not space for them. At the same time, although a temporary measure may be taken for their support, it is a question whether they should not be really properly cared for in some place apart from dangerous lunatics, where the expense of keeping some epileptics and non-dangerous lunatics ought to be much less and require much less medical supervision than dangerous lunatics. With regard to tramps, I find a difficulty, which I think any gentleman must feel, in answering the question as to tramps unless the cause of the matter is gone into. I have followed with some care the evidence given before this Commission in many places, and it seems to me that the habit, objects, and modes of life and mode of dress should be gone into, otherwise we won't get an effectual remedy. That was gone into very condemned by local inquiries all over Ireland in the case of the Poor Law Commission, and it is evident from that that the nature of the tramp has entirely varied.

17605. Or would you say it is their story has varied?—I imagine it really is different. As I read that evidence they really were in most cases people who did work work and food.

17606. That was when we had a large population—over eight millions—in the country?—Yes. In the present case the tramp is a person who will not work or will not work continuously, and therefore you are dealing with quite a different class of person from those who were dealt with by the Poor Law Commission of 1834.

17607. We have got a good deal of interesting evidence about that—I am afraid it has not been published yet—the evidence as to why people are tramps or what makes them tramps.

17609. We have been in communication with the police on the subject?—With regard to the remedy to be applied, first of all with regard to the detection in the workhouse, I understand that the Local Government Board can make an order to-morrow and allow us to detain, and, secondly, even if that were allowed it is a question whether it would be effectual, as I understand it has not been effectual in England.

17610. There has been a labour colony agitation?—Yes; and there has been the strongest pressure brought to bear on the Government to appoint a Commission to inquire into the tramp question in England. If you drive him out of these institutions altogether you will only perhaps drive him to sleep in the huts, which may not be altogether pleasant. I suggest, really, that there should be a careful inquiry into the cause of vagrancy before any remedy is applied.

17611. Have you observed in your own experience of the country anything that you would be inclined to attribute as one of the causes of vagrancy?—I really cannot. I have often asked questions of those tramps who come up to one's hall-door, why they were carrying on this trade, if I may call it, and I never could get a clear answer. I often found that they would tell you they were going in one direction, and following their movements, you would find they were going in an opposite direction.

17612. Did it ever occur to you that they were largely hereditary tramps?—I am not sure.

17614. You have not observed women going about with children?—I have not seen many. It has been suggested that whereas begging, I believe, now is unlawful in a public place, it is not unlawful I believe in a private place, so that a man may come up and beg at your hall-door, and in your house, or trade premises, and cannot be punished I believe, whereas if he begs on the public road he can be arrested and punished. Whether that would prevent a man coming up to one's hall-door and begging, I am not sure, but there seems no reason why it should not be as unlawful to come into a shop and beg as to beg outside the shop.

17615. Mr. MURKIN.—But there are beggars and beggars?—No doubt.

17616. Some people perhaps are deserving beggars?—But it is none the less unlawful, because it is impossible to distinguish between the deserving and the undeserving. With regard to children, it certainly seems desirable that all children, except infants of course, should be removed and boarded out, either at or present in houses or sent to industrial schools. These again, who is to establish and pay for these industrial schools? That seems to be a crucial question, how these are to be paid for and supported. I don't attach much importance to that remedy unless funds are provided.

17617. What about using one of the disused workhouses?—I thought I had given a satisfactory reason that you could not possibly use many of these workhouses. If you will allow me to say, I cannot help remarking that there have been other suggestions made from time to time before this Commission which I am absolutely opposed to, and I know that our Board are also absolutely opposed to. I have drawn their attention more than once to them, and that is the suggestion that adult inmates, and aged and infirm, should be boarded out, either in houses or elsewhere, and also that idiots and epileptics should be boarded out, as I believe takes place in Scotland now. I think one witness went so far in Mullingar as to suggest that workhouses should be abolished altogether, and to substitute outdoor for indoor relief. It seems to me that that, with all respect, goes to the very basis of the Poor Law, and I could give reasons if necessary for showing that it is certainly not included in the queries sent to us and in the terms of reference, because I understand here from that that the governing words in these terms of reference were the amalgamation or abolition of workhouses, and the consequent alteration in the treatment or classification of the inmates.

17618. CHAIRMAN.—I don't think you will find "consequent" anywhere?—The concluding paragraph, which is the general paragraph, authorises the Commission "generally to inquire and report whether any, and what, administrative and financial changes are desirable in order to secure a more economical system for the relief of the sick, the insane, and all classes of destitute poor in Ireland." These are administrative and financial changes in order to secure a more economical system. These words, I submit with all respect—the reason I do so is because this suggestion as to outdoor and indoor relief has been made—those words do not cover the abolition of workhouses and the substitution of outdoor relief.

17619. I suppose they did in the mind of the witness who made that suggestion?—The question was raised more than once, and I would ask you either not to consider it or to report against it. I have the strongest opinion on that matter, that unless outdoor relief is diminished as much as possible, the expenditure of the Guardians cannot be controlled at all. The grave reason in the absence of evidence of destitution except the statement of the relieving officer. It would lead to extravagance, and dry up the springs of charity. Many aged and infirm persons are now voluntarily supported by relatives who would be put upon the rates as soon as the workhouse and is received.

17620. Mr. MURKIN.—Is it not possible that outdoor relief, properly safeguarded, is a very economical system?—For the reasons which are given in the report of the Poor Law Commission, and every Commission, it cannot be properly safeguarded.

Mr. MURKIN.—I don't look upon that as an infallible decision of all.

17621. CHAIRMAN.—That was a most representative Commission?—Yes; some of the ablest men in Ireland were on it—two Archbishops, Dr. Murray, Archbishop of Dublin, and I think Dr. Trench. There was an inquiry in England just before, and there have been Parliamentary inquiries since.

17622. Do you know what action was taken on that report?—The Irish Poor Law was the result.

17623. The Irish Poor Law did not follow that report. It was the result of a report made by one gentleman, a Mr. Nicholls, an official with no previous knowledge of this country.

Witness.—He had their report before him.

CHAIRMAN.—And he went in direct opposition to it.

Witness.—Is what point?

CHAIRMAN.—The report of this most representative Commission was criticised by him in every way.

Witness.—I don't agree in that; he was against outdoor relief.

CHAIRMAN.—Oh, yes, on that point they agreed. I had not in view the disapproval of outdoor relief, but the recommendations of the Commission. I was referring to the last paragraph in your observations here, in which you say, "the only representative Commission which inquired into a thing of this sort." Well, that was a most representative Commission, but yet the Poor Law which we are inquiring into was founded and framed on the report of one man—an Englishman or Scotchman.

Witness.—I don't see that that is relevant to the question I am dealing with, when we find both this Commission and Mr. Nicholls opposed to outdoor relief.

CHAIRMAN.—This observation of yours, that the Poor Relief Act was the result of that Commission, is general, and is not restricted to outdoor relief at all.

Witness.—I have said I don't think that your terms of reference cover a complete reform of the basis of the Poor Law, which would involve also an alteration in the local government. I say that that was never intended to be carried out by a Commission of this kind.

CHAIRMAN.—Well, your assertions are very forcible.

Witness.—I would be very much obliged if the Commission will show me under what head of inquiry—
CHAIRMAN.—We are not here to answer any questions put in this way by you as to our warrant.

Witness.—No, no; but under what head of inquiry is the substitution in any manner of outdoor relief for indoor relief warranted?

CHAIRMAN.—We have not asked you any questions on the subject. You are speaking of a report you read of evidence at Mullingar.

Witness.—I have a right to consider the evidence given by other persons, which, presumably, will be taken into account by the Commission.

17684. CHAIRMAN.—I don't remember that evidence?—That evidence having been given, I suppose I have a right to deal with it. You certainly received evidence with which our Board dealt more than once, that idiots and epileptics should be boarded out. We were most strongly against that, because there would not be the proper supervision at all of them by the farmers and people who had control of them. They would be taken from the immediate and direct care of the doctor. A new terror will be added to life by the prospect of meeting these idiots and epileptics in country roads; and another thing is, the border line between dangerous and non-dangerous lunatics being not always easy to draw, you might have cases of dangerous or semi-dangerous lunatics, or people of a doubtful kind of insanity being put around care in country districts; and I don't like the idea of epileptic persons being sent to homes round the country where they may be wandering about the roads and frightening women and children.

17685. I don't know what class of person you suppose an epileptic is?—I have seen them.

17686. You mean getting that?—I do. I think it would be most objectionable. That was brought seriously forward by more than one person before this Inquiry; that is though I say I don't think the boarding out of idiots and epileptics was ever intended by the Warrant of the Commission.

Mr. John Steel
Of Counsel.

Mr. JOHN STEEL (OF COUNSEL).

I represent Naas No. 1 Rural District, and the area is the same as the area of the Union, except a small portion that runs into the Co. Wicklow. This subject came up before the District Council and was placed on the agenda, and the whole matter was considered by the full Council, and the Council were entirely opposed to the amalgamation. Some of the members of the Council were of opinion that there might be some change made in Coleridge Union, but they considered the gentlemen from Coleridge would be able to look after their own affairs, and they thought it better to confine their entire attention to their own district. They were of opinion that amalgamation was not necessary, as the Naas Union was a large union, and the workhouse was situated in the centre of it, and the transit of the sick poor was facilitated by that fact, and they considered that if it was enlarged it would be a great hardship on the sick poor to have to be brought a greater distance, and also that it would hamper the performance of the duties of members of the Board of Guardians. Some of them have to come a great distance at present, and if the area was extended they would not be able to attend as well as heretofore.

17687. CHAIRMAN.—Mr. Brown told us of some of your economies in the Naas Union?—I attend fairly regularly, and take a great interest in looking after things.

17688. I understand the expenditure has been considerably reduced lately?—Yes, a new scale of dietary has been adopted, and as far as that has gone at present, we have been able to save £5 a week.

17689. That is on the whole; on the inside I believe something has been saved?—Yes, I was continually bringing before the Board the expenditure on stimulants. I thought it was extravagant. Of course it is all in the hands of the doctor, and the doctor in this union met us very fairly by trying to economise in every way he could.

17690. Is the result a considerable economy?—Yes, £5 a week. With regard to the harmless lunatics, we are very badly situated in Naas Union. We have no accommodation whatsoever for them; in fact the hall they live in in the day-time is the sleeping apartment at night.

17691. The same room for both?—Yes. Not very long ago I was appointed on a committee to inspect this place. I went into this hall-way, and I assure you I got out of it as quickly as I could. It was something terrible the stench of it.

17692. I suppose some of these poor people are not able to take care of themselves?—Yes. The Council are of opinion it would be a good thing to establish an asylum for harmless lunatics, provided the area of charge was made over two or three counties.

17693. The same as the asylums are at present?—Yes; the great drawback would be the question of the building. We could improve the present premises at a small outlay, but if we did that we should get the competition grant.

17694. You have not room even without considerable building; you could not accommodate more than thirty?—Oh, no, we could not now. At present, properly speaking, we should not be able to accommodate more than five or six in the premises we have; and the rector the assistant has his bed in he has also to keep his provisions in.

17695. Dr. BOGGS.—Cooks there too?—Cooks in it; that is a very bad system.

17696. CHAIRMAN.—The ordinary food is cooked in the men's kitchen?—But then he cooks for himself.

17697. You would rather, I suppose, have the lunatics removed from the workhouse?—We would prefer to remove the lunatics, provided the expense of establishing a separate asylum would not come too heavy. With regard to lunatics, we have a right to have them taken into the lunatic asylum, but unfortunately we delayed about that, and then when we discovered that fact we sent on too many—five or six—and there was no accommodation for them, and they were all sent back again. Of course if from time to time they were sent in that would reduce the number very considerably, and then we would not want much accommodation for the epileptics.

17698. We would rather have all the lunatics removed?—Deadly.

17699. Have you made any estimate of the relative cost to the ratepayers between having the lunatics in the workhouse and having them in the district asylum. Are you under the impression that it is much more costly to have them in the asylum than in the workhouse?—I was under the impression that it was more costly to have them in the workhouse; we have no competition grant.

17700. Did you ever make out the expense at each place?—No, I am not on the Civil Asylum Committee. I don't know much about the working, but I would be of opinion that it would not be greater.

17701. Have you any idea of what a lunatic costs you in your workhouse at present?—That would be merely the food and clothing—the average cost is 4s. 6d.

17702. But if you take, as the asylum people do, all the expenditure and divide that by the number of lunatics for the average cost per head, you would find that there is comparatively little difference between the cost in the workhouse and in a lunatic asylum. Then the asylum people get a competition grant of 4s. a week, which may possibly bring it below the cost in your workhouse?—I think it would be very desirable, if possible, if some scheme could be devised, or some Government assistance given, to have them taken out of that altogether, but I would be entirely against boarding out the epileptics. I think it would be objectionable, and I think they would be subject to a lot of annoyance too; you often see half-frenzied men. They would not be properly looked after. The best place would be where the medical officer would be, and there would be a trained nurse to keep them clean and healthy.

17703. As regards the children?—I think the stigma of the workhouse should be removed from the children altogether. I think they should be boarded out with respectable people.

17704. Do you find any difficulty in getting homes in which to board the children out?—Some whatever; sometimes two or three applications for a child.

17705. As regards girls going into the workhouse to be confined when they are going to have illegitimate children, you have heard the conversation we had this morning?—I have; it is a very difficult question. As far as my Council or Board of Guardians are concerned, they would prefer not to have them in at all if possible, but it is a very difficult question.

17706. When they do come in, is it within your knowledge that they stay in for the greater part of their lives afterwards?—Some stay in, and some go out.

17707. Do many go out?—They do.

17708. When they do go out, what is their subsequent life?—That depends on circumstances—it depends on where they come from. If a girl falls in a rural district and comes up, and perhaps her people are respectable, she may, when she goes out to go away to service, be ashamed to come back, and lead a fairly good life afterwards, and her people would support her child. But in this union you have the military stations—you have Newbridge and the Curragh Camp—and that is a different thing—some of those people who come on here with illegitimate children, it has been the same with their mother before them, and they go back again, and fall away, and probably if the illegitimate child of a person from a military district comes in here, if that child grows up and goes away to a rural district, she may live a good life, but if she goes back to the same surroundings she will fall again.

17709. For that reason don't you think it would be a good thing to remove these women from their surroundings and temptation and put them under religious instruction?—I think they should be removed from the workhouse altogether, and take the names of those away from it with a view to make it more popular.

17710. There is no doubt that the presence of these poor girls in the workhouse does tend to—do you use a common word—for people coming in?—There is a prejudice amongst respectable poor people going to the workhouse, and one of the reasons is they say they would be associated with those parties. I think there should be some separate institutions; institutions for that purpose should be subsidised by Boards of Guardians.

17711. You should pay so much per head for girls that go there?—Yes.

17712. As regards the aged and infirm, there has been a good deal of evidence here to-day about them. What is your opinion?—Do you mean the aged people that go into the workhouse?

17713. Under (c) of No. 51—I think they should be destitute in the workhouse.

17714. Or would you prefer having a distanced workhouse given to them?—Unless there was no reason why the workhouse should be kept open. In the case of the Naas Union, I would prefer to have those people in the workhouse.

17715. Take the Naas Union as the central union of the County Kildare. Would you see any objection to make it, in addition to its sick hospital, which would mean, would you see any objection to make that an ambulance or central institution for the aged and infirm of the county, the same way as you have a central institution at Carlow for the lunatics of the county?—If you adopt that system, would you bring the aged and infirm from all parts of the county?

17716. That is what I am throwing out for your opinion—I think there would be a good deal of use in connection with that.

17717. At present bringing them to the workhouse at all is as much of a cost?—There is very little cost now.

17718. Take from Blessington. Do they reach the workhouse as a rule themselves, or are they brought in as an ambulance?—In some cases they are brought in by friends; in more cases they are sent in by farmers loading a cart and horse, and in other cases by the ambulance.

17719. Don't you think that would be the same if the work area was enlarged?—No; I think it would be too far.

17720. Take Castledermot?—It would be a long journey from there to Naas. My idea would be to keep them in the unions in which they were born, and classify them, and in the case of old men and women who lived honestly and respectably all their lives, I would not separate them in the union.

17721. I quite understand that point of view—that is a natural and humane point of view—but if you come to look at the number of workhouses in Ireland, taking a big view of it, you have 160 workhouses in Ireland, and some people consider that the number is greatly in excess, that the number before the Famine times was a good deal less, and that certainly numbers might be brought down to what they were before the Famine times. If you have to bring down the number of workhouses at all you have to close some for the purpose of the able-bodied healthy?—Against that some unions are very large; more unions are small. Take the case of Naas Union, the valuation is £154,000, and population 34,000; in Edenderry Union the valuation is only £68,000, and population 16,000.

17722. What Mr. Brown seemed to think was that if you made such a central institution it would mean a county rate, but it need not necessarily mean a county rate—I am entirely opposed to what he advocated with regard to placing the control of the union hospitals under a county committee; certainly I would have the local administration as laid down at present, and I would have the local people in charge of their own areas, and I think it would do a great deal to teach them how to govern themselves, and they will have more interest in it. If you had to bring a committee together from several parts of the county you would have to pay those men; they could not give their time for nothing.

17723. The committee would still be local?—They would have to go to the one centre.

17724. There would be a committee for Naas, according to the plan Mr. Brown was discussing, and a committee for Coleraine, and a committee for Athy of local people?—What would you have in Athy?

17725. In each place you would have a hospital at least?—What would that hospital in Athy serve?

17726. The same district that Athy has at present?—Then why change it?

17727. With a view of reducing the large establishment charges?—Then would the area served in Naas be Naas?

17728. Yes?—Then why change the present system of Guardians if the area is the same.

17729. He did not explain that; you might have a talk with him about that afterwards?—I am only putting the view of my Council before you. My opinion, and the opinion of the Council, is that the aged and infirm should remain in Naas, as at present.

17730. It would be hardly possible to remove the Naas people elsewhere?—Some of the people are very respectable old people; others are not. I think they should be in a ward when they come in first for a certain time under supervision.

17731. You would not have room in Naas to make such sub-classification?—I think you would. These workhouses were built on a very bad system, most of them—all halls and passages.

17732. They were built very well for the purposes of classification of the day. Things have changed a good deal since then, and now we are disposed to do far more for the sick and poor than people would have dreamt of doing in those days?—It is very easy to carry out these new ideas, but the unfortunate thing is that the people have no money.

17733. I don't think you need be afraid of this Commission recommending anything that would involve increased expense?—I hope the Commission will recommend the Government to give some money.

17734. Then as regards the infirm, you really don't see yourself any way of improving the present arrangements?—I do not. I certainly say the union as it stands should remain and be under the control of the Board of Guardians.

17735. As regards tramps, have you any special views on that subject?—The number of tramps that are entertained weekly in Naas Workhouse would be something between sixty-six and seventy. There are several classes of tramps. If you go out on the high road now you will meet the bone file tramp going along looking for work. He may look for work but he does not want it. Then you will meet the man with his hands in his pocket. He is not out of employment, he is a professional tramp.

17736. He never did work?—No. In some cases it seems to be hereditary. There are a number of these tramps going about at present, and they are discharged soldiers and militiamen; and what increased the number of tramps was the abolition of the twenty-one years' service—short service has increased them. I think a tramp should have a licence, and he should report himself to the police barracks if he wants to get relief at the union, and if he is found a second time applying for that relief in a union in Ireland, I think he should be dealt with very severely. I would give him six months or twelve months, and I would have a State farm, or tramp farm with a lot of land attached.

17737. That would be virtually a labour colony?—I would give him twelve months without the option, except if he was well-conducted there and worked well, he could be let out on a licence in six months.

17738. You are assuming a tramp a single man. What would you say to the tramps that have children with them?—You mean with the father and mother with them.

17739. Sometimes the mother only?—Or the father and no mother. I think it is the duty of the local administration to take that man and deal with him as a tramp and board his children out, because unless you do that you will have a race of tramps springing up.

17740. I suppose as long as that man's children are being put forward in life, and taken care of by the State, you would consider it fair of the State to deprive that man of his liberty and prevent him going to get a further family?—Yes; and to subsidise the State farm. The State farm is worked in the State of Massachusetts in America, except with this difference, that tramps who require lodgings have to go to the police barracks for it.

17741. I am not aware of that institution. Could you give us a reference?—A gentleman in Newbridge wrote to a friend in America, and that is the substance of his reply. I would not persecute every one. There are some deserving old people who get local relief. They just roam around the immediate locality among people who know them.

17742. And it is really not an unending charity. You would not care to lock up the poor blind man?—No. There are a lot of these malicious burnings done by these people that go about. There was one reference made to-day about the way relief was granted in the Naas Union. It arose in Mr. Synnott's evidence. I must say for the Guardians of the Naas Union that they are very particular in giving it, and I have known gentlemen to bring cases there and try and get them on relief, and it was not allowed if there was any chance of the person being able to work at all.

17743. I was merely alluding to the practical impossibility of dealing with cases of indoor relief in remote parts of the union except on the faith of the recommendations of your relieving officer?—We never go exclusively on the relieving officer's opinion, and often you will find that we adjourn for the attendance of the local Guardians.

17744. But the man remains in the house all the time?—Yes, you don't know what to do with him.

17745. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—You have given us some interesting information. You say your Council is opposed to amalgamation entirely, as it would not be suitable to Kildare. What method of information is there unless we take this one of separating the different classes in the workhouses of the country. When we take the children out of the workhouses and board them out, when we take the lunatics out of the workhouses and send them to an asylum or auxiliary asylum, and deal with the mothers also, you have hardly anybody left in the institution except two classes, that is the sick and the aged and infirm?—And the tramps, of course.

17746. They can be dealt with too. In regard to those other two classes they don't amount to a very great number altogether?—Oh, they do.

17747. Not in Naas?—The number in the hospital now—

17748. According to the last report the number in hospital was 166?—That is a good deal, and the hospital as it stands at present—of course I cannot give an opinion of a hospital, but from what the average man would observe, it is very congested and requires classification. For instance, if you walked into a ward until lately you might see a man dying in one bed, a man with a broken arm in the bed next to him, and a consumptive in a third bed; the room that would be gained by the others going out a lot of it would be required.

17749. Is the whole of that big institution required for 150 or 160 cases?—You would have more cases than that if you removed the taint of pauperism from the place. You would have small farmers and people glad to go in there for treatment. That suggestion was put forward by Mr. Kennedy to-day. He did not elaborate it, but he said he wanted Celbridge turned into a district hospital. I think what he wanted was to have the taint of pauperism removed, and I think that that is a very good suggestion.

17750. You agree children ought not to be kept in a workhouse?—I do.

17751. For the rearing of them in a workhouse is condemned on all sides. You agree that the lunatics ought to be taken out also, and the mothers of children ought to be away. Having taken out those three different classes you have only two classes to deal with, the sick and the infirm. Would it not be possible to provide for the sick, say, for instance, in the place where they are at present—make the infirmaries more up-to-date than at present, and take that other class, the aged and infirm, and put them in some place where they could have some occupation, some little employment to relieve the monotony of the hours they have to pass in the day-room. Do you not think that some such change is desirable?—That is what I suggest, that these infirm people be separated—that there should be separate wards for old men and their wives.

17752. The wards would not be enough. It could not be done as matters are at present. Why not provide an institution for themselves with a good deal of land?—You would buy the land on the building.

17753. The building is there. You have fine buildings in the county already beside the county jail?—The jail is a jail, and until you knock it down and build it again you will never make anything of it. I will ask you to visit the jail. Is it only a jail, and that is all it will ever be.

17754. Don't you see a great deal of useless waste in keeping up these staffs in the county where one staff would do for one particular class?—You won't increase the staff by doing what I advocate.

17755. So, you will keep them as they are, but you might reduce them by doing what has been suggested to us?—I don't see how you will reduce them.

17756. You would only require the infirm staff, that will be necessary in all existing institutions—no one has suggested that there should be any curtailment of the provision for the sick, but a good many witnesses have said that the one particular class known as the aged and infirm, who need very little care now than food and proper attention, could be provided in at a good deal less expense, and a considerable amount of money could be saved by the curtailment of staffs at present employed in looking after them—that is to say, instead of having three staffs here, in regard to the particular class, one staff in the county would do?—I think the staff employed in looking after these people would not be very large. You see they require very little more than food and to be looked after; one or two attendants could look after them.

17757. CHAIRMAN.—Mr. MURTAGHAN means the staffs under the present arrangements are very costly?—I don't say that part of the present staff could be cut down.

17758. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—You can only cut it down by some reform, not by sitting and saying that the present system is all right. We want to find out how we will improve it without costing the ratepayers any more?—If you send the lunatics away and the children away, certainly you will be able to carry on the Naas Union with a less staff of officials.

17759. No, you require the same staff, even if there were only three inmates. You have to have a master, and matron, and porter?—There are a lot of other parties connected with this establishment that could be done away with.

CHAIRMAN.—You see the economy would be still greater if you could dispense with the higher paid officials as well.

17760. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—You keep up buildings that are next to useless. They are not used, you have to keep a roof on them, and you have to keep them in a state of repair. They are not satisfactory in any respect. Would it not be better to try and put the institutions put into a thoroughly proper condition, and have those particular ones for infirmaries, or hospitals, or district hospitals, or whatever you like to call them, for the sick, and have one institution for a county like Kildare for the aged and infirm?—No; I would not be in favour of moving them out of the unions they are housed in.

17761. What is the objection, the cost of transport would be very small?—Unless I was shown figures and shown that there was a saving.

17762. CHAIRMAN.—If you did see that there is a very great saving?—Then I would be in favour of it, if I saw there was a considerable saving, and that it would be a benefit to the ratepayers. I think a Council would be very slow to agree to break up their union unless that was shown.

17763. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—If it was shown to you, you would see no objection?—No objection if it was a source of considerable saving.

17764. And that the classes would be benefited individually?—Yes.

17765. Dr. BARNES.—Would you like to see the hospital separated from the workhouse?—I would like to see the taint of pauperism removed as much as possible. The poor don't like to go to the workhouse.

17766. If they were managed by a separate committee, would not that largely go to take away the taint of the workhouse from them?—I don't know; it would be there in the workhouse still, in the same place.

17767. But if they were administered separately—the mode of admission and mode of discharge entirely separate from the workhouse?—Yes. In the Kildare Infirmary we have it separate, and it takes in these infirm who have an objection to go to the poorhouse. We are always very full in the hospital here.

17768. Do they come to go from here to the Kildare Infirmary?—They are beginning to go from the dispensary at Naas now. There are a good number of nurses in the work from the Naas district. The area that the Kildare Infirmary serves chiefly is the Athy Union, and within a radius of five miles of the town of Kildare.

17769. But you pay the same rate to the support of the Kildare Infirmary as they do in Kildare?—Certainly.

17770. Is there any way you could suggest by which that might be altered?—I opposed opening Kildare Infirmary myself at the time, but of course I would not give any evidence now on behalf of the Council; it is doing good service now. A number of patients go in there—pay patients—who are well able to pay, and they think very bad of paying. The revenue from pay patients last year was only £5; there is £27 due now, and there was an order at the last meeting to have those parties proceeded against.

17771. Are you a member of the Kildare Infirmary?—I am.

17772. Could you explain the system whereby patients are admitted and the medical officer charges private fees for attendance on them?—That question was never gone into properly, but there was a man called Payne in it at one time, and he was killed for his maintenance. He had his leg amputated, and his reply was that he was already under much expense, and that it was as much as he could afford. There was no evidence that a fee was charged.

17773. He paid a fee to the medical officer before he paid for his maintenance?—This statement about expense was made by him.

17774. Was that statement true?—I cannot tell you; the question was not properly gone into.

Mr. E. Fidd.—That was not true.

Witness.—That was the statement the man made.

17775. Dr. BOGGER.—You say there were only £5 last year received from pay patients?—That is all.

17776. The medical officer could not receive very much if the hospital only received £6?—And I can say to say among the names down are the names of people who could very well afford to pay.

17777. Have you no system of collecting money from the patients before they leave the institution rather than wait until afterwards. You are much more likely to get payment at the time?

Chairman.—In the County Fermanagh Infirmary a document is signed by the patient coming in, or father, or person responsible for the patient coming in agreeing to pay so much?—But if a man was responsible for himself, if you were going in you would not want any one to sign for you, and if you would not pay we could not hold you for the damage; you might say you had no money. There was a committee appointed to go into all these matters, and Mr. Brown was chairman, and he was to call the committee together, but he never called the committee yet and the reason is, I think, the Local Government Board have books, or some system, in contemplation, and he was waiting for that; but I hear that at the second last meeting of the Kildare Infirmary we took on ourselves to order the secretary to go and look and enter in it the names of the pay patients when they came in, when they were discharged, and the amount. On the last day there was £27 due from those parties whose names are on this book, and there was an order made to have them proceeded against.

17778. Mr. MURKIN.—Have you any fixed charge?—I think 30s. a week, and that is in under maintenance.

17779. Dr. BOGGER.—Why not have different scales even lower than 10s., for people not able to pay very much, and higher for people who are able to pay more than 10s.?—I think if any of these parties approached the committee they would accept it.

17780. Why limit yourself for 10s., because that is not sufficient for a patient fairly well off going in for an operation?—I opposed it myself, but the majority were against me. The committee should have discretionary powers. I know many men in this county with twenty acres of land who are worse off than some men with five acres of land.

17781. Regarding a consumptive hospital or sanatorium, would you be in favour of that?—I would on the same system as the auxiliary asylum, that it would be a State hospital for a province or a certain number of counties.

17782. Would you not propose that the county should pay something?—Yes, but it should be largely subsidised by the Government, for it is on the increase in this country.

17783. CHAIRMAN.—You think it would be the duty of the Government from a public health point of view?—I do; the only thing you can do is isolate them in workhouses, because I really think the ratepayers cannot bear the burden of building or supporting the new institutions.

17784. Dr. BOGGER.—Workhouses only isolate them as far as the infection is concerned, they cannot cure them?—I think it is due to us from the Government to do something like that; we are overtaxed and we should get it back. There is another question—the deprivation of paupers. I think if a man spends his life in Scotland and gives the best years of his life working there, he should not be shipped back here. We have not the same advantages; we cannot ship them back. I would be perfectly satisfied if they gave us the same advantages of sending their men back.

17785. Would you be satisfied?—Yes.

17786. Do you think that would be fair?—It would.

17787. You would have very few to send back?—We might have some to send back.

17788. Mr. MURKIN.—There was an effort made a few years ago to dress that grievance, but it was not altogether successful. The law at present is that any person who has resided for one year in any particular union without having become a charge on the rates, is eligible for support from the local authorities in Scotland, provided also the applicant has a full residence in the country of five years?—It is not in England; it is a great grievance to have to support long-expired soldiers. If a man went out in the late South African War and fought there for his country, and he was wounded, that man gets a small pension for a short time. He is left here in this country, and becomes an inmate of a workhouse. That is not a proper system.

17789. Dr. BOGGER.—If the State paid him at a higher rate, would not the general ratepayer have to bear his share of that?—If he went into the workhouse it should be refunded out of his pension, as in the case of the ordinary pensioners.

Mr. EDWARD FINN examined.

You had any evidence in Dublin. We have had a map drawn to show you the portions of Dunsheughlin Union that we could take in. (Exhibits as map.) I disagree altogether with Mr. Symonds about outdoor relief. That ought to be encouraged as much as possible; not to break up people's homes.

17790. CHAIRMAN.—You think you would be able to know whether a man was a decent man or not?—I would. Generally the local Guardians recommend that these people should get a little relief rather than break up their homes; when 2s. or 3s. would keep them outside they would cost a great deal more inside.

17791. You still would keep a workhouse?—Yes, certainly.

17792. So that if you thought a person really was deserving you would offer the house?—Yes; we very often offer them the house in Colbridge, but they won't come near us.

17793. Then you would be just as much in favour as Mr. Symonds of keeping a workhouse?—Yes; sick people with no one to look after them have a great objection to come into the union. We have no power to force them in, and then we are obliged to employ a nurse to mind these people outside.

17794. Would you like to have power to appoint district nurses to act under the directions of the doctors?—No; I would like to have power to compel these people to come in.

17795. If you had a district nurse she would be able to take charge of the whole dispensary district, or perhaps half a dispensary district?—It would come cheaper then.

17796. Mr. MURKIN.—Would a nurse be able to attend to the district?—She might not.

17797. CHAIRMAN.—They have introduced that system in the Derry Union. They get a midwife with nurse's qualifications to act as nurse, and she attends to a number of people, who need not come into the house, and that saves a good deal of expense. That is the view of hard-headed people up there?—Would she stay in the night with that patient for a week?

17704. No, she could not, that would be a case for hospital; but then there are a good many cases that could be attended to in their own homes that are not serious cases; and then there are other cases that are serious and cannot be removed—the district nurse is of advantage in both these cases!—Certainly.

17705. It has made but a small way in the country yet. The district nurse does a good deal that way!—

Mr. THOMAS CONNELLEY examined.

Mr. Thomas
Connellley.

I have not much to add to what our chairman has said.

17706. CHAIRMAN.—But you agree with him thoroughly?—Yes.

17707. I find there is not much division in Colbride; all the Guardians are solid for keeping it on?—Yes, it serves two counties. What would you do with the County Dublin paupers that come there for relief if we send some to Naas?

17708. Unless they went to the South Dublin or North Dublin?—They are very congested.

17709. If they lost the lunatics and children there they would have lots of room?—If Naas was turned into a workhouse for all the county there would have to be a separate staff kept up. We would have to keep the staff on at Colbride to work the hospital. I don't see where the rates could be saved.

17710. You may take it for granted there will not be any proposal made of that kind unless there is a very decided gain in it?—I don't see where the gain would come in; we could not reduce the staff much. There are not many employed to look after the paupers in Colbride, but the lunatics, and imbeciles, and all, should be sent to some institution. They should not be turned out or boarded out; and the children we all recommend to be boarded out.

17711. And the girls that come in and have children, what would you say about those?—I don't see what great change can be made with regard to them.

17712. Does it ever strike you as rather a sad thing that these girls who come in and practically spend the whole of their lives, and have more of these illegitimate children, as a rule, in workhouses?—I don't think any place to which you could send them would benefit them much; those badly inclined will be always bad.

17713. Do you think that a girl after her first fall is bad?—She may not; very often they never fall again.

17714. If they were put under a good religious influence?—Yes, we have that in Colbride.

17715. If a girl comes in to-day expecting to have a baby in two or three months' time, would you put her in the same ward—in the same room with a woman who has had two or three babies before?—Yes, she has to go in with them.

17716. Do you think that has a good religious influence?—Could not that be remedied even in the institutions at present. Could there not be more wards?

17717. You have power to do it if you can, but it would be very difficult for you to do it as the workhouses are constructed and arranged?—If there should not be some little things attached to such as that; if we made them too comfortable it might increase it.

17718. I have heard that argument used, but would you run a girl to utter ruin for the sake of having her as an awful example to others. If you could take her and save her, body and soul, from further degradation, would you not do it?—Yes, if I could see my way to do it.

17719. Don't you think putting her in the hands of a religious body and excluding her from people who would be likely to fill her mind with impurity, would be a hospital step to take!—How can they isolate her in these institutions.

Yes; we would be able to accommodate a good deal of the Edenburg Union in Colbride, and as far as Carbury; we have the railway there. Letting in within three miles. I am afraid you won't be able to reduce the number of unions in Kildare. You have only three, with Athy in the extreme south, and Colbride in the extreme north. Unless you took the Bellinglame portion into Naas and the Edenburg portion into Colbride, we would be very much in Colbride again having our union dissolved, because we serve the County Dublin very well, and the Dublin people are anxious to keep Colbride as a union and hospital. I mentioned to you the amount of money we spent on our hospital.

17724. They take wonderful care in these institutions, and have a rule of silence when they meet together?—You think the Guardians should have the power to send such cases to institutions and pay for them?

17725. That is what has been suggested to us, and the question is whether the Guardians generally would approve of that. What would be your own opinion?—I think it would be a very good thing to do, and I don't think it would cost much more on the ratings.

17726. It may cost a great deal less, because you might not have the same girl coming in again and spending her life-time there?—At present we have no power to do so; there are no institutions.

17727. There are some such institutions?—There I heard since I came here a lot about the Kildare Infirmary, and I did not hear it suggested at all to make those that go there and see that, from whatever district they come, to make them chargeable to that district. We in Colbride have to pay our share of the upkeep of that, and there never has been a patient sent from Colbride. Why not make those that go to it chargeable to the district they come from instead of a county charge?

17728. Mr. MURKIN.—And that would get out of the difficulty?—Yes.

17729. CHAIRMAN.—That is one method; the other method was, make the Kildare people pay their share of the sick all over the county?—I would not agree to that. I think they should be chargeable to the district they come from.

17730. Mr. MURKIN.—Are you a Poor Law Guardian?—Yes.

17731. Suppose Colbride had a nice infirmary let there to look after the sick, don't you think you could get on very well with that and let some other portion of the county get the other classes—children and lunatics?—The children are all boarded out, and all the Guardians know the names who take them out.

17732. No trouble boarding them out?—Not at all; there are more applicants than there are children.

17733. Are all the eligible boarded?—Yes, all except very few—any child that is fit to go out—it is the proper system; there is no taint of pauperism about the child then.

17734. CHAIRMAN.—You don't think they come back to the workhouse again?—No.

17735. Mr. MURKIN.—Could you not extend that spirit to other classes, the aged and infirm—take them away and let them out to some healthy place in the country?—If it was possible to do it; but I cannot see how it could be.

17736. If it was shown it would not cost any more, and that such a system could be worked, would you be any objection to it?—Not a bit, that would be bringing a system of old-age pensions like.

Mr. EDWARD P. O'KEEFE, J.P., examined.

Mr. Edward P.
O'Keefe.

17737. CHAIRMAN.—You have heard these interesting suggestions about Bellinglame?—That thing has been thrashed out before; nothing new has been said.

17738. What is the view of the Guardians of the Bellinglame Union about the change of the boundaries of the union?—With regard to bringing people to Athy, the Kildare portion of our union comes within half a mile of Bellinglame, and that is twelve miles from Athy; a good deal of it runs within a mile and a mile and a half, and even half a mile.

17739. That is not a populated part, it is hilly, is it not?—No, it is mostly poplars. I think with regard to the facilities of bringing people to the workhouse, it is much more convenient than it would be in Athy.

17740. You are in favour of the present boundaries of Ballyglass?—Yes. Of course portion of it goes to Castlebar, where Dr. Brennan resides, but then there is a dispensary at Grange, 14 miles from Castlebar, that Dr. Cruise attends every week, and there is a telegraphic communication with Castlebar, and a telegraphic doctor always attends on telegrams without the formality of real visits.

17621. At Ballyglass you look on yourself as quite cut off from all East Wicklow?—Yes.

17622. You have to attend Assizes and the County Council at Wicklow, but it is a tremendous journey for you?—I had to attend the County Council at Wicklow yesterday, and had to go through Dublin.

17623. So that for Poor Law purposes and any county purposes you really are most inconveniently situated from your county town and the rest of the county?—We are.

17624. It would be impossible for us to look upon Wicklow as a self-contained county for Poor Law purposes?—It would be utterly impossible. We are much more disconnected in our side of the county from it than we are from either Carlow or Kildare. With regard to the unions, though there is one union in the County Wicklow, that might, if it were closed and joined on to Rathfriland, be used as an auxiliary asylum, but it is Shillelagh; it is a small union.

17625. Could you take in any of the Shillelagh Union?—I fear not; it could be added on to Rathfriland, and they have train accommodation there.

17626. But so far as Ballyglass goes, you think it would be quite impossible to incorporate it with any other union?—It could not possibly be done on account of the difficulty of transport.

17627. You have been here most of the day and have heard the discussion that has gone on on a large number of subjects. Without wearying you by putting the same questions to you, did any of them strike you?—The principal one that I would be interested in would be the caring for the imbeciles; that is very badly exposed, and in every institution that I have gone into

I think very great improvements could be made by taking them and having them treated by themselves.

17628. Would you be in favour of sending them to an asylum?—I don't think I would like to have them sent to a lunatic asylum, but to an auxiliary asylum. I would be very much in favour of it.

17629. This is a class that could be dealt with at a central institution. They need not necessarily be in the neighbourhood of their own homes?—No, they need not.

17630. And if there was a workhouse, or a greater portion of a workhouse, that was available for such a purpose, you would be in favour of having it set apart as an auxiliary workhouse?—I would. For example, if there was a place at Shillelagh, it would do for an auxiliary asylum for the whole county because it is centrally situated.

17631. Not from a railway point of view?—Not exactly.

17632. But it is not very bad, Ballyglass would be most inconvenient?—Yes. Of course the other portion of Ballyglass is attached to the Nass Union. It would be much more difficult to get from Ballyglass to Shillelagh than to Ballyglass.

17633. Have you any good direct road to the east from Ballyglass?—It is a very difficult road and a bad road. I have cycled it, and it is a very bad road by Aughavannagh and Greennane into Rathfriland.

17634. Is there any other special question?—I don't think there is. We are pretty well provided with hospitals and infirmaries in the neighbourhood. Of course, just like other counties, we are paying for a fever hospital in Wicklow and a county infirmary that no person from East Wicklow ever uses or could possibly use.

17635. What would your view be. Would you like each patient charged to the district he came from, or the sick made a county charge all over the county?—I think it is working fairly well at it; of course it is a bit of an injustice to us.

17636. But you think it is not a sufficient grievance to make a fuss about?—No.

Dr. O'NEILL examined.

Dr. O'NEILL

17637. CHAIRMAN.—Is there anything that you wish to say personally?—There are only three matters that I wish to bring before the Commission. The first is the overcrowding in the Athy Union at the present time, especially amongst the infirm cases and in the hospital.

17638. What are your present numbers?—On the 31st of March of this year there were 107 men in the workhouse proper.

17639. What is your total in the workhouse?—239; in 1891 it was 248. There is a great increase among the infirm cases and hospital patients.

17640. I think you told me that there was some special reason. Is there not some special work going on?—They were going to have an additional ward put on in the infirmary, but that would not meet it.

17641. But as well as I remember, when I happened to be at the workhouse you attributed the increase to some special cause?—I don't remember that.

17642. There was no special work in the neighbourhood that brought people?—No.

17643. Are you aware of any increase, or how this increase arose?—I am not.

17644. If some of the classes were taken out of the workhouse, say the lunatics, and the women with children, would you then have sufficient room?—No.

17645. You have forty-five children?—Yes.

17646. If the children went?—That would give more room, certainly.

17647. And certainly give you more room among the infirm class, and that would set free four rooms?—It would. The principal congestion is on the male side of the house, not on the female side. The male side is always congested, even in summer time.

17648. Mr. MURKIN.—What is that due to. Do you know any reason for it?—I have no reason to give.

17649. CHAIRMAN.—Do you think it is very likely because the old women can always get some employment in looking after children, and light work in the house?—There don't seem to be as many old women as old men.

17650. But according to the Census there are more old women in the country than old men—in many places there are more men in the workhouse than women—and the explanation I have heard is that in many places old women can get light work, whereas old men can do nothing?—Old women have a better knack of looking after themselves than old men, and they have relations, and they are more useful in the house than old men. Then there is the overcrowding in the hospital, which I think is due to overcrowding in the workhouse, that is a certain number of infirm cases.

17651. That are not really sick people, but frail old people?—Owing to the number of infirm cases we have in the hospital, necessarily they will get sick as well as any other kind of patients, and naturally they come into the hospital. The hospital wards are badly situated in Athy. You have to go from one building to another, forty or fifty yards between; it is inconvenient for the nurses and everybody.

17652. And it causes a larger number of nurses to be necessary?—It does; more attendants certainly.

17653. Building would be a saving in a way?—I think sooner or later in Athy Union we will have to build, probably, a separate hospital.

17654. If that were done, do you think it would be a desirable thing to build from the workhouse altogether?—I think if there was a small hospital built, containing twenty or thirty beds, it would relieve it.

17655. What would you say to using your existing fever hospital for such a purpose, and building a small fever hospital?—That was my own idea, that it would suit admirably.

17656. The fever hospital is a detached building, entirely unconnected by architecture or any other way with the workhouse?—Yes; and it would hold about thirty beds. That would make a hospital for acute cases. The other cases would have rooms to be treated in the institution as it is at present.

17657. Mr. MURKIN.—That would supply the need for all acute cases?—It would; thirty beds would supply it. As far as I can judge, a union hospital is entirely unsuitable for the treatment of infectious cases; curable cases have absolutely no chance of doing any good there.

17658. CHAIRMAN.—You, of course, would be in favour of a sanatorium?—A sanatorium for consumptives. I think it is much more necessary than a separate institution for imbeciles—more urgent.

May 3, 1904.

De O'Neill

17856. Dr. BROOKS.—How many consumptives have you in the workhouse at present?—Eleven.

17857. I suppose there are large numbers in the district that would go into a suitable sanatorium?—Yes; I have constant applications from people outside to go into the National Hospital at Newcastle. It is very difficult to get a patient in there, and he may have to wait for months.

17871. CHAIRMAN.—And he would be likely too far gone for admission. They won't admit a case in the later stages?—No; unless they find they can do some good they won't admit cases. The third thing I wish to mention is the question of supplies. I think it is a bad system to have the supplies of the hospital coming through the other part of the institution. The hospital ought to be separated altogether from the workhouse, or there ought to be a storekeeper in every workhouse. There is a good deal of trouble always; at least in my experience of the last seven years.

17872. I think you examine yourself all the most supplies?—As a general rule I see all the supplies; usually the master or matron draw my attention to them before they come into stock.

17873. I think there was a case about meat when I was there?—Yes. The supplies pass from one to another; there are constantly little annoyances. It gives rise certainly to friction amongst the officials, and of course the doctor is always brought into these matters.

17874. You do take the matter into your own hands there and reject things?—But that is not the point.

17875. What is your point?—Both the master and matron are very busy officials. They give out supplies in the morning. The supplies may go across to the hospital, and there may be something missing. There is a good deal of difficulty in getting what is missing into the hospital again, because they will have other business to attend to in the house, and it will be very hard to get them back to the stores. The supplies ought to come direct.

17876. You mean for all kinds of food?—Yes. 17877. This is all an argument in favour of having the hospitals detached and self-contained?—Yes. Take meat, for instance, it may come in and pass the doctor and master, but when it comes to the hospital it may not be up to the mark. Of course the master of the hospital will have something to say to it then, and it is possible she may want it returned, or get other meat; or perhaps meat may come over too fat, and it would be difficult to return it then, whereas if she had the supply in her own hands she would know what would be wanted for hospital patients.

17878. That is really part of the general question of detached hospitals?—Yes. That question you asked some of the gentlemen who gave evidence about women with illegitimate children—certainly in Athy Union it seems to me that the women seem to stop there; when they come in once they stay there, except that they may go out and come back with more children. I have known as many as seven illegitimate children with one woman. There is a woman in the institution at the present time that has been thirty years there and has never left it.

17879. Dr. BROOKS.—She has only had one child. One child, and she has stopped there altogether.

17880. CHAIRMAN.—She most likely, if she had gone into a religious institution, might have gone out and become a happy woman outside?—As it is she is a very good woman, and might perhaps have been an ornament to society. I know she has conducted herself admirably as long as I have known her.

17881. And I suppose you think she deserves a better fate?—Yes; she has been an attendant twenty-five years in the infirmary. She is not an attendant now at the present time; she is in the infirm ward.

Mr. J. RAUER DAGE, Clerk of the Ballyglass Union, examined.

Mr. J. Raue
Dage

17882. CHAIRMAN.—You have a very wide and great knowledge of Poor Law matters, and I am glad to see you here to give us any information which would be useful to us?—I sent in a memorandum. With regard to the sick, I endorse the views that have been given before you. I think they should be treated in separate institutions, but I think the existing workhouse can easily be made separate institutions with very little expense. It means simply in most institutions building a gate-lodge and dividing wall, and your hospital would be just as separate as this courthouse is from the adjoining houses.

17883. You would have an entrance going up right or left—a separate entrance?—Yes.

17884. You would have the male healthy and female healthy yards going up to the windows of the infirmary?—You would.

17885. You would go for closing the doors that lead into these yards?—Yes, I think it would meet the wishes of the persons who are anxious to have the taint of the workhouse removed.

17886. The only place they would meet at all would be at their church, just half-way between both institutions?—Yes. I think the children should be boarded out.

17887. Have you many boarded out at present?—We have six. There is only one child I think in the house who might be boarded out, that is under the existing law. The orphan and deserted children have always been boarded out in Ballyglass Union, and not one returned to the workhouse.

17888. You have a number of children in the house who are not eligible for boarding out. Do you think the Guardians would be in favour of having powers to assume the position of parents towards certain children in the house and board them out?—I would rather Mr. O'Kelly would answer that. I think myself many of the Board would.

17889. If they had the discretion they could neither use it or not—I think we might get a better class of people to take children if the position were somewhat larger than it is. It was fixed at 2s. 6d. a week twenty-five years ago.

17890. And how much for clothing?—2s. a year.

17891. What is done now, you give them a trowsers when they are going out, and 2s. a year after. It is not a very liberal allowance; you think it ought to be more?—I do.

17892. I think Miss Fitzgerald Kennedy recommended it to be raised a little?—I don't know. I mentioned it to Miss Fitzgerald Kennedy, but she did not approve of the idea when I mentioned it, because she said very few labourers could afford 2s. a year for each child. I think that the aged and infirm, as far as possible, should be granted outdoor relief where they could be suitably housed. There is an objection at present amongst many Guardians to give an old man who is practically beyond his labour outdoor relief, if he has a son, say married; but I think a married labourer with a wife and family has sufficient demands upon his earnings. You cannot expect him to support his parent; the result is that these old people come into the workhouse.

17893. What is the average wage with you?—About 8s. a week. In very few cases it goes to 10s.

17894. What food would they get with that?—In some cases I know the wage is only 7s. 6d. without food.

17895. Would that be all the year round?—All the year round; it is with a gentleman farmer, a neighbour in my neighbourhood.

17896. Would that be doing real farming work, or a man who was past his work, and was merely taking gravel?—No, he is a man who acts as hard.

17897. Has he privileges besides that?—He has a rod of ground for his manure.

17898. Has he the grass of a cow?—No, the grass of a goat. I know a man having only 6s. a week, with a large dairy man half a mile from me, and the grass of a goat, and if the goat were not in milk he had to buy milk. I think it would be very well to have almshouses established for the aged and infirm who had no friends, where they could be suitably housed. I think the aged and infirm are capable at certain seasons of the year of doing some light work, for which they would not get ordinary wages. An old man could sit in the corner of a field during mowing time, and sharpen the knives of the machine, and I don't think he should be deprived of outdoor relief for so working.

17899. Would not the building of an almshouse mean further tremendous expenditure?—From the question put by Mr. Murnaghan, I think some of the workhouses could be set apart for that purpose.

17900. You did not mean fresh buildings?—I did not. And I don't think the question of the disowning people—a maternal one, or that they would have much sentimental objection to it. People of the lower class are very glad to get to institutions of the kind about Dublin. I think in Harepoint Court some of our Irish noblemen are accommodated as State prisoners.

17903. That is not a very close precedent?—No, sir; but I don't know where the sentiment comes in. I think lunatics would be better treated, and, for many reasons, should be treated in auxiliary asylums. With regard to unmarried mothers, I have made a suggestion that the same should be separated altogether. I think illegitimate male prisoners should be in one institution and illegitimate females in another, and one of my reasons for doing that is a moral one, and the second is an economic one. In rural unions I find that widows who enter the workhouse very often marry one of those unmarried mothers, and with a man who is nearly beyond his labour at the time of his second marriage, he does it because it is the cheapest way of getting a servant. She is very anxious to get married that she may get her title of "Mrs." She values it as much as an American heiress does a title of nobility; and after having two or three children, the old man becomes broken down, and we have the whole of them in the workhouse.

17904. You are speaking of a man who is in the workhouse and won a spinster to whom he takes a fancy in the workhouse also; the two of them take their discharge and get married?—Yes, I know a case of a labourer who lost his wife. He got a slight cold and came into the workhouse and married one of the inmates there. Then with regard to the question of children, I believe they should be boarded out as far as possible, and those that you cannot board out should be treated in a separate institution. There was a statement made to-day that the children reared in workhouses of illegitimate mothers continued in the houses of their parents for generation after generation. My experience extends through five or six rural unions. There was one witness made that statement. Then it was questioned by Mr. O'Grady, who stated that in rural districts the rule was different from where there were military stations.

17905. We have met cases of three generations?—You will meet them, but they are isolated cases. You can get a list of births in workhouses for the last thirty years up to fifteen years ago, and see how many of those children are there now, and whether they have children or not.

17906. It is not quite so easy as that, because you would be astonished how frequently those people change their names. The woman who has an illegitimate child frequently calls herself somebody else?—Is a large union it would be.

17907. But even in a country union where masters change?—We have two young girls we reared in the workhouse, and a boy who suffers from an eye affection. Of these young girls one is of a good character, and the other has an illegitimate child. My experience is that it is women from outside who come in with illegitimate children; these women were not reared in the workhouse. With regard to tramps, we are not very much concerned with tramps, because we are not on the road for them. We have only about six per week, and we try to discriminate between the deserving and the undeserving.

17908. How do you treat them?—If you come to the conclusion that a man is a habitual tramp, how do you treat him differently from the person whom you know is a labourer really in search of work. Do they go to the same ward?—Yes.

17909. The same food?—The same food.

17910. And take their discharge at the same hour?—With the habitual tramp the relieving officer puts a stern face on him and frequently refuses him a ticket.

We get Pratt's Directory, which gives the names of every person of any importance in every parish in Ireland. If he says he comes from Mayo, we ask him who is the doctor and the clergyman of the parish, and if we find his answer true, we believe he has some knowledge of the place. With regard to the suggestion of transferring to Athy Union the three divisions of Ballymore, Corrigan, and Grassy, I don't want, as an officer concerned, to give you any evidence on the point other than to say that the matter was raised at the time the Local Government Act came into operation, and at that time the Council appointed a deputation to wait on the Local Government Board, and possibly you will remember the arguments put before them.

May 3, 1904.

Mr. J. Ralph Day.

The Sittings terminated.

May 4, 1904.

THIRTY-SIXTH PUBLIC SITTING.—WEDNESDAY, MAY 4TH, 1904

At the Courthouse, Maryborough.

Present:—Mr. MICKS (Chairman), Mr. MURTAGHAN, and Dr. CORY BAKER.

Mr. JAMES McMAHON, J.P., examined.

Mr. James
McMahon.

17909. CHAIRMAN.—You are the Chairman of the Abbeyleix Board of Guardians?—Yes.

17910. And an ex-officio member of the County Council?—No; I am an elected member of the County Council.

17911. Your County Council considered the queries that were issued by this Commission?—Yes, sir; but, if you would please, I would sooner deal with the Board of Guardians first, because Mr. Meahan, the Chairman of the County Council, will be here later on.

17912. Take it in your own way. Tell how the Board of Guardians of Abbeyleix regard the queries that were sent to them?—As regards the first query, the Board of Guardians are entirely against the dislocation of either of the existing unions in the Queen's County at the present time—either Abbeyleix or Mountmellick. They believe if either of those unions was dissolved the poor and the sick would be exposed to great inconvenience and great injustice, by having to come such long distances, either for hospital treatment or treatment in the workhouse.

17913. The Union of Donaghmore, when it was broken up, was given partly to Abbeyleix?—Yes; the workhouse is situated in our union.

17914. And the village of Rathdowney is in your union?—Yes.

17915. Was there much inconvenience caused, have you heard, by the breaking up of the Donaghmore Union?—I have not heard any specific complaint.

17916. How far is Donaghmore Workhouse from Abbeyleix?—I think it is about fourteen miles.

17917. And Rathdowney would be about one and a-half or two miles less, perhaps?—Yes; I am not very accurate as to the number of miles.

17918. You don't think that either of the workhouses could be closed?—I don't think it would be to the advantage of the ratepayers, and, certainly, not to the advantage of the sick or destitute.

17919. If a hospital were kept on, so that the sick could always be treated there, in their own union, what would you say about transferring what you may call the able-bodied, or non-sick, inmates elsewhere?—I don't think I would be inclined to agree with that either, because there are a great deal of very old, destitute people that would rather be at home in their own locality or as near their native place as possible, and I don't think they would like to be sent off from one end of the county to the other.

17920. As a matter of fact, they are now sent very great distances?—Not very great distances. I think, perhaps, ten or twelve miles is the greatest distance.

17921. The people at Rathdowney have no connection with Abbeyleix, and the people of Maryborough, I suppose, have not much connection with Mountmellick?—Oh, the people of Maryborough have a very great connection with Mountmellick.

17922. By railway they have, but the poor don't go from one place to another on business?—As a rule, they are acquainted with the people of the locality for five or six miles round their native place.

17923. The people of Maryborough have to go to Mountmellick Workhouse; dare they go to a place where they don't know the people?—That is quite true.

17924. So already this does exist very largely—that people have to go to workhouses where they have no knowledge of the immediate surroundings?—That is quite true, to a certain extent; but I think it would be very inconvenient for all parties to abolish either of the workhouses at present in the county. If either of them was situated in a more central position one might be capable of doing the work of the two.

17925. If there was a workhouse at Maryborough that might serve the entire county?—It might, or even in a more central position.

17926. Maryborough is tolerably central?—It is a railway centre?—Of course, it would have greater facilities for locomotion than any other place in the county.

17927. It would be the most convenient place for Guardians if there were only one workhouse for them to attend to?—It would, I believe.

17928. Did you ever consider in this county the idea that we had yesterday put forward by some of the Guardians and witnesses at Naas—that it would be desirable, as you have one government for county purposes, so that you would have all the unions contained within the county and not go outside the county, the poor law would be dealt with by the county; did you consider that idea at all here?—In other words, to make the poor law area co-extensive with the county boundary. That would be a very good plan if it could be feasible; but there may be some difficulties that would crop up.

17929. I suppose it would be very difficult with the bannery of Slieve Donagh to get up to Carlow?—The existing arrangements would be still more convenient for Slieve Donagh.

17930. These people have to come up here to attend?—They have. I believe they have to go up to Kildare and come back here again. I know there is a great hardship inflicted on them by having to come here to attend County Council meetings or sessions.

17931. They never think of driving across by Timahoe?—They do sometimes; but in the winter time it would be a very inconvenient journey to drive across a mountain district.

17932. You know that in a workhouse there are a great number of different classes, all grouped together in the same building. First, you have the sick, then you have the aged and infirm, then you have the mothers of children, single girls with children, and then you have the children at school; you have the lunatics and idiots, you have the tramps, and you have the able-bodied class, of which there are very few in your county. There is only one of the ordinary able-bodied class in the whole county between the two unions?—A very small number.

17933. The others all belong to those other classes that I have mentioned to you. We have received a great deal of evidence suggesting the removal of the workhouses of the different classes. First, we will take the lunatics. There is a general idea that it would be far better to have no lunatic asylums—so to put them all under lunatic asylum management, and if the lunatic asylum was not big enough to hold them, you would take some workhouse, like the old Donaghmore Workhouse, and make it into an auxiliary asylum?—I entirely agree with those terms.

17934. Whether would you put them into a lunatic asylum or an auxiliary?—An auxiliary would be a lunatic asylum.

17935. If the lunatic asylum was capable of holding them, would you prefer putting them there to send the expense of a second institution?—Certainly. Then there are a class of harmless lunatics, what they call fools, and I believe they would be probably just as well treated in a workhouse.

17936. You have very few in your own workhouse?—I doubt if we have any at the present time. A few years ago we had a few cases of that sort; they were in for years, and were no inconvenience to the inmates—they were harmless creatures.

17937. At the last return you had eight women and two men; that would be comparatively few; but having

May 4, 1904.

Mr. James
McMahon.

these few necessitate a separate department being kept up—I don't think it did, in this particular case, because they were all very simple in their habits.

17953. You would want someone to look after them?—The ordinary attendant. I don't think there was any extra attendant. We have no dangerous cases, or any with suicidal tendencies.

17953. Still, a great many of these poor creatures have not the sense to be cleanly in their habits?—They require special treatment in that respect.

17954. And the general opinion of witnesses is that it would be better to have that class in a place where they would be properly attended to by people specially trained to look after them?—Perhaps it might be the best.

17954. Take the children. You have twenty-eight at Abbeylara and thirty-one at Mountinlick; are you in favour of boarding those children out?—Yes, sir, I am entirely in favour of having the children boarded out. I think the shorter time they spend in the workhouse the better for themselves in future life. They are more likely to succeed.

17955. And not to come back as paupers?—Precisely. If suitable persons could be got to take charge of them, I think there is nothing like the boarding-out system for children.

17955. At present you have only power to board out orphans or deserted children; most of the Guardians who have given evidence before us have recommended—?—Compulsory powers to the board.

17956. Yes, or power to the board to enable them to board out the children of thriftless or useless people—people who cannot make their way in the world?—I would entirely assent to that.

17957. Then, as regards the people who own these children, would you think it necessary in some way to put those people under restraint to prevent them thinking that they had only to get children to have them taken off their hands by the Guardians; would you think it well to put them under some restraint?—I would make them contribute, if possible, to their maintenance.

17958. You see, they are paupers?—They might not always be paupers.

17959. Do you think it would be a wise thing if you had a woman with three or four children, or a man and his wife with three or four children, who never did anything practically but a few weeks' begging in the year, and then came back again, do you think it would be a prudent thing to keep these persons' children or let them go free about the country to have more children?—It would be a very serious thing to divert them of their parental responsibilities in the first place.

17960. It would; but still, would you be in favour of doing it?—On the whole, would it not be as well to do it as have the children associating with vicious parents.

17961. Yes; and it is represented to us that if these children are not taken and an effort made to turn them into good citizens they will become paupers, and rear paupers?—Yes; they would be tramps all their lifetime. I think it would be better to grapple with the question at first.

17962. If you did take those children from the parents, do you think it would be a wise thing to let the parents go with a free leg over the country?—I don't know how to answer that question. I would like to have some control over the parents.

17963. Some members of Parliament are introducing a Bill, in which the proposal is to establish labour colonies, where people of that class would be committed on a magistrate's warrant, and detained for such period as was thought fit, and made to work there at remunerative compulsion, that would be supporting them while they are there?—I intended to say something regarding that on the tramp question. That was one of the remedies I was going to suggest. Either empower the workhouse authorities, boards of Guardians or their officers, to detain the tramps for a longer period than they have power to detain under the present law. I believe under the present law they have only power to detain them for three hours after asking for their discharge. I think they should have power to detain them for three days or longer, and, if possible, inflict some punishment on them in the shape of hard labour, and make them pay for their maintenance. And it would interfere with the programme they had mapped out for themselves, and it would give a barrier to their progress through the country.

17964. It would be very inconvenient to their present arrangements?—That is what I want to say; and they would be very careful about coming into such places for the future; but, failing that, a labour colony would be a very good alternative—an excellent idea.

17965. Then, another class we had evidence about was the poor girls who come in, having made a baby, and come into the workhouse to be confined of a baby. They would come into the workhouse two or three months before the baby is born, and they stay in a workhouse until after the baby is born, and, as a common rule, never leave the workhouse again except to go out for a bit with the child to beg, and they come back, and have another child. The suggestion came back, and have another child. The suggestion has been made to us that the workhouse should not be open at all to such girls. If a girl met with a misfortune like that, what should be done would be to send her, according to her religion, to a religious institution—a sort of refuge or penitentiary—where she would be kept until the baby was born, and as soon as she could be separated from the baby, that effort should be made, as soon as it was thought that she was fit to go out, that efforts should be made to put her into a situation, and that the child should be boarded out, and arrangements made that the mother should pay for the child's keep and pay for her own keep while she was in the penitentiary, so that they would not be a charge any more on the rates. It was represented to us that the result of that might be that girls who fell once would not fall again. Now, we had evidence yesterday of a case in the Athy Union, where one of these girls had as many as seven children. We very often meet cases in a workhouse where they have three, four, and five. They go from bad to worse, and these suggestions we are putting to Guardians where we go, because there seems to be some element of hope in them. I would be glad to know your opinion on it?—I think, as an experiment, it would be very well worth trying. I certainly would be against having these girls admitted to the workhouse and mixing with the general body of the inmates. Whether the idea that you mentioned is carried out or not, I certainly think there should be some change. Supposing they are kept in the workhouse at present, there should be some means of classification, that they would not be mixing with other girls or females in the house, particularly the younger children.

17966. A girl of eighteen or twenty who comes in, expecting to have a baby in a couple of months' time, is put at present amongst those hardened women who have had two or three or more children, that you disapprove of?—I do.

17967. You know the way in which a workhouse is built and the arrangement of it, by which you can see almost that if it is not an impossibility it is next door to it, that there can be any classification that will keep these people subject to good influences only?—I know there are very many and serious difficulties in the way of doing it.

17968. Take Abbeylara, you would find it very difficult to arrange that any poor girl when she came in would be kept altogether by herself?—She would not be by herself; she would have others of her own class to associate with.

17969. You would find, I think, very few who would be just in the same position as herself?—There are always a few in the houses of that class.

17970. When a girl comes in fresh from her fall she is in an impressionable condition; she is sorry for what has happened, and would be glad of a fresh start, and if she is put with a girl who has had a baby you would find it would not be a suitable companionship?—It would not.

17971. If she goes to one of these orphanages they take the greatest care by imposing silence when they are working together, and all that, and if it is in a Good Shepherd Convent there always would be a nun in immediate supervision, not paying visits now and again, but in immediate supervision, that would prevent any harmful conversation going on?—It would be far better; and that is what I would be most anxious would be done; but I only suggest the other thing as an alternative, in case the existing arrangements of the workhouse are to go on, then I suggest a different mode of classification.

17972. We have dealt with the tramps, the inmates, the children, and these girls having children, the only two classes that now remain for us to consider are the sick and the aged and infirm; now, these are the bulk of the inmates of the workhouse; you have very few inmates of a workhouse who are not either sick or aged or infirm?—Oh, very few.

May 4, 1894.

Mr James
McMahon.

17961. We have not received evidence in any quarter suggesting the closing up of the hospital or infirmary where the sick are treated. You would not be in favour of obliging the sick to go further from their homes than they do?—Certainly not.

17962. Now, we come to the most difficult question of all, and that is, the question how to treat the aged and infirm. In the early part of your evidence you indicated an unwillingness to send the aged and infirm at any great distance from where they were. You would rather keep them in their present unions, that is the view of your Board of Guardians?—Yes.

17963. But if you keep all the aged and infirm in Ireland in each workhouse, as they are at present, it would practically make it impossible for us to make any suggestions or report that would involve any large economy; unless we can gather together the aged and infirm, and in that way make one staff of officers do for a county, as even some larger divisions, we would find it very difficult to make any recommendations?—Well, if it could be shown that such a system as that would affect any great economy, I don't think there would be any opposition to it from the local bodies.

17964. We would not dream of putting the extra inconvenience on the aged and infirm unless there was a really substantial saving of rates, but if there were such a saving of rates, speaking for yourself alone, at all events, you would be in favour of such a thing?—Decidedly; and I believe the bulk of the public bodies of the county would be the same way.

17965. I don't know whether you have much out-door relief in your union?—I am not able to tell you the figures.

17966. Is your Board of Guardians rather disposed to give out-door relief to deserving cases to prevent the breaking up of the home?—Yes, sir.

17967. You have no suggestion to make about out-door relief?—Well, no. As regards union rating, I generally approve of that principle, although in some cases the tendency of Boards of Guardians, at least of the Board of Guardians that I have to deal with, in some cases the tendency is, perhaps, to be a little generous in out-door relief; and I imagine in some rare cases, there may be some doubtful cases where you could scarcely say that people are really destitute; and I would suggest if there could be some little check put upon the administration of out-door relief.

17968. Did any practical check occur to you?—Unless there could be a standard sum fixed.

17969. That varies so much. You could not put a standard sum into an Act of Parliament, because the wages and means of the people vary so much in every county, or almost every district?—Suppose the number of persons in receipt of out-door relief was taken, and the average sum granted to each of those was taken, and then, if the amount given to those henceforward was seriously in excess of that amount, the excess should be a divisional charge.

17970. Something like the limit for road expenditure?—Yes.

17971. Mr. MURKIN.—You think the divisional charge works in the direction of economy?—I think so. I was a member of the old Board of Guardians, and it was a divisional charge then; and it was far more difficult to get out-door relief then than at the present time.

17972. Owing to closer inspection and greater care by individual Guardians?—I must say the Board of Guardians at the present time exercise the greatest care and discretion in investigating every case, but they may, perhaps, be a little more inclined to be generous on account of the full amount expended not coming on their own division.

17973. How would it do to have one particular day in the month for the consideration of applications for out-door relief, and then to require that two-thirds of those present would have to vote in favour of the application before it would be granted; would that be a check?—It might.

17974. You understand my point. For instance, if there was one particular day in the month set apart for the consideration of applications for out-door relief, and it would be necessary to have two-thirds of those present vote in favour of the application before it was given?—It might not be a check; but two-thirds might be just as likely to make a mistake, because they are more or less influenced by the local Guardians that represent the district where those persons reside.

17975. Still, if there was one stated day in the month, and the Guardians knew this particular question would come forward, and that it would be also necessary for two-thirds of those present to vote in favour of the application, would it not be some kind of a check?—I don't think it would. I seldom see a division on an out-door relief case. They are generally guided by the report of the relieving officer and the opinion of the medical officer. It is very seldom that there is a division taken on it at all.

17976. CHAIRMAN.—It has been mentioned to us in some places that Guardians who have comparatively little poverty of a serious nature in their division, when they had their part of the country becoming equally responsible for the out-door relief, go in for getting their share?—Presently.

17977. You find that, too?—I do.

17978. So that applications come forward which would not come forward if it was on the division?—I really believe at the present time there are people getting out-door relief that would not get it if it was a divisional charge, and would not be supported or recommended by the local Guardians; and I think the suggestion I made, if it could be practically carried out, would be the best deterrent that could be made use of.

17979. To take the amount that existed against each locality on a certain day, and say that anything in excess of that amount in future would have to be borne by the division?—No, sir. I would take the maximum in normal receipt of out-door relief at the time, the average per head, and then anything in excess of that should go on the local rates.

17980. Would you apportion these over each electoral division or take it for the whole union?—For each electoral division; but, of course, this would not apply to sick persons at all, only chronic cases of out-door relief.

17981. It would not affect sick persons who had a medical certificate that they could not be removed?—Certainly not.

17982. Mr. MURKIN.—Then it would necessitate keeping an account for out-door relief in each electoral division?—That would be very little trouble. The clerk could do that, and the relieving officer has a return in his books.

17983. Not as regards an electoral division?—We often move for returns, and get them next heard day.

CHAIRMAN.—They keep the residence of the persons getting the relief, and that shows the electoral divisions.

17984. Mr. MURKIN.—But there is no question of obsolescence at present; it would necessitate an entirely new change in that respect?—Information will be obtained from the relieving officer's books. And, as regards the amalgamation of unions, if there were any of the surrounding unions that wished to be dissolved, we have accommodation in Abbeyfield Workhouse for a good number of inmates. We don't ask for the dissolution of any surrounding union, but I am instructed to say that if a union is dissolved—17985. CHAIRMAN.—You are not speaking of Castlecor?—I am not making a suggestion as regards any particular union. Our workhouse was intended for 418 inmates, and at present we have only about 150 in it altogether.

17986. Mr. MURKIN.—Have you not a fever hospital there?—Yes.

17987. How many could it accommodate?—A vast number.

17988. Don't you think if it were used as a hospital for the district for the acute sick it would meet all the requirements?—Then we should get a fever hospital somewhere else.

17989. Could you not have a smaller building with four little wards?—That idea was suggested some years ago.

17990. Does it not seem an extravagant thing that you have an institution to accommodate forty or fifty people which is only used for two or three people?—Could not some economy be practised in that respect?—We would have to build a fever hospital somewhere else.

17991. The fever hospital is a fairly modern up-to-date building, and very suitable for a district hospital?—This question was under consideration by the Guardians before, and the very suggestion you mention was recommended by the Local Government Inspector.

17992. How did the Guardians view that recommendation?—I think they believed there was no necessity for making any change. It would involve a lot of expense.

17993. CHAIRMAN.—If there were a general change all over the country, you have a very good hospital at our fever hospital that would make a good hospital for several cases?—No doubt it would make an excellent institution for that purpose, only we would have to build a fever hospital then. That was the whole case that arose.

17994. Mr. MURKIN.—Still, the cost of a little hospital for fever would be small?—Yes; there were several suggestions made. One was that part of this should be set aside for consumption.

Mr. PATRICK A. MURKIN, J.P., Chairman of the County Council, examined.

18001. CHAIRMAN.—We will be very glad to hear from you the views of the County Council on the various questions?—Our Council did not formally consider the matter, except to appoint Mr. McInnes and agree to attend before you to answer any questions.

18002. What was your view about the number of workhouses in the county, and whether any change could be made of a far-reaching nature?—In the interests of economy, I think that an amalgamation of workhouses is necessary in Ireland. With reference to the Queen's County, in my opinion, if the population continues to decrease, the amalgamation of the two workhouses in the county must, of necessity, come about.

18003. Have you any vacant building in Maryborough?—We have not; and I don't think from the present aspect of the case that amalgamation could be carried out without inflicting some hardship on the poor; and, of course, that is to be avoided. It would be very difficult, and a very great hardship on the poor, to send them from the furthest part of Mountmellick Union to Abbeyfeix, or vice versa. Probably an amalgamation might, with advantage, take place of the two portions of the Queen's County—one that is attached to Athy and the other to Carlow. Very likely an amalgamation of them with Abbeyfeix or Mountmellick might be advantageously carried out.

18004. Did you consider the question involved in that, that is—the question of making the poor law area coextensive with your county?—Yes, sir, if it could be done.

18005. What is your opinion about the feasibility of it?—I think the only obstacle would be the question of the convenience of the poor. There is no railway accommodation in that part of the country.

18006. Supposing we accepted from consideration the sick, and start with the supposition that the sick would be dealt with where they are dealt with at present, and that no change could be made anywhere as regards the sick, would you see any difficulty as regards those people dependent on the rates who are not sick, about moving them to other institutions in the interests of economy?—I think that could be done. At the same time I should not like to give a very emphatic opinion on the matter, because that would be more a matter for the representatives of the district; but viewing things from an outside point of view, I think it could be done without any hardship on the poor when the sick would be treated near their own homes.

18007. Have you acted recently as a Guardian in any of the unions?—I am a Guardian at present at Mountmellick and Abbeyfeix; but I regret to say I am not so attentive to my duties there as I ought to be.

18008. You are at a considerable distance from each?—Seven miles from Abbeyfeix and five from Mountmellick. Then, Mountmellick is in charge of a very excellent body of men, and it is not necessary for outside Guardians to be going there so much.

18009. I suppose they are men that administer their business economically as well as they can?—I think it is as well managed a workhouse as any in Ireland. The treatment of the sick poor in unions is much better than it was ten years ago. In Abbeyfeix and Mountmellick there is a much better dietary and for the poor generally, and the nurses have been recently appointed there; and, altogether, the management of both the institutions is as excellent as it is possible to have it.

18010. Have you ever considered the question of the aged who are not sick—have you ever considered 17995. CHAIRMAN.—Was it ever suggested that the Donaghmore Workhouse should be set apart for consumption?—There were several suggestions.

17996. Is it kept up in good order?—It is in good order. At the present time we have a caretaker there, and a clerk of works looks after the road. We will be very glad to get rid of it.

17997. Mr. MURKIN.—Is it not an expensive thing to have that building doing nothing?—It is.

17998. Would you not like to get rid of it?—Yes; I consider it a white elephant on our hands.

17999. The same might apply to other large buildings?—We have no other large buildings in our union.

18000. In other places there are, and wouldn't you approve of making use of them?—Certainly; they are no use if they are lying idle.

what a very cheerless and unprofitable life they live, herded in large numbers in their day rooms or dormitories, with very little occupation, and nothing to do? Would you be in favour of anything that would centralise that class, so that they could be suitably occupied—some, we will say, on a farm, some otherwise, so as to get some light, suitable labour out of them, which would both make them happier and, perhaps, diminish their cost?—As a matter of fact, when I used to be attending twice as a Guardian, much more constantly than I do now, whenever I went in through the house I was struck by just what you mention; and I don't think that in any part of the world was there a more cheerless existence than those poor people had to endure.

18011. I am afraid it still remains?—It still remains; and the suggestions you made struck me often as the only solution of the question—that is, for the workhouse people to provide more land, and extend the gardens, and give these poor people light, suitable labour, and say with a taste for a trade could work, if they were provided with some little tools, to occupy their time. It may not result in a monetary gain, but it would give them a pleasant occupation; but I think the acquisition of land would be much better for them, because they would have a happier existence.

18012. If those people could be moved to a central institution where there would be land it would be also possible to subdivide them or classify them in such a way as might be deemed expedient. Some people are very much in favour of letting old married couples remain together, other people say that men who have always had a sober and respectable life should get a little better treatment and more privileges than those who come to destitution through their own neglect or vice, and it has been represented to me that if a central institution were entirely devoted to that class, without any other class being treated there, it would be possible to sub-classify them in that way?—It would be a very good thing; because these poor people, such as you describe, who come to the workhouse through misfortune, not of their own making, are entitled to better treatment and different classification to those who lead a lazy, dissolute life, whose profligacy is the result of their own neglect. At the same time there would be an objection to sending these people a long distance from their homes, so to speak, because they have some friends and relatives living about the place, and to remove them to a long distance, where they would never see a friend's face or get a friendly visit, would not result in their happiness. The better solution would be for the Guardians to be empowered to take more land, and employ the people as you have described.

18013. We have been struck, of course, with that view of the question that you have put forward—that is, the cutting them off from their acquaintances and friends; and, having that in view, we have made inquiries as we have gone along at workhouses how far these people, aged and infirm, were visited. We have found, as a result of our inquiries as far, that the sick receive a good many visits, but we were rather sorry to find out that the aged and infirm who come in there to end their days—in a great many cases they are the last of the family, in a great many cases their friends outside are not sorry to say good-bye to them—and we find visits to that class are very few, indeed, and so that it would be more a question of cutting them off from their locality than from their friends. I am afraid—in view of that fact I dare say what you say—gest might be the better solution of the question—to have the cases you mention sent to some central place, where they would have occupation.

18014. Are you in favour of having the lunatics removed from the workhouse?—I think all lunatics should be sent to a lunatic asylum, as more suitable for their care and maintenance.

18015. As regards children, now, are you in favour of boarding out?—I am entirely in favour of boarding out. I have advocated it for twenty-five years or so that I am a Guardian. There is no worse school for a child, in my experience, than the workhouse. That question was raised at the time the Trist School was established, and we had a movement in Mountmellick at that time to establish a school in Donaghmore on the same lines; and many of the unions around have considered the question, and decided to amalgamate their interests for the purpose of establishing a school, but the matter, unfortunately, fell through.

18016. That, of course, would not be boarding out—it would be an institution, but it would take them out of the workhouse?—The object was to remove them from the influence of the workhouse.

18017. Would you prefer the boarding out of a child in a small farmer's family to sending them to any institution, no matter how well-regulated or managed?—I would; they become infused in the population, and whatever brand of pauperism there may have been on them disappears, and they become members of the family; and every case of boarding out that could be traced, they had become self-respecting, good members of society; and in nearly every case where a child was brought up in the workhouse he returned a criminal or a pauper—generally both. One of the difficulties of the question that had to be considered was the power of removing the children from the custody of father and mother in cases where the father and mother were not fulfilling their duties.

18018. At present your powers for boarding out are limited to orphans or deserted children?—They are.

18020. Supposing the fathers and mothers claimed them, but that the Guardians are thoroughly persuaded and know well that the children will never do any good with themselves, that the father and mother, or father or mother, are worthless, idle, perhaps vicious, people, who will bring up their children in the same wretched way that they have been living themselves; if the Guardians are of that opinion, would you be in favour of giving Guardians power by law, subject, perhaps, to an appeal at petty sessions against their decision, to remove the children from the custody of their parents?—I would, sir, though it is a very delicate question, deserving very great consideration, because, if that became law, we don't know how far it may be an encouragement to people to utilise that law by deserting their children, and throwing the responsibility of rearing their children upon the rate.

18021. What would you think of this as a counter-move to that—that men and women who are incapable, or considered and held to be incapable, of having charge of their children, should also be held incapable of having their liberty for the purpose of rearing still further children, and that they should be sent—as is suggested by a great many people now—to what is known as a Labour Colony, and that they should be detained there while their children are supported at the public cost?—I would entirely approve of that suggestion.

18022. That would deter people, would it not, from having children and thinking they would get rid of them easily?—Exactly.

18023. It would mean they themselves would lose their liberty if they misused their parental powers?—Even that it might result in adding something to the misery that it might induce some people to avail of that law for the purpose of getting rid of their duties and responsibilities as parents, but still the greater good to their offspring and the greater good to the community would, in my opinion, counterbalance any risk. There is no day that there is not ample proof of that, especially in towns like this. Women, with three or four children, tramping about the country, and teaching the children to beg and steal, with the result that these children prey on society and become thieves, rogues and drunkards.

18024. Unless members?—Not only unless, but they assume what the poor should get, and they are a tax on the community. They go to the farmer's home, if they are known there by the good woman of the house, whether they are deserving of charity or not, they will get it through fear, if not through charity. These are the people who set fire to haystacks and do injury to property. The law should empower the Guardians, where deliberate neglect is proved against people, to take their children and place them as you say.

18025. The same observation you have just made apply to that class known as the casuals or tramps?—Yes; that question of the tramps is a very serious one. It just strikes me that it often happens where a strike has taken place in a great city, respectable tradesmen have to go on tramp. I know a case. A self-respecting tradesman was travelling from Limerick to Dublin and he had only his money bag to carry him a certain distance. He got off either at Mountmellick or Maryborough, and enquired here. There was no workhouse. He went to Mountmellick, and probably was treated as a tramp, and had to do some very objectionable work in the morning before he went out. I came across that man afterwards, and he certainly excited my sympathy. The leave ran down his cheeks when he was telling the circumstances under which he had to seek the hospitality of the workhouse. That is a case that ought to be guarded against; and it struck me, in all such cases as that, if a respectable tradesman going on tramp got a certificate from the constable of the district where he was, that should give him relief in the workhouse and be a guarantee of his respectability to the officials. But for the professional tramp, I think no punishment too severe for them.

18026. Even deprivation of their liberty by being sent to a labour colony?—Certainly. I heard your suggestions about women with illegitimate children. Unfortunately, the experience is that once a poor girl falls and goes into the associations of the workhouse there is hardly a case in which she does not fall again, and the suggestion made is an admirable one and the only one calculated to meet the case; that is, whether it is the Government or the rates of the country should provide the maintenance of such an institution to which such girls could be sent.

18027. There are a great many of these institutions existing already. For instance, in Cork and Dublin there are Convents of the Good Shepherd, and there are some Protestant penitentiaries also, so the country has a good many to start with?—They could not take them, of course, except by the Guardians paying for them.

18028. In the same way that they pay now; to send a person to an extern hospital for treatment?—I think that would be an excellent arrangement, and the only one calculated to deal with the case effectually. Of course, I know the general tendency of human nature is to condemn their poor mistakes when they fall. So blame falls on any one else, and sometimes they are the victims of people who should protect them. I think the suggestion is an excellent one, and the only means of dealing with the difficulty.

18029. Mr. MURPHY—Do you think the law in regards the parents ought to be altered so as to enable the girl herself to seek for some assistance; to proceed against the father for the support of the child?—I think so. Whatever attention in the law that is necessary should be made in order to compel the wrong-doer to do the girl justice.

18030. At present it is very difficult to bring home to the parent the offence, and therefore the Guardians are almost powerless?—That is so.

18031. Do you think there ought to be some amendment of the law?—I do.

18032. In England it is much wider in its application than here, and if it were extended to Ireland payment could be obtained more easily?—I don't know what the law may be in England, but I certainly think the law should be improved in Ireland to allow the girl herself to be the prosecutor.

18033. CHAIRMAN—Do you think the present rating area is all right for all purposes; do you think union rating the best?—I think union rating for the relief of the poor is proper.

18034. Mr. MURPHY—Now, with regard to outdoor relief, some witnesses think that it has increased very much since the union has been made the area instead of the electoral division?—I believe there has been an increase, but I don't think that is brought about by any indifference of the Board to investigate fully the applications as they come before them and the necessities of the case. I know there are some people under the impression that divisional rating would be better, because it is said if there was divisional rating the Guardians would be cases caused in investigating cases. In my experience since the Local Government Act passed I don't think there has been any case that was not bona fide or there has not been a just and fair investigation, nor I don't know of any case where relief was given when it was not required. Although some Guardians do favour the Liberal ruling at the same time, in my experience since the Local Government Act passed, when the case was investigated and a case was made clear and made to be a just case, there was never any objection presented by any opposition to giving a bona fide case out-door relief. There are some cases of very large out-door relief, in a particular district; it might not be fair to ask a whole district to pay for what might be a limited case, but as far as the relief of the poor is concerned I think it is a very proper thing to have it a case charge.

18035. As a rule, rural Guardians are against union relief while town Guardians are in favour of it?—I investigated that matter with the relieving officer here, who is a very able man, and has the law and everything pertaining to his duties on his finger's ends; there were a large number of people on relief in Maryboro', and when I investigated their cases, supporting them were thirty, only seven were born in the district (union of Maryboro'); others came into Maryboro', got destitute, and became chargeable on the rates of the town.

18036. We have heard that printed out before, and I don't think is a great deal of truth in what you say?—I really think union relief is good. I know Boards of Guardians who were passing resolutions in the old times asking for union relief, and now when they have got a case of them even dissatisfied with what a few years ago they were asking for.

18037. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose you are one of the Guardians of the County Infirmary?—I am.

18038. You don't happen to have a report about you?—I am not in for you in five minutes. I know the institution is managed in an admirable manner.

18039. It is an old building, is it not?—It is an old building. At the same time since the Local Government Act came into force and the change on the committee they have made many alterations there and provided all the necessary medical appliances—up-to-date appliances—and the institution, I think, is among the best of its class in Ireland.

18040. Then you are satisfied with its condition?—Thoroughly satisfied, and I am quite sure that the management will be pleased if you, gentlemen, have time to go down and see the place. The County Council give £1,500, and the balance of the funds that are available for the maintenance come from private sources.

18041. Do you happen to remember how many nurses there are there?—There is a matron and three nurses. I will be very glad to send you the last report.

18042. Mr. MURPHY.—Some witnesses seem to think that the county infirmaries confer benefits on a small area whilst the whole county has to pay for their upkeep?—There may be something in it; it is only very seldom to think that there will be more applicants for medical relief from the immediate neighbourhood of the hospital, but at the same time I think when I submit the returns to you you will see that the patients coming to the Queen's County Infirmary come from all the districts of the Queen's County, and we have ample accommodation for them.

18043. Do you think that in addition to district hospitals county infirmaries are also needed?—Doubtless, I think it is a great boon to the people, not only of the district of Maryboro', but of the Queen's County generally.

18044. Dr. BROWN.—There are not many operations performed at Abbeyfeix or Mountmellick?—I did not see of any operations in the hospitals you mentioned. I know there are numerous operations performed in the Queen's County Infirmary, and many successful ones. At the same time the medical officers at Abbeyfeix and Mountmellick are very excellent men, and well able to deal with any case, but they may not have the appliances in these places, but at the same time when any serious cases occur in these unions I think they are sent by the doctors to the county infirmary.

18045. Regarding the hospitals at Mountmellick and Abbeyfeix, would you suggest that they should be separated more from the workhouses than they are at present?—I really don't consider that question. I know that people in general have a dislike to go to a workhouse, and I dare say there are very many people who would go to the hospital if it was separated. I have now the return furnished to the County Council of the number of intern patients treated at the county infirmary for the half-year ending 30th June, and they amount to 245; the extern patients amount to 366.

18046. These extern patients were all from Maryboro', I suppose?—I would not think so. I have a good many tickets, and I think about fifteen out of twenty would be from the districts outside Maryboro'.

18047. Just immediately around it?—No; some would be from Mountmellick, some from Abbeyfeix, and some from Durrow.

18048. CHAIRMAN.—Do you know anything about the hospital at Mountmellick?—It is a fever hospital; I don't know about it; it is subject to the Mountmellick District Council.

18049. Would you suggest that the hospitals should be separated as far as they possibly can from the workhouses?—If possible I would.

18050. Would you suggest that the management should be in any way separate from the workhouse?—I don't think so. I think the District Councils manage the hospitals very well.

18051. Mr. MURPHY.—The Guardians?—Yes.

18052. Dr. BROWN.—Would it be any advantage if there was a hospital committee with confidence upon it, such as they have in the county infirmary or in general hospitals?—I should not like to answer that question definitely.

18053. It would bring people into touch with the hospital; they would take more interest in it and visit it, and in that way you might get over the prejudice against the workhouses?—I have not considered that matter, but I dare say it would be a good thing, provided that none of the responsibility was removed from the Board of Guardians. If the Board of Guardians remained the appointing authority of the committee and the committee were responsible to them and could not undertake any expenditure without their sanction, if their duties were merely to superintend and assist the management, so to speak, I think it might be a good thing.

18054. Unless they had some real voice in it you could not expect a committee to go to a hospital and look through it and see things that should be altered unless they had some voice in getting them altered?—Yes; but I am quite sure that the recommendations of the committee would be received favourably by the appointing authority. I dare say it would be an improvement and remove the objection just mentioned if a committee similar to the committee of the county infirmary was appointed.

18055. You would not go further and suggest that the county infirmary committee should have the management of the other hospitals?—Judging from the attendance, I really think if any additional duty was placed on them they would be hardly equal to it.

18056. CHAIRMAN.—You think it would be better to have a local committee?—I think it would.

18057. Dr. BROWN.—And perhaps the same rate too for the whole county. It is rather unfair that Abbeyfeix and Mountmellick should support hospitals of their own and at the same time pay the same rate to the county infirmary hospital?—Yes; but the whole district. We in Maryboro' pay our portion to Mountmellick hospital.

18058. CHAIRMAN.—But not to Abbeyfeix?—The whole district pays for Abbeyfeix; it is not the town supports the hospital, but the whole district.

18059. What Dr. Bigger says is that all the distant parts of the county contribute to two hospitals—their own hospital and the county hospital—and they get very little, if any, advantage from the county infirmary?—That is so.

18060. Would you be in favour of making the maintenance of the sick in whatever hospital a county charge?

Dr. BROWN.—Only the very acute sick?—I would not like to answer the question straight off.

18061. You have not considered it?—I have not.

18062. With regard to consumption, have you thought of anything that might be done for the consumptive in the county—the establishment of a sanatorium or joining with any other county?—I think it would be an excellent thing, and there is a very suitable building available and in a good situation—Donaghmore.

18063. You think it could be made suitable?—There is land attached to it that would be useful for out-door exercise and work.

18064. CHAIRMAN.—Dry situation; it is not low-lying land; it is a well-forested part?—I am afraid it is not well drained; I would not be very positive on that.

18065. Then that would be a fatal objection?—I think the land about appeared to me to be damp;

May 4, 1904.
Mr. Patrick
A. Henson.

There was water about the house, but I daresay it could be removed easily. But, considering the number of people in the country that are victims of consumption, I think it is time that something should be done in the line you state; some effort ought to be made for those poor people; and, except for one thing—the situation—Dungannon would appear to me to be an admirable place for some such institution.

18065. Dr. BROWN.—Queen's County being small, you might join with some of the neighbouring counties.

CHAIRMAN.—You have a good healthy site at The Heath?—It is about one of the highest in the county, and there is a splendid house that used to be used for the races in the old times. It is not used at present, and perhaps with very little expenditure it could be altered for the accommodation of perhaps thirty people.

18067. Dr. BROWN.—Those windows are often wooden shutters put up temporarily?—There is a very good house there, except the sanitary authorities might object; they treat infirm residents there in the summer months, but the building is lying idle, except, I think, the Board of Guardians meet part of a day there, but The Heath, or that locality, would be an excellent place for it; it is a dry, healthy station. Now this (proposed) is a return of the receipts and expenditure of the infirmary for the year commencing 6th of January, 1903, and ending 5th of February, 1904, and you have the return here that you wished for. Number of intern patients within a distance of five miles round the infirmary, 302; number of intern patients beyond five and under ten miles, 134; number of intern patients from ten miles to the bounds of the county, 138.

18068. Dr. BROWN.—But when you enlarge your circumference you have three times the extent of ground?—That is so. But if a hospital was to be discontinued simply because it was of more benefit to the immediate locality than to the more distant parts it would fall against any institution.

18069. CHAIRMAN.—And it is a most valuable institution, of great use to the neighbourhood?—It is only last night I gave a ticket to a man from near Monaghan who had his eye nearly knocked out; he was admitted there and treated; it would have been very convenient if he had had to travel to Abbeylex or some other place.

18070. Mr. MURPHY.—Is there any feeling in other parts of the county against the county infirmary?—I don't think there is. I know there was an expression of opinion once or twice, but it was not unfriendly, and I think it is quite recognised in every part of the county that the infirmary is an admirable institution, and should be maintained, although people perhaps from near Clonow or Almy may never come there; at the same time they quite recognise that such an institution is necessary, and should be continued.

18071. Dr. BROWN.—You have some trust funds which help to support it?—Yes; there is the income from the Grattan Street fund.

18072. CHAIRMAN.—Have the subscriptions fallen off since the new management, since the system of government was changed?—Well, I regret to say they have.

18073. Before a person becomes one of the governing body by paying a subscription, now that privilege is gone, so, naturally, the same amount of subscriptions don't come in?—It does not; then there were circumstances which I would prefer not to mention now, and a number of subscriptions ceased in consequence.

18074. Mr. MURPHY.—I suppose under the new management the benefits are much more general than formerly?—Yes.

18075. That is to say a class of the population now gets benefits that formerly were excluded?—I would not say excluded, but undoubtedly the poorer class of people are more frequent applicants than before.

18076. So that the benefits to the poor are greater than formerly?—Much more; and since the new management they have supplied up-to-date instruments which enable the medical staff to perform difficult operations that have been performed, and successfully performed.

Mr. Henson J.
Hurlers.

Mr. HURSTON J. HARRISON examined.

18077. CHAIRMAN.—What are the views of your Board as regards continuing the workhouse?—In favour of continuing Abbeylex.

18078. Would you be willing that some classes in the workhouse should go elsewhere, say lunatics?—We always remove any dangerous lunatics.

18079. You have about ten there; they are harmless?—Quite so.

18080. Bad people of dirty habits?—I am not aware that they are.

18081. You would not be in favour of leaving those classes?—I am not expert enough to say; they are doing no harm, and I think they are very much happier among their associates; they like the place, and are very much at home, and probably have an easier life than amongst dangerous lunatics in the asylum.

18082. Do you think they would have as pleasant a life as if they went to an institution where so much is done for their pleasure?—I think they are very happy in Abbeylex.

18083. They are in a little separate ward for themselves?—We have no separate ward; they are with the other aged and infirm. They are always sweeping or kept usefully employed.

18084. Then the children, do you approve of children being kept in a workhouse?—I would like to see them boarded out.

18085. At as early an age as they could be sent out safely?—Quite so.

18086. Would you be in favour of extending the power of Boards of Guardians to board out children that come under their charge, even when they are not epileptic or demented?—I would not probably go as far as that—taking them away; a great deal would depend on who the parents were and a good deal on the surroundings, and the question would be whether you would make it a hard and fast line; it entails a great deal of consideration before you deprive parents of their children—where one parent might be silly or weak, or goodness knows what, to deprive the other parent of the child. I was a Guardian forty years ago, and I have been a Guardian under the new Act, and I know the Guardians are most assiduous in their duty and most careful in the selection of the people they send the children to, and we are blamed with a first-class schoolmaster, and the house is carried on in splendid style, and the children have earned the highest praise from the inspectors, and I think they are very happily placed in Abbeylex Workhouse.

18087. So you would not care to move them on either?—We constantly have applications for the boys or girls as soon as they come to ten or twelve.

18088. That is for living out?—Yes; and we have put out some children, but it is very difficult to get foster-parents; there is the trouble; they don't trust them too well at all as compared with a place or institution like Abbeylex, where they are so very well managed.

18089. Have you a ladies' committee there?—Yes; but we have a very good house committee.

18090. You did not appoint a committee of ladies to look after those children?—No; we have no ladies connected with our Board.

18091. But even ladies who are not connected you have power to appoint on a committee?—I think that would not work well.

18092. The experience is rather the other way when it has been tried?—It may be in other places, but we are working very well and harmoniously, and it would be some trouble to get ladies into Abbeylex.

18093. As regards the girls who come in to live illegitimate children, would you be in favour of any change there?—Certainly; I think your suggestion of sending them to a penitentiary is the real solution. No matter what is the punishment of a girl, the chance is she will get some instruction and some healthy lessons that will give her a chance of betterment.

18094. What about tramps?—I think it is perfectly impossible to give a satisfactory answer. Mr. Murphy suggested keeping them in the workhouse a little longer. It is very hard to know what to do.

18095. That would discourage their movements a bit?—The custom in our union is that the Master is instructed—of course we cannot refuse them when they come first, but if they come a second time they are brought before the magistrates and sent to Killybegs for forty-eight hours. We had a talk on the subject some time ago, and I think the number of returned tramps was very small in the year; they would see you go and treat tramps too badly you will drive them out into the country, and the chances are they will be about the farmers' places and burn them, and there will be malicious injuries. I would nearly sooner run the risk of housing them.

1809. Would you take the other step that some people suggest—that is of sending them to a place where they would be under restraint for a long period, to a labour colony?—I don't believe in that sort of work. I think the class of tramps that I have noticed in Abbeylex are idlers; a lot of those unfortunate fellows who only want a night's rest and lodging; they are not able to work; they are idle.

1807. Mr. MURKIN.—Don't you see that the present system continues the same class from time to time and generation to generation?—I think as long as you are in Ireland you will have those tramps going about; you will not stop them; no legislation will ever keep tramps down. I think if you looked to the Government and let them give proper encouragement to their soldiers and give them a way of living, for the tramps at present are the disbanded soldiers—the greatest nuisance that ever befell the country since the South African War—these are the people we have to dread; they go on lone some roads and follow people.

1808. CHAIRMAN.—Those men have no pensions?—I don't know whether they have or not, but they are the real danger; not the poor broken down tailor that is not able to amuse himself to his cost.

1809. These disbanded veterans, what would you do with them?—I would send them back to South Africa instead of the Channel.

1810. Mr. MURKIN.—But failing that, what would you do at home?—I would prosecute them in every sense of the word. I would call upon the police to be more vigilant and watch them.

1811. When they come to the workhouse what would you do with them?—We are bound, I believe, to relieve them at once.

1812. CHAIRMAN.—You have a discretion?—I think our master is very careful about it. He proceeds against them as tramps and vagrants, and gets them into or three days in Kilmainham jail.

1813. Don't you think that something ought to be done to stop the occupation of tramping?—Decidedly.

1814. You won't do that by writing and looking on?—There is no means that can be devised but, I think, should be adopted.

1815. Then you would favour a colony for such people; some place where they could be sent for a term of years and made work there?—Yes; in one way these tramps—but it is very hard on poor artisans knocked out of a job and having to tramp to Dublin or Limerick; these men are driven to destitution on the road; they are good men, and if they got employment they would work; I would not call these tramps.

1816. The Guardians would not deal harshly with an honest working man out of employment?—We don't consider whether they are honest or dishonest; we take them—the rough and smooth—together. The master manages them very well at Abbeylex. Tramps don't trouble us very often—the same bunch.

Mr. JOHN WILLIAMS examined.

1817. CHAIRMAN.—Are you Chairman of the Mountmellick Board of Guardians?—Yes.

1818. You are not in favour of breaking up Mountmellick Union?—Certainly not.

1819. You heard the conversation we had with the different witnesses?—I did. I coincide with everything nearly that Mr. McMahon said.

1820. Did they say anything that you would be inclined to disagree with?—There is a thing I would bring forward that is in connection with these people coming in and bringing children with them; there ought to be a separate institution for them altogether away from that.

1821. They were in favour of sending these girls to a penitentiary or refuge under religious management?—That entirely agrees with my views so as to take them away.

1822. Would you take away the inmates?—That depends to a certain extent; the inmates are very well used for over in our part. I don't know would it be much advantage to take them or not.

1823. You don't see any great occasion for a move there?—No; but there is one thing I could tell you that I think very much about, and that is not to be changing down the convicts from Maryboro' over on Mountmellick.

1807. You see strongly of opinion that many of those tramps are ex-soldiers?—I am; I have seen them. There is an undesirable mark on the old soldier.

1808. Do you happen to know or did it ever occur to you to find out whether these men are still on the Reserve, liable for service again?—I don't know anything about them; we could not tell; there is no classification, and you cannot believe them.

1809. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you keep any record of their occupation?—Well, what they say they are, I suppose, that is.

1810. CHAIRMAN.—Do they ever say they are Reserve men or soldiers, or do they all say they are labourers?—Goodness knows what they say; you cannot believe them.

1811. I think the general reply is labourers?—Just whatever suits themselves for the time being.

1812. Would you be in favour of sending the aged and infirm from the different workhouses to one central institution, where they could be employed on a farm or otherwise?—That would all depend where that institution would be.

1813. Supposing it was at Abbeylex, would you approve of it?—I think any aged or infirm we have are not able to work on the farm.

1814. They are able to do little things?—And our master finds he has quite enough for them to do.

1815. Have you ever gone into the aged and infirm wards in Abbeylex and seen the large number of men sitting and looking about there, doing nothing?—They are not able to do anything, and they are labelled labourers; when the day is fine they are employed to go out and dig and sow, and make themselves generally useful according to their strength; we have not an able-bodied man in Abbeylex. Colonel Peel took a good deal of trouble some time ago to see would there be any among the women to do cottage industries—knitting and wood-carving. They had no idea of it; they could not do it. Now and then if we get a carpenter in who is temporarily laid up he is employed to do jobs about the house. I don't think there is a man idle in Abbeylex Union except when the day is bad.

1816. There is no other competition except these little jobs?—They are fit for nothing else; if there is a tailor there he is worn out, and he won't mend clothes for you.

1817. Mr. MURKIN.—Supposing you had an institution properly arranged and you had a workmaster for the different departments, would it not be different; could not these people be classed according to their various occupations; it would keep them employed and therefore happier?—I am not aware that there is any man that is a skilled artisan that could work at anything. They are all agricultural labourers in the house.

1818. If you had a considerable quantity of land?—They are not able for it; you will have to get hired labour; there may be an acre that might be available, or perhaps two, but that would be the most; we have no men in it; they are all aged and infirm cripples.

May 4, 1904.

Mr. Justice J. Harrison.

Mr. John Williams.

1820. As soon as a gentleman takes his discharge from prison does he go to you?—Yes; I wish you would take a note of it; we have one gentleman over there that does not wish to go away from us, and we cannot send him away.

1821. What did he come to Maryboro' for?—Committing an indecent assault on a young child; the people around him do not make very fine use of him. I think he is not a man we ought to have there.

1822. Why don't you discharge him?—I don't know why we did not do it at all; he had a right not to be let into it.

1823. Why don't you put him out?—Because it is not in our power.

1824. If he was an able-bodied man why don't you send him out?—He is an old man; at any rate we cannot remove him.

1825. Mr. MURKIN.—Did you try to remove him?—We wrote about him, and we could not do it.

1826. Why don't you order his discharge?—Because when a man is destitute and of a certain age we must keep him in the workhouse.

1827. CHAIRMAN.—Is he able to walk about?—He is.

1828. He may go out and do some light work?—What I want to impress upon your minds is this—this man finds there is a sort of grievance in connection with what he has already done; he is not satisfied; what can we do with him. We cannot shift him. It is a case for your consideration, and it is the only case I have heard mentioned that is worth your while considering. We don't want the Mayboro convicts dumped down in Mountmellick whatever dumping is in question.

May 4, 1904.

Mr. John Williams.

18133. That is a sort of home industry you don't want to encourage?—Certainly.

18134. Is there any other matter you would like to see straightened a bit?—The only matter is a separate place for these young women that have children. I think it is very, very necessary, and here is another matter too—I think we might turn over the tramps to the Government altogether.

Mr. Lewis Cullen examined.

Mr. Lewis Cullen.

18135. CHAIRMAN.—Do you agree or disagree with the witnesses that have gone before you?—In many things I agree, but in the principle I don't agree. I know there are many Guardians in the workhouse that will favour the opinion I give; that is the abolition of workhouses generally, but I would not wish to see Mountmellick abolished and Abbeyfeix adopted in its place.

18140. But a general abolition of workhouses for the sake of economy. You saw that what I was asking Mr. Meahan and Mr. McMahon did go largely for the abolition of workhouses; that every class was to be taken out and leave it nothing but a hospital—I fully agreed with that. I have pretty strong opinions myself, and have studied a great deal. I believe we have an average number of 200 people in the workhouse at Mountmellick, and our rates in the workhouse is something like £8,000 a year, or probably less a week for each individual. I think that if instead of having a workhouse at all—18141. Before you say that, while you are on the question of expense, I expect you have taken into the £2.—Everything.

18142. Expenditure outside the Poor Law, such as dispensaries?—Certainly.

18143. That would not come before us?—You are not inquiring anything about dispensaries.

18144. No; we are merely on the Poor Law?—I don't look on dispensaries with favour at all.

18145. You would not close the dispensaries?—Yes; and give the money to the poor, and I would have the money handed direct to the person for whom it was intended.

18146. Do you mean to say you would turn off all dispensary doctors and have no one to care the sick?—The doctors would remain there still.

18147. Who would pay them?—The poor themselves when they get the money. We collect the rate; it is called the poor rate, and for every 6d. collected for the poor they get about 3d.; that is my private opinion.

18148. Mr. MURTAGH.—Where does the 9d. go?—For the upkeep of the workhouse; there is more spent in keeping up the workhouse, for sanitary improvements—there was a boiler got in Mountmellick the other day, something about £150, and it was all condemned. Now there is another sanitary arrangement again, £200 or £300 more; the upkeep of the workhouse, painting the windows, the furniture, the half-yearly supplies—they are continually recurring—and for others not poor at all.

18149. CHAIRMAN.—But the poor eat the food—the half-yearly supplies?—If a person went and asked the poor outside out of thirty poor twenty-nine would vote for a little out-door relief.

18150. I am sure a great number would prefer out-door relief, but what you say about the cost of administration that out of every shilling 6d. goes in administration, I would not like you to suppose I agree with you in that?—No; and probably few would.

18151. If you had figures and worked out the calculation I could then show you where I think the error in such calculation would come?—In the half-yearly returns issued for every workhouse in Ireland there are three or four items that come first—the support of the poor. I would separate those items from all the others, and say all the others were acting as a kind of transit for the support, and it cost 6d. to carry the 3d. worth to the poor.

18152. Dr. BRENNAN.—Did you go into the figures at all?—Yes.

18137. What would you think would be a good thing for the Government to do with them?—Take them into consideration the same as if you or I committed any crime.

18138. You would look on their going about as a crime or offence, and get them locked up in Mayboro?—Let the Government look after them; they have plenty of policemen riding about on their bicycles from Mayboro to Tullamore and Mountmellick to Athy; turn them over to the Government. How would you expect a relieving officer to be looking after those sort of fellows. Did they not lose £40,000,000 on the Boer War, and what the devil is the reason they cannot do that much.

18153. CHAIRMAN.—You took the first two or three columns in the abstract?—Yes. The cost of Mountmellick is about £8,000 a year.

18154. Including dispensaries?—Including dispensaries and out-door relief and all.

18155. In-maintenance and clothing, what would you call that?—I say that would not be necessary if I gave sufficient out-door relief.

18156. No; but I am coming to the 1s. and the 3d. 1s. It would be hard for me to give anything like an explanation without taking the whole thing.

18157. You must take it item by item; the first item in this is £1,353 for in-maintenance and clothing; would you put that in the 3d. or the 6d. 1s.—Certainly I would say the poor get that.

18158. That is part of the 3d. Out-door relief £1,026, that goes to the 3d. 1s.—Certainly; but if I were paying out-door relief and handed the money to the poor person.

18159. And that is over 6d. already without going further?—That will not meet it.

18160. Those two sums that I have read out to you are more than half of the half-yearly expenditure?—But everything is put down as going to the poor, but my theory is that it does not go.

18161. You said that yourself. I asked you was in-maintenance and clothing part of the 3d. or 6d., of you said of the 3d. 1s.—I say it would not be fair to charge that entirely to the 3d.

18162. If the food goes into the inmate's interior arrangements and if the clothing goes on his back—Maintenance, to my mind, means maintaining in his big house.

18163. No; it only means food and clothing?—No; I think not. I did not make it out that way at all.

18164. Then there is a sum now for medical charges—a large sum—£750 a year?—That comes under the dispensary.

18165. That would go out of it altogether; and the undoubtedly the salary of the medical officers, the salary of the schoolmaster, and the salaries of the officers, that would go to what you call the 9d. 1s.—Yes.

18166. I think you will find really that you have reversed the thing unconsciously?—No. Probably we will agree with me in my ideas. Those ideas are that there is no poor person in the workhouse who gets a food more than 4s. a week, and I say if that person were given 4s. a week outside or by some other means that it would be a saving on the rates, whereas it is far more than that by the present system.

18167. Dr. BRENNAN.—Did you calculate what the 10s. would cost at 4s. a week?—That would be £40 a week for food and clothing only.

18168. And you have £1,500 and £500 of it for dispensaries?—If I could maintain them at 4s. a week it would come to £4,000 a year.

18169. 4s. a week would house them?—My theory is to abolish the workhouse in rate.

18170. Would you abolish the doctors too?—No; but I would abolish the dispensaries.

18171. How would you carry out the curing of people; suppose you get ill, or any man you know get sick, does he not get the doctor to see him?—At present a person must qualify to a certain extent to get any assistance from the doctor, and yet there are people in a worse position to pay the doctor and still not qualify to get him—in the case of small farmers.

18172. Take the case of the very poor who get the doctor for nothing; would you make any change in that?—I would; I would wish the poor should have the accommodation of the doctor, but still I think the dispensaries are not good; there are a good deal of expense in the transit of medicine and medical appliances, and they are put on the rates without any regard to economy. The doctor's fees could be reduced; he would reduce his fees in order to suit these ideas of people, but I would give the money called the poor rate according to its name; I would give it to the poor, and then let them pay the doctor themselves.

18173. If the poor person was sick would you pay the bill?

CHAIRMAN.—No; he would give the money to the poor man to pay the doctor?—I would.

18174. I am afraid it is not a practical suggestion; you might have a family of ten in one house and three in another?—There are not so many. I think in the Queen's County there are small families. You can give out-door relief on the certificate of the doctor, only under certain circumstances when a man seems so much wickerly pay the doctor does not care to aid him without a small fee.

Mr. Williams.—I must say, sir, that he is an inspector; he is getting a salary from the Government; do you understand me.

Mr. CONNELLEY PERMAN EXAMINED.

18175. CHAIRMAN.—Are you a member of the Mountmellick District Council?—Yes.

18176. You heard your chairman's evidence; do you support his views?—I came here to support my own opinion and the opinion of the men that I represent.

18177. Do you agree pretty much with what the chairman said?—In some instances I do. My opinion would be all for doing away with workhouses altogether so far as a workhouse for keeping up an idle lot, but not to do away with hospitals or infirmaries. I would wish to see workhouses amalgamated as much as possible to keep down expenses and do away with a body of bad persons, illegitimate children and their mothers, and I would board out all children.

18178. Get all classes out of the workhouse but the sick?—I would; but the aged and infirm.

18179. Would you leave in the aged and infirm?—I would; in a central institution.

18180. You would not go with the last witness to the extent of saying that there ought to be no institution or public building for the aged and infirm; that they ought all to get out-door relief?—Oh, not at all. I would give the aged and infirm and sick all that was necessary, but then there is a body of people reared from time to time in the workhouse; they go out and come back with a family, and I would not let them in at all if I could. It came under my own observation not a fortnight ago—a woman in the town of Mountmellick, one of the worst characters ever reared in it; I think she has six at the present time; and I say one of them, a boy of fourteen years of age, brought before the Board this day fortnight, and two or three masters applied for him and he told the Board he would not leave the house. But I was selected to come here.

18175. CHAIRMAN.—Does he mean to say that you see an official under the Poor Law?—No; but I am a retired member of the Royal Irish Constabulary, and I take a pride out of it. It is the brightest feather in my cap, and I am not dependent on anything; I have plenty myself. I am honestly saying what I think, and what the people who sent me to the workhouse, against all opposition, meant, and they knew I would say it.

18176. Dr. BROWN.—Did you ever consider that if you were to put the number in the workhouse on out-door relief that the number could not be curtailed in any way; would not all their friends—people in the same position or even a little better position—want the same privilege if you gave it in money?—I come to electoral division rating, and I would have committees in each division.

18177. How would you safeguard it?—Local committees; towns do suffer on account of people coming in there, but the rural districts are in favour of union rating.

leave the house. When those people leave the house they are not worth a pin, and they return back again to the workhouse. Children that are boarded outside and reared outside with farmers or even tradesmen they generally merge in the community and come to be profitable citizens, and they are a credit to the community. I have one little boy at the present time that was boarded out; I have him hired out, and he is a chap good enough to be my own son, but others are at the other extreme, and, unfortunately, the Board have not the power to board out or hire out ones where their mother was there.

18178. You would be in favour of giving that power to the Guardians?

Mr. Williams.—Did I not, as Chairman of the Board, give every facility to have every one out?—But the law won't allow it. There have been applications made to myself several times for children, but I could not get them out because the mothers would not let them go, and I knew the mothers to be the worst of characters. There is another thing I wish to go into—the girls that did happen to fall. It is a very bad thing to classify them; I know decent girls enough to be there for years with street walkers or prostitutes, and in the end they were as bad as the worst.

18179. CHAIRMAN.—About tramps?—There are a class of tramps that make it a profession, and I would do away with them if I could, but with respectable tramps I agree with Mr. Moohan. There are some not inclined to do anything but to go about from place to place, living on the public. I would like to suggest that the girls who come in to have a child should be removed, and not left in contamination with the other people.

Mr. THOMAS THOMSON EXAMINED.

18181. CHAIRMAN.—In the Athy Union you have many more monies than either of the Queen's County unions; you have about 300 in the present time of the year?—Yes, sir. Mr. Doyle, the clerk, is here, and will give you all the figures.

18182. What is the idea of the Athy people about closing it?—I don't think it would work well to close Athy; there is a large radius around; a good deal of it is in the Queen's County and a large portion in Kildare.

18183. How far is the workhouse from the Queen's County border?—Something about three English miles; it is six Irish miles from Scrinallilly to the workhouse.

18184. The Athy Board is not in favour of closing the workhouse?—I don't think it would be convenient.

18185. Did they ever think of any other change, getting some of the inmates out of the workhouse?—The only change we thought of making was taking in portion of Ballinglass into Athy; it comes pretty convenient.

18186. In what county would that be?—In Wicklow. Wicklow, Carlow, and Kildare all join together near there.

18187. You have a good fever hospital there?—Yes.

18188. Much bigger than is necessary for fever?—Sometimes.

May 4, 1904.

Mr. LEVI Cuthbert.

Mr. CONNELLEY Plehan.

Mr. THOMAS
Thomson.

May 4, 1904.
Mr. Thomas
Timmons.

18209. What do you think ought to be done with the children?—I would agree with the other gentlemen who gave evidence about the children and tramps.

18210. And the girls who come in to have children?—I think your suggestion is a very good one.

18211. Tramps, have you much experience of them yourself?—Occasionally there are tramps; there is a difficulty about that question.

18212. Do you think it is a very pressing trouble?—I think the great bulk of them should be dealt with.

18213. How would you deal with them?—I think your suggestion was very good about the colony.

18214. Mr. MURKIN.—Is the number increasing or diminishing?—I rather think it increased for the last few years.

18215. CHAIRMAN.—Would you be in favour of putting the aged and infirm into one central workhouse?—I think it would be a good thing, if there was classification, and I don't think they would have any objection themselves.

18216. You think the aged and infirm might be moved?—I do.

18217. And the girls that go in to have children?—Yes.

18218. And the children you think ought to be boarded out?—I do.

18219. And the cessals and tramps dealt with in a labour colony, or some such method?—Yes.

18220. Very few lancers in your workhouse, so that really you would only have the sick and the lunatic; it would not be worth keeping the lancers?—No.

18221. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you think the women and men should be separated and put in different institutions?—I think it would be best.

18222. Dr. BUCHAN.—You mentioned about making the hospital separate from the workhouse?—It is a separate building.

18223. What was your idea in that?—The poor people would not be supposed to be going into the workhouse.

18224. You think that they would not have the same repugnance to go into it?—The less connection it has with the workhouse the less repugnance they would have to go into it.

18225. Have you heard many of the poor complaining that they did not like to go into the hospital on account of its associations with the workhouse?—A good deal of the objection to going into the hospital is removed since the institution came under the name of the union.

18226. But you have also heard that they did not like it on account of its association with the workhouse?—Some old people would say they would do sooner than go there.

18227. If the hospital were separated from the workhouse in the way suggested—that is making the fever hospital the acute hospital for the district—do you think more respectable people would go into it?—It is quite possible.

18228. And perhaps pay is the ordinary ward?—Yes; there are pay-wards at the present time in the workhouse hospital.

18229. That would increase the usefulness of the hospital and it would relieve the workhouse of a certain amount of stigma on everybody going into such places. You have not considered the question of consumption?—No; but I think the suggestion of Mr. McLean about having a sanatorium at the Meath, or some very dry place, would be very good.

18230. You think the ratepayers would not object?—I think not; but, of course, the look-out of the ratepayers would be rather to have the rates decreased than increased.

18231. CHAIRMAN.—You, as a ratepayer, would be such a feeling?—Yes.

18232. Dr. BUCHAN.—But, notwithstanding that, you would like to see a consumptive sanatorium established in the county?—I think it would be a very useful institution.

18233. There are a good many consumptive patients in the Adhy Workhouse?—Yes; from time to time.

18234. And a good many in the district too?—It is a low-lying district, along by the Barrow; very wet and damp.

Mr. Martin E.
Doyle.

18235. CHAIRMAN.—The view of the Guardians of the Adhy Union was against breaking up the workhouse?—Yes.

18236. Mr. Minch was not able to come?—No; he was sorry he could not get away yesterday.

18237. You have heard the evidence of your colleagues?—I think Mr. Timmons was not present recently when it was discussed with reference to the acute cases for the fever hospital; it was the general wish of the Guardians that the fever hospital would be made a general hospital, and other portions of the workhouse would be utilized for the infirm and sick; at present we have a difficulty with regard to overcrowding.

18238. That is for the infirm and feeble?—Yes; chronic cases.

18239. And as regards lunatics, they would be willing to send them to the asylum?—Yes.

18240. Are they in favour of boarding out all the children?—Yes; the law to be amended to give them a certain right or power.

18241. And girls who go in to have illegitimate children?—It would be a great blessing if there was some place they could be sent to. There are several girls we could get situations for but cannot send them out because the children are there.

18242. And tramps?—We are in favour of giving them some test in order to distinguish between the malcontented tramps and others.

18243. Mr. MURKIN.—That power has been in the hands of the Guardians in England for some years, and it has not had much of a deterrent effect?—Last year there was smallpox in Dublin and our Guardians decided to vaccinate all the tramps and it had a very deterrent effect, and they remained away. I was suggesting to the medical officer to keep it up.

18244. How much a head did you give the medical officer?—2s.

18245. Dr. BUCHAN.—He did not make many two shillings?—About forty. Mr. Timmons referred to Bellinglass; what he meant was the County Kilmore portion of Bellinglass. Adhy is the only union in South Kildare, with the exception of three divisions in Bellinglass Union. These were transferred to Adhy under the Local Government Act of 1896, but owing to the opposition from Bellinglass the Local Government Board did not pursue it, and left those with Bellinglass. Since then there has been an appeal to the Adhy Guardians by the residents of those divisions asking them to apply to the Local Government Board again, which they did.

18246. CHAIRMAN.—Are they anxious to get to you?—Yes; the new hall of Castleknock is in Adhy and the remainder in Bellinglass. We have a medical officer and midwife there, and the Bellinglass people cannot have them; they have to go six miles away, and the same thing occurs in Ballinacorney.

18247. Mr. MURKIN.—And the medical officer of another union is across the street?—Our office is there, and cannot be avoided of. Of course he does go, I believe, more for charity than anything else.

18248. But he cannot be called upon officially?—He cannot.

18249. Dr. BUCHAN.—Have you heard any expression of opinion from those frequenting the hospital that they did not like to go into it on account of its association with the workhouse?—I think it would be better if different entrances were arranged, but I heard no expressions of opinion. Of late years our hospital has been very much availed of by parties who were willing to pay.

18250. But do you think even a larger class of small ratepayers would go into the district hospital if there was a district hospital?—I think so.

18251. You think in that way there would be a number of smaller ratepayers who had not very good arrangements at home would go there and be treated and pay for their treatment?—I am certain they would.

18252. That class of people don't go into the workhouse at present?—No; it is mostly people about the towns—shop-assistants and others—have availed of the hospital as it at present stands. If the fever hospital was changed to here it a general hospital, and the workhouse done away with, there is no doubt it would be availed of.

18253. And therefore it would be more useful and more up-to-date?—Yes.

Mr. GEORGE VASSTON examined.

May 4, 1904.

Mr. George
Vasston.

18284. CHAIRMAN.—You are one of the Town Commissioners of Maryboro' ?—I am. What I wish to say is I agree with a good deal of what Mr. Meahan has said with reference to the workhouse, but there is just one observation I want to make in reference to the Queen's County Infirmary. From what I heard Mr. Meahan saying he would lead you to believe that the present management of the infirmary would be superior to what it was in the past. That is a matter I would wish to contradict, for I am an old governor of that for over forty years. I have nothing to say against the present management, but to say it is better than the past I would contradict that.

18285. CHAIRMAN.—You think, as far as the enlightenment of the times went and medical treatment?—The medical treatment was all.

18286. It was up-to-date?—It could not be better; under Dr. Jacob.

18287. As time goes on they are continually introducing new improvements?—Up to the present time and up to 1896 there was no improvement, I believe, in a hospital except X-rays or something like that that was not in this hospital before.

18288. Operating rooms?—Yes; an operating room too.

18289. You had that there in 1896?—Yes, and at the present moment. I don't believe there is another in the province equal to the Queen's County Infirmary at that time or even at the present moment. I think if you go down there you will say so. And as for the amalgamation of unions, I believe people around here would be in favour of amalgamating the unions.

18290. With a view of lowering the rates, if it could be done without hardship to the sick?—Without hardship. I believe too there are some unions could be done away with with greater ease to the poor and without any loss or detriment to them, and I take, for instance, Mountmellick Union. There is no union that I know of in this district that could be better done away with than Mountmellick; portion of it could go to Athy; that would leave a residue to the suffering unions of something like eight to ten miles. Then again we are here in Maryboro' and we are only seven miles from Abbeyleix and we are only five from Mountmellick; therefore it does not matter which town we go to. In Mountmellick you are ten miles from Mountmellick and only six from Abbeyleix. The Mountmellick Union runs within three miles from Roscrea. What I would do, I would give the King's County portion to Tullamore, Newfstown and Sallypore here to Athy. I give Maryboro' to Abbeyleix, Marymount and Celanino to Roscrea. I would rather have Mountmellick used for Innacree and Donaghmore could be used for a sanatorium. I don't want to have the hospital done away with in Mountmellick. I would be very sorry to see that, but make it a district hospital.

18291. How are the rates in Mountmellick and Abbeyleix?—Nearly the same, except where the sanitary rate comes in, but the rate for the poor is about the same. Those are the only matters I wish to go into. I might, like one of the witnesses here to-day, get bogged if I got into figures.

18292. It is the thing to look at, thought?—Yes; but we look at them from a cursory point of view.

The sitting terminated.

May 5, 1904.

THIRTY-SEVENTH PUBLIC SITTING.—THURSDAY, MAY 5TH, 1904.

At the Courthouse, Kilkenny.

Present:—Mr. MILES (Chairman); Mr. MURNAGHAN, and Dr. COET BEEGER.

Mr. R. H. PATER WATKINSON, D.L., examined.

Mr. R. H. Pater Watkinson.

18253. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the County Council and also of the Castlecomer Board of Guardians?—I am not a member of the Castlecomer Board of Guardians, but they asked me to come.

18254. As a large proprietor in part of the union?—Yes.

18255. The first query that we put to the County Council was as to whether they approved of amalgamating any of the unions in the county, and their answer was rather short; it was extended amalgamation or total abolition—that, I suppose, means that they would like as many of the workhouses closed as could be closed?—Exactly; we think there are too many workhouses in the county for the needs; perhaps half the number would be sufficient.

18256. It was not intended, was it, that the number of places where the sick are treated should be diminished?—No.

18257. Whenever a workhouse is closed you still would leave a local hospital, call it what you wish, for the treatment of the sick of the locality?—Exactly.

18258. In every workhouse there are the same classes of inmates. First, you have the sick, then you have the aged and infirm, then you have the girls who come in to have illegitimate children, then you have the children over 2 or 3 years of age, then you have lunatics, idiots and epileptics, and criminals or tramps, and then you have very few of the ordinary able-bodied classes, which all over Ireland don't amount to 4,000, so it is a very small class. I take it that the view of the County Council was that provision for the sick should remain, and that amalgamation should be carried out with regard to all the other classes?—Presumably.

18259. In the County Kilkenny?—There are some members of the County Council in favour, I believe, of the total abolition of all the workhouses and boarding-out of all the inmates, but that was not unanimous by any means.

18260. That was the reason that there was an answer with an alternative?—Yes.

18261. Speaking roughly, there are about 300 aged and infirm in the County Kilkenny workhouses. Do you think there would be any prohibitive hardship in removing them to a central institution in the county? Suppose, for instance, Kilkenny Workhouse was set apart for the aged and infirm in addition to the sick for the Union of Kilkenny, would you see any great hardship in that?—I think it would entail hardship on a great many of the old people being taken away from their vicinity and friends who come to visit them. They probably would not be able to see any of their friends if removed to a central institution like Kilkenny.

18262. If one were to take that as a valid objection, nothing could be done in the way of amalgamation at all?—I think many of these aged and infirm people might be boarded out.

18263. Would you be afraid of a very great extension of outdoor relief in consequence of that?—No, I don't think so.

18264. You would not be afraid that nearly every family in humble circumstances would try to get a weekly payment for an aged member of the family? You would not be afraid that the claims would be very large?—That would be the danger, of course.

18265. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—But that objection would not apply to the inmates at present in the house because their presence in the house proves their destitution?—No, it would not.

18266. It would only apply to future applicants?—Yes.

18267. CHAIRMAN.—You said just now that you would be rather afraid of cutting them off from the visits of their friends?—Yes, it would be entailed a hardship by a good many.

18268. In going round as much of Ireland as we have gone hitherto we have made, wherever we have had opportunities, inquiries as to the number of visits paid to inmates in workhouses, and we found that the number of visits to the sick was considerable, but that hardly any, in a good many workhouses practically no, visits were paid to the aged and infirm class who come in to spend the rest of their lives there?—Of course, that is a very strong point.

18269. If you found that those people in a great many cases were single old people who were without friends, practically, outside, would that modify your view?—I think it would considerably. Of course, I have no practical experience. My impression was that people were visited largely.

18270. We thought so too until we began making these inquiries on the subject. Then take the most class that would come up. Naturally that is the girl who comes into the workhouse to have an illegitimate child. That is a class of which there are a considerable number in the County Kilkenny. Have you ever reflected on the position of those women, and can you offer any suggestion as to any different way of dealing with them? You have girls who come in to have children, and they practically stay for the greater part if not all of their lives afterwards?—They come in and out.

18271. They go out as a rule with their children to beg or something of that sort, and come back again with perhaps an additional child?—I would like to see a change in the law that the children would be taken from them and brought up properly.

18272. What would you do as regards the girls themselves? It has been suggested to us by some witnesses that a good plan would be to class the workhouses for such a class, and not to make the workhouse a place where such women could be admitted at all, but as soon as a girl had a lapse which resulted in her being about to become a mother, that she should be sent to a penitentiary or refuge under religious management according to the religion professed by the girl, and that she should be there brought under good influences with a view to giving her a fresh start in life; that she should be retained, we will say, six months or a year, or whatever time would be thought necessary, and that her child should be kept until a couple of years old until it could be boarded out safely?—I think the present system is a very pernicious one.

18273. And causes a great increase in the illegitimate population?—Exactly.

18275. And that the Guardians should pay for them there, and then as soon as they went out to a situation that arrangements should be made by which they would pay for the support of their child and repay the Guardians or the community that might take charge of them, repay for their cost, with a view to saving expense. It was thought by those who made the suggestion that this would be a great benefit and a salvation for the girls, and that it would also reduce the number of illegitimate children, and that it would prevent the tendency of this class to become hereditary?—I quite agree with that; even on the ground of economy alone I think it would be a great improvement on the present workhouse system.

18276. There are a number of parishes and parishes of that sort in Ireland already, so that it would not be a case of having to establish institutions. In fact you would have a great many to begin with, if they would consent to receive them, as we direct they would. The next class in the workhouse that we need are lunatics, idiots, and epileptics. Would you be in favour of removing these from the workhouse?—Most certainly.

18277. Would you place them in a district asylum?—There is a difficulty. I am a member of the Board of Governors of the asylum, and the difficulty is that the asylum is almost quite full. It would mean an extension of building and a large extra expense.

18278. Would you prefer extending the asylum?—No. By the amalgamation of workhouses it would lay aside the workhouse for these people. I think there are considerably over 100 in the county scattered among the different workhouses.

18279. There are not very many in the County Kildare in workhouses now. Recently a great number have been drafted into the asylum, at least within the last few years; they are now comparatively few?—I was looking at the report of 1901 yesterday.

18280. As far as we see, there are not more than about 50 in the county, so that would not be a very great strain; but if the asylum could not take them in without more building, you would be in favour of having an institution for what might be called lunatics, one of the disused workhouses?—Owing to the large increase of lunatics the asylum will be overcrowded very soon.

18281. As regards tramps or casuals, have you any view on that point?—I would like to see the tramps detained for a couple of days and let them work for what they get.

18282. That is the English system. They have power to detain them for periods increasing in proportion to the number of visits they pay the workhouse?—Detain them longer each time.

18283. If a tramp comes in twice they can keep him a number of days. If he comes in three times they increase the number of days, but it is said that system is not having the deterrent effect in England. A number of suggestions have recently been brought forward, some in the shape of bills in the House of Commons, that labour colonies should be established?—Are there a sufficient number of these colonies in Ireland to justify that?

18284. I should be afraid there would be too many for use as colonies. There are a considerable number. You get at the number by taking all that were in the workhouses on one night. That practically will give you a very fair idea of the number in all Ireland.

18285. Mr. MURPHY.—126 in Kildare according to that return?—A very large number of those would not go to a labour colony.

18286. CHAIRMAN.—Unless they were made in. Some would be bona-fide tradesmen looking for work, a certain proportion of them, and in those cases, of course, nothing would be done; but people who were proved to be idle vagrants, who walked about to avoid work, instead of looking for it?—I think they are very troublesome in workhouses. I would like to see the police given a little supervision over them.

18287. It was suggested by Mr. Butler, who, I am sorry to say, is not able to come in to-day, that tramps whose workhouses at present exist should be put in charge of the Royal Irish Constabulary, to whom they should apply for a night's shelter with an allowance of one pound of bread, the constabulary to enter the particulars of such applicants and prosecute on a second application of any such person within 12 months, or on proof that such person had applied for and received relief in any other place?—I agree with that, or that police should be quartered at the workhouse and exercise control over these people.

18288. Would not that tend to perpetuate the present system, although it would keep them more in order? If under a magistrate's warrant they were sent to a labour colony you would virtually put under restraint the whole of that class?—It would have the effect of reducing the numbers of that class.

18289. It would practically abolish the class?—In that way it would be an advantage if there were no disadvantage on the other side.

18290. Turning about the country, but when he cannot show any occupation or means of earning a livelihood, a great many witnesses have thought it would be a very proper interference with his liberty. They are merely prying on farmers and others into whose houses they go, and really support themselves in that way?—I know they have these labour colonies in some Continental countries.

18291. In Belgium they have them, and there they are self-supporting. That is more than one could hope for, perhaps, and there are a couple of bills now before the House of Commons to enable such colonies to be started in England?—I would like to see other methods tried first, making the work a little harder when they go to the workhouse.

18292. Supposing we could get rid of the tramp from the workhouse, you would have the awkward class of keeping the workhouse open practically for the casual and tramp, if you got the aged and infirm to a central institution, and get the mothers of illegitimate children to go to refuges. I omitted to speak about the children. Would you be in favour of boarding out all children?—Most certainly. I am interested in that subject, and have studied it a little.

18293. Have you many boarded out in your own union?—Not very many.

18294. You have about 30 children in your workhouse. I suppose a good many of these are eligible for boarding out. You have only two boarded out?

Mr. O'Connell.—Four children at present in Castle-comer.

18295. CHAIRMAN.—What is your view about the boarding out of children?—I would like to see no children in the workhouse at all. I would exclude every child from the workhouse. It brings them up in an unnatural atmosphere, and it is against the law of nature. If we bring them up in institutions, we don't train children as they should be trained. They are brought up as machines, and turn out very bad machines. They know nothing of the ways of the world. It is not the fault of the officials, but the fault of the system.

18296. You would apply that practically to all institution-reared children?—I would; I don't approve of institution life for children at all.

18297. It is the institution life, not merely the workhouse life, that you object to?—Yes; it is the institution life.

18298. The only classes, then, you would have in the workhouse would be the sick and the casuals and the tramps, and the reason I was asking you so closely about the tramps was to see whether you considered that any other plan could be adopted than leaving those shelters for tramps in workhouses?—Put them in charge of the police.

18299. If the tramps were removed, you would have nobody there but the sick, and it would become wholly a hospital and nothing else?—That is what I should like to see, and put the casuals and tramps under the charge of the police.

18300. Would you put them in the lock-up?—I would not make it too comfortable for them.

18301. I suppose on a fair night or the night before a fair or noon, or whenever tramps congregate about a place?—I think it would be all the better if they had not much accommodation on those occasions they would not come then.

18302. Or they might comfortably board themselves out in barns and hay-ricks, where they would not be detectable?—The police could deal with that.

18303. You don't disapprove of the labour colony idea altogether?—Not altogether. I would rather see the other method tried first. It goes rather against our ideas of freedom a little bit.

18304. It does rather. Another suggestion made to us at Kildare and other places was that each man who is writing the road should have a police passport, and one man suggested his photograph should be on it as a means of identification?—Too like Germany.

18305. It is quite German, but the class is a troublesome class. Would you be in favour of the passport system?—For professional tramps.

18306. Absolutely for professional tramps?—If the police photographed them and kept their photographs it would do; they could be passed on.

18307. Mr. MURPHY.—You say that you would prefer to put the tramps under the control of the police instead of putting them in a labour colony?—I would like to see that method tried first in Ireland.

18308. Don't you think that heading them over to the police would interfere with their liberty, just as much as sending them to a colony?—It would interfere with them for the day they wanted to get the lodging, they would be forced to work for their lodging for that day. Sending them to a labour colony, I take it they would be sent there for a lengthened term, and that might work out a hardship.

18308. Then again, on the other hand, there would be the danger that these men looking for employment would be taken by the police, put into a lock-up, and perhaps subjected to an indignity?—I would not call it a lock-up; some accommodation adjoining the police barracks might be provided.

18310. Would you give the police the power to pay for the boarding?—I am speaking now of professional tramps, but if there was no place of refuge for them except the police barracks—

18311. If the present casual wards were closed to tramps, what provision would you suggest should be made in future for that class? You would not care to send them to the lock-up?—I would not call it the lock-up.

18312. If a man had a testimonial as to his benevolence, that he was really in search of work, would you give that power to the police to pay for his lodging for the night?—I think I would. I would give them that discretion.

18314. The sending of them to a jail for a week or 14 days has not the deterrent effect that reformers would like to see, so it has been suggested that if they could be sent to some place where they would be kept for a considerable time it might bring about a reformation, and once that happened they would try and get work and lead the lives of the ordinary labourer?—I would like to see the children removed from them.

18315. CHAIRMAN.—You would take their children from them?—I would most decidedly until they reformed.

18316. If you take the children from a man or a woman, do you think it would be right that the parents should be deprived of their liberty as long as the State was supporting the children? Would it not be dangerous to take the children from them to lessen their income and give them an opportunity to raise a fresh family. Whenever you go to the extreme step of separating the parents from the children, and where you think it would be really most injurious to the children that they should remain in the custody of their parents, would you be prepared then to go to the extent of saying that people who are so bad should be put into a labour colony?—If they would not give anything in the support of their children, I think they should be; that class could not, they are wandering about the country, you would have no means of collecting their money from them.

18317. Do you think it would be a prudent and proper thing to deprive such a parent of his liberty?—Is it not dealt with in Germany, that they take the children from these people altogether?

18318. In Germany they would not have the freedom of moving about that they have here?—Do you think they would be quite willing to give up the children here to get over the trouble of providing for them, but they would like to get them back at a certain age to beg for them?

18319. But if you did not give them that choice, that they left the children with you and went away and gave nothing towards their support, and you took away the right of getting back those children at a certain age, perhaps they would not be willing to give them up?—I was not thinking of the case in which they would be willing to give them up but a case in which a Board of Guardians or local body, after hearing all that had to be said on the subject, came to the conclusion that it would be against the public interest that such people should be allowed to have charge of the children; if they came to such a decision and took away the child the question arises what will they do with the parent; do you think a parent of such a kind should be allowed to go at large and perhaps start another family, or do you think it would be a fair consequence of his bad parentage that he should be secluded and kept to work at a labour colony until it was thought fit to let him out again?—I have not given the subject much consideration. The labour colony case I rather put out of my head, thinking that the other method might be tried first, making it a little harder for them to travel about, and also take away their children from them as long as they did travel about.

18320. You did come to the conclusion that it might be prudent to take away their children from them?—Yes.

18321. Then the question arises at once, what are you to do with the parents if you did take the children from them; did you think they might be allowed to go about as before without their children, and subject to the police discipline you recommended?—That was my idea.

18322. Do you not think that would be rather an encouragement to the reproduction of the class?—Well, you would stop the supply in any case in the way of children; you would stop the children being trained up as tramps.

18323. And you would only have to deal with the ensuing generation?—And it would cure itself in a few years.

18324. You would stop the hereditary tramp and only have the existing generation; it would disappear perhaps in twenty years?—Yes.

18325. Mr. MURPHY.—Still the supply that you get at present will be continued if the young inherit the tendencies of their parents?—I think these tendencies can be eradicated by training and environment.

18326. Now, in regard to the removal of the class known as aged and infirm from their own location, you see some objection on sentimental grounds; this is to say you think they will be deprived of the view of their friends and relatives; would you be in favour of giving the Guardians the option of boarding on those people or sending them to a country almshouse; would you give that power to the Guardians to decide as to which they should do as regards the present inmates of the house?—I would.

18327. There could hardly be any question as to their eligibility for assistance when they have spent several years in the house up to the present time?—Exactly; I would give the Guardians the option.

18328. That would get rid of the present aged and infirm class, anyhow?—Yes.

18329. Dr. BROOKS.—Regarding the treatment of the sick, do you think it would be desirable to separate the hospitals as far as possible from the workhouse, calling them by a separate name?—I think that would be very desirable.

18330. Have you known patients having a certain amount of reluctance to go to a workhouse hospital?—Yes, I have known several; I might say many.

18331. Your hospital at Castlecor is a very good one, but still the sentiment is there?—Indeed it is.

18332. Do you think that it also acts to some extent as a feeder for the workhouse; that is that persons going into the hospital for treatment and thence coming in contact with the inmates of the workhouse lose that repugnance, and perhaps afterwards stay as in the workhouse?—I don't know of any to my knowledge.

18333. Would it strike you as being quite possible?—I think it might be possible.

18334. CHAIRMAN.—When the hospital is full does not the doctor say frequently we cannot keep this man, he is nearly well; we will put him in the aged and infirm ward?—Yes, to a certain extent.

18335. Dr. BROOKS.—Would you suggest that the hospital should be separated as far as management is concerned, or only as far as building, or both?—I would have it under separate management, and the buildings separated altogether from all ideas of penitence, and have free wards and paying wards.

18336. So that the poorer ratepayers could go there for treatment, especially in operative cases, and as they could not get at home?—Yes.

18337. You are a long distance away from Kilkenny; do the people about Castlecor and neighbourhood avail themselves of the county infirmary at Kilkenny to any extent?—I don't find they do very largely.

18338. CHAIRMAN.—You happen to have a good hospital at Castlecor?—Yes; and most cases are dealt with there.

18339. Dr. BROOKS.—And also the distance and inconvenience of getting to Kilkenny prevents people going?—Yes.

18340. Very severe operations may go, I suppose?—Yes.

18341. Have you any idea regarding the treatment of consumptives; we have heard a good deal about the establishment of sanatoria?—These sanatoria are not as successful as they were expected to be at first.

18342. Not perhaps to the exaggerated idea held at ent; it was thought every case going into the sanatorium would be cured—I would not like to see very much expenditure on them.

18343. But still they have done a great amount of good, beyond all question; suitable cases can be selected, and the disease arrested, but not to the extent that it was thought at first, especially in the early stage. You would not like to see a large expenditure on them?—No; they seem to be very experimental as to them; it means expensive buildings erected.

18344. CHAIRMAN.—Could you not adapt a workhouse as a healthy abode, such as Castlemeor or Thomas, and afford to start with?—Would you get sufficient people in the country to fill up a place like that?

18345. I am afraid there are no exact numbers, but among the hospitals you see what is known as consumption—a very large number of surgical tubercular cases—it would mean a large expense maintaining all these people; they would have to be mainly maintained there free; there would be very few paying patients.

18346. We have had evidence from a doctor who has started a sanatorium in his own workhouse, with the help of the Guardians; he has turned the fever hospital into a sanatorium, and he is one of the very hopeful ones we had, for the number of cases in the early stages with him was very large—I did not see the subject touch thought, I must say.

18347. Dr. ROBERT.—The establishment of such an institution would stop the spread of this disease, and in a short time you would have the death-rate of consumption reduced; consumption is, beyond all question, a very infectious disease, and it is impossible for these people to be isolated sufficiently at home; it is a common experience to see one member of a family dying of consumption and next year or the year after another member, and so on, whereas if the first case had been treated in a sanatorium and isolated it might have saved all the others.

CHAIRMAN.—Is there used to be looked on as a hereditary disease?—I have no doubt it would be a most desirable thing.

18348. Mr. MURKIN.—Might not some of the work of the present houses be used in conjunction with the hospital?—I don't see why they should not, without having a special institution for it. I think that might be done.

Dr. ROBERT.—That might do for isolation purposes; it won't cure patients.

18349. CHAIRMAN.—If you get a block of buildings apart from the others, with facilities for open-air treatment adjoining, as Dr. Moorhead has?—A number of these workhouses have different buildings.

18350. It has been mentioned to us that the death-rate from consumption is eight times as much as from all the four put together—I am sure it is.

18351. So that it really is the most pressing and urgent question of public health in the country?—I would like to suggest, with regard to the boarding out of children, I think it is very essential that there should be a ladies' committee everywhere to look after these children. I regard the boarding out, if not properly supervised afterwards, as worse even than in the workhouse, because there is a danger of their being made slaves of.

18352. In isolated cases. Is not the general tendency of the human heart to attach to those little children who come to them at an early age and who really become incorporated with members of the family?—If they are looked after.

18353. I often even if they are never looked after?—No; I think it would be extremely dangerous.

18354. It would be dangerous for the exception, but for the rule you would not be in favour of attention to inspection or continual overhauling of the little child?—I should be in favour of close inspection.

18355. Would you not be afraid that that would keep up the idea that the child was the child of the State and not the child of the family?—I think it would be absolutely essential.

18356. Don't you think a wise and watchful eye looking at the child with a little tact would very easily see; if you or I were to walk into a National school where such children were and it was pointed out to us which was the child, don't you think we could satisfy ourselves by such inspection whether the child was happy or well cared for, and so would be unnecessary in almost all cases to pursue that course and take the child off and examine it for cleanliness?—No; my impression is I would rather have them looked after a good deal more carefully.

18357. If you had ten children boarded out at the same National school, would you be in favour of the inspector strictly and closely overhauling each one of the ten children?—Yes, I would.

18358. Mr. MURKIN.—Don't you think that would defeat the object we all have of getting that child incorporated with the public?—I think not.

Would you not still mark it out as a child of the State and one over whom the public authorities had a certain control. At present the relieving officer looks after the child monthly, and in many cases ladies' committees also go round and see how they are cared for.

CHAIRMAN.—And lady inspectors of the Local Government Board once a year.

18359. Mr. MURKIN.—There are three different inspections—one from the relieving officer, one from the ladies' committee, and one from the lady inspector. If you carry that thing too far you might prevent people in the country taking children at all who would not want to have their homes visited so frequently by these inspecting bodies?—If there was a difficulty in finding people to take these children I would have a system of scattered homes, like they are trying in Germany.

18360. CHAIRMAN.—That would be a smaller institution, but it would be still an institution?—It would be a home institution.

18361. Mr. MURKIN.—There would be no home in it; you would not have the father and mother over the children; you would have the mother pointing them up in a way that they might not be at home. The child would not have the opportunity of knowing how to do domestic work such as it would have if it were in the home of a farmer?—But these children in the scattered homes in England and Scotland are to all intents and purposes part of the family.

18362. There is not a farm attached to each place as far as I know; the houses are built by the Board of Guardians, and a mistress or housewife put in charge with a certain number of children; that is merely an institution on a very small scale?—But it is an institution on a natural scale.

18363. Not so natural as a home provided over by a husband and wife?—I would only be in favour of that in case there were no people fit to take them.

18364. CHAIRMAN.—I think you were just about to say that that very close inspection you are aware of is being tried somewhere?—In Germany.

18365. And in England?—I am really not quite sure; I think it is in England. I don't think it is compulsory, as in Germany; it is compulsory that there shall be a ladies' committee to take charge of these children.

18366. I was rather thinking of the official inspection; there it is carried out very minutely; the children are taken off the children and they are examined for cleanliness. I, as an inspector going around, would merely look at the child, and if I saw the child looking merely happy and healthy, and apparently, as far as the face and pick and hands, clean, I would not pursue my inquiries further. I would not go further with my own children?—I think a man might not be able to do so, but a woman can do what a man cannot do.

18367. I often did in in the workhouses; I had a few suspicious-looking children stripped in as whether they were washed and clean, but I would not like to do more than that outside if I saw the children looking apparently clean?—I would rather entrust that kind of work to ladies; there might be a few men here and there very quick at seeing what is wrong.

CHAIRMAN.—I should also prefer a lady inspector. I am merely on the question of a very close inspection, or what I may call a tactful general inspection, which would only turn to a close inspection where one saw the child puny and sick and neglected-looking, and if my eye was satisfied with the general appearance, I should not like to pursue the thing further.

18368. Mr. MURKIN.—A certain amount of inspection is not only good, but absolutely necessary; still, it should not be overdone, and the visits should be rather a friendly call than an official inspection. If the child looks healthy and content, and has the appearance of being fairly well treated, there is no use in prying further or making a fuss because of some trifling matter?—Little difficulties like that are more than outweighed by the advantages and the prevention of abuse.

May 5, 1904.

Mr. R. H. Price
Wandsworth.

18368. CHAIRMAN.—My idea is that you should see a case at a glance?—Then you would leave it to one man—the relieving officer.

18370. No; I would have the lady inspector also. But I do not approve of a very close inspection by a lady inspector, to the extent of the undressing of children and overhauling of them in that class way, unless there are grave grounds from the appearance of the child for looking into the case very closely. Of course I would look into the house and see they were properly heated, and that there was a cow for giving milk whenever it could be managed, but I would not like to have the child impressed with the idea of State inspection?—

You could get over that by not having the ladies' committee inspect too often.

18371. I think the ladies' committee is very good. I don't think a lady of the locality would make the mistake; I was rather thinking of the official inspection. I think a voluntary ladies' committee would have been enough. As a rule they know whether Mrs. Murphy keeps her child well or not, and won't pry, and they will know that Mrs. So-and-so is keeping the child badly, and they will make it hot for her and get the child removed. I think it is useful for the children too. I think the ladies take an interest in them in after-life and help them on.

Mr. WILLIAM DOWES examined.

Mr. William
Dowes

18372. CHAIRMAN.—I need not ask you. I know you are connected with Poor Law administration in Castlecomer for a very long time. What is your own view about amalgamation?—I am strongly in favour of it, and the Guardians have passed a resolution in favour of it, and one of the reasons that induces me in this, the house was built originally for 400, and at present there are only 117, or thereabouts, in it, and the population in 1861 was about 20,000; now it is reduced by about 90 per cent.—that is of the inmates—and I believe at no time were there more than 300 inmates in the house, so that these facts, I think, would justify me in saying that amalgamation would be desirable.

18373. But you would keep, of course, the sick in hospital still?—Certainly.

18374. I don't know whether you have referred at all to what would be done in the event of amalgamation, of some of the union officers leaving their situations; would you be in favour of their being dealt with as liberally as possible and get abolition of office terms?—Oh, certainly.

18375. You think that would be the general view?—I think it would.

18376. And the representatives of the ratepayers would not be at all willing to do a harsh thing towards their officers?—I am quite sure they would not do a harsh thing, and I think it would be only just to deal with them liberally.

18377. And if you were going to effect a perfect economy you would only have the life interest of the officers as a charge on it?—Exactly.

18378. If portion of your premises at Castlecomer were retained for the sick, can you suggest any other object for which the remainder of the premises might be applied?—It occurred to me that you can have a portion for an auxiliary asylum for the imbeciles and insane, or it could be applied for a school for technical instruction in connection with the Agricultural and Technical Instruction Department. I don't know whether that would be very practicable, but the former would.

18379. You think the suggestion about the lunatics would be practicable and the suggestion about the Agricultural Department would not be?—It might be difficult; retaining portion for other purposes—an infirmary and hospital.

18380. Or there was another matter mentioned—that was the question of possibly using part of it for consumption?—Yes; portion could be set apart away from the other buildings.

18381. It is a good healthy site?—It is a healthy site.

18382. You are in favour of boarding out children?—Certainly.

18383. And you would go a step further and board out the aged?—I would.

18384. What safeguard have you thought of in your own mind for preventing an undue number of claims for such out-door relief from old people?—That is the difficulty.

18385. I suppose a body finds it hard to refuse applications?—That is the difficulty I see.

18386. Can you see any practical method?—I do not. I am opposed to indiscriminate out-door relief, but my friends on the Board are more generous.

18387. You do see that there would be a danger?—There would, I am afraid.

18388. We received a suggestion yesterday in the Queen's County that some such provision should be introduced into a new Act as exists in the Local Government Act with reference to the maintenance of roads, namely, that there should be a fixed amount payable, and anything above that, a witness recently suggested, should be made an electoral division charge, so as to bring it home to the very man that proposed it?—That would meet my view.

18389. We will say the limit of expenditure is so much each year, as soon as that was exceeded it should become an electoral division charge?—That might work; you want some safeguard; it would be a deterrent.

18390. You think the tendency of out-door relief is to go up as soon as it has been made a union charge?—I should be afraid it would.

18391. Has it gone up, as a matter of fact?—I think it has come up a little.

Mr. McEvoy.—It has not gone up.

CHAIRMAN.—You are in favour of a union charge for all purposes?—Yes; the Guardians passed a resolution in that effect in case of amalgamation.

18392. What did they consider would be a union charge now in the case of the amalgamation of Castlecomer; did they consider that Castlecomer Rural District should in future pay the expense of the Rural District hospital, or would it be put on the new one, which the present Castlecomer Union would be a part?—That is what the intention was, I think.

18393. That it should be a district charge for the sick. Then as regards the inmates in other workhouses from the present Castlecomer Union, say a Kilkenny Workhouse, what would be their chargeability; would the Castlecomer ratepayers have to pay part of the Kilkenny expenditure?—I think they should.

18394. That might work out that you had to pay a higher rate?—I think it would.

18395. Have you at all considered the question of a county rate for all purposes, on any, for the sick; do you consider the question of county rating at all?—No; but it would not more evenly.

18396. The only county rate you have at present is for the county infirmary?—I mean for the in-door support of people?—Yes; it is a county rate and partly by subscription.

18397. I suppose people down at the other side of the bridge, in Waterford and in distant parts of the county don't derive much benefit from the county infirmary here?—No; but they would be entitled to it if there was a vacancy.

18398. They might be entitled to beds in a London hospital, but they would not like to have to pay for that privilege if they did not use it; but did you consider at all the question, when the county infirmary is a county rate, whether it would be popular with local bodies that the sick all over the county should be a county rate?—I have not considered it.

18399. You see that there is a certain element of fairness in it, and if the sick in the county infirmary are a county rate it might even things if the sick all over the county were made a union rate?—I think they devoted their mind altogether to having the hospital and infirmary at Castlecomer for their division.

18400. And they would be willing to pay for that by a rural district rate?—Yes. I don't think they would be in favour of sending patients to the county infirmary or any long distance.

18401. That is not proposed, that is not suggested; the suggestion was that as the county infirmary is a county rate do you think the Castlecomer sick ought to be a county rate instead of a rural district rate?—I don't think I would have it a district rate; I would have it a union.

18402. The new union, the enlarged union?—The enlarged union. Of course it should be clearly understood that the infirmaries there should not go by the abolition of the workhouse.

18403. You would have it the district hospital, and the management of it would be in the hands of what body, the Rural District Council?—Certainly.

18404. Under a committee, such as the county infirmary?—No; it would not be popular.

18405. Mr. MURKHAM.—Not would it be desirable?—Quite right. I think a great many paying patients would go in that don't go now.

18406. CHAIRMAN.—Have you considered what income you might expect to get from paying patients?—No; but I believe there would be an income that could be applied in other ways afterwards.

18407. I suppose, even at present, you have a large number of people in Castlecomer hospital from time to time who could pay something?—Yes; the clerk will be able to give you the returns.

Mr. Mahony.—The average cost and part of the establishment.

18408. CHAIRMAN.—That is, comparatively, a heavy thing, and they would be on what is called a separate register; but apart from that, say, a mother in just fairly comfortable circumstances has to send in his wife or child to be cured, and that member of his family would remain in for, say, three weeks and go home cured, now the absence of that member of the family from home would mean the saving of that member of the family's maintenance for three weeks, say in a week even, from that up; have you ever considered whether it would not be a very prudent thing (something that would tend towards putting the hospital on a basis of independence) to give to the governing body, the District Council, the power of assessing how much each person should pay; if they could pay anything at all, say in a week up to the full actual cost, a comfortable man's expenses might go up to two guineas a week. Would you propose that the District Council should have power to charge and recover the amount of the cost from any patient they considered able to pay?—Yes, if they are able to pay, but if you say a soldier, I don't think they could be made pay, or people of their class.

18409. You could not get at those underground; what would be their average earnings?—They might earn 8s. a week.

18410. Surely a person earning that could at least pay in a week for a member of his family?—If it was himself he would not be earning.

18411. Then it would be a question of giving him outdoor relief?—And they do get outdoor relief.

18412. Take the case of a little girl or boy who meets with an accident or has to go into hospital to be cured?—In that case, taking the soldier, he is a very improvident man, and it will take all his wages still to support the remainder of the family, say seven or eight in family.

18413. If the little child remained at home it would cost nearly a week to keep it or say 6d. a week; don't you think it would be proper, and eventually it would be popular with the improvident father to find out he was paying for his child where it was?—But I see the difficulty of enforcing it.

18414. Summary proceedings at Petty Sessions or a garnishee order on his employer to pay it out of his wages?—If you could tax his wages, but his assets won't produce it.

18415. Only for that little difficulty of procuring you think the principle would be fair?—I think the principle is good if you can enforce it, but it should be a garnishee order against his wages.

18416. You do anticipate a considerable revenue, and I think do rightly; they have tried it in a couple of county infirmaries by getting people who send their relatives in to sign on a printed form agreeing to pay so much. I think they begin there really with 6d. or 1s., but the result is that the amount they recover practically pays the doctor's salary?—A great many now are treated at home by the doctors; they won't go to the workhouse, but if you had a hospital or infirmary apart from the workhouse they would go in, and you would have a revenue.

18417. You have seen a good deal of tramps all these years?—Yes; and we have cured it to a certain extent in Castlecomer.

18418. I hope not with any inhumanity?—Our sets might have been a few more.

18419. I am afraid they were?—But it saved the union a considerable sum. I think we did more than our duty, but we saved the ratepayers and prevented able-bodied men coming.

18420. Is there any other matter I have not asked you about?—Well, except as to vagrancy; my idea is that these vagrants should be detained for two or three days and made work.

18421. That would be virtually bringing the English law into operation here?—On a second visit prosecute them. Of course we have the power at present in that case.

18422. Dr. BROOKER.—You mentioned that you knew people who would not go into the workhouse hospital, and you think they would go in if it were a district hospital?—I think they would.

18423. That would enlarge the scope of the hospital; would you suggest that the hospital should be separated from the workhouse?—That is my idea.

18424. And in management?—I don't know about the management, but it should be a separate institution altogether.

18425. Administered separately?—The same building.

18426. Where it would be possible to use a separate hospital, say a fever hospital, at a general acute hospital, would you approve of that?—Yes; at present I think there are only about fifty patients altogether.

Mr. Mahony.—Thirty-five.

Witness.—There is ample accommodation for more than that.

18427. Dr. BROOKER.—Have you thought of the question of construction?—No.

18428. Mr. MURKHAM.—You think the present system of management should be continued, that is to say that the Guardians should administer as at present and hitherto?—I think so; it would not be popular otherwise.

18429. They take all care to provide for the sick poor and show no disregard of their claims?—No.

Mr. THOS. MANSUR, Clerk, Castlecomer Union, examined.

18430. CHAIRMAN.—I have not any proof of what you intended to say?—I am totally opposed to amalgamation, but in case of such I would retain the workhouse as it is at present for an infirmary and a school. I would apportion what is the present infirmary for a male hospital, and I think the patients require more accommodation in this way. I think the convalescent patients ought to have a day room.

18431. Separate wards?—A day room independently of their dormitory. And then I would apportion the other part as a female hospital in the same way. I would have the two front buildings at two schools.

18432. You don't approve of boarding out?—Well, the boarding out question sounds very well in theory if you could get proper persons to take charge of the children. Perhaps the class of persons you would wish to put the children with would not take them, but the house as it is situated is in a very healthy situation. I would have the children of Castlecomer, Kilkenny, Abbeyleix, and Carlow brought there and remove the whole class to the other adjoining workhouses.

18433. You would have Castlecomer a hospital and a children's institution?—Yes. Then with regard to the paying patients, I have the figures here for the last three years. In the year ending March, 1905, 49 pay patients were treated in the hospital, and the amount of money received was £74 4s. 6d. The following year there were 35 patients, and the money was £64 15s. 6d.

18434. What is your full average cost—what are they charged per head per week?—Between 8s. and 6s. 18435. I suppose we might say 6s. 1?—It very seldom runs to 6s.

18436. Dr. BROOKER.—Was every individual charged the same amount?—The average cost would vary according to the treatment. One week there may be a good deal of stimulants, and another week not so much.

18437. That was only for food and clothing and stimulants; that was not really covering the cost of treatment?—It did not cover the actual cost.

18438. CHAIRMAN.—You did not put the two doctors' salaries into the amount?

Dr. BROOKER.—Or the nursing either?—No. For the five years there were 127 patients, and the amount of money received was £287 15s. 11d. Respectable people have not an objection to come in, but I think if it were a district hospital more would come and would be very glad to avail themselves of the superior nursing.

18439. CHAIRMAN.—That is to say, people who are not respectable would come in if it were a district hospital?—No, sir; I say more respectable persons would come in.

18440. Dr. ROOGER.—You believe the usefulness of the hospital would be increased?—It would be increased.

18441. Mr. MURRAGHAN.—Do you think the ratepayers of the county should be compelled to furnish extra inducements to people to come into this public hospital?—I think it would be good for public health. I think if people meet with a visitation of Providence it is no complaint at all for the whole community to relieve them.

18442. If they have means of their own, why should the ratepayers be called upon to provide medical assistance for them?

CHAIRMAN.—You would make them pay?—I would make them pay a certain proportion.

18443. Make them pay the whole thing if they were able?—Yes. Now with regard to tramps, who are the admissions to the workhouse last year. The total admissions were 928. There were admitted 229, 5 were born, the tramps consisted of 360 men, 70 women, and 72 children; total, 522, and 41 other persons.

18444. Do you know anything about the kind of people these male tramps are?—A good many of them are militiamen and discharged soldiers.

18445. Any reserve men?—A sprinkling of them.

18446. Would you say there was a considerable portion of them belonging to some branch of the army?—Discharged members, a considerable proportion.

18447. Have you any idea about what proportion?—I could not tell; these persons won't tell the truth.

18448. You judge them by their evil carriage and military bearing?—I don't come in contact with them; the master can tell you. At the present time there are 115 inmates in the workhouse, 85 healthy, and of those 11 are imbeciles, 35 sick, and there are 15 attendants upon these.

18449. Mr. MURRAGHAN.—What accommodation does the Fever Hospital afford?—How many beds are there?—It was calculated to accommodate 45, but I think that with the present scale of measurement it would not accommodate so many.

18450. If it would hold 30 beds, would they suffice for all the sick?—The numbers in the Fever Hospital have decreased wonderfully since the Public Health Act. Sometimes we don't have more than four or five patients in the year, but the number of patients admitted to the infirmary is very great, although the hospital is small, because on account of the superior nursing the duration of the illness is shortened.

18451. Do you not think that the Fever Hospital itself would afford sufficient accommodation for the sick of the Castlecomer District?—No, you would not mix the fever patients.

18452. Suppose there was a small institution with four wards for fever?—I don't think it would do.

18453. Why keep a big place like that doing next to nothing?—It is better to have it empty than to have it full.

18454. It is better to have it full of usefulness than empty and expensive?—You never know when you will have an outbreak of contagious disease.

18455. If provision was made for that outbreak, such provision as would be necessary for a small way, could not that Fever Hospital be used as a district hospital?—It may be used for infectious, which is now considered to be an infectious disease.

18456. Would it not be sufficient for all acute cases?—It would not.

18457. When the census was taken that we have before us, there were only 33 sick. In those there were many who were not acute cases?—They are all acute cases.

18458. That is not our experience?—It is so in Castlecomer. Since Dr. Smyth became Medical Inspector of Workhouses, no cases are kept in the infirmary but the acute cases.

18459. That may be so in Castlecomer, but in many of the infirmaries we found people who were not acutely sick?—That is not so in Castlecomer; they are all acute cases.

18460. You have only 30 altogether. You say you have accommodation for 45 in the Fever Hospital, why not make the Fever Hospital into a district hospital?—I am not a medical man, and cannot give you an expert opinion.

18461. But you are a good business man, and have a knowledge of the working of the Poor Law in Castlecomer; so you are a good man to seek advice from?—I don't think it would be a good thing to put the fever patients and other patients into the same building.

18462. Nobody suggested such a thing, but when you have a very large institution there for a very small purpose, why not get a small institution that would meet all the requirements of the Fever Hospital?—That is a matter for consideration. I would join the Fever Hospital where it is, and the other two buildings north and south should be a male infirmary and a female infirmary, and the two front buildings for two wards.

18463. CHAIRMAN.—Can your fever wards be approached otherwise than through the front gate of the workhouse?—They can; there is a separate entrance at the rear.

18464. Is there a public road at the rear?—Not a public road, but there is a road to the workhouse premises.

18465. Does that again go through the front?—No. You can bring your ambulance at the back and by a different approach altogether. The persons going to the Fever Hospital don't pass through the workhouse.

18466. And they don't pass through the front gate by the porter?—No.

18467. The porter unlocks the back gate and lets them through?—Yes.

18468. What Mr. Murraghan wanted to know was whether that could be used, and whether you had an approach that would enable that to be used as the District Hospital of Castlecomer?—I don't think it would afford sufficient accommodation. There are only four wards in it, and you must take into account that the attendants sleep in these wards.

18469. And not sufficient accommodation for a medical and surgical hospital nurse?—There is not.

Mr. DENIS O'CONNOR, Master, Castlecomer Workhouse, Secretary, Poor Law Officers' Association, examined.

Mr. Denis
O'Connell.

18470. CHAIRMAN.—We would be glad to hear your views on the matter?—My views partly agree with those given by Mr. Dobbs and Mr. Wandersford and the views of the Guardians for emigration on a classified scale, partly similar with the observations passed from the Bench.

18471. You would agree to the removal of the various classes?—Yes, the extension of the boarding out.

18472. As regards the workhouse as a place for a child?—I would not have one of them in it at all or any institution. They would be better merged in society, and less supervision I would go in for instead of the amount of supervision that is going on. The more supervision the more the child is made to realise that he is a pauper.

18473. As regards the class, we would like some practical evidence on the tramp class. Have you any of the class not tramps, what we call in large cities like and out, people that come in several times a year?—There were formerly, but the Guardians have set their faces against admitting them. The mothers of illegitimate children—those are called ins and outs.

18474. You have not many labouring or industrial people who get out of work for short periods?—Not from the locality; it is made a bit too hot for idlers.

18475. I don't mean idlers, but real tradesmen?—They don't avail of the workhouse in Castlecomer.

18476. You would not have a collier and his family coming in?—Well, very rarely. If the Guardians gave them more relief there would be fewer admissions. I believe the relief should be more liberal.

18477. As regards the tramp class, you have a fair number of tramps?—Yes.

18478. Of what class were they largely composed?—Nearly three-fourths of them belong to the reserve men. The army system is answerable for a lot of tramps—the six years' men.

18479. You think three-fourths would be army men?—Army reserve men.

18480. Or militiamen?—Army reserve men. The six years' system, I believe, has increased that class of paupers very much in Ireland. These men are able to work with a farmer.

18481. Mr. MURRAGHAN.—If the increase comes from that class it is a serious matter, as the number of short-term enlistments is on the increase—I believe it will increase it if there are no precautions taken.

18482 CHAIRMAN.—Of some measures taken for enlisting these men?—Yes.

18483 I see you have had within the last year over 70 children and over 70 women. Would those children be accompanied by a woman or by a man generally only?—The rule is that the husband remains outside. Perhaps they have money to drink in the town, and the wife and children come into the workhouse. We have taken the precaution to have all married, and any of them with money they take at departure. We have ordered that neither can they be separated from their parents, and have the parents kept in detention while the children would be in institutions.

18484 Have you ever found out whether those children possessed any education whatever?—I have tried them repeatedly up to 14 years of age and they are uneducated, religiously and secularly. Some of them did not know at 14 years of age how to bless themselves.

18486 Could some of these people pay the full cost?—Yes, they would be willing to pay the full cost, but they object to being thrown among the ordinary pauper patients, and if there was provision for pay wards these patients would avail of it, and would be a source of profit to the hospital, because they would pay contributions towards the nursing and medical attendance. Their average cost is 5s. or 6s., and I put on a 1s. a week additional. They were never asked to pay the full thing.

18487 Dr. BROOKER.—Why do you put on the extra 1s.? The establishment, it comes in handy for calculation.

18488 Why not put on more than 1s.? Have you any right to put an establishment charge?—You can.

18489 Is the establishment charge only 1s.?—It is not easy to make up the establishment charges for the year. You must take the inmates of the house as well as the hospital. You cannot separate them.

18490 CHAIRMAN.—You think it wise that the governing body of the hospital should have discretion to charge as much as the patient could reasonably be expected to pay?—Yes, and be empowered to recover it by summary jurisdiction.

18491 Is there anything chief?—Unless the officials, there are some little points, I don't know whether it is proper to come before this Commission, about the appointment of officers that there should be some provision made against having everybody eligible for an office whether he has experience or not. It lowers the service by putting in men who have no experience.

18492 But he must get experience somewhere first. How would you let in the first man? He should go in training for it as a sort of apprentice?—Yes.

18493 Then there should be an apprentice master?—Yes, or apprentice clerk. It lowers the service and reduces the status of officials to have everybody going in whether competent or not.

18494 Mr. MURKIN.—Would not that be practically putting in official hands the power of appointing their successors?—I think not.

18495 CHAIRMAN.—I suppose the Guardians would appoint the apprentices?—Yes. But I think also names should be classified so that an officer would have an opportunity of rising from one station to another, and go from the lowest position to the highest.

18496 Suppose Castlemeane would be one of the smallest, then you would give the Guardians there the power of appointing their officers, who would be appointed from people who had had some training in their own institution?—Yes.

18497 And you would make a rule that the Kilberry Guardians should not have the power of appointing their own officers, but should be obliged to take a master from Castlemeane or Callan?—No; there should be a rule by which unions would be classified so that an officer would have an opportunity of rising by promotion.

18498 Would not that mean the abolition of the patronage of a union like Kilberry, which would be a more highly graded union? They would not have the power to appoint an apprentice, but should take the officers from some of the more lowly-classed unions, Callan, or Thomastown, or Castlemeane?—Yes; I would class Leitrim together and have the salaries graded.

18499 In the unions where the highest grades exist there would be no patronage or right of appointment on the part of the Guardians? They would have the right of selecting from the unions.

18500 From the half-a-dozen masters in other unions who had no connection with the locality?—I believe it would raise the status.

18501 Do you think that would be a popular thing with the Guardians?—I don't know.

18502 Mr. MURKIN.—Are the Guardians to be deprived of appointing their own officers, and have no privileges? Is it to be all week and no play with the Guardians?—They often abuse their privileges.

18503 Have they abused their privileges more than any other body of men?—I don't say generally, but it is open to them to do so. I believe the Guardians themselves would see that it would pay them to have none but efficient officers appointed in the first instance. An officer can do his duty in two ways—not to merit reward and also to merit praise. I think it would be a benefit to the Guardians themselves. I also think there should be a rule made by which when officers were appointed a maximum salary should be fixed for the appointment and a minimum on entering, the maximum to be reached by quinquennial increases. I believe that would save the Guardians themselves a terrible lot of worry with these applications for increases.

18504 It would be automatic?—Yes.

18505 No need of the Guardians to keep an eye on their officers?—No, consequent on efficiency.

18506 CHAIRMAN.—I suppose it would save the officers a lot of trouble, too?—It would, of course, and would save the Guardians, because the Guardians who elected an officer might not be there when the five years are up.

18507 Mr. MURKIN.—Your association is not likely to get the Guardians to agree to that?—Well, it would be only in their own interest. It would not be taking any power out of their hands, I believe. They are doing it in Cork, Dublin, and other places, appointing a minimum salary and a maximum.

18508 If you can persuade them as to that, but why not leave the Guardians the liberty to consider what is best for them to do in their own interest and the public interest? They are men that devote themselves to the service of the public without pay. I suppose they try to do the best for the interests of the Union. Why waste that particular body more than any other? All public bodies. I say it is the want of uniformity in the Poor Laws which makes them harsh or just according as the officer is dealt with. Anything that would lead to uniformity would tend to efficiency.

18509 The Guardians have staggered superior people by the exhibition of their administrative abilities, notwithstanding obstacles raised by their officials and the Local Government Board?—The Local Government Board require a little adjustment too as well as the Guardians. I think the Guardians should have more power. They have no initiative, and they should also have discretion, I believe, in adopting rules and regulations made by the Local Government Board. They should have discretion in their own locality.

18510 CHAIRMAN.—Do you make any definite suggestion under that head?—I will state a case in point. One of the things which leads to worry between officers and Guardians is the amount of new duties placed on officers by circulars and orders of the Local Government Board.

18511 Owing to the new Acts of Parliament?—Well, perhaps owing—

18512 Well, you see, you would have to go to the House of Commons, to reform that?—These things increase the officer's duties three and four-fold, and there is no proportionate increase in remuneration.

18513 Did you ever consider that the Local Government Board themselves have that difficulty, in an intensified form perhaps too, that they get new duties imposed upon them without any consideration of increased salary, but that their point of view is that their whole time is at the disposal of their employers, and therefore how much or how little they get to do within their working day does not matter? Don't you consider your whole time at the disposal of the Guardians?—Yes.

18514 And are you not eligible for pension as an officer whose whole time is at the disposal of the Guardians?—Yes.

18515 Therefore, if you now have to do four times as much as when you started, don't you think it shows you had very little to do at the start?—It does not. It shows there is more mental anxiety on the officer. I am speaking generally, not for the masters, but other officers.

18516 Mr. MURPHY.—Do you really think that the Poor Law officials in this country are a suffering body? Do you think they are worse off than their neighbours outside? Are you in a worse position than you were before you became Master of the Castlecomar Workhouse? If your office was vacant to-morrow, would there not be several eligible applicants for the position?—Yes, and if an elected form was vacant to-morrow, you would have a lot of tenant farmers to look for it.

18517 Why create in a poor country like this another privileged class?—We are public servants, and I think we should get the same privileges as other public servants.

18518 You are asking that the public property should be managed in your interest, and for all time that you and your class should have a right to draw on that public purse?—Every other class of public officers have this right.

18519 The people in England are a rich people, and they can do as they like, but the people of Ireland are a poor people, and they must see that their country is not mismanaged to the future to give privileges to any class?—Well, it is not a question of privilege.

18520 CHAIRMAN.—Was there any other point that you thought of?—I think that is all I have to speak about.

Mr. Nicholas
J. Murphy.

Mr. NICHOLAS J. MURPHY, Thomastown, examined.

18521 CHAIRMAN.—The Guardians of your union are in favour of amalgamation. If the out-door relief expenses could be charged to the electoral divisions?—Yes.

18522 You would be afraid if there were amalgamation you would have longer distances for people to go for relief, and therefore there is a dread on your part of additional out-door relief charges?—Yes.

18523 And you think that putting those claims on the division would tend to reduce them to the former dimensions?—I think so. We are in favour of amalgamation, of course, but solely in case there is a rate per capita for maintenance in any other union; that in case Thomastown Union were amalgamated we should be only asked to pay per capita for any inmates that would go to that union with which we were amalgamated from Thomastown.

18524 Suppose Thomastown were thrown in with Kilkenny the expense here in Kilkenny you think would give you a higher rate; what you would like to do would be to pay on the valuation of your own union?—Yes.

18525 That might not be fair for the Kilkenny people?—Well, that is our view.

18526 Did you think of this point of view, that instead of paying on the valuation of your own present union, that you should pay the average actual cost of maintenance in the Kilkenny Union in the same way that you would pay now if you sent a patient to a Dublin or other hospital; you would pay there so much a week for them, and in that you would pay what they actually cost; you would not pay for a share of the Kilkenny inmates, but you would be paying for your own inmates at the rate the Kilkenny inmates cost the Kilkenny people?—We would be asked to pay a head rate for them, what they cost; I may say we are not against the amalgamation of any other union with ours.

18527 You would take in Callan?—Yes; or Ida.

18528 You would take the Kilkenny portion of Ross Union into yours?—Yes.

18529 Is it not any remote distance from you?—No.

18530 How far would the River be from you?—About eight miles.

18531 Is it much nearer Ross, of course?—I don't know that it is.

18532 Is there no bridge down in the neighbourhood that gives them a short cut to Ross; would they have to go round by Roeburn Bridge?—They would.

18533 And the roads to your workhouse would be less hilly and better than the road by Roeburn?—They are.

18534 You would keep part of your workhouse open as a hospital?—Yes.

18535 If the view were taken that your workhouse might be closed, what would you do with the buildings?—A technical school and district hospital.

18536 Or if it were used as a sanatorium for convalescents?—Yes.

18537 Is that any useful purpose?—Any useful purpose without any unnecessary expense.

18538 All our suggestions here are subject to there being no greater cost as far as we can; as far as you know is there in your union sufficient accommodation for the sick?—I think there is very good accommodation.

18539 Is there any part of the union so remote from hospital accommodation that there ought to be a separate hospital?—The fever hospital seems to be a very commodious building.

18540 Is Grangeonagh in your union?—Yes.

18541 How far is that from your hospital?—Eight miles.

18542 That is the most distant populous part?—I don't think it is. Where I live myself, at Ballyke, part of it is very thickly populated.

18543 You don't go into the barony of Irek at all?—I don't think so.

18544 Are there any charges of an administrative or financial kind that you think would be desirable under the Poor Laws, apart altogether from the question of whether a workhouse is closed or kept open?—I have not considered that question.

18545 You would be in favour of getting people who could afford to pay to pay according to their means?—Decidedly.

18546 And you think the children of tramps ought to be taken from them?—I think they should be taken from them.

18547 You say you would send them to an industrial school; but would you have boarding out?—Any boarded-out children in our union seem to do very well; we have not very many of them. With regard to tramps, I was always in favour of using the most stringent measures we could, and we have done so in Thomastown, with the result that we reduced the number in the past year by 600.

18548 Mr. MURPHY.—How do you manage?—We order the master to present in all cases where they come more than once a year; he has carried it out very well too.

18549 Does he keep a record of their visits?—Yes.

18550 And is he able to identify them when they come round?—Oh, he is able to identify them.

18551 CHAIRMAN.—They give different names, these gentlemen on the road?—Generally they do; they are very numerous in my district, but I don't think they all visit the workhouse; the farming population is a good deal too generous to them.

18552 You think there is a good number of these tramps that don't mind workhouses at all?—A good many of them.

18553 What class of people are these; would these be the old-fashioned beggar-men or persons of the neighbourhood who seek alms?—The old-fashioned beggar-men.

18554 They would have a small circuit round a parish or two and put up at the same houses; a night or two nights here, and so on all round, but that class is going out?—Yes.

18555 Are they fairly welcomed?—There is no objection at all.

18556 The class that you do object to are the strong able-bodied tramp?—Yes.

18557 Do that class always go to the workhouse, as far as you know?—I don't think they do; they get accommodation from farmers.

18558 And they don't like refusing it?—Some of them don't; they would be half afraid to refuse them in some cases.

18559 What accommodation now would they get in a farm-house?—An out-house to sleep in; they might get there supper.

May 5, 1904.

Mr. Nicholas
J. Murphy.

18560. Some stirabout of bread and tea!—Yes.

18561. Mr. MURKIN.—The night that these vectors are there do you feel as comfortable as other nights?—Not quite so.

18562. You think it would be well to take away this class from the public roads?—Oh, yes.

18563. Would you go so far as some of the witnesses?

18564. Would you send them over to the police?—Yes; I would be inclined to deal with them as stringently as possible.

18565. Would you go still further and recommend the establishment of some central place, some large farm, where these people, when they proved to be constant vagrants would be kept for a term, and made work?—I would.

18566. With a view to stamping out that trade?—Yes.

18567. CHAIRMAN. These old people that go about from house to house, and are known as old neighbours and residents of the locality, are there many of those?

—A great many; they are not residents of the locality;

they have different localities.

18568. I mean they stick very much in the same small area?—They do.

18569. I think you said that class was dying out largely; do you see fresh people joining the numbers?

—Fresh people do come on occasionally. Of course say of them that have children going about I think they are bound to increase.

18570. And some of these people have children?—

Undoubtedly.

18571. How is that class recruited; how do fresh people join it?—Some go through their children. I don't see any other way; the children stick to the same profession.

18572. Then it is a profession. You don't think it is the case of a widow woman or a person getting too old to be useful, getting a bit here and there from people who know them?—I don't think so.

18573. It is the real old-fashioned stroller going round?—Yes.

18574. How would you regard any interference with that class; do you think that is a class that ought to be interfered with, except to see that the children get properly educated and taken from them perhaps, if necessary?—I think that is the only interference that could be made with them—to teach the children not to follow the same groove as their parents.

18575. These people are not undesirable guests?—

They are not.

18576. Mr. MURKIN.—Would you classify them among the ordinary tramps?—I would not classify them with the able-bodied.

18577. CHAIRMAN.—They don't go near a workhouse?

They do not.

18578. Mr. MURKIN.—Don't you think it would be well for the public to have that class put to some employment?—It would, undoubtedly.

18579. CHAIRMAN.—Are most of them very feeble?

Very few of them feeble; they may be a little old, but they are quite capable of doing work.

18580. Mr. MURKIN.—Strong active people, who prefer idleness to work?—Yes.

18581. CHAIRMAN.—The class I am thinking of, particularly in the West of Ireland, are feeble old people who loiter about within a short circuit and take their breakfast with them?—Nobody has any objection to them; they are very few.

18582. You think that what need to be called a "sturdy vagabond" should be taken up?—Yes.

18583. Mr. MURKIN.—In case Thomastown was amalgamated with some other union, do you think the Guardians should have the option of boarding out and paying for the upkeep of these people in the neighbourhood of Thomastown if they so desired, instead of working them to the central almshouse?—I think so.

18584. If they found they could get these people kept decently for 4s. a week, do you think it should be optional with them to do that or send them to the central almshouse, where they would have to pay about the same sum?—I think they should have the option.

18585. And as to qualification, there could be no dispute about that, because the fact that they were

Mr. MICHAEL O'NEILL, Thomastown, examined.

18586. CHAIRMAN.—You live at Ballyredin; in what direction is that?—North of Thomastown, convenient to Bennetsbridge.

18587. You have heard Mr. Murphy's conversation with as about the people who go about the country getting support but who never go to workhouses; do you see much of that class about you?—They are very few and far between at the present day. In my younger days I remember them to be very numerous.

18588. And they have dropped off?—Dying away; the fact of it is they are scarcely more than half a dozen.

18589. In old times it was quite the fashion of the country?—Quite the fashion.

18590. When there were a great number of people keeping about a parish or two?—Well, I would say taking half the county. They would strike out from Kilberry and take Gorman, Graigue, and round the River, and come back another circuit—about a fortnight on the road. They had certain houses among the farmers to call at. In my father's time I have house people, and where they had not a workhouse they would go to the farmers around?—The class I mean are old women and old men, not able to work;

these people that Mr. Murphy referred to—these old-timers, they are all mostly extinct.

18591. Except in the very backward parts in Connaught there are still a certain number of the people who keep in the road like that?—I believe they are larger here in that district than with us.

18592. People of weak intellect go begging in that way?—They used to do with us, but now there are more facilities to get into asylums.

18593. Then you don't think there is any practical necessity for our considering the question of what you call these old-timers?—In my opinion there is not.

18594. And there is no hostile feeling towards the few that remain?—None whatever. These are people that have frequented my father's place, and probably my grandfather's, and I am not going to interfere with them; they are honest.

18595. Mr. MURKIN.—No matter what have were made as regards a particular class of tramps, these people would never be interfered with by the Guardians?—None.

18596. The Guardians know the class, and will have a kindly feeling for them?—Yes.

18597. CHAIRMAN.—And they never think of them when talking of tramps?—No.

18598. As regards the amalgamation of unions, you are very near Killybeg?—I am half-way between Kil-berry and Thomastown.

18599. What is your view about the amalgamation of workhouses generally over the country?—I believe one workhouse in the county is quite sufficient.

18600. I don't know whether you were here this morning when we took up this subject; we had some very interesting evidence from Castlecomer; we proceeded by trying to see how many classes there are to a workhouse at present who could be moved out of it and would be better treated outside the workhouse, and the evidence was to the effect that the sick, of course, would always have to remain in the hospital, and then it was thought that quite that come in to have illegitimate children would be better treated in orphanages or

Mr. Michael
O'Sullivan

penitentiaries, where they might be reclaimed and put into an honest life, and the children would be better boarded out than put into workhouses, and lunatics should be sent to an auxiliary asylum or the existing asylums, and tramps dealt with by the police or put into a labour colony, and that left only the aged and infirm, and that is the most numerous class in workhouses; and your evidence, I take it now, is that for the aged and infirm one workhouse in the County Kilkenny would be sufficient?—Quite so.

18603. And presumably at the central part of the county?—The central part. From my knowledge, as a member of the visiting committee at Thomastown and going through the house amongst the aged and infirm, a great many of these would be mere chronic cases; there would be no hardship in having them removed to a central place.

18604. When you go round on your visiting committee do you see many in the workhouse that are from your own neighbourhood?—Very few—about three—and those are pariahs that had no one to look after them.

18605. That is just what I was coming to; they are solitary people; they would not have one whom ask to see them?—Well, no person looks after them outside.

18606. They would not be people who would have friends to call to see them?—The visitors in that respect would be very few. Of course if I go there and know these parties—

18607. You pass the time of day with them and have a little talk, and whether they were very well off for tobacco?—Yes, quite so; and how the master was treating them. We found a decided objection on the part of old men who had worked all their life with farmers to go to the workhouse as a refuge, and in some cases we adopted a rule that whenever they set of maintenance would be in the house and they had friends or relatives outside that we would give them what it would cost to maintain them in the house, and we found it worked satisfactorily.

18608. And the people from your own neighbourhood were people who had no friends?—Well, one has, but the complaint he suffers from is of an unpleasant nature, and there should be some one to look after him.

18609. Did you ever consider whether it would be possible to board them out, for instance, to put up a notice in the locality that any man or woman, mentioning the name, would be boarded out, and invite tenders for their keep and support; do you think such a system as that might work for strangers who had no friends of their own to look after them?—I think a great deal would be with the pennons. I think we would have numerous applications if it was partly substantial, but if it was not, I doubt it.

18610. Suppose the amount the Guardians would pay would be the rent of the man's house—that would be very considerable?—It would, but then his maintenance would be something more.

18611. Mr. MURKIN.—From 3s. 6d. to 4s. a week; would they not be glad to get them at that?—I entirely agree with you. We had two men in the act of going into the workhouse and we prevailed on them to remain out—one is getting 3s. 6d., and he is fighting for another 6d., and says he would be very well off, he thinks; the other has 4s., and the man with 4s. is remarkably well satisfied. Of course they have some people to look after them.

18612. CHAIRMAN.—Are they with their own friends?—At times with strangers and at times with friends; they fall out now and again, and have a bit of independence about them.

18613. Mr. MURKIN.—Are there not many of these people that would be able to do little work, such as driving out cattle and bringing them home?—These are the men we want to keep out of the workhouse and give them assistance outside. A man might not be able to do hard labour, but might be able to do a little job about the farm.

18614. CHAIRMAN.—Has your out-door relief gone up since the last Act?—It was left to the larger number of the Board it would have gone up, but we pay also attention to it. Some of the members were very particular about giving out-door relief when it was a divisional charge, and now they are more than generous, for what reason I cannot understand, except that the whole weight does not come on themselves. For that reason I think the divisional charge for out-door relief is the proper one.

18615. Suppose your out-door relief is as much a year, and supporting this out-door relief view was an larger and more people were made eligible for it, we got a suggestion that as soon as the present amount was exceeded that there any fresh additions to that should become electoral division charges; do you think that would be a sufficient safeguard, having the present amount a union charge and any additional amount an electoral division charge, so that if a man was bringing forward a fresh case that would not be a replacement of an old case—it would be an electoral division charge? Take your own division, you have so many people on out-door relief, you pay 12s. or 13s. a week, or whatever it is, that would be fixed as the amount that would be charged for the union-at-large as long as you did not exceed 12s. a week it would still be a union charge, but the moment you would bring forward fresh cases that would run them up to 15s. a week then the extra 3s. would be an electoral division charge?—I think that would meet it in a great measure, but I don't think it would be a sufficient safeguard, because in those cases there may be but a small number receiving relief this year, whereas they might be a larger or less number by the time this rate would be struck.

18616. You would be afraid you might work up to, say 12, where it would not merely be kept at the old figure; a man would like to get the full benefit of his possibilities?—There are divisions that, owing to the severity of the weather, out-door relief goes up in winter, and men with families must get something to maintain themselves, and they apply for temporary relief—a month or two months, if we take an average on that district where it has a large town with a large population, and there is a dearth of employment, owing to the severity of the winter. I don't think that ought to be taken as a test for the future.

18617. Could you suggest anything else?—I could suggest nothing but to have the whole thing a divisional charge.

18618. Mr. MURKIN.—But then again that would be a hardship on the towns if you have out-door relief as a divisional charge; the town has to pay a large sum of money, perhaps disproportionately large, because many of the people who are residents in the town have come from the country owing to the want of employment in the country, making their homes in the town and making a charge on that particular town; that is the disadvantage of the divisional charge, and the only disadvantage?—It might not be a want of employment in the country but a want of proper house accommodation.

18619. It might be from many causes, I only mention one; how would you meet that?—Then, No. 1, the encumbrance of the labourer when he is living in the town come into the town and see spent in the town.

18620. And if he has been some years in the town he becomes a townsman?—He does in many ways, and another way I look at it, the valuation of house property in town is very low, though the rate may be high; 23s. valuation in the town as a house is very small, while a small farm in the country will make 250 valuation, so I don't think the shopkeeper in town has any grievance.

18621. CHAIRMAN.—Your idea is that a farmer is taxed on his whole property and the man in the town is only taxed on his house rent, and his business is not taxed?—That would be a question for the Government as to the profits.

18622. Mr. MURKIN.—Is it not the other way; is not the country getting the benefits of the agricultural grant whereas the towns have got no benefits at all except the one—union ruling and the control of their own streets?—But then the agricultural grant does not give us, as ratepayers, what we formerly got when we received half the rates from the landlord—a great disproportion between what we are allowed now and what I formerly received from my landlord as half rates.

18623. Dr. BROWNE.—You have to pay more now than you had formerly?—Undoubtedly; one-third more out of pocket.

18624. Instead of its being a saving to you it is an addition?—Quite so; it is not raising taxation, though we are trying to keep within bounds as well as we can.

18625. Mr. MURKIN.—Still you must recognise that the rates of the towns are much higher, proportionately, than the rates in the country; it is a small house, the valuation of which is from 12s. to 20s.; now a man will have a considerable farm for a valuation of from 12s. to 20s., and on that valuation he will get a certain allowance, known as the agricultural grant?—But then we are dealing with the question of rent and valuation; a man need not pay the rent of a house if it does not suit him, but once he goes there to live he is bound to pay the rates according to his valuation, and he does not, generally, go into the occupation of the house unless he sees some advantage in it, at a good rent; it must be in a good neighbourhood where he expects a good trans-fer.

18532. Do you not see some element of hardship on the towns in divisional rating?—I could not see it, sir, in my way of thinking.

18533. Still you must admit that those who cannot get houses in the country make for the towns, and in time become charges on the town?—Parties in the Agricultural Labourers Bill being passed perhaps people left the country and came to the towns, and they go out to the country and work, and at the expiration of their work they come back to the town with their money in their pocket, and I would like to know who pays it; I think where the money is spent the property ought to be.

18534. CHAIRMAN.—And the liability?—Unavoidably.

18535. Mr. MURKIN.—But property unduly-taxation is not in the town?—If you went through the town you would find people who had made piles of money and are able to take country residences and live there. I can see in the city of Kilkenny where some men sell and others are going ahead in the same house.

18536. CHAIRMAN.—Is there anything else?—There are many things; we are for amalgamation. We don't care with whom or who amalgamates with us, but we want one thing—that whatever man we join that we will be asked to pay nothing only per capita—that is a proportionate rate chargeable to the inmates of the union we amalgamate with, with house maintenance.

18537. Dr. BLOOM.—You want representation too?—Undoubtedly; but I don't think we require the same representation we have; one Guardian for each division, otherwise you would have to build an additional board-room.

18538. Do you think the representation too large at present?—In case of amalgamation I don't think it would be necessary, and if we had one-door relief as a demoralising charge it would be quite unnecessary to have two Guardians for each division—one to watch the other—one is quite enough. As regards the tramps, we go in for the most expeditious way of doing away with them—that is the jail.

18540. Take their children from them, and while their children are being supported by the State, would you be in favour of putting them in a labour colony?—Yes, and make them earn the maintenance of their wife and children as well as whatever institution they were kept; where you have the tramp and the child of the tramp you will always have the tramp. If it would be possible I would certainly go in for a labour colony, but that would take some considerable time, but I believe it would be well to try it, and have it under State control. There are differences in tramps—a genuine working man sometimes goes on tramp. I am instructed to make some suggestions to you about dealing with the tramp question and discriminating between the genuine working man on the road and the tramp.

18541. Mr. MURKIN.—Would not that be a proper consideration for the Guardians in the future?—How would the Guardians find out who would be a tramp on the road and who would not.

18542. You think that duty should be done by others?—The officers of the law. If a bona fide working man wanted to travel from one county to another let him get a pass from the local justices or local representatives in his district, and this would prevent a bona fide working man being interfered with.

Mr. MURKIN.—He would have to have done something before you would ask him to do that.

18543. CHAIRMAN.—You mean something to show he is not a tramp?—Exactly, because if a tramp came before me or a local justice I am not going to give him a pass to the County Workhouse.

18544. If there is a building going on—a church or something—in your place, a stone-mason's assistant or any man you like is there, and as soon as the job comes to an end, however it happens, he is out of cash, and he hears a church is being built in Tipperary or Waterford, and that man will want a pass from you or some one like you, and you say you ought to be authorized to give him a pass that would carry him on?—Quite so.

18545. And that would prevent him being interfered with by a policeman?—Yes, or any one else.

18546. Mr. MURKIN.—Ought he not first have applied to the workhouse for assistance before he came for a pass?

CHAIRMAN.—It would only be in a case where he was destitute?—Oh, yes, because if he had cash he could travel in other ways. I think it would be unfair to have that man interfered with, and the easiest way to prevent it is to let him apply to the local justices.

18547. Or police officers?—I think I would keep him outside the scope of the police; the local justice or the representatives of the ratepayers of the district.

18548. Mr. MURKIN.—Or relieving officer or master of the workhouse, if there was such a thing?—They have such intercourse with tramps I believe we could omit them. If a man is in my district and out of work I know he is out of work; if he has work to get in the district I am not going to give him a pass to leave it. But if there is a church building in another place and he is a stonemason he is entitled to go there, and if he runs out of his cash when in Kilkenny I would give him a pass.

18549. Would it also entitle him to a night's lodging and food?—Yes, I think so, because a man addicted to drink never thinks of his pocket. I think there should be some local agency like the relieving officer to give him something. The use of the pass would be to discriminate between the bona fide workman and the tramp.

18550. Assisting to protect the man?—Yes. I don't think it is any degradation to a man going to travel to procure a pass if he is destitute.

18551. CHAIRMAN.—It is because he is destitute and an honest man to protect him; if he has money he does not want it?—Oh, no; you have not to go to look for anything from anybody when you have cash.

Mr. MICHAEL MOWLAN, THOMASTOWN, examined.

18552. CHAIRMAN.—Do you agree with your colleagues who have given evidence in favour of amalgamation?—Myself and Mr. O'Neill are pretty well on the same lines; we are living near each other, and we discussed the matter very much together. I have been in Australia and he has been in America, and we had different views, but we had more knowledge than if we were always at home.

18553. You saw nothing about Poor Law there?—No; but if the parents are not leading a proper life the State takes away the children from them.

18554. Which colony were you in?—In Victoria.

18555. Is there the same law in New South Wales?—I would say so.

18556. If the parents are bringing up the children properly?—What I was led to believe was this, if the parents are not leading a proper life themselves the State considers they are not fit to be guardians of children, and that would be my view too.

May 3, 1904.

Mr. Michael O'Neill.

Mr. Michael Mowlan.

18557. Do they do anything with the father or mother of the children?—I think not until they commit themselves publicly.

18558. They don't lock them up?—I think not except they were troublesome to their neighbours.

18559. Breaking the law?—Breaking the law. The children of the tramps would remain one of the wild cattle I saw in the Bush. If a young heifer breaks from the homestead and goes out to the wild bush the calf she will rear will be wild like the crowd she picked up with; if you catch on the calf when it was young and brought it home and reared it in the homestead it would be like any other calf, and the children of the tramp would be the same; if you don't take them away from the tramp they will be tramps, and their children hereafter.

18560. It will go on for generation and generation?—I believe so.

May 6, 1864
Mr. Michael Meylan.

18557. As regards out-door relief, do you agree in Mr. O'Neill's view on that?—I agree that the electoral division change is the proper system.

18559. If some people from your district go into Waterford or to Kilkenny, do the Waterford or Kilkenny people complain of having to keep him?—But they never go in their old age to those towns; it is only in their youth they go; an old person hates the town.

18560. Mr. MURKIN.—What about a labourer who gets all and out of employment?—There is no need of a labourer getting out of employment now in the country; it is what we are out of labour, instead of labourers being out of employment.

18561. CHAIRMAN.—In this agricultural part of the country?—Yes; and in grass parts too. The hay is rotting on account of want of man; a lot of young fellows rush from the country because they have not society enough at night and amusement, and leaving the land.

18562. Mr. MURKIN.—That applies to the young, but what about the man of forty-five or fifty; the farmer does not care much for that man if he can get a younger man?—Excuse me, a man of fifty is as good for a farmer if he is inclined to work; he would rather have a careful old man of that class than three young fellows.

18563. There is no farmer of sense that would take a man of fifty-five years of age to mow a field of hay?—Excuse me, tell me where is the man that is mowing hay? It is cut by machines.

18564. Kilkenny is not all Ireland?—Excuse me, mister, I am only speaking for Kilkenny, not for the West or North.

18565. But there are such people elsewhere?—But you should not bring that into the County Kilkenny at all; this is the County Kilkenny we are on now.

18566. And you have men here of fifty-five years of age whose services are as eagerly sought after as those of men of thirty-five or forty; in some cases more sought after, because they are more careful and honest?—It is a man of knowledge I want.

18567. What about the small farmer that is put out of his house that cannot pay his rent; have you any small farmers of ten or twenty acres of land in this country?—There are.

18568. Who have to give up their farms, who cannot make ends meet; what becomes of them; don't they go to the town?—Some; not all of them.

18569. Where do they go? Some stop around in the country.

18570. And don't they go to the towns?—Yes; and work for a living; they don't beg or mope.

18571. When they get past their work won't the towns have to support them?—If a man had three or four sons would the towns be obliged to support their father. Seldom I knew a poor farmer and his son who did not work together hand in hand until death; it is only the children of bad parents that turn their backs on their parents.

18572. Still even the bad parents must be provided for?—Excuse me, mister, I did not say they were to starve.

18573. You say it is only the parents of bad children who are neglected in their old age?—Yes; because you say the farmer that goes into town must have reared bad children.

18574. Suppose there is some unfortunate person whose children desert him, what is to become of him if he goes to the town; won't the town have to support him?—The division where he lived has a right to keep him, and nobody else. If a pauper comes from Waterford into Kilkenny we send him back again.

18575. CHAIRMAN.—How do you do that?—Because he has no right to be here.

18576. You have no law for that?—We have a law for that, mister. He walks up from Waterford and comes in here; we have to keep him for the remainder of his life! Suppose we had a man from Thomastown that went into Kilkenny and goes into the workhouse here can we not send him back to Thomastown.

18577. That is not the law?—I beg your pardon, it is the law; there are cases of it that have occurred.

18578. It may be done, but it is not according to the law?—How did the English send people over here.

18579. Because they have a law to that effect—I saw several cases occurring here in this country. Why did not the Local Government Board obstruct it. If a man can come from Thomastown after working all his life there and go into the workhouse of Kilkenny I would say the law is rotten. I say a man has no right to work in Danesfort all his life and then come to be a pauper in Kilkenny. Why don't they send him back to Danesfort, and I would deal with him.

18580. Mr. MURKIN.—Then you would have a law of settlement?—If he came to here to work in Kilkenny, of course he spends his money here, but to come into be a pauper from Danesfort never occurred, and would not be allowed. If he came in to work and because it and was unfit to work, do you think it would be right that Kilkenny should keep up the Thomastown man all his life?

18581. That is the law of the country. There was a chapel that cost 200,000, and every penny of it was spent in this town, do you mean to tell me the town did not benefit by every man that came into it?—A man comes in here without money, but so one goes out in the country to spend money; all is spent in the town.

18582. I happen to live in the country myself and want to look at this from a fair point of view; my view is that electoral division rating is the best and most economical, but it has its disadvantages in this respect, and what I am trying to get from you is some way of getting over these disadvantages in order to make things fair all round?—Is not the larger the population in every town the richer the town; now answer me that question?

18583. Yes; it is an element of prosperity—a large population?—And you say people go in from the country and make the town poor.

18584. Frequently they have to do; they are driven?—And how many rich men come into the town and spend money there?

18585. We are not dealing with the rich in this country?—But I am putting one against the other.

18586. I am just asking how it is fair to deal with the poor in the particular instance, and I want to know from you would it be fair that the people from the country should come into the town after giving the best years of their life in the country and be added on the ratespayers of the town?—They don't do so. I never knew an old person to come into the town except they had children that had some situation in the brewery or town, and the parents would keep house for them and cook the food and the children support them, but I never heard of an old person to go into the town as a pauper, because he dreads the town; he can get a head of cabbage and twenty things in the country for nothing, which he must pay for in town.

18587. Are you a believer in out-door relief as an economical method of distributing public assistance?—In this way the old people that would have some one to take charge of them or care them to give them out-door relief to a certain extent, that whatever their maintenance would be in the house to give them the same out, but an old person that would be in a house in the country that would have no one to look after them or take charge of them, I think the proper place for them in their old age is an institution, but for the giving of 3s. or 4s. to keep an old man or old woman there would be too much red tape. There would be an inspector out once a week or once a month, his bed is not properly cleaned or his shirt is not properly cleaned. The result is he would be taken out and put into the house again; 30s. doesn't do what they require.

18588. Don't you think some farmers would be glad to get an old man at 3s. 6d. or 4s. a week who could give some little assistance in addition to his pay?—Any man that is any assistance to a farmer he don't want 3s. 6d. a week or 4s. with him, for the farmer would give it to him himself and feed along with it.

18589. Don't you think the old man would be better out in the country than in some institution?—If old a farmer wash an old man for 3s. 6d. a week, and clean his bed and find food for him?

18590. You have some cases where they are boarded out in the country?—Have I not told you those are people who had some one to look after them, some relative or friend, but to send a stranger out and say "You will get 3s. or 4s. a week if you keep this old man and wash his linen and keep his bed clean." There is no farmer in the country who would undertake to do such a thing.

18591. Would you give the Guardians power to board out such a person?—I have not the slightest doubt if telling you it would be a failure.

18708. CHAIRMAN.—But much would a small farmer take to keep such a man?—He would not take him at all.

18709. Not if he got 10s a week?—No; because there would be such red-tape, and an inspector would want him kept cleaner than the farmer himself. It is the same way with children—they are not properly kept or looked after. Here is a farmer with ten acres of land, no one comes round to ask him what sort of lines he has on, but once you become a pauper you are a very important person.

18710. If there is public money spent on a person the Guardians would like to see that they get value for it—Yes; but the public money is not sufficient to meet what the inspectors require.

18711. The inspectors would not like to see vermin on children?—Quite right; nor I either.

18712. You think that would be right?—I don't refer to that part of the business; they refer to food and other things.

18713. The want of milk?—Want of many things that he or she could not afford.

18714. But, as a rule, if an inspector sees a child fairly clean at the ordinary run of children way, and has no vermin, and seems healthy, they would be satisfied with that?—They ought to be.

18715. Mr. MURKIN.—Have you any trouble in boarding out children?—I think there are not many of them boarded out; but, say that are I think they are going on satisfactorily.

18716. You don't hear of any complaint?—I don't know any of them to come back through neglect of the foster parents.

18717. Do you think it would be well to give Guardians further power to board out children that they cannot board out at present?—What I think would be the proper thing to do with these children is to put them all into an institution, every child in the county that is in the union-at-large, and educate them, and give them some sort of trade, in a way that they would be useful citizens.

18718. Why not put them out with farmers?

CHAIRMAN.—Who want labourers, as you told us?—Some of those are not inclined to work for farmers; they are inclined to go back to the workhouse.

18719. Not when you send them out when they are three or four years old. They never remember the workhouse, or know anything about it. The idea of boarding out is not boring out?—What would you do with these who cannot be boarded out at all?

18720. The idea of the early witnesses was to board all out?—Way not put them in a school under one teacher?

18721. You might hold that opinion. The mass of the witnesses who came up this morning expressed an opinion against rearing children together in the same institution?—I mean an institution separated altogether—a children's institution.

18722. They were rather of the opinion that children reared in such an institution would not be so handy?—Would not be regular family children?—Won't you leave them in the workhouse until sixteen years of age?

18723. No; board them out at once—as soon as they are able to use their back. Let them be brought up in a family, and let them go to school as soon as they are old enough, and then to have any knowledge of the workhouse at all?—I have no objection to that system—I would agree with that.

18724. Now, was there any other matter you would like to mention to us?—I would agree with Mr. O'Neill as far as the tramps are concerned. Myself and Mr. O'Neill are neighbours, and discussed the matter together. One hospital would do in the county, and let the fever hospital be in every union, as at present.

18725. Take Graigueanagh—would you oblige a sick person from there to come into the hospital in Kilkenny?—Stuck from what complaint?

18726. Say pneumonia or a broken leg?—With the convenience at present, how long would it take to come to Kilkenny?

18727. It would take him a long time. You or I, if we were thinking of sending one of our family to hospital, we would be much more likely to send them to a hospital near by, where we could go see them?—Where do men with broken legs or arms come into the county infirmary from?

18728. Most of them from very near?—There is no sense in that language—that is not true at all. If you inquire, you will find what I told you is accurate. People with broken legs go to the county hospital, and there are broken legs in the country as well as in the city.

18729. Then they would be treated in Thomastown?—I never knew a man with a broken leg in Thomastown; they are sent into Kilkenny.

18730. That is not the case in Castlecomer or Ulingford or Callan, and, I suspect, not in Thomastown?—How long would a person be coming from Graigue in a four-wheeled vehicle?

18731. Well, how long—two hours and a half?—No such length. What about a motor car?

18732. How long would the Kilkenny Infirmary motor car take coming in?—I don't know; but if we got a good one it would come very quick.

18733. We have had evidence from medical men pointing out to us that the sick could be taken very long distances with good vehicles. If you put a sick person into a comfortable, well-adjusted and well-running vehicle, with good springs, that that patient could be taken twenty miles as well as ten. But then comes the other question, with regard to the people who would be likely to send them in. People would be less likely to send them in from twenty miles than from ten?—What would you do with them, then?

18734. They would make the best shift they could, and let the dispensary doctor look after them?—We are not interfering with anyone who has plenty of means. It is only the poor we are looking after.

18735. Anyway, you will admit that a hospital is more filled by people from its immediate neighbourhood than by people from a distance?—There would not be so many in it from the further distances. Odd cases come in to be lost.

18736. Mr. MURKIN.—You don't mean to say there are people in the hospitals that are not sick?—There are odd people in it that need not come in.

Mr. McKeown.—We had thirty-six cases of accidents in Castlecomer.

Witness.—I don't see the disadvantage it would be to bring patients into Kilkenny from any part of the county. I have known people if they had a broken leg would go to Dublin, and how is it such a distance to bring them into the county hospital.

18737. CHAIRMAN.—If you were sending a child of your own, you would much rather have it at a place where you could see it frequently than at a great distance?—Excuse me, sir, I would sooner have it at the county hospital, because the doctor would be there daily, whereas in the other hospital the doctor is only like the crows flies—he comes in in the morning, and when will be there again?

18738. I think you will find that in the union hospital the doctor, if there is a bad case, never contents himself with one visit a day?—Excuse me. What happened that child that died in the union at Kilkenny, where the doctor never saw him. The child was burnt, and the doctor never saw him until he was dead. Where were all his qualifications then? In Thomastown the doctor comes in in the morning, and goes away, and won't come back until next day.

18739. That is not my experience?—Are you not aware of what I am telling you?

18740. No; I am aware of the opposite?—Excuse me, a doctor will come in at ten o'clock or twelve o'clock in the day and if there is a red ticket five or six miles away he must go there, and he will attend to the patient that is paying him; then what becomes of the patient in the workhouse?

18741. I never found doctors so deficient of professional honour?—Excuse me, won't be for business.

18742. If a Poor Law doctor in a workhouse has an urgent case he is as little likely to neglect that case as one of his paid patients?—Don't you know if a doctor is continually living in a hospital the patients are better looked after than by a doctor who has ten miles of country to look after besides; that is as plain as a pike-staff.

May 5, 1904.

Mr. Michael
Keogh.

Mr. ARTHUR KAVANAGH examined.

18743. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the Board of Guardians of Ulingford?—Yes.

18744. You considered the queries that were issued?—Yes.

Mr. Arthur
Keogh.

May 5, 1904.
Mr. Arthur
Kavanaugh,

18729. I take it from your answers that you are not in favour of the amalgamation of unions?—No, sir.

18730. You think you would not make any change in the condition of affairs at Ullingford?—No; it is a long way from Kilkenny. I had to drive eighteen miles this morning in the rain.

18731. If a workhouse by any means were closed you think it might be converted into an auxiliary asylum for lunatics?—Yes; or technical schools.

18732. The Fever Hospital in your union the day we were there we could not get into it; have you ever been there?—No, it is outside the union altogether.

18733. A caretaker lives in it?—Yes.

18734. Is that caretaker a trained nurse?—I don't really know.

Mr. Shortall.—She is not.

18735. CHAIRMAN.—In answer to the third query, the Guardians state that perhaps their representatives might wish to say something on the subject?—I feel myself that the present classification and treatment are sufficient. A resolution has been passed by the Board.

Resolved unanimously: That we, the Ullingford Board of Guardians, in meeting assembled, on this day, duly convened by special notice having been given to each Guardian on this day four weeks for that purpose, hereby direct our representatives, Messrs. Shortall and Kavanaugh, to oppose the amalgamation of this union before the Poor Law Commission on the ground that such amalgamation would entail considerable hardship on the sick and destitute poor by having the sick removed at such distances as all the surrounding unions are situated, this union being so central, besides taking into account that the ratepayers would have to pay considerably higher rates than they usually pay, being the second lowest-rated union in the County Kilkenny, as shown by the report of the Local Government Board, and our rates for the year as submitted to us by the County Councils of Kilkenny and Tipperary are considerably lower than any union in the counties named."

18736. What is your average rate at present?—Is 9d.

18737. Does that do for anything except the Union?—That is for the union only.

18738. Not the roads?—5d. for the roads. There is Is. 9d. for the union and medical charities and 5d. for roads. Of course, I am bound practically by that resolution, so I come here to oppose the amalgamation of the union on the grounds stated in the resolution.

18739. Did the Guardians think that if the unions were broken up their sick would have to go to Thurles or Kilkenny?—Yes, they were of that opinion.

18740. If they were aware of the fact that their sick might remain at Ullingford and that only the healthy people would be sent to other unions, do you think they would have the same objection?—I don't know about that; I was not present.

18741. What would your own view be without judging your colleagues in the least?—In connection with the rating, we don't want to be amalgamated with towns.

18742. You would like a guarantee that if you were amalgamated your rates would not be any higher?—It would be very difficult for a Guardian to attend these meetings or District Council meetings. When we have no railway in our locality it is all drying. We have a low rate, and are satisfied with it.

18743. And you would be sorry if your rates were raised by any change?—Certainly.

18744. How many miles from Ullingford to Thurles?—I live six miles from Ullingford, within two miles of Rathfriland.

18745. As regards tramps?—Tramps are a great nuisance in our union.

18746. There being no railway they have to march across?—The Guardians would give them three months' imprisonment, but that would not be my view.

18747. What would your personal view be?—I would be in favour of not having them admitted to the house at all; have them sent to some labour colony where they would be self-supporting as far as possible. That would be my own personal view. It is not the view of the Guardians. They want legislation so as to empower them to give tramps three months' imprisonment.

18748. That would not be so apt to cure them, you think?—No; I think they would be as bad as ever at the end.

18749. Mr. MURKIN.—The Guardians want that power themselves?—No, but to empower the magistrates.

18750. That would only apply to hardened vagrants?—What they call professional tramps, those that are living by going from union to union.

18751. How do you deal with them at present?—The only means we have of dealing with them is that they have to break a few cwt. of stones before breakfast. We have no magistrate's court, only an old man who is doing no duty. I think a labour colony would be the better place for them. I understand they have these in England, and it would be easy to get them in Ireland.

MR. RICHARD SHORTALL EXAMINED.

Our rates are much less in the Ullingford Union than in any union in the County Kilkenny.

18752. CHAIRMAN.—And you are afraid that if there was amalgamation it would increase?—I would like to let the old people live there, for we have a lot of old men and women.

18753. Mr. MURKIN.—You have not very many?—Unfortunately we have not, and we have a fine house.

18754. Only about twenty-three according to the last report?—And we have a very fine house, and what it is going to be converted to I don't know.

18755. Mr. MURKIN.—Make a mill of it and grind corn?—We have not the corn yet.

18756. CHAIRMAN.—As regards amalgamation, you are not in favour of it?—No, I am in two unions, and I have a great deal more to pay in Kilkenny Union than in Ullingford.

18757. You live at Comeragh?—Comeragh Castle. My valuation is about £250 in Kilkenny Union and only £48 or £50 in Ullingford Union.

18758. You are better pleased to deal with the Ullingford Guardians—the smaller rate?—It is convenient to me.

18759. What do you attribute that smaller rate to?—I think we live economically. We don't go to large expenses, and if the people are amalgamated from Ullingford into Kilkenny, I think that the expenses will be doubled and trebled here in this union. That is my opinion, because I was a part of my time here.

18760. As regards lunatics, would you prefer keeping any harmless lunatics in the workhouse?—I would, then send them to any other institution.

18761. What do you think about the best way of rearing children that have to be supported out of the rates? Would you rather support them in the workhouse or board them out?—I would not like to have them boarded out, bad and all as they are. I would rather have them inside to have someone look over them and keep them clean and instruct them.

18762. There would be no question of removing the sick?—If we were to amalgamate Ullingford and Kilkenny and bring in the old people, they would not live as far as Freshford.

18763. As regards the girls who come in there to become mothers of illegitimate children?—I would give them a short knock.

18764. What could you do with the poor creature?—I don't know.

18765. Some of them are very good even if they commit themselves when they fall and have to leave their homes?—That is the misfortune about it, and it is a pity to have them go away.

18766. Would you be in favour of putting them into some institution?—Where is that?

18767. There are convicts managed by Good Shepherd Nuns?—I could not answer you that question.

18768. Where you pay so much per head per week?—Would it not be cheaper to keep them in the union?

18769. It may be so. Would you prefer keeping them on that account?—I would be for giving these children trades.

18770. Would you send those girls to an institution?—I would let them go and earn their bread.

18771. What would you do with the children?—I would keep them.

18772. Would you not be afraid that these people might come back with another child?—I don't think so. There is one thing certain in Ullingford—we are so far remote from any accommodation. We have not any railway accommodation, and know nothing. All we have is plenty of water and turf and coal.

The sitting terminated.

May 6, 1904.

THIRTY-EIGHTH PUBLIC SITTING.—FRIDAY, MAY 6TH, 1904.

At the Courthouse, Carlow.

Present:—Mr. MICKS (Chairman), Mr. MURNAGHAN, and Dr. COET BROGER.

Mr. PATRICK HANLON EXAMINED.

18773. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the County Council. There was no formal resolution, I understand, from the County Council on this subject?—Not that I am aware of.

18774. I suppose you know pretty well what the feeling of the County Council would be. You cannot reduce the number of unions in the county unless you abolish all—No, we have only one union in the county.

18775. And owing to that circumstance perhaps the County Council and the Guardians did not think it a very practical question in Carlow?—Well, there are a great many matters in connection with it that we would think practical. The opinion that I heard universally expressed was that they did not think they could abolish the union in this county. Others, of course, might join with this union if they wished, but I don't think that even would be an advantage, because the house appears to be full, and if another union joined Carlow Union it would entail a good deal of building.

18776. I see that the Carlow Workhouse has become more and more of a hospital, and less and less of what we call a workhouse. In the infirmary in September, 1873, there were only 63 patients; now there are 146, and the number of children has decreased in the workhouse very much, too?—Of course, the children were boarded out at that time, too.

18777. Not to the same extent?—Not to the same extent. All the orphans and deserted children that can be legally boarded out are boarded out now.

18778. You are strongly in favour of boarding out children?—Strongly in favour. I have known some of the most useful members of society to be children that were sent out of the workhouse and boarded out.

18779. The whole of the County Carlow is not in the Carlow Union?—No; there is part in Ballynaglave and part in New Ross. The portions are not very large.

18780. What do you think of the question of taking in the parts that are in Ballynaglave and New Ross into your own union?—Well, the part that is in Ballynaglave it would be very inconvenient to bring the sick from that neighbourhood.

18781. Supposing the hospital was left at Ballynaglave, and supposing for the people who wanted to go to the hospital nearest to them you paid so much per head per week while they were in the hospital nearest to them, in that way there would be no hardship to the sick. They would go actually to the same hospital that they always were in, except that you would pay so much per head for them in an outside hospital?—It works fairly well as it is. I don't know whether that would work better or not.

18782. Do you see any advantage in having the Poor Law area coextensive with the administrative county?—I do not. For instance, we take in a portion of the Queen's County. Carlow is on the very borders of the Queen's County. We take in Slieveangry, and that is quite convenient to our workhouse, and if you acted in the principle of taking in the whole county, of course you would give that portion to the Queen's County.

18783. And they would have the same privilege of sending into your hospital, and you would get so much per head for all that came in?—I think it is a compensating system. They are more simple as it is. I don't see that the boundaries interfere in any way with the working of the system.

18784. We have received evidence in a great many places in favour of the boundaries being coextensive for all purposes. You would have the County Council the head of everything, and all the other Councils and Boards discharge their duties within the area of the administrative county?—It would make the financial arrangements more simple, I suppose.

18785. It would also do that, and it was urged upon us. I don't say that we are at all in favour of it, but it has been put forward that it would have an advantage of that sort?—There are no advantages that I can see that would be strong enough to make me think that the boundaries ought to be altered. I think myself that the principle of amalgamation is a good one where the numbers would be small in unions that would be convenient to each other.

18786. And if the towns of Carlow were in the centre of the county instead of at the extreme edge, it would be better?—Yes, sir. I think amalgamation would be useful where there are small numbers of unions that would be convenient to each other, where the travelling expenses would not be very large, and where it would not entail a lot of additional buildings to take the inmates out of one union and bring them to another. I think in Carlow it would not be practicable.

18787. Are you a member of the Board of Guardians also?—Yes, sir. In 1873 there were 63 patients in the infirmary. It was at that time that the nurse were introduced into the infirmary, and it appeared to give a great deal of confidence in the establishment, and the numbers gradually increased ever since, until now there are 146.

18788. Those 146 are all in your registry as sick?—Yes.

18789. How many of them are really sick?—I have only taken my numbers from Mr. Glover.

18790. Who are receiving active treatment with a view to their cure?—I think, sir, Mr. Glover can answer that question. I have not that.

18791. I think you would find that a great many of those sick people are old people who have the ailments of old age?—There are infirm, wards besides those; this is the hospital proper.

18792. But some of the people who are in the sick wards are hardly distinguishable, if distinguishable at all, from some of those who are in the infirm wards?—That is the doctor's affair, registering them properly.

18793. We don't at all allege it is any bad administration or anything of that sort on the part of the Guardians or their officers. We merely point out that the fact is that the Guardians all over the country, not in Carlow merely, but the Guardians all over the country, have been taking as many into the hospitals practically as the hospitals would hold, and some of those people are not people who would be admitted, for instance, into a general hospital in any of the large cities?—I daresay that may be true to some extent.

18794. As regards the location, you would prefer boarding out lunatics to making any additional buildings?—Yes, sir. The boarding out system has worked so very well with children that I think you could board out a good many. There might be a difficulty with females. With harmless males I think there could be no difficulty at all. They could be supported very much cheaper if they were boarded out as compared with within.

18795. Is there any county except Kildare County joined with you in this asylum?—No, sir.

18796. If the Kildare people had a workhouse to spare, and if they wished to take some of your harmless lunatics to such a workhouse, would you see any objection to that?—I would. If the principle we are going on is amalgamation, if you go on extending and making new establishments, that would be directly the opposite principle, and you would increase expenses. First, of course, you must have, as they have, I believe, a Master in Cork, then after a while they apply for a doctor; we would have a resident medical superintendent, and afterwards it will be an assistant resident medical superintendent, and I expect a big staff after a while. It would not be the way to reduce expenditures, I believe.

Mr. Patrick Hanlon

Mr. Patrick

18077. You are aware that they do board out inmates in Scotland to some extent?—Yes; but I am not aware how it is worked. It has been, I believe, more or less of a tentative business up to the present.

18078. Do you think there is any further accommodation necessary in the union in the way of hospitals?—No, sir.

18079. What hospitals have you got in your union?—We have got the workhouse.

18080. You have the County Infirmary and the Fever Hospital in Carlow?—The Tallow Fever Hospital and Bagenstown. The numbers in those hospitals are not very large.

18081. It is called a fever hospital, the Tallow building, but is it not restricted to fever?—No; I think it is used partly as a general hospital.

18082. What is the idea of the Guardians in adopting the plans they have got? Is it to be a general hospital with no fever admitted, or is it to be a fever hospital with no general cases admitted?—It is to be a general hospital and fever also.

18083. Are your plans suitable for taking in fever at the same time, being such a small hospital?—We gave orders to our architect to construct it in such a way.

18084. Do you happen to know how many wards there are?—I do not.

Mr. Glover.—There is a separate fever wing at one side, and a general wing at the other.

18085. CHAIRMAN.—A male fever wing and a female fever wing?

Mr. Glover.—Yes.

18086. How many wards at each side?

Mr. Glover.—I am not sure.

Witness.—I think quite suitable accommodation enough.

18087. Then as regards Bagenstown?—That is used as a general hospital, too.

18088. Do you contemplate any further improvements at Bagenstown?—We have not had any request to improve, and we don't generally make improvements until there is some application made to us.

18089. Your doctor has not made any suggestions in the matter?—Not that I am aware of.

Mr. Glover.—There is a scheme on foot at present to spend £500 in improving the drainage and providing a water supply to Bagenstown.

Witness.—But there is no change in the construction of the hospital.

18090. Do you appoint local committees to assist the doctor there to manage it, or is it altogether between the doctor and the Guardians at both Tallow and Bagenstown?—Yes, sir; I never knew a local committee to be appointed except for a special purpose, such as laying out a site for the hospital and deciding upon plans.

18091. Have you ever visited either of these hospitals yourself?—Yes, but very seldom.

18092. Have you been at Bagenstown lately?—I was not, but I visited Tallow. The house is extremely bad, in danger of falling.

18093. The doctor showed us where the new hospital is to be built. The fever accommodation at Bagenstown, you are aware, is of a very limited and not dangerous nature?—I am not aware of that. I have not visited the hospital, and I am not aware there were representations made as to the ward.

18094. There is one ward, a very small room, and when I was there they had three cases of typhoid and had but one or two, and the nurses' room was immediately over the fever ward, two nurses' bedrooms. You are remedying the water. Your present condition there as regards water is very serious, and the drainage is in a shocking condition?—I know there were complaints about the drainage, and measures were taken to improve it.

18095. It is an old house?—It was not built for a hospital. To the operating room you have to go up most awful stairs to get there.

18096. It was greatly improved, however, of recent years?—I know there was a great deal of money expended on it to improve it. The numbers in the hospitals are not generally very large; only about ten in Bagenstown and Tallow, and only about three in Carlow. Some people were suggesting that Carlow Fever Hospital might be closed, but I think that would be a rather dangerous thing where there is a large population, because there have been epidemics of smallpox—well, I cannot call it an epidemic, but there have been cases, there have been epidemics of measles in Carlow.

18097. It is a very fine building. Do you consider it a fever building that the County Infirmary?—I don't think it is a fever. It looks a fever building in appearance.

18098. Dr. BOGHER.—You think the County Infirmary larger?—I think so.

18099. CHAIRMAN.—At present every workhouse contains a large number of classes of people all housed in the same institution, sick and aged and infirm, mothers with infants, children from 5 to 15, lunatics, idiots, and epileptics, and a few who are able-bodied. That is a very small number. Now, last I ever occurred to you or to any of the Guardians that that system of housing so many different kinds of classes of people together is not a good system? We have received a great deal of evidence suggesting that different classes should be taken out of the workhouse. For instance, you yourself are in favour of housing out the lunatics.—On the ground of economy, and I think they are just as kindly treated.

18100. Another class that you have expressed an opinion about just now were the children. You think that where the law permits the result has been very successful in boarding them out?—Yes.

18101. Would you be in favour of an extension of the law enabling the Guardians to board out all children, practically all children that is, when the parents are not desirable people to have them?—I would, sir, very strongly be in favour of it, but whether there is a possibility of getting a law passed is another question I don't know. Some people say it is a cruelty to separate parents from their children, but I think on the other hand, it is a cruelty to the children to leave them with them.

18102. Being brought up badly so that they will turn out paupers in their turn?—Being trained to be vagrants.

18103. The difficulty is that if you take away these children from their parents you leave the parents free to go out of the institution and take up another course, and perhaps an improper course of life outside. That would be a drawback?—A great drawback. It is very hard to know what to do with the parents.

18104. Would you be in favour, without discussing the actual cases in the workhouse at present, but take a few cases where a girl comes in for the first time—would you be in favour of sending such a girl to a refuge or penitentiary at the expense of the rates instead of being under religious management, the object being to examine such good influences over the girl as would enable her to go out and cease to be a charge, enable her to be put out in a situation again, and that her child should be boarded out as soon as it reached the age of a couple of years, and that the mother be put under terms of paying out of her earnings in the institution towards the support of the child?—I think it would be a very good thing to do. Of course it would be good for the child, and it might take the mother from her evil surroundings and make her a good and useful member of society.

18105. I am speaking now chiefly about the better cases. It is rather difficult with what you may call an old offender, but in all future cases?—I think it would be a good thing. It would be a good thing to try.

18106. Then you would get out of the workhouse practically the mothers and that undesirable class of illegitimate children. As far as your experience goes, is not the presence in the workhouse of such people one of the great objections why that class that you may call respectable don't go into the workhouse, owing to the necessary association with these people?—I believe it is. I think that the objection to the workhouse, at least to our workhouse, has very much died out.

18107. Owing to the nurse coming in?—The nurse here made is more respectable.

18108. Are the nurse in charge of that part of the house where these poor girls are?—They are in charge of nothing except the hospital.

18109. They are still in charge of the lay nurses and the female people?—Yes.

18110. Then you think it would be very desirable, having regard to the highest estimation in which your hospital is held, to get such a list as that on it out of the way?—You only speak of those that come in for the first time. Some others remain still of the same undesirable class.

18111. They might also be provided for, but the present room. The time of course, is very short. These women would come to be a danger in about twenty years at all events!—Perhaps so. I always saw that there was the greatest difficulty in every workhouse in dealing with them.

18334. Do you think that idea would, as regards the female, be a useful settlement?—I think it would be a good work and money well spent even if we failed.

18335. Don't you think it would be likely to be a great economy, for now you have a girl coming in with a child for the first time, and when she comes in for the first time practically she remains off and on for the rest of her life in the Poor Law at an expense to the ratepayers, and they have from one up to seven children, as we have found in different places where we have been going, and all these become a charge on the rates; whereas if you get them to a refuge where they can be well instructed, the hope would be that after the first there would not be any more, and they would very soon themselves cease to be a burden by getting occupation outside from the man or whatever only was managing the institution!—It would be very hard to tell how it would work. There may be girls who would be badly disposed. In some cases you may succeed; in other cases I am sure you would fail.

18336. At all events, they cannot be influenced for good under the present workhouse system?—No, there is no attempt.

18337. The poor creatures are simply supported and kept there?—Abandoned to their fate.

18338. They take their discharge with their one or two children, and perhaps come back later on to have another. That is the routine. That is very serious as making a class of hereditary paupers?—Yes.

18339. These children come back to the workhouse, and they in turn come back to the workhouse themselves. We found in one case as many as four generations in the workhouse, and frequently we found three, so that that shows pauperism is made to run in families owing to the system?—I believe that. I believe as far as possible the children ought to be taken out of the workhouse. After being years in it they begin to look on it as their home, and get a real affection for it, and come back to it again whenever they get an opportunity.

18340. And seeing so much sin in the ordinary way, they get to know when they are a little older how things are, and their moral sense of shame or fear of shame is tainted?—I think so. I think the atmosphere of the workhouse is extremely bad for children, particularly as they are allowed to associate with their mothers, and as long as they are in the workhouse with their mothers they are associating with them.

18341. Now take another class—the class of people who come in with their children—will you say the casual people. I don't know whether Carlow is a town where you would have two or three families that never do anything for themselves, that keep coming in and out?—We have them.

18342. Take that class who never support themselves except for a little bit, and one does not know how often, who have no visible means of support, and the tramps and people who go round the country. It has been suggested in England lately, in the House of Commons. Mr. Marnaghan sent me a bill lately that has been introduced by some members who take an interest in the subject, and it is proposed there that there should be a labour colony or institution, with land attached and workshops attached, where such a class of people should be sent under magistracy supervision, that the children should be boarded out and the parents themselves, while their children are being supported at the expense of the State, should be retained in these institutions to prevent them still further increasing the undesirable population of the country, and make them do the same work for their maintenance.

18343. In Belgium there is such an institution which happens to be self-supporting?—Would these be unmarried people or married people that you refer to?

18344. Either?—One year we make married people.

18345. I believe it is done?—It is done in the workhouse, I know.

18346. There would be no farther separation than that?—Well, of course, you could improve that. It would be a direct benefit to the nation.

18347. The great danger is that these children keep growing up into the thistles, beggar-baby way that their parents did?—The difficulty is first you must deal with these children. Would these children be sent, in the case you speak of, to a school where they would be trained?

18348. The idea was that they should be just like workhouse children—be boarded out with small farmers or people who would take them and train them up to be the class so much wanted in the country—the labouring class?—Would you make prisoners of their parents?

18349. Certainly, detained under a warrant. That is the suggestion we get?—I am afraid you would not get that law passed. I think it would be a good law.

18350. If a number of men like yourself—and we have had plenty of them through the country—came forward and said that would be a good law, that is what moves the Legislature to pass such a law?—I don't think any parents have a right to bring up their children to vagrancy. I think it is a crime, and it ought to be a crime in the law, and they ought to suffer for it; and then the point is how long ought they to be separated from their children? Should they remain there until their children grow up, or should they be separated from their children altogether?

18351. I think that would be rather a detail if you admit the principle?—Some years ago we decided we would like to have all the children sent away to some school away from their parents—to some central school where the children of other unions would be also sent, and then the difficulty arose that the parents could at any time ask for their discharge and demand their children back. We would have to send a messenger off post-haste to get the children back thirty or forty miles, and there would be a great difficulty in that way; but, of course, what you suggest would remedy that, and I don't see any other way that it could be remedied, to send the parents of these poor children away, detain them there for a certain specified period, and try to take the children from under the evil influence of their parents.

18352. Mr. MURPHY?—Two years has been suggested as the maximum?—It is scarcely enough to give the poor children a chance.

18353. Chairman?—Of course it would be renewable on a further application. The thing would be carried on as long as it is necessary?—My idea is that it is a cruelty to the children to leave them in their hands.

18354. It may be a great benefit to the poor people themselves to teach them habits of industry, and I am sure there would be provisions to enable these people to go out on a temporary licence to see could they make their way again, and if they could, I am sure everybody would be glad to see them start their family life again?—Where is it suggested that this colony should be started?

18355. In Ireland, of course; some central place. It is called a labour colony, I don't know why, because colony is rather a misleading word to use. It gives the idea that it is out of the country. About tramps, that would be the only other class we would have to consider in the workhouse except the sick and aged and infirm. We have got by this process of exclusion all the other classes out of the workhouse. What would you do as regards the tramps?—I would provide them with work.

18356. Would you be in favour of sending them to a labour colony about?—I would decidedly. I think if they are allowed into the workhouse they ought not to be allowed as at present to come and go as they like. I think they should be made to do a little hard work.

18357. That would close the workhouse to all classes except the sick and poor old people who are next door to be sick. There ought not to be any taint in that. We have received evidence in a great many unions of a more enlarged giving of outdoor relief to these people, so as to try and keep them as much as possible outside?—You could extend the boarding-out system to the old when they would prefer it. It would not be exactly outdoor relief, because if you do it in the way I suggest, the money would not go to the person directly. It would go to the people who support and maintain them just as it goes to the nurses of children.

18358. As a practical man, would you be afraid that such an enlargement of boarding out to adult people or giving them weekly grants to pay for themselves. Would you be afraid that that might lead to a great increase in the applications for relief, that the people would not have the same shame in asking for money from a public Board as they would for admission to a public institution?—I think it would lead to an increase in applications. I think there should be some means of preventing abuse. I think there should be a regular inspector appointed to go round and see each and every case.

18359. You have at present such inspectors in the relieving officers?—Not sufficient; it would not do. I think there should be some superior inspector independent of every one and of the county or union.

May 6, 1904.

Mr. Patrick
Hendon.

18862. Who would bring the cases before the auditor?
—Who would visit them just as the nurse children are visited now?

18863. If you extend it so much as that, that is to give it to old persons to lodge with their neighbours or friends. Another suggestion we got a couple of days ago was that some such provision should be made as exists at present in the Local Government Act about expenditure on roads. Where there was a limit put down that not more than a certain amount should be spent than was in the standard year, and anything more than that should be dealt with under special authority, the witness suggested that the present rate of expenditure, supposing an electoral division is paying £1 a week on outdoor relief, that that should be fixed, as what you might call the standard payment for that division, and that then if anything further was paid, if you wish to increase your payment to 25s.
a week, that that 5s. should fall not on the union at large, as it does at present, but on the electoral division, which exceeded the standard amount.—That would be going back to electoral division rating.

18864. It would be going back to that extent that the increase over the present rate of expenditure would become a divisional instead of a union charge?—If you enforce the principle of union rating it is not easy to go back to the principle of electoral rating, but I do believe a provision like that would be useful.

18865. It would have the effect of making the grants more carefully gone into?—I hope it would.

18866. Mr. MURKIN.—Might it not be that some electoral divisions at the particular time were not getting their full share of the money expended in that respect, and therefore it would be a hardship on such electoral division, whereas other electoral divisions might be getting more than their share and would be entitled to it in future?—Yes, that the standard amount might not be a fair one, that is the difficulty. It was well known that electoral division rating did a great injustice to the towns in the old time when the famine and circumstances and landlords and all combined drove the people into the towns; but that injustice did not exist so much as at the time of the change of the law.

18867. Not so much, but still it did exist to some extent. The towns suffered by the electoral division charge.

CHAIRMAN.—Union rating for outdoor relief does benefit the towns. It is not so popular with the country?—Well, I belong to a country district. At the same time I feel there was a great injustice done to the towns in the old times by electoral division rating.

18868. Mr. MURKIN.—Some of your friends in Kilkenny went in to revert back to electoral division rating. You would not be in favour of that?—I was certainly in favour of union rating at one time, but I say the injustice was not so great as all at the time the law was changed, and a great many of the people that were driven into the towns had by degrees emigrated, and the numbers in the towns were not very much more now than the towns required for labour.

18869. So the inequality has disappeared to a large extent?—Not so much, but I believe it does exist to some extent still; therefore, I say it would be seriously fair to go back to the electoral division rating, but I think a provision such as you suggest would be useful.

18870. If you could start on a fair basis?—Yes.

18871. CHAIRMAN.—You might have an inquiry to establish a fair basis?—Yes.

18872. Mr. MURKIN.—You say you are in favour of boarding out as many made inmates as possible.
Where do you see the economy in that?—I think they would be boarded out for about £10 a year, and they cost £14 or £15 in the house.

18873. Fully that?—Without counting some of the establishment charges, £17 or £18 if you count everything.

18874. And the same would apply also to children?
—The children are boarded out for very much less—I think 6s a year and 30s. for clothes.

Mr. Glover.—£2 in some cases where they are fifteen years of age.

Witness.—They are boarded out on an average for about £10, and in the house they cost £14 or £15 without establishment charges.

18875. Mr. MURKIN.—And the same would apply to the aged and infirm?—Yes.

18876. Dr. BOONER.—How far does the Union of Carlow extend?—It extends into Slieveanagh, in the Queen's County.

18877. How many miles is that?

Mr. Glover.—Ten miles from the town. There is an area of 24,000 acres.

Witness.—It is sixteen miles to Clonmel.
18878. Dr. BOONER.—Is that the furthest extent in the east?—I think that is the furthest extent.

Mr. Glover.—We go below Bore.

18879. CHAIRMAN.—You have got railway lines there?—

Mr. Glover.—We have not direct.
Witness.—Below Clonmel is just as far.

18880. Dr. BOONER.—These districts are largely served by the hospitals of Bagenalstown and Tallow?—
Yes.

18881. What way do you arrange; have they a site or is it all out of the Carlow rates?—Union rating.

18882. When were Bagenalstown and Tallow opened for the reception of medical and surgical cases?—It has been a gradual thing, when opened at first they were supposed to be fever hospitals; but merged into the other; the patients were admitted gradually without any special authority from the Board; the doctor undertook the responsibility of taking in patients consistently, and it gradually became a general hospital.

18883. Are they popular in their district?—They are; it would be a very unpopular thing to close one.

18884. You find the people go into them pretty freely?—They do, and anxious to go into them.

18885. Do you think they go into them more freely on account of their disconnection with the workhouse buildings?—I don't think so. In the workhouse hospital at Carlow they have 145 at present, and there is only an average of ten patients in Tallow and Ba-genalstown.

18886. But the 145 include a lot of chronic cases and some of them may come from Bagenalstown and Tallow?—That may be, but the 145 is a very large number, and ten is not a large number in the other places, so the fact of being disassociated from the workhouse does not appear to be any inducement; of course these hospitals are not large.

18887. They are more or less acute hospitals?—Well, they are.

18888. They don't keep patients for an indefinite time, the way you would in the workhouse?—We are not supposed to keep them for an indefinite time in the workhouse, except when under treatment.

18889. They may be under treatment from old age and bedridden, and cases of that class that don't require active treatment?—Sometimes there were some kept in the infirmary that we thought might have been put into the infirm ward, but perhaps not often.

18890. After all, I think going through the hospital you will see a great many cases that might be in the infirm wards?—On the other hand, going through the infirm wards, you will see many old people on the verge of the grave.

18891. You said something about the increase in numbers in the infirmary, during how many years was that?—In 1873 the cases in the infirmary were 800-three, and last September they were 145.

18892. CHAIRMAN.—How many in 1873 were aged and infirm?—I cannot tell you, but the number in the hospital proper and the infirmary was sixty-three.

Mr. Glover.—The number Mr. Hendon gives you is the average daily number.

18893. Dr. BOONER.—In the body of the house in 1873 what was the number?—287.

18894. What is it now?—346.

18895. That decrease almost corresponds with the increase in the infirmary exactly; the whole number is very nearly the same as it was in 1873, but the body of the house has decreased and the body of the hospital has increased.

18896. CHAIRMAN.—Don't you think it is a transfer from the aged and infirm wards to the hospital?—Not at all; the sick come in immediately; the people did not care to come in to be treated in the workhouse at all in the old times; there was one very incompetent nurse in charge, and not a careful one, and the people did not very often get what was ordered for them, but since the nurse came in the people had confidence in them.

18897. What staff had you in 1873?

Mr. Glover.—There was only one nurse in 1873. At first there were three nurses appointed; there was always one who gave her services for nothing; the permanent staff was increased to four, and now a 250 man gives her services for nothing.

18898. Dr. BOONER.—I suppose Bagenalstown and Tallow were not open in 1873 for medical cases?—I could not tell you; I think there were cases brought in frequently that were not fever.

18905. So that the sick poor are availing themselves of the hospital treatment more now than they did formerly?—Perhaps they were not allowed in then.

18907. Does your county infirmary take in cases at all from the Queen's County?—Sometimes, I believe.

18908. Have you any arrangement with the Queen's County?—We were trying to make an arrangement. I don't know whether it has been completed or not.

18909. You would like an arrangement with the adjoining districts that in case people went into the county infirmary you could get the cost of maintenance from them?—I think so.

18910. Your county infirmary, of course, is supported by the whole county?—Yes.

18911. Not from the Queen's County, of course; so that portions of the union that are not in the county they pay to the county infirmary?—They used not to pay anything.

Mr. RICHARD McDONALD examined.

18912. CHAIRMAN.—You have heard Mr. Hanlon's evidence, and we have gone through the various classes in the workhouse; do you, generally, agree with the opinions he has expressed?—Generally.

18913. Are there some matters in which you are not inclined to adopt his opinions?—I cannot say that I am with regard to the boarding out and the nursing.

18914. You would prefer having those in an institution?—Yes. To send out an insane party to a family, perhaps it would take up a useful person to look after him.

18915. That is rather a question of whether people would be likely to take them as boarders?—I hardly think they would wish to take them, even where people have a relative.

18916. You think it would be too great a responsibility?—Yes; they would not be very desirable lodgers.

18917. Mr. MURKHAUGH.—Still if it was not compulsory, but only optional, with the Guardians, would you give them power to do so if they thought well?—I don't think it would work.

18918. CHAIRMAN.—But you would give it a chance of working, and send those others to the institution?—Yes; I don't know that there would be any economy attached to boarding them out. I understand that if they were sent to a lunatic asylum a capitation grant would be extended to them.

18919. If they were boarded out, at all events, you think provision ought to be made for securing a capitation grant?—Certainly.

18920. Now, as regards the boarding out of aged and infirm people, do you agree with Mr. Hanlon in that?—I did not hear that portion of his evidence.

18921. His view was that a great many of the old people could be more cheaply maintained, and more comfortably maintained, if they were boarded out with friends or relatives who would be willing to take them at 4s. or whatever it might be, per week?—Yes; but my impression is that that system is worked to the fullest extent at present under outdoor relief.

18922. Takes 100 people who are in your house as aged and infirm, do you think there are a great many of those who would be willing to go out if they got 4s., or whatever it would be, a week?—I don't know what their views are, but my impression is that any old or infirm people who have friends remain with their friends and apply for out-door relief, and don't seek admission to the house.

18923. Mr. MURKHAUGH.—But if they cannot get out-door relief on their application they must come into the house; this would only apply to those who are in the house at present?—Yes; but my view is, of course, although I occupy an important position up at the Guardians for a short time, I am not very well acquainted with the working of the institution. My view is that all the aged and infirm who have friends, instead of sending the old people to the workhouse, they apply, and invariably get out-door relief.

18924. So that practically your Board of Guardians does approve of boarding out or out-door relief where 18925. I am alluding to portions of the County Carlow that are in other unions?—Yes; it is a county charge.

18926. And at the same time pay for the support of their own union hospital?—Yes; of course they have the right to send patients if they wish, but they are such terrible distances away, I don't think they ever do.

18927. CHAIRMAN.—These people pay for the sick up in parts of the county that are quite convenient to the county infirmary; people in Lifford and over in Ballinglass don't see the infirmary; which would you be in favour of, making the support of the sick all over the county in whatever hospital or place they might be—would you be in favour of making that a county-at-large charge; for instance, the sick in the Carlow Union and the two hospitals you have in the union, and any sick elsewhere in the whole county, would you be in favour of making that a county charge?—How would you manage the Queen's County portion of the union?

18928. That they should pay you the ascertained average cost per head instead of by the valuation?—Whatever injustice may be done in one way is remedied in another, and I think it would only complicate accounts.

18929. Mr. MURKHAUGH.—You think there would be no advantage in a charge?—I don't think there would.

18930. It can be applied?—Yes; we never refuse relief in anything at all like a deservous case, and the whole tendency is, as far as I know, to prevent the old and infirm from entering the house if possible, to leave them with their friends, partly with a view to economy as well as everything else.

18931. CHAIRMAN.—In which you agree. Is there any other matter in which you differ from Mr. Hanlon?—With regard to the general hospitals of Tallow and Bagenalstown, I am representing the Guardians appointed in my absence, so that I got no mandate, but my personal view is, it is a great mistake to have fever cases in the general hospital.

18932. Unless you can properly isolate them?—Yes; and the result and experience of it is this, that here in Carlow, with a fever hospital accommodating this very large union and perhaps an area of half the union in addition, we have seldom any infectious cases in Carlow, while in the other fever hospitals they are hardly ever without infectious cases, so that it often occurred to me that the system of mixed hospitals really feed themselves.

18933. You have not ever heard of an ordinary case of illness contracting fever while in either Tallow or Bagenalstown?—Well, I am not aware of any.

18934. You would be rather afraid you might hear if you inquired closely?—I imagine I would; I would not be surprised if I did.

18935. Dr. BOONE.—Are they not closed when there are fever cases in it?—No.

18936. I was told by the medical officer that they were closed for general cases when there was fever; if there was a proper provision for fever cases it would be better, so that there would be continuity of treatment?—Matters are working well in this union; things are not quite satisfactory; the system is not quite satisfactory; these mixed hospitals might be improved.

18937. You are building a new hospital in Tallow; I believe that will be better constructed and better arranged?—I don't know the plans of it; they were accepted before I came to occupy a responsible position.

18938. You may think of improving Bagenalstown hospital?—Yes; 2500 are being spent on it. Are there any other matters on which you wish to hear me?

18939. CHAIRMAN.—Is there any other matter on which you would wish to express an individual opinion different from what Mr. Hanlon has already expressed?—No, there is not. On the question of amalgamation, we are born at the very corner of the county, and if Carlow Union were to be the centre of the district we could take in a whole lot of Queen's County and Kildare.

18940. But not as you stand?—No.

18941. The Castledermot district does come very close to you?—We are within one Irish mile of the County Kildare here; if there was any question of amalgamating portion of the Athy Union with any other union we could take over a great portion of it.

May 6, 1904.

Mr. Richard
H. Donnell.

here; we have train accommodation; that portion of Ailly Union in Queen's County could be taken in with Slievecastle; they are both small districts.

12032. Mr. MURPHY.—If the Guardians in neighbouring unions had power to board out their inmates in the nearest institutions to themselves would not that be a sort of remedy?—To send the sick and infirm to the nearest hospital.

12033. Simply the class known as the aged and infirm, supposing the Guardians had power to board in each of the neighbouring unions close to themselves, do you think that would be a good provision instead of having to send them a long distance to their own particular workhouse?—I don't think the question of sending them a distance if they are in fair health is a big one; I think it is a small matter about the sending of them.

12034. But being so close to another county—only a mile distant—don't you think it would be well to give the Guardians power to do such a thing?—If it did not cause inconvenience.

12035. From a point of convenience and economy. I have not considered that question, but my own personal view is that the boarding out of old and infirm would not work—the old people might be hard to manage, and might not pull well with the families who would take them over.

12036. Of course the boarding-out system would only work where there were people willing to take them, and there would be no compulsion in the matter, but merely the option to the Guardians. Can you see any danger in giving the Guardians power to board out an institution neighbouring themselves?—I see nothing objectionable in it.

12037. Would you see anything to commend itself to you?—Not to my mind. I have been thinking the matter over, and my impression is that it would not work. I may be wrong, perhaps I am.

Mr. PATRICK HANLON.

Mr. Patrick
Hanlon.

Perhaps you would allow me to say another word regarding the imbeciles. I believe if it became necessary that there should be a separate establishment for them that it would be better to have that establishment in connection with a lunatic asylum.

12038. An extension of the lunatic asylum?—An extension of the lunatic asylum, because the same staff could take over the charge of them, and I think it would be very much more economical than sending them to a separate institution, and that opinion I have heard expressed by the Chairman, Dr. Foley, and a great many influential members of the committee.

Mr. MICHAEL MONAGHAN examined.

Mr. Michael Monaghan.

12039. CHAIRMAN.—You are Chairman of the Carlow Urban Council?—Yes.

12040. You have heard most of our conversation this morning?—Yes.

12041. Is there anything that you would like to express your views on, either in addition to what has been said or in opposition to what has been said?—I may say I am in favour of what has been said; at all events I would be very strong on boarding out children, and I would have the mothers sent away from the workhouse, and to their own homes—that is the mothers of illegitimate children.

12042. Do you think in many cases the mothers would like to be received into their own homes?—I don't think there would be a good many.

12043. You are aware, of course, of the shrinking that there is in the country from poor girls who default in that way; do you think they would be welcome home again?—I think in some cases they would.

12044. Do you think the girl would even be willing to go home and leave her child to be boarded out elsewhere, or would you be rather disposed to think that the child would come to be boarded out with the mother herself?—I am afraid that would not be a good arrangement; I think the best arrangement would be to have the children boarded out as the present orphan children.

12045. In a district remote from the mother?—Yes.

12046. Do you think the mothers would agree to that?—In some cases perhaps they might not.

12048. Why not the first time; I may tell you there is the greatest disinclination, and in many cases an absolute rule in some of these penitentiaries, against taking any but the first case that fall; it is hopeless to take a girl that has fallen twice, but after the first fall, when they are in a state of regret and penitence, then they are in a hopeful condition for reformation?—In that case I would be in favour of having them sent to an institution of that sort; of course they might be able to look after them and get them supplied with a situation.

12049. And then if the girl got into a situation and had to pay for the support of her child she would feel that she was supporting the child—It was really under her influence so far?—If that system could be adopted it would be a very good one. I would be in favour of that.

12050. As regards tramps, have you anything to say; you don't see much of them in the towns?—No; but still we have many of them.

12051. What class of people have you coming here begging?—Very few at present.

12052. And those that you have what class would they be. I don't include musicians?—Most of them would be professional beggars.

12053. Would some of them be old people of the neighbourhood who have been here all their lives and who got a little trifle once a week or so from people who knew them all their lives?—Yes; there are a good many of them—poor, old, decent people.

12054. Then you have the tramp or person who sells the roads and comes into the shops perhaps asking for assistance; would they go into the shops?—They would frequently, and when under the influence of drink as very boisterous.

12055. That is an undecorous class?—That is.

12056. Are there men and women and children in that class?—There are.

12057. Would you be in favour of taking the step suggested, of taking these people off the roads and streets altogether and putting the children with small farmers or people who would bring them up properly?—I don't think farmers would care to have people of that class.

12058. Take the little children?—Unless they get them very young; if they were grown up they would not be desirable people.

12059. If they were old enough to have got used to a bad life they would be undesirable?—They would.

12060. In that case would you propose sending them to an industrial school?—I don't consider it a matter, but I should say yes.

12061. Would you consider it a desirable thing to get that whole class—men, women, and children—off the roads?—I think it would be a very difficult thing to do unless you had them looked up.

12062. Supposing you look up the father and mother and take the older children and send them to an industrial school, and take the younger children that are of tender years and have not learned any wicked ways, send them to be boarded out with a view of trying to kill the class or, at least, transform the class into decent citizens, and prevent the young people growing up as members of the same class?—It would be a good thing, but who would be responsible for their maintenance?

12063. At present they are preying on the whole community—they are a very heavy charge. If, according to the suggestions we have got, you put the grown-up people into an institution their labour would be of value and would go towards the reduction of the cost of the establishment?—That might be, but, as a rule, they are people of very little use for anything.

18963. They are the worst class of the community, but the worst of it is they are rather increasing—I thought they were decreasing.

18964. Well, there are a great number of children still on the road; the old class of mendicant or beggar is said to be falling off very much, but we have had evidence lately that there is a very large increase in this army of sturdy beggars owing to disbanded soldiers and others of that sort joining them; have you observed any people that you would suppose to be soldiers?—Yes; I think they come frequently to the workhouse.

18965. And if they come to the workhouse the prospect is that they go elsewhere and beg as they go along?—Yes, they do. Of course as long as they are let go about the country as they are you will always have them, the children will be brought up in the same habits as their parents; if you can catch the young children and train them right.

18966. You would be willing to try that?—Yes; I think that would be a very good idea.

18967. Is there anything that occurs to you to say about the sick?—I think they are pretty well provided for in this town. Of course I would like to see hospitals and infirmaries as comfortable as possible for old people.

18968. And cut off from the workhouse?—Yes.

18969. That would be so if you could keep all those classes out but the sick?—That is the way I would like to see them, for a great many respectable people don't like to come into the house on account of the name it bears. We find that once when people come in they are not likely to go out; they lose the sense of shame.

18970. Dr. BROOKS.—Is that a general feeling, do you think?—I think it is.

18971. The hospital acts as a feeder for the workhouse?—Yes; it would be well to discourage the people as much as possible, and to relieve them outside in every possible case—out-door relief.

18972. You would not propose an indiscriminate distribution of out-door relief?—Oh, no.

18973. CHAIRMAN.—Do you know whether out-door relief is pretty stationary in this union?—I think it is pretty steady; it increased a little a few years ago.

18974. In the union-at-large charges?—Yes; some of the divisions went up a little and some went down a little.

Mr. EDWARD P. HUGHES examined.

18975. CHAIRMAN.—You are Chairman of the Shrewsbury Rural District Council?—Yes, sir.

18976. That is altogether, of course, in the Queen's County?—Yes.

18977. It comes right up to the river Barrow?—Yes. Regarding the evidence of Mr. Harlow, I entirely concur.

18978. You followed what he said?—I followed what he said regarding the workhouse system. I altogether agree with it. Of course I am opposed altogether to amalgamation as far as the Carlow Union is concerned.

18979. Your division would rather remain in Carlow than go into one of the Queen's County unions?—I fancy so.

18980. It has been proposed in different counties that the administrative county, that is the area dealt with by the County Council, should also be the area for Poor Law purposes, and unions and rural districts should practically coincide, and that a rural district like your own should be for Poor Law purposes in the Queen's County instead of being attached to the union of another county; what is your own view about that?—I think the system as it stands at present in connection with Carlow for Poor Law purposes is working very satisfactorily.

18981. Where do you live yourself?—I live in the County Carlow myself, although I am rated in the Queen's County.

18982. Have you to attend juries in Maryborough?—I have.

18983. How do you go to Maryborough?—I go by rail to Kildare.

18984. That is a long journey?—Yes. I have one point to make regarding the county infirmary; I think the people of my district would derive great advantage if they had the right of entry into the county infirmary in Carlow, provided there would not be a rate levied on them for the maintenance of the county infirmary at Maryborough; they are a good deal nearer to Carlow than Maryborough, and it would be a great boon to the people in my district.

18985. You would like to get off that portion of the county rate in Queen's County that goes to keep up the Maryborough infirmary, and you would be willing that your District Council should be rated for the Carlow infirmary?—Provided they were not rated for Maryborough; it is twenty miles from here to Maryborough, and it is a great inconvenience in case of accidents to have to be driving thence to Maryborough.

18986. But they do receive your urgent cases here?—I don't know that they have the right to do so.

18987. I mean as a matter of practice?—I could not give an opinion on that.

18988. I know a great many cases where they do; I think they receive a lot of Tyrone cases from Strabane into the County Donegal hospital at Lifford.

Mr. MURKHAUGH.—They do; but they raise the same objection. Would not that be met if you got the Queen's County to pay for any of your patients received into the Carlow Union. If your Guardians were empowered to send to the Carlow infirmary their patients instead of to Maryborough and pay for the upkeep here would not that meet the difficulty, it being a county charge—the County Council to pay?—My district at the present time is paying a rate for the maintenance of the Queen's County infirmary.

CHAIRMAN.—I don't think you quite follow Mr. Murkhaugh's suggestion; it goes on your lines.

18989. Mr. MURKHAUGH.—It is a point I tried to get out of another witness, in regard to inmates that would come to the workhouse of a neighbouring county that was convenient to them. If your Board of Guardians had the power to send to Carlow infirmary patients and had also the power to ask the County Council of your own county to pay for their upkeep here, would not that get rid of the disadvantage?

CHAIRMAN.—That Carlow infirmary should send a bill to the Queen's County secretary at Maryborough for the rate per head for the amount of the average cost—I think that system would work very admirably.

18990. The Queen's County would be sharing in the burden of your union?—What I want is to get the advantage of the Carlow infirmary provided we are relieved of the Maryborough one.

18991. CHAIRMAN.—You pay a rate at present for Maryborough; you have a sick men who cannot go to Maryborough, so he comes into the Carlow infirmary, you don't pay anything for the infirmary, the bill would go to Maryborough, and Maryborough would pay out of the rate which Shrewsbury pays to the Queen's County infirmary?—Of course if you can work on that system it would be satisfactory.

18992. Mr. MURKHAUGH.—You surely would not expect Carlow County to take care of your sick in their infirmary without giving them any return?—Not at all.

18993. By this method you will not have to give any more than if they were sent to the county infirmary of your own county; you would get the same benefit out of the county infirmary rate, whereas at present you get no benefit—I don't think the ratepayers of my district would be satisfied to contribute towards the support of the Carlow infirmary.

18994. It would be paid for out of your rate; the Queen's County would still make a little on you perhaps, but still you would get value?—I don't like that.

18995. If you had enough people sick you would make money on the Queen's County?—We have not many urgent accidents, but, of course, they may arise at any time; if there was an arrangement that would work on a satisfactory basis I think it would be desirable.

Mr. MURKHAUGH.—It is an absolutely simple way of getting the thing done; I cannot see how you cannot see it.

18996. CHAIRMAN.—You would not have to pay a penny more, but yet your people can be treated in the Carlow infirmary?—If that can be worked out on a satisfactory basis I think it would be desirable.

McNay.

Mr. Edward P.
Hughes.

May 3, 1904.

Dr. W. H.
O'Meara.

Dr. W. H. O'Meara examined.

I am Surgeon to the Carlow County Infirmary, and I desire to bring forward just in a short way the amount of work that is done there. This is an extract from the annual report for 1903-04. During the year 1903 207 extern patients were treated in the infirmary and 1,366 extern patients attended and received medicine and advice. That is not exactly perfectly true, because some of the extern patients who received medicine and advice came from Queen's County and County Kildare, and were obliged to pay for their medicine, but received advice gratuitously. Forty-eight surgical operations of the major character were performed; these operations were various amputations, appendicitis, hernia, laparotomy; a very large number of minor surgical dressings were done daily; in the infirmary people attend not only from Carlow but from Queen's County and Kildare.

18967. CHAIRMAN.—What would the cost of these dressings come to in the year?—Trivial, because patients who are admitted from the adjoining districts in the County Kildare and Queen's County are obliged to pay for their maintenance.

18968. That is, personally pay?—Yes; the committee of management decide.

18969. To what extent do they pay?—From 5s. a week to two guineas, according to their means.

18970. Have they ever been asked to pay the full sum?—Yes.

18971. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Do you take in any of the poor of the adjoining county?—With the consent of one of the committees of management they must have a recommendation; the committee of management decide, or I believe approached, the County Councils of Kildare and Queen's County to contribute an annual sum towards the maintenance of the infirmary, and agreed to treat the patients from their districts. Our bishop, who was present at one of the meetings, agreed with me, or I think suggested, and I agreed with him, suggested that we should have a radius of six or seven miles round, taking in the little town of Castlebliss, which would be a great boon to the people there, who have now to send their accident cases to Kildare.

18972. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Well, we have been told that could not be done under the existing law?—I don't know that; that was the suggestion of the committee that the County Councils should contribute a proportionate sum.

18973. CHAIRMAN.—You heard Mr. Murraghan's suggestion just now that in the case of very poor or destitute people who came into that infirmary that payment should be made by the County Council of Queen's County towards your infirmary, so that in that way the district would get value for its taxes?—I think that would be an admirable suggestion.

18974. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—There is in the North a case similarly situated to your own—the infirmary of one county is almost on the borders of another, and a great many patients belonging to one county go to the county infirmary of the other; the committee of the first county came to the County Council of the other for assistance, but when inquired into it was found there was some legal disability, and the Council were unable, though willing, to give some help?—I was not aware of the legal disability.

18975. CHAIRMAN.—Do you think it would be a good thing for us to make recommendations that would result in a change of the law?—I think so; it would be a great comfort to the poor of the adjoining districts.

18976. There are a great many cases in Ireland where the county infirmary is almost on the border line of the two counties—Waterford, for instance, is close to the County Kerry?—A short time ago a man was thrown off a cart and a wheel passed over his legs, one of them had to be amputated afterwards, and this occurred on the very borders of Kildare and Carlow, within two and a-half miles of the town.

18977. Dr. BOGGER.—Have you sufficient funds?—We have been cut down from £700 to £600, and we find it barely sufficient.

18978. Why were you cut down?—The County Council thought we ought to work on a small scale.

18979. CHAIRMAN.—But you really want the £700?—We do, badly; modern surgery cannot be properly carried out without expenditure; we have all the modern appliances, including the X-ray apparatus.

18980. In Queen's County they have £1,300?—They are much larger; we have only twenty-two beds; I think they have over fifty.

CHAIRMAN.—No; they have only thirty-two, or thereabouts, with twelve outside for fever, which are not used.

18981. Dr. BOGGER.—Do you find yourself much hampered?—Of course we do; we have to economise as much as possible, and as soon as a patient convalesces he must go out.

18982. CHAIRMAN.—But you go as far as to say that your practical assistance to the sick is cramped by want of funds?—I do.

18983. Dr. BOGGER.—You are limited in the taking in of cases sometimes?—We are very strictly full; we generally have an average of from fifteen to sixteen patients.

18984. Are there cases sometimes that you would take in, but knowing you are limited in means you cannot take in?—Certainly; but I cannot say exactly that such a thing has ever occurred.

18985. As a matter of fact, in every institution there is a certain amount of establishment charges which would not be increased in proportion to the increase in the hospital?—Certainly.

18986. So if you had a larger number of patients in you could treat them at a lower cost per head than at present?—I believe I could, but at the same time the strictest economy is observed.

18987. But I mean, in proportion to the increase, there would be a certain amount of deduction per head?—That is a necessity.

18988. If you had only five in of course your cost per head would be higher than it is on account of the establishment charges, so that the County Council would get good value by increasing?—Yes.

18989. CHAIRMAN.—They would get more value for their grant if they increased it?—Yes.

18990. Dr. BOGGER.—What is your nursing staff?—As a rule we have two nurses and a probationer. We are short a probationer at present. We have a staff nurse, assistant nurse, and matron.

18991. A probationer does not cost much—practically only her keep?—Yes; she comes free for two years.

18992. CHAIRMAN.—You don't give her a certificate?—No, I am not able to give one owing to the number of beds. Beggar-street recommends us for probationers.

18993. That would be another advantage if you increased the beds?—Yes. The training of the probationer in a small hospital like this is even superior to the training in a large hospital, because she has to do a lot of things that she would not have to do in a large hospital.

18994. Dr. BOGGER.—Do you get cases from the extreme ends of the county?—We get cases from down below Borris and beyond Tullow.

18995. Mostly for operations?—Principally operative and acute cases such as pneumonia and bronchitis.

18996. Have you any views on the question of consumption?—I have set apart a particular ward for tubercular cases. I have only one, principally for males.

18997. Is that for consumption?—Yes, the tubercular cases generally.

18998. But for the county at large what would you recommend for pulmonary consumption?—I would recommend a hospital to be established by all means if funds would permit.

18999. CHAIRMAN.—You think it is a great danger to the public health to have consumption allowed to go on unchecked?—I do, and now that we have succeeded so far in the treatment of consumption, I think we should go farther. There would be a magnificent site at Cloughgreagh, but I am afraid we have not the money for it. It is just on the borders of the county.

19000. Dr. BOGGER.—A nice site?—A splendid site; but I am afraid it is too large a place.

19001. CHAIRMAN.—The Queen's County people and there would be a nice site on the Heath, and the Kildare people were in favour of a site on the Curragh?—We have each our own little place.

Mr. Neeson.—If we all joined together it would be better.

Witness.—I think we should join.

19002. CHAIRMAN.—Kildare would be a convenient site?—Our site, I think, is better.

19003. Cloughgreagh would be an expensive site?—It has been a long time vacant.

19004. The adapting of it would be a tremendous thing to suit it for male and female patients?—It is a very large house, but the situation is so fine.

19035. It would want so many sanitary annexes to the different wards!—You will have to spend money wherever you go.

19036. I think you have a dispensary, have you not?—We have an extern department.

19037. Are you a dispensary doctor?—I was, in Carlow, for a number of years.

19038. The only thing I wanted to ask you was whether you saw much phthisis in your practice?—Oh, a great deal.

19039. And you think the provision of a sanatorium is an urgent necessity?—Yes, most desirable and necessary, when you are cognisant of the fact that people are recovering now who were located in the early stages. I was astounded to see statistics from Germany the other day that 75 per cent. were permanently cured.

19040. In first stage cases?—Yes.

May 6, 1904.

Dr. H. H. O'Meara.

Dr. FRANCIS P. COLGAN examined.

I am Physician to the Carlow Fever Hospital.

19041. CHAIRMAN.—What accommodation have you in that?—We have four wards, and we can accommodate up to about thirty; generally about twenty-four.

19042. What has been the largest number you ever had in the Fever Hospital?—In 1892 we had seventy-four, and last year forty.

19043. How many different kinds of fever would be there at the same time?—Scarlatina, typhoid, and measles at the same time, chiefly scarlatina—an outbreak in the workhouse.

19044. How did you manage to arrange?—We got trained nurses in.

19045. I mean about the sub-classification of the disease?—We had them in different wards. I quite agree with Dr. O'Meara about the sanatorium. I think there is more phthisis about Carlow than anywhere else. I have seen a whole family swept away.

19046. Dr. BROOKS.—Was it infection from each other?—Yes. If the first case was isolated, the probability is we could have saved the whole family. It seems to be very prevalent about Carlow. I come across a great many cases.

19047. You would not suggest the conversion of the Fever Hospital into a sanatorium?—You would have to provide another one. I think it is too endorsed.

19048. CHAIRMAN.—And too near the smoky of the railway?—Yes.

19049. Do you think it would be difficult to get people in the first stage to go a little distance?—I don't think so; they would be very pleased.

19050. They are glad to get to Newcastle and pay a certain sum, often very poor people. They will try to pay 7s. a week?—It is very hard to get them in.

19051. Mr. MURKIN.—Is that the minimum charge?—Yes; it used to be 5s., and they raised it to 7s.

19052. Dr. BROOKS.—You would not suggest that the fever cases from Bagenalstown and Tallow should go to the Fever Hospital?—There is no reason why they should not come. It would require an ambulance. It would not do to cart them by train.

19053. The furthest distance in the union is sixteen miles?—Bordering New Ross is a pretty good distance.

19054. That is sixteen or eighteen miles, but the number of cases coming from that would be very limited?—Yes. The worst about fever cases is that when they have to come a distance it is very hard to get them out of their houses. They would go more freely to a place that is nearer.

19055. CHAIRMAN.—Have you ever been obliged to use compulsion through the magistrates to bring people into the Fever Hospital?—I don't think we had. We frightened them, and that was enough. I am not a dispensary doctor, and don't come across them. We would want to have our staff improved at the hospital.

19056. What is your staff at present?—A matron, a trained nurse, and wardmaid, and when any case comes in I telegraph to Dublin for a nurse.

19057. Don't you think that is a fair working staff?—Yes, unless we had constant patients.

19058. What about your water supply?—We got in high pressure, but we have not got hot water up yet. They have been persisting it after this Commission. That is absolutely necessary, especially in scarlatina cases. They have to get baths frequently. It is the chief thing in the convalescent stage. If a little money was laid out on the hospital, it could be made very nice and comfortable. At present it is in a very so-so condition.

19059. Dr. BROOKS.—Do you find the Guardians are willing to do the necessary things?—The Guardians are very good. They generally give me anything I ask, but at present they are putting back things on account of this Commission.

19060. How long has that been?—For the last six months.

19061. CHAIRMAN.—But you feel quite easy in your mind about getting these improvements?—Yes, they will give them to me. They may write a few letters, but they generally give them to me afterwards.

19062. It is rather difficult sometimes to get a Board to look after infectious hospitals closely?—Yes, because some of them don't care to come.

Dr. Francis P. Colgan.

The Sitting terminated.

May 17, 1904.

THIRTY-NINTH PUBLIC SITTING.—TUESDAY, MAY 17TH, 1904.

At the Courthouse, Wicklow.

Present:—Mr. MICKS (Chairman); Mr. MURNAHAN, and Dr. COY BIGGER.

Dr. NORMAN
Thompson.

Dr. NORMAN THOMPSON, F.R., examined.

19053. CHAIRMAN.—There are three unions that have workhouses in the County Wicklow—Rathdrum, Shillelagh, and Ballyinglass?—You will look on anything I say as personal.

19054. You don't appear, then, as representing the County Council?—Not with any settled policy from the County Council.

19055. They have not given you any mandate to represent their views?—No.

Mr. Wynne (Secretary).—They expressed no views, and they nominated two representatives, but the other one would not come and withdrew his name, so I only sent forward the one.

19056. CHAIRMAN.—Now, would you let us have generally your own views in a rough way on the question of amalgamation of unions in this county?—Well, sir, my views personally are that amalgamation of unions in this county is not required, but I think it would be advisable with regard to the Shillelagh Union that some portions that once did belong to Shillelagh should be restored to it. I will give reasons for that.

19057. Where were they sent to from Shillelagh?—Part was sent into the Enniscorthy Union.

19058. That is to Wexford County?—Yes, and part was sent into Carlow, and part was sent to Gorey, another portion of Wexford, and part, I believe, was sent into the Ballyinglass Union; but you will have that certified to by some people who appear on behalf of the union. The electoral division of Moyasomb, which is only four miles from Shillelagh, was transferred to the Enniscorthy Union, and it is eleven miles from Enniscorthy.

19059. That is the central point?—Yes. The electoral division of Clonsilla is four miles from Shillelagh and sixteen from Carlow, and it has been put into Carlow. The townland of Mulkever, now in Gorey Union, is four miles from Shillelagh and nine from Gorey. Those places I am familiar with, but the electoral divisions of Clonsilla, Ballyinglass, and Ballyinglass I would like some Councilmen from the Shillelagh district to speak to. I believe they are a greater distance from Ballyinglass, the union in which they are now, than they are from Shillelagh. The reason I would recommend that they should be restored would be the benefit to the sick poor and the destitute. The distance from the union is very inconvenient, and the closer they are to the centre of the union of course the nearer they would be to the doctor.

19070. How far is Clonsilla from Newtownshandry?—About three miles.

19071. There is a hospital there?—I don't think there is.

19072. Yes, there is?—It is in the County Wexford. I don't know that.

19073. It is in the Enniscorthy Union, but it is not what you call an efficient hospital. It is an old country hospital?—I suppose it is the remains of a fever hospital. If it was in the County Wicklow I would be conversant with it, but in the County Wexford, it does not come before me in an official capacity.

19074. Is there anything as regards any other union?—No, sir. There is portion of the County Wicklow in which I reside myself—Rathdrum Union—and I could not recommend that that should be added to Rathdrum, although it is within the bounds of the County Wicklow. I think it is more efficiently managed by the Rathdrum Union, which is in the County Dublin, and I could not recommend any change in that, and I know that that is the personal opinion of all the representative ratepayers who come from that district.

19075. And of Bray too?—Bray too.

19076. It is only three or four miles from Rathdrum?—It is less than that; it is less than two miles from Loughlinstown. I would drive it in a quarter of an hour.

19077. You think Bray is sufficiently provided with hospital accommodation?—I do.

19078. It needs nothing further?—It supplies all the wants of that district, and it has come to my knowledge that two patients have come there from Rathdrum Union to Rathdrum who should have been sent to Rathdrum, which is twelve or fourteen miles away.

19079. Then you have other hospitals in the County Wicklow. You have the County Infirmary and Fever Hospital here?—Most efficient, both of them.

19080. That is in a transition stage at present?—It is in this transition stage that it is going to be greatly enlarged, and the County Council have given a large grant annually for twenty years, subject to the guarantee from some charitable people that a certain sum, a large sum of money it is too, would be subscribed, and that has been subscribed, so that it will be very much more efficient in a short time than it ever has been.

19081. Do many people go to the County Infirmary?—I don't mean from the west of the county, but from the south, from Arklow on one side and Bray on the other—I can get a written list of all the patients for you which appears before us, and it has been in my hands as chairman of the Finance Committee on several occasions, and I have looked at them. They come from all over the county except the west.

19082. And you are spending a good deal of money now with a view to making it an up-to-date hospital, where operations of all kinds can be performed?—Yes.

19083. There is a small hospital at Arklow?—That is a fever hospital.

19084. It is a good distance from any hospital?—It is a distance from Rathdrum—eight miles, I think.

Mr. Wynne.—There is scarcely ever a patient in it.

19085. CHAIRMAN.—Do the county support that?—Yes, we give some support to it.

19086. Did the county ever consider the question of making that a small cottage or general hospital?—The County Council has never had such a scheme before them.

19087. What would your own idea be considering the population of Arklow and the work carried on there and the large fishing population?—That as a medical man I would say they ought to be such a hospital in such a town.

19088. Have you been in the building?—I have never been in it. I am told it is an efficient building.

19089. It is a good little building if it was done up?—So I am informed.

19090. I rather struck us when we saw it that it was a pity to see such a hospital so well and healthily situated not doing much work?—I think it ought, but everybody does not look on it with the same view as a medical man would. I have a strong opinion that there ought to be such a hospital. There is another hospital at Newtownshandry which has been very useful in that district—a fever hospital.

19091. And is it working?—It is working.

19092. It is kept up by public charges?—We give them £80 a year from the county and the rest is private subscriptions, which they furnish every year to the County Council. Formerly the Grand Jury used to subscribe an equal amount to the amount that was subscribed from private donations, but that hospital is, of course, a long distance from Rathdrum.

May 13, 1904.

Dr. Moore
Thompson

that is Loughlinstown, and at one time I was a physician to that myself. I was dispensary medical officer there, and I cannot say what a benefit that has been in the past.

1904. You have got patients in from Roundwood?—Yes, and Kilsnade and Newtownmountkennedy, and it was used chiefly for infectious cases.

1905. You did not restrict it to infectious cases?—It was not. The very fact of the hospital being there was able to remove centres of infection and stop disease in several cases.

1906. Do you think such a hospital would be better confined to infectious cases?—I do, because I think a surgical case would be better treated here at the County Hospital.

1907. Take the fact into consideration that owing to the operations of the Public Health Act the amount of infectious disease is very much less than it used to be. Of course it is, and, and of a less virulent type.

1908. We find these hospitals empty in a great many cases over the country. Did it occur to you whether a small, almost an ordinary, cottage or isolated wing behind such a hospital as that, so as to utilize the existing hospitals for general medical and surgical cases, would not be a great advantage to the district?—Well, sir, I don't think any general surgical hospital ought to have infectious cases in it at all.

1909. In it, no; but take the case of Arklow, with six wards for medical and surgical cases, and they have a nice bit of ground outside there. Suppose they were to build a couple of wards outside, out off, which could be attended by a special fever nurse, got by telegraph, if fever occurred?—I think it would be most beneficial as a prophylactic measure.

1910. And leaving the hospital as it exists open for medical and surgical cases?—I think that would be most beneficial to the neighbourhood.

1911. Any isolated place that way that would be used as occasion arises is what you suggest?—That would be most beneficial to the neighbourhood.

1912. Would you say the same about Newtownmountkennedy Hospital that it might also be used?—Well, it is used. I have known it used in every kind of case except surgical cases. In fact, it was for that purpose it was erected formerly by private subscription. It existed since the '40s.

1913. Or earlier even?—I would not speak to that. I don't like to give evidence about what occurred before I was born.

1914. A great many of these began about 1867?—I know that this existed in the '40s.

1915. It was made under the old Grand Jury laws long before the Poor Law?—It was all started privately.

1916. With a county grant, I expect?—A county grant that existed for a long time.

1917. Is there anything else that suggests itself to you about hospital accommodation in the county or about the boundaries of the union?—Nothing occurs to me except what I mentioned about Shilleigh. Rathfarnham is a very large union, and to add to it would increase the difficulties.

1918. Then we might come to another aspect of the question, that is, whether changes under the Poor Law, apart altogether from amalgamation, could be introduced. Take your own workhouse that you know best—Loughlinstown. You have in that workhouse a large number of classes. You have got sick, you have got lunatics, aged, and infirm; you have got children at school, mothers with illegitimate children, able-bodied, which is a very small class other than these I have mentioned, and then you have got the tramps. If we go through these separate classes we might come to some view that would affect amalgamation in another way. As regards my lunatics, do you think the workhouse is a proper place to keep lunatics in?—I have a very strong opinion on that question of lunacy, and if you like I will give you my written opinion about that, and how they ought to be treated, and what ought to be done with them.

1919. We would be very glad if you would send us anything that would be convenient to you to send that we could consider with your evidence later on, but if you let us know now in a general way. Would you be in favour of retaining such lunatics in the workhouse?—I would not keep any lunatics in the workhouse at all. I would send them all to the lunatic asylum to be treated there in the best possible way. I hold very strong opinions as to the radical measures that ought to be taken to stop heredity.

1920. But that is a step outside our Commission. We had evidence from a doctor which struck us very forcefully to the effect that he considered a great many of the illegitimate births in workhouses were with mothers having weak minds?—I would say that the case had a great deal to say to it, and I would stop that by a simple operation.

1921. Mr. WILKINSON.—By separation?—No, sir, emasculation! I say it is all nonsense, because we are piling up an agency for our grandchildren, and it is very serious to see it growing up that way every day.

1922. CHAIRMAN.—I did not for a moment think you were not serious. Then the next class we might consider would be girls who come in there to be mothers of illegitimate children. I don't know whether you happen to have seen the evidence we have received in other places about these?—I have not.

1923. It has been suggested to me that it might be a good thing that workhouses should not be open for such girls at all in future, but that the Guardians should, instead of keeping them in workhouses, send them to one of the religious penitentiaries that are maintained by both of the main religions in this country. You have these penitentiaries carried on by nuns?—I did not know there was such a thing existing.

1924. Oh, there are. There are a large number in Ireland, and it has been suggested to us that the best plan would be when these poor girls have to leave their houses, say three or four months before the child is born, that they should be sent to one of these institutions and an endeavour made to reform them and give them a fresh start in life, and that the child should be boarded out, and that this girl, when she gets a situation, should pay for her child and pay for her own maintenance while she was in the institution so as to take the charge off the rates from the point of economy, and then from a point of humanity and Christian feeling, to give the girl a fresh start?—I think it would be a very Christian act if such a thing was carried out.

1925. That has been put very strongly to us, and we have had a body of evidence on the subject all over the country?—It has often struck me. The only thing is I know there will be a rush from the different religious institutions to get hold of the unfortunate girls to make the child of their own religion.

1926. That could not be done. The girl would go to whatever religious institution she belonged to?—If that is so, there could not be a better plan adopted, because, of course, the stigma of being born in the union attaches itself to the child, and it certainly does the unfortunate female no good.

1927. We find in our inquiries that when a girl comes to the workhouse and has a child she goes out after a while?—And comes in again and has another one.

1928. They have quite a number of children, these poor girls?—I know they have.

1929. And a girl who would go into the workhouse to have a child usually marries and lives all day and all night with women who have had two, three, four, or five children, and gets utterly corrupted?—Not the smallest doubt about it.

1930. You would be in favour of such a plan?—Of course I would, and to remove them from all the bad influences they would meet inside the walls of that place, and I think if it was done, not with a view to economy at all, yet that in future it would economy.

1931. That would also destroy that class of children—the illegitimate children?—Well, I don't think it would destroy them.

1932. I mean it would diminish their number to a very large amount?—I don't know whether it will diminish their number or not, but it will prevent them having the stigma attached to them.

1933. If you get a girl into the institution?—She won't repeat the offence you think; I don't think it will stop first births.

1934. On the contrary, some people are rather afraid it might increase the number of first births; if a child could be better placed and if a girl could have the offence, as they say, brushed up, it might lead to an increase of first births, but most of the witnesses we have examined would be willing to run that risk to see how it would turn out?—I think it ought to be carried out.

1935. Then another class we have would be the casual—the man who would go in and out?—The tramp.

1936. Not so much the tramp, but the man who would go in and out from a place like Kingstown or Blackrock or Bray, who would be out of work for one week and get work for another week, and then they are usually in receipt of relief: the question is what would be done with them and also with the tramp. The casuals, I think, they should get out-door relief if they are of good character.

May 17, 1904.

Dr. Norman

12120. Suppose they are people who are really not able to make a good living for themselves, owing to want of thrift, or too great a thirst, or reasons of that sort; supposing a man when he gets employed at a job, unleashing a ship or anything else you like; suppose he goes, and instead of spending his money according to his necessities, suppose he drinks it all the first week!—That man is suffering from a kind of lunacy; you cannot stop that man—he is a dipsomaniac.

12121. It has been suggested in the Bill which has been introduced in the House of Commons that the class of inefficient labourers who cannot support themselves for any considerable period of the year, but have to come upon the public rates, it has been suggested in the Bill that they should be put into what is called a labour colony—that is a large farm with workshops to which these men might be sent to work—I think the cost of running a thing such as that would be so great and the result would be so small.

12122. I was going to tell you they have started such a one in Belgium and there—I don't say it would be the case in this country—but in Belgium it is self-supporting?—I don't think it would be in this country.

12123. I think that is open to doubt!—The cost would be so great and the results so small, I would not like to recommend it.

12124. You would not recommend it for the casual in and out—I would not.

12125. Take the case of tramps—that large body of men with some women and children—who are strolling about the country from union to union, bringing up their children illegitimate and without human or Divine knowledge, do you think that those parents ought to be deprived of the children who are going about?—I do; I think it is a duty we owe to the children; I don't think any parental guardianship ought to be recognised at all; I would take the children from them.

12126. Would you take the children from some strong and lusty parents and let them go round the world to have more children again, or would you feel that it would be a proper thing that if a man and woman were such that they could not be trusted with the charge of their children, don't you think it would be a proper thing to separate them and keep them under restraint as long as their children were being supported by the State?—I do, and I think the child-bodied tramps ought to be made to do some labour.

12127. He would be detained under a magistrate's warrant while his children were being supported?—Of course the difficulty of that is that at present these tramps are, under the Vagrancy Act, liable to be proceeded against, but who is to proceed against him, who will take upon himself the odium of prosecuting him?

12128. The penalty is very small!—The penalty is very small, and, besides, anybody that is at all of a philanthropic mind does not like to be hard on a fellow that may be down on his luck.

12129. Have you seen many of these men tramping about?—I know they are the curse of the country, and intimidate farmers' wives and labourers' wives by demanding money and food from them—frightening them.

12130. It has been stated to us that a great many of these are discharged soldiers?—They are the class of men that naturally enlist either in the militia or for the short service, but I don't think it is the fact of their being soldiers that makes them tramps, but it is their natural tendency in life.

12131. And if a man has been serving for a number of years during the years he would naturally learn a trade or get employment, and if he is discharged from military service, might he not, naturally, turn to vagrancy?—He may if he does not come back to the army again and enlist in another name.

12132. So that they get two short services?—Yes; they get the smell of the barracks, and like to come back again; they know when they are comfortable.

12133. And those who don't get the smell of the barracks get the smell of the workhouse?—Yes.

12134. Do you think they are a despicable class to have at large in the country?—Most undesirable; but I don't attach any importance to the fact that some of them have been military men; I don't think it is the fact of their being military men that makes them tramps.

12141. But we have a large idle and vagrant class at present in the country quite distinct from the old beggars that used to go round the neighbourhood?—They were characters that never went outside their own electoral division.

12142. These are not disliked in the country?—Not a bit.

12143. Those are freely and heartily helped?—Yes.

12144. But those strolling strangers?—Yes; getting up at the workhouse at night and living in houses given up by the people, and in my neighbourhood there are two or three old landladies whose they regularly assemble and cook their food and eat, and become the women of the locality.

12145. Do not the police take any notice of them?—The police do take notice of them.

12146. When they assist their dinner?—They have prosecuted them on several occasions.

12147. But it does not result in that class being put a stop to?—Not at all; they are on the increase. Now, with regard to the children in the Rathdown Union, we heard a large number of the children sent, and since the Local Government Act came into force we have had a number of lady Guardians who are most philanthropic, and give up their mind to looking after the children, and have increased the number that have been boarded out with the most efficient result, and they supervise them and superintend them and examine and look after them every month.

12148. Most of these children are illegitimate, of course?—A great number are.

12150. Would you go as far as to say that no children ought to be kept in the workhouse, but all ought to be boarded out, or would you be in favour of extending the Guardians' power to board out any children who were in their charge?—I would board out every child that was healthy and had not to be kept in the hospital, because it is impossible to think that a child can be reared properly in a workhouse where there is a crowd of others.

12151. We have dealt with all classes except two, and the evidence is that they may be excluded from the workhouse; then you come to the sick and aged and infirm; now the aged and infirm are the greater body of the inmates—in Rathdown you have 287, and 141 sick only?—The aged and infirm are the larger class.

12152. Do you see any objection to putting them into one institution for a county or for several counties, or any other method?—From my experience, with regard to the Rathdown and Rathfriland Unions, I would not make any change, but I would make some sort of segregation of that class—a sub-division of that class—because there are in that class some that are really there out of no fault of their own, or of gentler birth than some of the others, and I would make it discretionary with the master to give them privileges, or to make some sub-division.

12153. What I want to come to is this, that you have the sick and the aged and infirm only there, and if you could bring all the aged and infirm of some areas together you would be able to effect great economies in administration and management; if you left the accommodation for the sick practically undisturbed in one union, and if you only left, we will say, in the union the sick wards you would then have it actually a district hospital?—You would have it a district hospital, but don't you see that that class of sick is always being added to from the other class of aged and infirm, so that if you had any central place in the County Wicklow where you sent from all the unions they would constantly have to be re-transferred back again.

12154. If they had them there it would be, of course, at the place where there would be the old hospital; supposing Rathdown were a centre for aged and infirm at Loughlinstown it would have its own hospital, it would also take over the sick and the aged and infirm from North Dublin and Rathfriland, or some portion that might be arranged?—You would constantly have to be re-transferring them back when they got sick to the original place they came from. When once they came to the sick classes they would have to go into the hospital back again; they would have to go into the hospital that would be at their door, but it would be always a charge against the old area unless you had a county rate, which is not generally approved of. I don't think it would suit.

19155. So if you had not that saving you would have those people charged while infirm to the extent they belong to, so much a head, and so much a head while sick if they had to be treated in the Rathdown hospital?—If it would tend towards economy.

19156. It would tend to enormous economy?—One said.

19157. Really, you would only have one staff doing what a large number of staffs do now?—If it had that tendency I would be in favour of it, but I think you will find there will be great jealousy in carrying it out between the different unions.

19158. Undoubtedly there would be a conflict of local interests and wishes, but economy would be some consolation to those who did not succeed?—It would to the general ratepayers.

19159. But not to the contractor?—No. With regard to the idiots, they are, of course, very much fewer than the lunatics, and I think they might be kept in the unions and separated altogether.

19160. If you were to get all classes but the idiots out of the idiots all over Ireland are not very generous—are not so kind people?—Quite the opposite.

19161. They might really be put in a central institution?—They ought not to be with lunatics at all; their life is the saddest in the world.

19162. The same epileptics?—They might always be with the idiots.

19163. Four hundred is all Ireland supported out of the rates; they might be provided for there?—I think Lady Meath has suggested it.

19164. Dr. Brogan.—Is there much consumption in this county?—Unfortunately, I suffer from it myself; there is a good deal of it.

19165. Have you any suggestion for the treatment of it?—I think consumptive patients ought all to be segregated, separated. I don't say that I would attempt any scheme to try and cure the consumptives that come into the workhouses, because they are too far advanced.

19166. But if there was a place provided for the early cases, do you think it would be avoided off?—I think, sir, after a time it would, because the people are beginning to understand the necessity for separating these cases and for the open-air treatment, and the benefit that accrues to them from it. Of course I know that it will be attended with very great additional expense, but nevertheless I think that if the expense is not too great that some step ought to be taken in that direction to reduce the number of infective cases that there are. I could show you one house now where members of people have died of tuberculosis in it—two generations—and there is one little child left. The mother is alive, and has re-married, and I begged of her to burn the house down. However the house was burned down without any intention, and I think the fact of that house being burned down has stopped the disease, because there has been no other case in the new house they have gone into.

19167. Would you suggest that there should be a sanatorium for, say, the County Wicklow and perhaps an adjoining county?—Well, there is a sanatorium in this county at Newcastle, but, of course, they come from all parts of Ireland to it, and the treatment there is very expensive and very expensive.

19168. And you know from your own knowledge it has done a great deal of good?—I know it has relieved a great number of the cases that are in there, but nearly all consumptive cases in their hospital stage will be improved by change of air and good food and rest and open air that they get there, but a great number of these cases lapse back again when they return.

19169. But some of them do not?—Some do not.

19170. A fair proportion that have been taken early do not?—They do not. The cases that succeed are the cases that are physically weak beings—you might liken them to a person in a commercial transaction that has not with a great financial crisis and cannot stand up then against any loss. Their physical resources are not able to fight against the disease; in fact their phagocytic cells are not numerous enough to kill the enemy.

19171. And, of course, cases like that cannot get the full benefit of the sanatorium treatment?—They cannot, and the cases that are in hospitals in the unions don't get proper treatment either, and they are dangerous to other people that are in that place. It is because they are a danger to the sound people that I would like to have them removed.

19172. So you think after all the additional expense would not be very great considering that they are kept at present in their later stages in the workhouse hospital and are a source of danger in those hospitals?—That is why I would not object to some extra cost, because I think the danger would be got rid of.

19173. Would it not be a great gain if you could save a number of lives?—I think a world.

19174. You spoke about the fever hospital at Newtownsmole?—£30 a year, you say, it costs?—Yes.

19175. Is it managed by the County Council?—It is not managed by the County Council, but the County Council elect a committee who manage it, and the committee meet and elect their own chairman. It formerly was altogether in the hands of the Protestant minister and a few of his own congregation and the gentry of that denomination who lived in the neighbourhood, and they got a grant from the Grand Jury; they applied, of course, here to the County Council to continue that grant and the County Council increased the grant and elected their own committee, which are half and half of each denomination, and they manage the place, and everything goes as smoothly as possible.

19176. Could you tell me how the committee is composed?—Half and half I think. I know that is the way it was elected at first, and I think it retains that condition still.

Mr. Wynne.—Practically.

19177. Dr. Brogan.—Is that a local committee elected by the County Council?—Yes.

19178. Are there many County Councillors on the committee?—I think myself and Mr. Simon Doyle are the only two.

19179. How many are on the committee?—Sixteen.

19180. The rest?—Some local gentry and the priests and curates of the neighbourhood and the elected Guardians of the people.

19181. And it works very well?—Oh, very well.

19182. Do the County Council manage the county fever hospital and county infirmary?—Well, they pay large grants and elect the committee in the same way.

Mr. Wynne.—Barely, about half nominated by the County Council and the other half by the subscribers.

19183. Dr. Brogan.—Does that work well?—Oh, very well.

19184. Do you think that is a better system than if it were altogether managed by the County Council themselves?—I do, and I will tell you why—I think we get a lot of private subscriptions we would not get otherwise, and we don't subscribe quite as much out of the rates.

19185. The county infirmary does a large amount of hospital work?—It is very useful. I am sure they would be glad if you would inspect it.

19186. Have you any other fever hospital supported by the county?—I cannot speak as to the rest of the county; I am not conversant with that, but I don't think there is; there are only the Arklow and Wicklow and Newsmo fever hospitals that come before us for grants through the County Council, so if there is any other fever hospital it does not get a county grant.

19187. How much do you give to the Arklow hospital?—£30 a year.

Mr. Wynne.—There is scarcely a patient in it; for five years it had two patients.

19188. Dr. Brogan.—Do you think if it were a poor hospital on the lines spoken of by the chairman it would be avoided off?—I think it would relieve the fever hospital in Rathdown.

19189. But as a general hospital I am sure it would be used.

19190. Do you think it would be well-spent money?—I do; I know that there are a large number of people, of the labouring class, who are glad to avail themselves of either the Fever Hospital or the County Infirmary here in Wicklow, who won't go into the hospital in the union, because the stigma of the union attaches to them, therefore, I think that if there was a hospital in Arklow it would be used largely, too.

19191. Would you like to see the other hospitals separated from the workhouse?—That I really have not made my mind up on.

19192. Would you like to see wards set apart for private patients?—I think private patients ought to be taken; I don't think they would come to the union hospitals.

19193. Not unless the hospital was separated in some way?—If it was within the same grounds they would not come in at all.

19194. CHAIRMAN.—If you took all those classes out

May 17, 1904.

Dr. Norman
Thompson

of the workhouse, and left nothing but the sick, and have it actually a district hospital, do you think there would be any objection to the better classes going in there as paying patients?—I think, sir, the small would be the very same, "You may break, you may shatter the vase as you will."

19195. Mr. MURKIN.—Considering that Arklow is the second largest town in the county, do you think it is getting a fair share in return for the contribution—a fair share of benefits for the sick?—I think it ought to get more; but there is a hospital there, and it is not full.

19196. There is practically no hospital—There is a little hospital there; and I am sure if numbers of patients would come into it, and they would show they were doing work, the County Council would grant a larger sum at once; they would not hesitate; there is the hospital, and for years the patients don't come in.

19197. At present, it would be irregular to bring medical and surgical cases into that hospital?—It would; it is only a fever hospital.

19198. As Arklow is a town of very considerable population, don't you think something ought really to be done with it?—I do; if there was a general hospital there, I think it would be valued largely.

19199. It seems to me, it has a very strong claim for some assistance, to help the sick?—If there is any hospital like that, there ought to be some works in it in which the patients would be made pay some small fees, anyway, because the system of medical out-door relief is being largely abused in this county; there are numbers of people who get medical assistance and medical out-door relief on red tickets that ought not to get it; that are not destitute paupers.

19200. CHAIRMAN.—Now even what you would call poor persons?—No, sir; that has come to my knowledge very often. I knew it when I was a dispensary doctor, and I know it now as a Guardian; I see these tickets issued to people who ought not to get them. So, if there is any general hospital started like that, there ought to be some scheme for pay wards, and they ought not to admit patients on the rates who are able to pay something towards their own relief.

19201. Mr. MURKIN.—Quite so; and something substantial that would meet the railway?—Something, anyway; I don't mean to molest them; that there would not be any great profit to the medical man from it; but to relieve the rates from an imposition that ought not to be cast upon them.

19202. CHAIRMAN.—You are speaking of contributions in aid of rates?—Yes; that farmers, and men who have stock, and hold a certain amount of land, ought not to get free relief on red tickets from doctors; and I know numbers of cases where they do get it.

19203. Mr. MURKIN.—Why does not the doctor bring that under the notice of the Guardians?—It is done over and over again, and nothing is done; but the ticket is cancelled, and the doctor then has the remedy of proceeding against the person who issues the ticket. But let me see the doctor that will have the pluck to do it.

19204. The doctors are not wanting in courage in this country.

CHAIRMAN.—You think they fear to do it?—If they did, a lot of them would lose some of their practice.

Mr. OWEN OSBORN, Ballynaglass, examined.

19205. CHAIRMAN.—I believe you wanted to speak as regards the proposed amalgamation of part of your union with unions in the County Kildare and County Carlow?—Yes, sir.

19206. What is your opinion?—All our people, both poor and ratepayers and Councillors and all, are greatly opposed to any change.

19207. Would you like to leave the boundaries as they are?—Yes, to change whatever. It would be very awkward for the poor people living in Grange district. I don't see how most of them could go to Athy; it runs up to Ballynaglass.

19208. Nearly as bad as coming to Wicklow?—Yes. They have to pass a high hill and go through Carlow district. I am sure it would be sixteen miles at the outside from Athy. It is eight miles from Carlow district to Athy, and I am sure it is four or five out 19209. Mr. MURKIN.—That might apply to private practice the same way?—And so it does.

19210. It would be the same thing, whether they got the tickets or did not get them?—Numbers of medical men, rather than make themselves unpopular, let the thing go on. This is a thing that the Medical Association has brought before the Local Government Board.

19211. CHAIRMAN.—We are not going into that. Well, we have got into it in this indirect way.

19212. A peep over the hedge?—Yes; but when you ask me whether it would be advisable to have a hospital in Arklow, I say it would be most advisable, but there should be some restrictions.

19213. In the County Farnagh and County Antrim Infirmary, within the last few years, nearly everybody who goes in now pays something; they say, that if a child comes in to be treated, at all events the child costs something from 6d. to 1s. a week, and it relieves the family budget to that extent; and they say, that should be a minimum; but that, if necessary, it should go up to 2s. or 3s. if a special nurse has to be got; and these bodies are very anxious that the law should be amended on our recommendation, so as to enable local managing bodies to recover such costs as they in their discretion think fit to assess?—Well, sir, I really approve of that; and one of the reasons why I think that ought to be adopted by the people who would go in there themselves would be this, that it would relieve them from the stigma of being destitute paupers, because they would pay some small amount, according to what they were able.

19214. That has been exactly the evidence we got in Farnagh, that it is popular with a great many people?—Yes; a man does not like to be called a pauper; an Irishman is a proud fellow, and does not like the stigma.

19215. He is a mixture. They would take some of that relief for nothing; but yet, if they got the opportunity they would like to pay?—They would rather pay. I know the local bodies will charge a very small amount.

19216. They won't press hardly?—Never will.

19217. Mr. MURKIN.—I suppose this county is so circumstanced, that it would be hardly possible to have it self-contained in the matter of Poor Law?—You cannot get over the back of the mountains.

19218. A good many witnesses, in other places, have spoken in favour of having the county boundaries for Poor Law matters?—I would put all that portion of the west into Carlow and Kildare.

19219. The mountain, of course, is a barrier?—Yes; it is terrible for jurors and County Councils, and everybody, to come here from that part; they have to go into Dublin and come down here.

19220. CHAIRMAN.—Whereas, they are committed to Naas and Carlow?—Commitment to Naas and Carlow.

19221. Mr. MURKIN.—If the Guardians were empowered to pay for their patients in adjoining institutions?—Naas or Carlow, I think they would snap at it, but then they would want to be relieved of their quota of contribution to the County Infirmary here, and I think it would be only equitable and right that they would be. Of course, that is a county rate and all over the county, but that would be easily separated.

to the boundary of Wicklow. I myself live in the Ballynaglass district, and that is the extreme end nearest to Athy, but it is nearest to Ballynaglass.

19222. But you all prefer Ballynaglass?—We all prefer Ballynaglass.

19223. Has the question of taxation any importance in the matter?—Yes, of course, money generally has.

19224. Is it a lower rate in Ballynaglass?—Yes.

19225. What is the difference of the rate?—About 4d. in the £.

19226. Is that on Poor Law purposes or road maintenance?—On both combined. We work our roads cleaner than they do in Athy.

19227. As regards Poor Law purposes, you would have to pay less in Ballynaglass than in Athy?—I could not really say that. I am taking the two rates as struck.

19228. Of course, the rates are struck for District

Council and for union charges—I don't know how the union stands. I think Ballyinglass is lower. Mr. Dagg is here, and will be able to inform you on that. Mr. Brown spoke in Nass about a self-contained county. I don't see how that could be managed. If you take the Queen's County, it runs up to the very boundary of Athy, and Kildare won't compensate them.

19229. CHAIRMAN.—Mr. Brown's idea—I may not be quite accurate, but what I fancy his idea—was that that portion of the Queen's County that went up close to Athy, that they would have power to send in their petition there, their poor into the Athy Union, at so much a head?—It was the paper I took for it, and that does not appear in the paper.

19230. I may be confusing it with some other witness, because we have had that question in a great many places, and that was the way in which it was suggested the difficulty should be got over?—There is no one in our district wants to change. We have a very well equipped union, and everything works very satisfactorily.

19231. Would you rather be in the County Wicklow than any other county?—I would.

19232. Even though you have to come over here to the Assembly?—We have not to come here to Assize; we live in Kildare No. 3.

19233. But the Ballyinglass townspeople have to come over here?—Yes.

19234. They don't like that?—I suppose not; it is a very difficult country to get through.

19235. Have you anything else to say?—I don't think there is anything else I have to say. My whole business was to oppose that amalgamation.

19236. Mr. Dagg is with you?—Yes. He travelled the other end; I came through Dublin.

May 17, 1904:

Mr. Owen
Comer.

Mr. J. R. Dagg, Clerk of the Ballyinglass Union, examined.

19237. CHAIRMAN.—You have three counties in your union?—Yes.

19238. And each rural district wishes to remain in the Ballyinglass Union?—They do.

19239. What would you like to say to supplement the evidence that has already been given?—Except to mention a fact or two. If you look at the map you will see that a radius of eight statute miles takes in all No. 3 district, that they are objecting to be changed. It is nothing personal to me, and if you take a radius of eight miles from Athy Workhouse it touches only the fringe of the district. Then the two large electoral divisions which are more adjacent to Ballyinglass than Ballymore are Carrigrohane and Grangeley, in the County Kildare, and the greater part of these divisions are in the Roman Catholic parish of Ballyinglass. It is their fair and market towns and the place they attend worship, so naturally they are prejudiced in favour of remaining there. From a county point of view I dread it would be well to have self-contained counties. I made out a statement with regard to the children born in the workhouse.

19240. Your point of view was rather favourable to the workhouse. I would not put it in the shape of being favourable to the workhouse, because I think the boarding-out system and the system of taking children from their illegitimate mothers and having them brought up would be better; but I don't think that the workhouse training has been altogether as bad as has been represented in some cases.

19241. I am sure you have cases of success in after-life?—Since 1865 there were 334 children born in the workhouse—155 boys and 179 girls—and probably there was 75 per cent. of illegitimate births amongst them.

19242. Or probably more?—At least 75 per cent., and of these who have grown to riper years we have at present in the house one man, who is nearly blind, and two women. One has an illegitimate child. She was a servant in Dublin. It was there she met her mistress, and she attributes it to a civil servant. Against that I may mention we have one of these children born in the workhouse who is a nun. A great many of them were trained as servants and got into good situations. The unmarried mothers we have in the house are persons who came in there, and unfortunately some of them have two or three illegitimate children; but really my experience is that a child who is reared in an orphanage, some children at all events, as just as likely to fall as a child reared in the workhouse. I have known servants taken out of the Strabally Orphanage.

19243. Not taking that particular form of falling, but taking the question of getting on in life, have you any instance among these 330 children of success in life? You gave me one of a nun?—The others are servants in respectable situations. I have known a workhouse child to become a presiding barrister.

19244. One case?—One case at all events in the workhouse, and I have known another who became an apothecary. There was a very great prejudice some years ago against employing a girl who was reared in a workhouse, and also against employing women who have illegitimate children, but owing to the scarcity of servants that has had to be got over. It would be a very good scheme, in my opinion, to have the children taken from the unmarried mothers and maintained, but I think the contribution towards their maintenance should be a very reasonable one. The system at present is that the unmarried mother remains in the workhouse until the child is reared; probably she may apply when the child is three years old to go out and take a situation. The average wages a farmer will give is 26 a year. She cannot get the child boarded at less than 2s. 6d. a week, and the result is she has nothing to clothe herself with. Many who make that effort have to come back until the child is six or seven years of age and able to do something. So if a child is taken from an unmarried mother the contribution should vary from 1s. to 1s. 6d. a week. They could not afford to pay more. There is one class I wish to make a suggestion about; it is the able-bodied married couples. They are not very numerous, certainly.

19245. They are chiefly of the casual, in-and-out class?—Yes. But we sometimes have an able-bodied married couple from the locality. The father, owing to ill-health, has to come into the workhouse and the home is broken up. That man is penniless when he comes in, and I think it is very hard to send him out in the same state, and the result is he remains in the house for a considerable period. I have a typical case in my mind at present. A man who remained with us for two years—he was a very handy man—did up the infirmary in dormers. He applied for a labourer's cottage that was vacant. The Guardians gave it to a better tenant—a man who was servant to a country gentleman. His wife and himself and six children cost us 23 a week for two years—that is £200. I think if the Guardians had power to hire out deserving cases like that, married couples who were known in the locality, and let their wages be put into a deferred fund until it amounted to 24 or 25. Then let a committee of the Board, with the workhouse master, be appointed to buy some clothing and furniture and utensils, and give him 10s. to start in life, that man and his family would cease to be a burden on the rates in a few weeks instead of two years.

19246. If a man were a deserving object, do you not think that the private charity of the well-to-do in the neighbourhood of Ballyinglass would be sufficient to give him a fresh start?—Unfortunately it is not. There have been in my experience about fifteen cases of that class.

19247. And would no one come forward to give the couple of pounds necessary to give him a fresh start?—There would not. Solomon says "the rich man has many friends, but the poor man is an enemy to his own relations."

19248. But even if his own relations did not do it, you would expect some of the people to come forward?—It would require a sum you would hardly expect the people to give. I saw that man before he was put out of his house, and the family had consisted of a bacon box mailed together. He had a patched quilt on it.

19249. How did he come down to that?—He was subject to frequent attacks of tonsillitis and was thrown out of work. I wanted him to get them taken out like myself, and he would not. He was afraid of the operation.

19250. That is the case of a delicate man, not of an able-bodied?—He is out for the last year and a half, and is self-supporting.

19251. As a rule private benevolence would come forward in most districts?—Private benevolence is extended more towards the better classes. If a cow dies with a small farmer a collection is made for him, but if anything happens a labourer he is left there.

19252. But the farmer for whom he worked?—He Dagg.

Mr. J. A.
Dugg.

was a general man who used to work with a shopkeeper in town, who had a farm, and sometimes drove his car.

19253. Would not the shopkeeper make out the few shillings?—Very few shopkeepers will advance more than 10s.

19254. You would be in favour of giving the Guardians power to start a man like that?—Yes, a privilege not to be repeated. With regard to the tramps, there is a distinction between the Irish law and the English law, and it creates a difficulty in dealing with those who are chronic tramps; that is, if you have a relieving officer who will not swear as is required by the section of the Irish Act that the applicant left one union and came to the other with the intention of applying for relief—that is the vital clause. The English system now is—19255. Of giving power to detain in the workhouse?—And if you had the system of ticket-of-leave and farm colony, and anyone who wishes to read "In Hardest England and the Way Out" will see how successfully a farm colony has been worked.

19256. That was rather the outline of the scheme which has since been adopted?—Yes. Our hospitals really are becoming somewhat availed of by the public generally. We have at present seven pay patients in our. Of course it would be a very good thing to make them separate institutions with separate entrances, and meet the wishes of the public in that way; but I find that the objection to them is dying out in our neighbourhood. We treated there the brother of a magistrate on my Board for fever. A clerk of Petty Sessions sent his son to us, and respectable farmers come in, and in cases where people are not able to pay the full average cost the Guardians only charge 2s. or 2s. 6d. towards it.

19257. We have received evidence in a good many places that such cases do now go into the workhouse hospital?—Yes. There is a great want certainly of some scheme for relieving poor persons. There is a great difficulty about it. Last week we had a case in which there was a consultation fee for a doctor attending a military case in the case of a labourer's wife. That cottage is on a twelve-acre farm, and if the farmer's wife is sick he cannot afford to get the dispensary doctor or local midwife—he depends on his handy woman. I really think there should be something done towards sending those persons who are often in greater need than the labourers.

19258. There is a Poor Law midwife there at present?—Yes.

19259. And in cases in which she does not get a red ticket or a ticket for her attendance she can go and charge a fee?—Yes.

19260. She would be available at a small fee for the farmer?—The usual fee they charge is 10s., and he can get a handy woman for 5s., and that is a consideration for him.

19261. Then in that case once a year or every two years it would be a case of the difference between 5s. and 10s.?—Yes.

19262. If there is anything in the nature of a return that you would like to send us about these children we would be very glad to get it from you, showing the way in which the workhouse children have done so well in Balmalcolm Union?—My idea is that children reared in the workhouses or orphanages of the poorest class generally are open to greater temptations than others, and it is owing to the circumstances in which they are placed. There are greater risks.

19263. Dr. N. Thompson.—Before he goes, there is one question I think you omitted. You asked him about counties. Mr. Dugg has spoken of the opinion of the people of the Balmalcolm Union, that they would like the union to remain there, but you did not ask him whether there would be any objection to being transferred to the County Council?—The matter was mentioned at one time, but did not take any definite shape. It was said it would be more convenient for the parents to attend in Naas than in Wicklow.

Dr. N. Thompson.—Aye, or in Carlow.

Mr. DENIS J. COGAN, M.P., examined.

19264. CHAIRMAN.—You are connected with the Rathfrim Union?—Yes.

19265. You have been present during our discussion this morning?—I was not here from the start.

19266. Before we go into details, what is the view of the Rathfrim Guardians on the question of the amalgamation of unions?—The view I gather is that they are strongly in favour of amalgamation.

19267. As regards their own union?—Their own union, of course, is the largest union in the county.

19268. They would take in Shillelagh?—I don't know as to the details of any scheme of amalgamation.

19269. But they would be in favour of an amalgamation scheme that would reduce the cost of administration?—Yes.

19270. They have not adopted any definite scheme, though?—No.

19271. They would leave that consideration to the Commission?—They would leave it very much to their representatives.

19272. What would your view be?—I expressed my view yesterday at a meeting of the Rathfrim Rural District Council, that I think there is room for some improvement towards economy in administration in the county, and I also think that it is possible to administer the county within its own borders for Poor Law purposes.

19273. A self-contained county for Poor Law purposes?—Yes, but I don't know whether I would be permitted to go into what I consider a scheme towards that end of my own, what I would suggest.

19274. We would be very glad to hear it?—First of all, I think that the relief of able-bodied paupers within the walls of any institution should be entirely abolished. That being so, we have three buildings in the county now called workhouses, but they are really not workhouses at all. I would convert two of the existing buildings into hospitals or hospices, or whatever term you may apply to them, for the infirm and aged and sick. I am in favour of an extension of the outdoor relief system. One of the three ought to be converted into an auxiliary asylum, a county asylum for imbeciles and harmless lunatics.

19275. At present they go to Ennisceorthy?—At present they remain in the workhouse.

19276. But I mean the lunatics?—They go to the Richmond.

19277. Mr. MURPHY.—There are still a large number in the workhouses?—There are a large number of harmless lunatics in the workhouses, and we have a number of harmless lunatics in the Richmond Asylum which at present cost the county about 500 per annum. I believe if we had a county asylum for that class of lunatics we should be able to maintain them at a very much lower cost.

19278. CHAIRMAN.—And economies a good deal there?—Very considerably.

19279. Similar to the one started at Youghl, County Cork?—Quite so. I do think also that the capitation grant should be equalised, at least with the district asylums.

19280. 4s. 1s., or equal to half the cost at least for the maintenance of the patient.

19281. Mr. MURPHY.—That is to say, if the inmates were taken out of the asylum and put into an auxiliary, the same capitation grant should be continued to them?—Quite so. There are a number of this class of patients in Rathfrim Poorhouse at the present time, and they are very badly placed there. The medical officer of the Local Government Board made a very strong report about a year ago on the condition of these patients. I look upon their condition at present as very bad, no matter how the Guardians may endeavour to ameliorate their condition. The surroundings and the construction of the building itself, everything prevents them from being cared for in the manner in which they ought to be cared for. Therefore, I think it is highly desirable, in fact, absolutely necessary, that we should have in the county an asylum for that purpose. I would convert one of the existing buildings, and I would suggest Shillelagh, for we have Rathfrim on the east and Inchebeg on the west, as houses for the aged and infirm and sick, but at the same time I think, seeing that there may be a necessity for a fever hospital at the south end of the county, I would leave the fever hospital that is attached to the present workhouse at Shillelagh intact as a fever hospital and administered as a fever hospital.

19282. The fever hospital is a fine building, in good repair. Would it not do as a general hospital?—It would do, of course, for a general hospital, but whether the necessity would exist for a general hospital or not I cannot say.

12282. Would it not be more economical and just to build a cottage hospital that would do for fever, or use a wing of that?—Yes, quite so. It might be well to maintain the hospital there as a general hospital, and take a portion of it for fever purposes.

12283. CHAIRMAN.—Otherwise they would have to go very long distances to Rathfriland?—Or to Balmalcolm on the other side. Rathfriland itself is well suited for the matter of hospitals, for it has the County Infirmary and the County Fever Hospital and the other hospitals mentioned. And so, conveniently. If that object were achieved, I would revert to the system of dispensary committees managing committees for each dispensary district.

12284. Before you leave that, do you think there would be much economy? You would keep up Balmalcolm for the aged and infirm, Rathfriland for the same purpose, and Shillelough for lunatics. You are still keeping up the same institutions with large staffs—I would appoint for each institution a medical officer superintendent or other who would act as secretary to the managing committee. I think the managing committee for each of these institutions ought to be appointed by the County Council.

12285. That is, for the institution at Rathfriland. Instead of having Boards of Guardians you would have it a managing committee?—Yes, appointed by the County Council composed of elected representatives, that is, Rural Councillors and other persons outside; a certain limited number always, ensuring to the elected representatives a majority on the committee. To that committee I would give power to appoint their own medical officer, who should be a resident medical officer, residing in the vicinity of the institution itself, and he should have the management of the institution in a similar way to the resident medical superintendent of asylums, and he should act as the secretary to the committee of management, and this committee would have the appointment of that officer and his assistants and nursing staff.

12287. Mr. MURPHY.—What advantage do you see in a committee appointed by the County Council over the present Board of Guardians?—I see it in this way that if you split the county into two sections only, east and west, if the members were elected on the present system for electing Guardians, the Boards would be so large that they would be too ponderous.

12288. What is the need of any change of area? Could not the area continue the same as at present?—Of course, you will have to alter the area. If you convert Shillelough Workhouse into a lunatic asylum, you would do away at once with the present Board of Guardians—that is the Guardians for Shillelough.

12289. Not necessarily. Could they not continue still to administer the Poor Law there in their union as they do at present? Would they not have to look after the infirmity, and could they not pay per capita for the keep of their inmates wherever they would go? For instance, the children if sent away, also for the lunatics of their particular area, don't you think it would complicate matters if you made a change such as you suggest?—I was about to suggest as part of the scheme that all the patients from each of the dispensary districts should be paid for per capita, provided you give to the dispensary managing committee the management of the poor relief system for their dispensary district. They, of course, would send their aged and infirm and their sick to the district institution west or east, as the case might be, and they then should pay per capita for the support of those patients that they would send. I think that would be the fairest way instead of as at present—that there should be a uniform rate, and that each dispensary district should pay for the number of patients it sends into an institution of the kind.

12290. I want to know where you see the advantage in taking out of the hands of the Guardians the administration of the poor relief of their particular area and handing it over to a body of people partly selected by the people and partly selected by the County Council. I want to see where the advantage comes in. Don't you know that local interests are more carefully looked after by local men, that they have a knowledge of the surroundings and condition of the people and everything, whereas if you asked the County Council to appoint a committee some of the members they appoint may not be able to attend or may not take an interest in local concerns. For instance, we experience that now in the County Tyrone. We find men are appointed there to the Infirmary Committee who hardly ever attend. The attendance is from the locality where the institution is, with the result that the outlying districts are entirely neglected.

12291. CHAIRMAN.—You mean local committees, I suppose?—It would not be a local committee if it were for one half of the county; regard should be had to a fair representation from each part of the county. You might, on the other hand, give the management of the concerns to each dispensary committee, as each dispensary committee would have an interest in the proper management of the place, sending patients there. That would be, perhaps, the better managing body. But the difficulty with the present elected Guardians forming a managing committee for an institution which would embrace half the county you can see at once. Guardians travelling from the north or south and would have a long distance to come, and they won't come, and the present experience is that although there are sometimes about seventy members on the Rathfriland Board, yet at the Board meetings held on days on which there is no District Council meeting not more than three or four of the local men attend.

12292. Mr. MURPHY.—You seem to think that it is absolutely necessary to change the area of change. There is no necessity for it at all?—Not necessarily, if you maintain the present system of the Poor Law.

12293. In order to continue me to make any recommendation for a change in the present conditions, I would like to see some advantages in your point, which I confess I don't see. I would like to press the point further. I would ask the Commissioners to bear in mind that these institutions, under the scheme I propose, would no longer be workhouses or Poor Law unions.

12294. CHAIRMAN.—You really would abolish the unions?—I would pull the whole system up by the roots, and in doing that it would be necessary also to alter the law in regard to rural districts within a county.

12295. They might stand. They are put up for a different purpose—roads and other matters?—Except that they are the sanitary authority, of course they might stand. You might not interfere with them at all.

12296. We have no power to interfere with these. If dispensary committees were appointed for each dispensary district, and if necessary that the dispensary districts might be altered in order to have each district of an average size, having regard to the area and valuation.

12297. Mr. MURPHY.—But having District Councils at present, having the body on the spot, and remembering that they perform almost identical duties, what is the need of establishing another body?—The District Councils need not go there at all if they don't like to, and they ought not to go there. I hold if you are going to change these institutions into nursing institutions pure and simple, the District Councils ought not to have anything to say to them beyond the fact that they are the elected representatives of the people.

12298. CHAIRMAN.—You would make these county hospitals?—Or hospitals.

12299. Mr. MURPHY.—What is the advantage of making the change?—I would give to the dispensary managing committee of the dispensary district control of and management of the Poor Law relief.

12300. And you would take it out of the hands of the public authority and give it to people who are not responsible to anybody but the central authority? Where do you see the advantage of that?—Of course, they would be responsible if they are appointed by the Rural Council.

12301. They are elected on a very different basis to the Guardians?—No, because they would be appointed by the Rural District Councillors themselves.

12302. County Councillors, you know, are elected on a very wide basis. These are the men to whom you would give all power?—No.

12303. You said the County Council should appoint the committees?—To manage the hospitals.

12304. To manage the dispensaries?—No, that the Rural Council should appoint committees to manage the dispensaries.

12305. Oh, they are the people you would give the power to?—Yes; each District Council, could it not be continued as at present, just as well? I say the managing committee may consist wholly or partly of Rural Councillors.

12306. CHAIRMAN.—Your idea is that you would abolish the Poor Law system as it exists and have all the hospitals county institutions with part powers to the rural districts?—Yes.

19325. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Not county institutions, but rural district institutions, he says he wants the District Council to appoint?—No, Mr. Murkaghan, I say the Rural Councils should appoint the dispensary committees, and that the County Councils should appoint the managing committee of the hospitals.

19326. And why the County Councils appoint? Why not the District Council, who have to pay for the upkeep of the institutions?—It is a matter of opinion; I would not object.

19327. CHAIRMAN.—You would go so far as to make the cost of these hospitals and hospices a county charge?—No, sir, I would not. I say each dispensary district ought to pay per capita for the support of their patients that they send in.

19328. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—And pay for the support of their poor and sick? Should they not have the selection of the people who would administer the money?—That might follow, but the County Council is the administrative body for the whole county, and they appoint at present the laymen committees for the management of the lunatic asylum, and appoint committees for the management of the County Infirmary and other things of that kind; but the difficulty about the Rural Councils appointing is that you will have more than one Rural Council to appoint a managing committee.

19329. CHAIRMAN.—It might be a joint committee?—It might.

19330. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Do you see any economy in the scheme you propose? Do you think the rates would be lowered and the administration better?—I think the administration would be infinitely better, and I see no reason why it should not be much more economical, because at present there are a certain number of able-bodied persons maintained in workhouses, and there are casuals. Our experience with regard to maintaining these people outside as against inside is that they can be maintained for a third of the cost outdoor as compared with indoor, and their moral surroundings are much better.

19331. That has nothing to do with the question of the body that administers the relief. Are not the Guardians willing now to give outdoor relief where cases are deserving, and are they not just as willing as a committee would be if there was a committee partly elected and partly nominated? Are not the present Guardians just as willing to give assistance in that way where they think it useful as any body that may succeed them?—I quite agree that the Guardians are willing to do a good many things provided that they had power to do so, but their powers are very limited under the existing Poor Law, very considerably limited as regards outdoor relief, and they are bound to do certain things under the present law which ought to be abolished—that is, if a family consist of father and mother and three or four children. If that family becomes destitute, that is provided the father is thrown out of employment, unless he gets a certificate from the medical officer that he is sick, he is not entitled to outdoor relief. Of course, I know also that the law is broken very many times in that direction because the good-natured medical officers are humane men and don't like to see a man starving or come into the workhouse. The only other alternative is that he himself must take his family into the workhouse. A family of eight persons, as Mr. Dagg pointed out, which cost £40 a year to maintain in the workhouse, might be maintained for £8 out of it.

19332. Therefore you are in favour of an extension of the outdoor relief system?—Yes.

19333. There is a danger that it might become too widespread and become even a greater tax than it is at present?—I don't think so, if you give the management of the outdoor relief system into the local committees, into the hands of the dispensary committees. I do think such dispensary committee, being a local body, having local knowledge, rather than a Board of Guardians like Rathfriland, that takes in nearly half of the county, would administer outdoor relief more judiciously, necessarily, and at the same time more economically, than a large body like the Rathfriland Board could.

19334. So you favour a narrowing of the area of management from the union to the dispensary district?—I do.

19335. CHAIRMAN.—What limitations, if any, would you put to the Guardians' discretion in considering outdoor relief applications? What class would be eligible for relief, in your opinion, for outdoor relief?—People thrown temporarily out of employment, many times in the winter time when it is impossible for people to maintain their employment for a short space of time anyhow.

19336. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Would you still make distinction the test?—Practically.

19337. To any destitute person, any person who would be qualified to get relief in the workhouse, you would give outdoor relief?—Quite so; I would not extend it any further than that.

19338. You would not approve, as some of the witnesses said, of making poverty instead of destitution the test?—There is a danger, to be sure, when you make it elastic, but personally I would approve of it, but from the point of view of economical administration I don't know that it ought to be done.

19339. You would be satisfied, at all events, with destitution as the test?—I would. I think it would be a great advance on the present system, but I am afraid we would be getting into philanthropy.

19340. That, of course, is the danger?—I agree entirely in the suggestions made with reference to the children.

19341. And the women who come in to have children?—Yes. What you were talking of was suggested in other places, I think, would be a most excellent thing—that these persons should be sent to penitentiaries, and that their children ought to be taken from them.

19342. Would you be in favour of enlarging the powers of Guardians to board out children whose parents could not take charge of them?—I think all children ought to be boarded out from their earliest infancy.

19343. Therefore, you would approve of an amendment of the law giving the Guardians such powers?—Yes. I think the present system of bringing up children within the walls of the workhouse is a most reprehensible one, and has tended towards nothing but the moral improvement of the people; but I don't agree with those persons who say that if they were sent to a penitentiary they might afterwards be called upon to pay for their maintenance or contribute towards their maintenance while they were there and the maintenance of their children.

19344. Still, if they were willing to do it?—After all, I don't know. I am afraid the arrangement is based on a good life afterwards would not be sufficiently strong, because when we consider what females are able to earn, the best intentioned of them, what they are able to earn individually, and the difficulty they would have in contributing, while they are earning, towards the maintenance of their child. Of course, I would call upon them if they got employment.

19345. For as much as they could reasonably pay in the opinion of those who were in touch with them?—After all, I don't think they ought to be called upon to pay anything while they were in the penitentiary.

19346. That should be free for life?—Yes.

19347. But as regards the support of the children?—You maintain them at present in the workhouse for and their child, and get nothing from them.

19348. Therefore you would give them the period in the penitentiary free?—Yes.

19349. And you would like to recover the cost of the child as far as they could pay it, either up to the full extent or as far as they could go?—While they would be in employment, and I also think that the children sent out ought to be sent out to nurse at once, and maintained until they are seven years of age at least, and sent then to industrial schools.

19350. Why do you prefer an industrial school to the ordinary bringing up of these children and drawing them into the ranks of farm labourers?—I think they are better looked after in the industrial school; they are better educated.

19351. Would you prefer the industrial relief system to the boarding-out system for children?—For growing children I would.

19352. Supposing they could go there at four, five, or six years of age, would you prefer an industrial school training for a destitute child to bringing up in the country under the boarding-out system?—I would.

19353. Your evidence is unusual in that respect. I would advocate still further that when the child has finished his course in the industrial school, the commission of management of the dispensary district which he would come from should obtain reliable employment for that child, either boy or girl.

19354. Would you not then be giving advantage to destitute children such as could not be hoped for by the small farming and independent labouring class?—Would you not be taking care of the waste and stuff for better care of them than the parents of other children could take of them?—Society has to do something to preserve itself, and we are doing it already. We are taking care of the waste and strays and putting them into industrial schools.

19335. You would take very great care of these sending them to an institution to be taught trades, and then you would arrange with the Dispensary Committee of the district and put them in the way of earning. What small farmer's child, or what independent labourer's child, could hope for such advantages outside?—They cannot, of course.

19336. I was comparing that with the other system, the boarding-out system, which sends the child to a small farmer or suitable place to be boarded out, and that child naturally goes into the ranks of farm and agricultural labourers. Do you not think that as a sufficiently good provision for the waste and strays of humanity?—I think it is quite good enough, if I was satisfied that those children would develop into respectable members of society afterwards.

19337. The evidence we have received is very strongly in favour of the boarding-out system for that purpose. They say the results are so very good?—Of course, I am not prepared to quarrel with that.

19338. But in the absence of information of that kind you look to the industrial school as the most profitable one?—Quite so; but I am not wedded to that plan entirely. I thought it might be a wiser plan, but at the same time if general experience goes to show that these children, when they are brought up under the boarding-out system, become mixed up in the community as respectable members of society—

19339. The bulk of the evidence is to that effect?—It is so, I think no better plan could be evolved for their protection.

Rev. Canon Rookes examined.

19340. CHAIRMAN.—Are you the Rector of Withlow?—Yes.

19341. You are Secretary of the County Infirmary?—I am.

19342. It is at present in a transition stage—appears as about to be carried out?—Yes; we are going to build a few hospitals.

19343. And throw the existing place, as you have partly done, into an infirmary?—Into the infirmary.

19344. About how many patients have you passed through the infirmary in the last year?—I will give you the report.

19345. That will tell us the number of patients and the amount of subscriptions?—It gives the whole thing.

19346. And the number of cases, but it does not give the distances from which people come?—No, it does not.

19347. It does not show us how many people, if any, come from the west of the county?—We very seldom have patients further than Newmarket, Newmarket, and Andover. We had one man in from Shillingleigh for a short time. He was in twice, but, generally speaking, we don't get them.

19348. Do you ever get them from Bury?—I don't remember a case from Bury.

19349. You are aware there was an infirmary put at Bellingham originally?—There were two infirmaries in this county.

Mr. DANIEL CORDRICK, examined.

19350. CHAIRMAN.—You heard the evidence given by Mr. Oughton?—I did.

19351. Are your views on the matter pretty much the same as his?—No, they are not; I differ from him.

19352. In what respects do you differ from him?—I prepared a summary of my views. I don't see how the unions in this county could be amalgamated; but I think arrangements should be made to select one of the unions having most spare room and the least number of inmates, and have several wards prepared in that union for the reception of harmless inmates and epileptics—for the present system of placing them in idiot wards is cruel. Such unions sending patients to contribute a portion to their support. The deserving poor should, as far as possible, be supported by out-door relief, and especially old married couples 19353. Was there anything else you wished to say?—With regard to the vagrancy question, it is a very burning question in this country, and rapidly coming to the front in England. I think drastic measures are necessary.

19354. Have you seen Mr. John Gorst's Bill for the establishment of labour colonies?—I have not read it. I know the General Council of County Councils have had the matter under their consideration for some time, and discussions there have taken place on it. I think the opinion is in favour of the Continental system or something on all fours with it. I suppose the bill introduced is something of the same character.

19355. It is something on the Bellingham lines?—Yes; I think something of the kind ought to be done. All able-bodied vagrants ought to be obliged to work, and those who won't work ought to be treated as rogues and vagabonds, and the law ought to be suitably strengthened.

19356. You think, if the public has to support them, they ought to be made work?—Yes. I know if workhouses were abolished they would have no place to go to, and institutions of the kind should be established for them, and I think it would be a great improvement, even if you were to maintain the existing system of the Poor Law, if something independent of the existing system would be provided to deal with them.

19357. It is largely a police question?—It is, and I don't know what power the police possess, but I am afraid they don't interest themselves very much in it at present. I would be in favour of giving them extended powers. I took the trouble of getting some figures with regard to the expenditure in the various unions in the county, and the reason I advocate the absorption of Shillingleigh is because I find that the number of inmates in Shillingleigh is the lowest.

May 17, 1906.

Mr. Deane J. Cope.

Rev. Canon Rookes.

19358. What was done with that building?—I think there is a porch there connected with it.

19359. They had two—an east and west infirmary?—Yes. I don't know whether that (proposed) might amuse you a little. I am afraid I wrote on both hospitals, both the West and this.

19360. Dr. Rookes.—You seem to get a large number of subscriptions from outsiders?—About £105; £26 we get last year.

19361. Rather more, when we take in collections?—Yes; collections from churches and chapels, £24 or £40, then there are the pay patients.

19362. You get over £150—that is a large addition to your fund?—Oh, it is.

19363. CHAIRMAN.—Did the Governors wish to put any facts before us at all?—The quarterly meeting was at the close of April, and I had not got the notice, so I did not bring the matter before them at all.

19364. Does anything occur to yourself?—No; I could not suggest anything; we try to make it as paying as we can. A great many come in that we thought ought to be able to pay.

19365. Dr. Rookes.—Do you get as much as you can from them?—These are the certificates from the Governors, and, in order to try to induce it, we put a notice on the book to remind them that when giving an order they should question them as to their circumstances.

Mr. Daniel Cordrick.

of the labouring class who have been a benefit to society, should be boarded out, and not placed on the footing that the class so long has been, a burden to the ratepayers. Tramps we cannot do away with, but we should try to utilize them by having a certain amount of useful work that those using the house as a night refuge should be compelled to perform; parties refusing to work should be prosecuted by the master. It is a difficulty that cannot be met with, no one can suggest a real remedy for the tramp nuisance.

19366. Your object is to make them useful, and make the workhouse as little agreeable to them as possible?—Yes; and make them have some little turn over for the ratepayers, even in a small way.

May 17, 1904.
Mr. Daniel
Coffey.

19367. They are not very good workers?—They won't be so fond of using the houses if they are made to any work.

19368. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—You have it in your own hands to make them work?—I think we have no power to prosecute them, if they refuse.

19369. You can make them work in the morning until they do a certain amount of work?—But you cannot detain them; when they know you can only detain them for three hours they will do nothing. On the question of out-door relief there are a great many very awkward points. You cannot give relief, at present, to a poor person under sixty years of age, no matter how deserving you know them to be, if they are not infirm, or have not a doctor's certificate. Then there is the case of the widow with one child. You cannot give her out-door relief; she is even a more deserving case than a woman with three or four, for she may have a married child who can rot the rest while she is seeking employment; and the widow with one child may not be able to leave the child, and if she is driven into the workhouse she is pressed to re-enter it at any time, and become a burden on the ratepayers; whereas, if she got reasonable out-door relief she would be a useful member of society, as she had been in the past.

19370. You would lower the age limit?—I would not exactly lower the age limit, but I would leave it discretionary with the Guardians and relieving officers, if they thought it a deserving case for temporary relief. With regard to our fever hospital in Arklow, that fever hospital is just kept floating by means of local subscriptions, supplemented by a grant of £30 a year from the County Council; it just keeps the institution there; it is powerless for any good purpose. If there was an epidemic, and we sent patients there, there is no possible means to maintain them.

19371. It merely pays a caretaker?—It merely pays a caretaker, and a nominal stipend of £30 a year to the medical officer. I think the Guardians should be empowered to allow a capitation grant for each patient sent into that institution by the local medical officer.

19372. Put it on the same basis as other auxiliary hospitals; make it a union-of-large charge, and let the people at Arklow have the benefit of a local hospital?—Yes; that the Board of Guardians should be empowered to make a capitation grant.

19373. CHAIRMAN.—Put it on the rates and you have it all simple?—I know it is perfectly useless at present, and in case of an epidemic of fever, even if it was only a slight epidemic, the doctor could not use that institution, because he would have no means of maintaining the patients—would not even have money to buy food for them.

19374. Have you a balance sheet of the expenditure of the hospital for any recent years?—I have not.

19375. Could you get us one sent?—I could.

19376. Dr. ROBERT.—A very simple one, £30 for the medical officer and £30 for the caretaker?—Yes; they have a little balance in hand, and they have spent it occasionally, when a patient turned up. They get a special nurse from Dublin, and they set up whatever balance they had. They are not in a position to do anything at present, I know that.

19377. CHAIRMAN.—That was the chief matter that you were interested in?—I was mainly interested in that.

Dr. F. J. G. KERR examined.

Dr. F. J. G.
Kerr.

19378. CHAIRMAN.—You were good enough, when we asked you for some figures, to draw up that you would prepare them for us?—Yes; I think I have whatever figures you are likely to require. I have the returns that have been made to the Local Government Board, of the numbers admitted to our workhouse in Shillelagh sick, and the numbers that have been admitted into the fever hospital for four years.

19379. What we wanted to know was, how many acute medical and surgical cases you have dealt with for the last five years, acute cases as distinguished from apud and infirm people, who have been in the habit of getting hospital treatment?—Would you include bedridden cases in the infirm?

19380. First give us the ordinary acute cases that come in?—I don't know that I can give you these separately. In the year commencing 1st of April, 1903-4, there were under treatment on the 1st of April thirty-two patients; these were made up of—epileptics, two; ordinary idiots, three; twelve cases, including bedridden and others, requiring the special attention of the nurses; and the remainder requiring ordinary attention. Out of that number, probably seven or eight would be acute cases.

19381. Is that about an average year? How long have you been there?—Since 1886.

19382. Is that about an average year?—I can give you the average weekly for four years. That year would be thirty-two; 1902, thirty and two-thirds; the previous year forty-three.

19383. Would the ratio be about the same?—It would be somewhat about the same, except, perhaps, there would be a larger ratio of infirm cases, as lately we have sent some of the infirm cases to the infirm wards, and kept fewer of them in the infirmary, so the ratio of acute cases would not be increased in proportion quite.

19384. Dr. ROBERT.—It means, you would have the same number of acute cases, and not so many chronic cases?—Yes.

19385. Have you any idea of the number of acute cases you treat during the year?—Suffering from accidental injury, in the year ending 31st of March, 1901, three; suffering from other diseases, sixty-three, that would be admitted to the workhouse hospital; that is, admitted from the country as opposed to cases admitted from the body of the house.

19386. Would there be a large proportion of those acute cases?—No, there would not; they would be acute for a certain length of time, and then become chronic; they are sent in as acute cases.

19387. CHAIRMAN.—As far as your experience goes, would you say that the acute cases are about one-fourth of your hospital cases?—I think so; that would be about a fair average proportion.

19388. Dr. ROBERT.—What was the total number of admissions into the hospital, counting those from the body of the house as well as from the country?—The total number of cases treated in the hospital—106 for the year 1901, and for the year 1902 it would be 211, for the year 1903 168, and for the year 1904 163.

19389. Would the usefulness of the hospital be increased if you had gay wards?—That is a matter I hardly would be prepared to express an opinion on. It would to some extent, for people would come in then who don't come in now; their pride would not suffer, in other words, by coming in.

Mr. MICHAEL BYRNE, J.P., examined.

Mr. Michael
Byrne.

19390. CHAIRMAN.—You are Chairman of the Board of Guardians of the Shillelagh Union?—Yes, sir.

19391. What are the views of your Board of Guardians about the breaking up of the workhouse there? They are all of opinion, I think, that they would not like to break it up, except they were very well paid for it.

19392. You mean, if there was a large reduction in rates?—If you promised us £d. in the £ we would be happy.

19393. Or, if I said, like the man at the fair, "Split the difference, and take 3d."?—I daresay; but I am afraid, from what I have heard to-day, that there would be a large increase of commodes and things.

19394. I think you may make up your mind that nothing will be recommended by us that seems likely to bring about an increase?—I would expect that; but the Guardians as a body are against any suggestion.

19395. They would rather keep on their own workhouse?—They would rather keep it on for several reasons. Suppose Shillelagh was some away off, and that part of us came to Ballydoon, and part went away across the mountain to Ballyglaw, and some of us

May 27, 1904.

Mr Michael
Byrne.

would go away to Carlow, and come to Enniscorthy. Ballyglass is almost twenty miles of a drive, and it is too far for a fellow to go to sit at a Board of Guardians, to represent his division. I think it should be put out of each other's heads to touch each other at all; except that Ballyglass might concede to us what they took from us in other towns. Some-one came down from the Local Government Board five years ago, and they took Harroldstown and Mac-habstown and some very good divisions we had, and put them into Ballyglass; Moyneagh and several divisions went to Enniscorthy; they left us very small, but still we had the same amount of expense, nearly.

18398. Your votes went up?—I don't think they did, much; but they went up this year, because we were unfortunate, and got small-pox. The idea of the Guardians is, that if we got back those divisions—Moyneagh is four miles from Skilleagh and eleven from Enniscorthy.

18399. They were in the County Wexford?—Yes, that is the way the thing came in. There were in George's in Carlow, five miles from Skilleagh and fourteen from Carlow. If there could be something done to divide the thing evenly. It was all on account of these divisions not being able to make a Rural District Council.

18400. Did you get anything?—No, sir, it was all late. We lost the electoral division of Cleamore, Harroldstown, and Harroldstown. But still amalgamation would be an awful hardship. There would be no representation, and the movement of the sick—well, the sick would not be so bad, for there surely should be a hospital there, but the movement of the old people would be an awful undertaking to Ballyglass or wherever it might be.

18401. Mr. MURKIN.—Supposing the infirmary was allowed to remain there?—You surely would want something there.

18402. There would be no hardship with regard to the sick if the infirmary was there?—Yes, the infirmary should be there, and I think if the infirmary were there or any of those things our staff would be very little reduced.

18403. CHAIRMAN.—Could you not reduce all the staff for looking after the sick-bodied? We find them the most difficult to deal with. If all these went to the central institution, and you had only the sick to deal with locally?—That is a thing I have heard about, and for the aged I certainly would be opposed to that on the ground that you are moving them from their friends and relatives; you are isolating them in their old age, and they are actually locked up in one spot like thieves. I think their local place is the place for them.

18404. Would you prefer a local institution or outdoor relief?—Outdoor relief, but for old people a local institution; outdoor relief as far as they are comfortable outside and have somewhere to stop. We never ask a man in our institution to come in that we can help out, or that we have law to give outdoor relief to. Mr. Condon and I differ about cases. We have some cases in our union of old people that have a small bit of land—one acre. We cannot give them a thing; they are in worse want than people who have no land. We have one case in point at present, and wish to give him 1s. 6d. or 2s. a week, but we cannot touch him. He has a little bit of land. I think the law should be amended and people like that should get outdoor relief; but as to old people being boarded out, I should certainly be opposed to it altogether, that is, to put them into different families. Old bodies require nursing; children are quite different.

18405. Are not these the people you would not like to cut off from their friends and relatives?—Yes, but if they are in the union at near hand their friends can go on Sunday and look after them.

18406. Would not these friends look after them if they were paid for caring them outside?—I am afraid not.

18407. Do you happen to know about the number of visits paid to poor people in workhouses?—No.

18408. Would you be surprised to hear that a good many visits are paid to the sick and some to the aged and infirm?—A great many of the aged and infirm have no one belonging to them.

18409. Then it would not be hard to put a class like that into an institution?—No, so long as they are kept in their own neighbourhood.

18410. About lunatics and idiots, would you be in favour of sending them to an auxiliary asylum rather than a workhouse?—My opinion is that they should be kept in some place to themselves in some of the workhouses, some superfluous spaces existing in some of the unions. Then as to the lunatic asylum for the county, I am afraid we would not get on with that. We have not got sufficient to keep it up, and we would only get 2s. grant for a person of the class that we are getting 4s. for in Richmond, and we are tied to Richmond for the next twenty years.

18411. If you could get 4s. for a local institution?—That would be quite different if we could get out of our obligations with Richmond, but we have to pay for all the people in Richmond for the next twenty years, and I don't see how we could make a local institution with what we have at present. If we could get those back and get 4s., it would be quite a different thing.

18412. Mr. MURKIN.—At present you are getting no capitation grant for those in the workhouse?—None, sir.

18413. Would it not be better to have them in a place where you would get even 2s. 6d.?—I am afraid not. We have a doctor already for attending to the sick poor, and he attends to the wants of those, whereas if you made a special institution for them, you have to get a special doctor and a special staff, and the same old staff does them where they are, so I am afraid there would be a rise in the rates in that point, ... about those old people, I don't see how it is to be done.

18414. Mr. Condon said there were about 100 harmless lunatics from this county in the Richmond Asylum. If you had those and the 150 or so that you have at present in the workhouse, that would be a considerable number to begin with?—It would.

18415. These poor people could be kept at a less cost than in the asylum?—Yes, if we could get them out of it. We are paying 12s. each for them in Richmond. We are paying £10,500 from this county to Richmond for our lunatics, and then there is a grant from the Government of 6s. per bed burden. Therefore, if we could take back these—18416. Would you be in favour of boarding out the children?—Oh, very much. The moment they are children at all I would have them off, and I would be in favour of boarding out their mothers; but I fully agree with the idea of the Chairman to send them to a home or refuge. That is the best idea I heard formed on that yet, and I am for boarding out the children at once. I am always against any child being reared in an industrial school or union. Some of them get on fairly well out of both, but after all they have a much better chance when boarded out with a respectable labouring man's wife. They learn the ways of the country.

18417. You would rather make them labourers?—Yes, or police if you wish. They will be sent to school and boarded out, because we have a lady inspector going round in connection with the county who pays an odd visit; and as to tramps, it is a vexed question. I don't know much about it, but I think if you could make them work a little it would be better.

18418. Would you favour the colony system, having a large place where these people could be detained for a certain time and made work?—I think it would be a very good idea, but who is to pay for them? You don't expect that the unions will pick them up and pay for them?

18419. CHAIRMAN.—They are really a floating population?—Yes. I think there should be a country-at-large charge for that. If we could manage to make them work at all it would keep them away.

18420. It should be a country-at-large charge, as for the cattle plague?—Yes.

18421. Mr. MURKIN.—The unions are supporting them now?—Because they get their supper and boardst. If there was a law that they could not get into unions without having a doctor's certificate, I was always in favour of that. If they did not present a doctor's certificate to the porter, they should stop out.

18422. And selling that, a country-at-large charge?—You would not want any charge then, because very few of them are sick. They would vanish out of the country if they had not the unions.

18423. Mr. MURKIN.—You would do away with the capitation grant altogether?—Yes, it would wear out. A good many of them are old soldiers and short service men.

May 17, 1904.

Mr. E. J.
Byrne.

Mr. E. J. BYRNE, J.P., examined.

19421. CHAIRMEN.—You are Chairman of the Shillagh Rural District Council, and you are also one of the Shillagh Board of Guardians?—Yes.

19422. You have heard the evidence of the Chairman. Do you agree generally with him?—I do, generally.

19423. Is there any point on which you would wish to add any special view of your own?—I would. Before the new Boards came in we had power in an indirect way to give outdoor relief to poor farmers, because we were not afraid of the auditors. We had the leading landed gentry sitting in the Boardroom, and the auditors at that time were afraid of those gentlemen, and would not surcharge them. Now they are getting exchanged.

19424. Boards of Guardians and members of Parliament?—Yes. I could mention people who require outdoor relief very badly. They are over sixty years of age, but they have a few acres of land, and we are afraid to give it to them. I could mention one man in Ballymonee who had seven or eight acres of land, and we gave him 2s. a week for about eight years until his daughter realised some competence in Australia, and wrote to us and took him off our hands. He would have been dead long ago if we did not help him.

19425. You would be in favour of getting such discretionary power as would enable you to relieve destitute people?—Yes; and then that point about the widow woman with one child turns up frequently. It turns up always in the case of decent women. It turned up at Shillagh Union. A woman with one child could not be relieved, and a bad character with one child coming back with another can get indoor relief.

19426. If the auditor hears of that you will find he will kick?—He cannot life if she has two children and is in the house. We have no power over her.

19427. Dr. BODGER.—You could keep the other one in the house?—The poor woman would not come in; the cases are quite different.

19428. CHAIRMEN.—I thought it was outdoor relief you were speaking of?—No. We would like to have powers to give those people relief, and then the sixty years really works hardly sometimes. About the children, I am altogether in favour of boarding out the children. I agree with your suggestion to take up those children from these vagrants at a certain age. It is twenty-one years exactly now since I proposed a resolution at the Shillagh Union, and we carried it, recommending that, and Mr. Joe Mooney—he was the Local Government Board practically at that time. He said he would recommend it strongly, but the people were too much engaged with politics at that time to think of such small things.

19429. Mr. MURTAGH.—They passed great reforms then about bigger things?—Yes, of course they did. About the union at Shillagh, when the old Board was in existence. There is a district called Clonsilla, and I live within a mile of the end of that district—Bodger—and these people had a doctor at that time within a mile of them.

19430. CHAIRMEN.—We cannot go into that. I think in your report and recommendations you could deal with the hardships on the poor.

19431. No, we cannot deal with the dispensary districts—Taking these poor people in Ballymonee will come very inconvenient. These people then had only two miles to go to the doctor, now they have to go eleven to look for a doctor. There is something else I was thinking about the tramps.

19432. Perhaps it was to give the master power to detain them?—That might be a good thing, but suppose a tramp starts from Dublin or from Belfast, he ought to be made to state his objective point, and then I think he should get a license the same as in Germany, and he should produce his license. At present he can come on to Rathfriland, and if he is known there he will avoid Shillagh and turn to Gorey or Ballymonee. If he had a license he should steer the course he had laid out for himself; but I am altogether opposed to that idea of these colored establishments, the colonies, for even as a country charge I think they would be very expensive. I believe short service in the army in the case of the increase in tramps, but there is a natural supply of young tramps growing up, and I think your suggestion would cut off a great number of those, and I am altogether in favour of putting them with respectable labourers or small farmers. I think the education or mode of life that is sufficient for those people ought to be sufficient for these tramps. In Shillagh Union I find the ones we boarded out twenty years ago have done much better as a rule, though there are some exceptions, than the ones we reared in the house. We should get power to take them from these women in the house—where a decent man dies with five or six small children, and his wife has to come in. Under present circumstances these are not brought into Shillagh; they get outdoor relief, but they used to have to come in a few years ago. I object to the control of the district hospitals being taken from the Rural District Councils. No matter what change you make, I don't think nominated Boards would work well for many reasons. Here we subscribe £200 a year to the hospital, and other people subscribe £500. We work most harmoniously and are doing well, but the other is quite a different thing. In Wicklow the County Council subscribes to four hospitals, and in West Wicklow we have to pay for our own accidents. If Anklew was improved it ought to be on the rates of the district. If we had a union on the county that we could abolish, we should get the sick in there, and I think Ballymonee would be the most suitable, for that suggestion that Mr. Brown made at Nass was a good one. If the £10,000 a year paid to Richmond was retained in the county, we could maintain an establishment ourselves.

Mr. PARSONS SNOW examined.

I have been asked to attend on behalf of the Rathfriland Board of Guardians, and it is my opinion that Ballymonee Union might with advantage be dissolved, and my reason for saying that is that I believe there is a necessity for an asylum for harmless lunatics, and I think it would be valuable for that purpose, and by doing that it would help to relieve the hospital in Rathfriland to some extent, which is sometimes not sufficient for the number of sick people that seek admission there, and the result is that people have to leave the hospital and go into the body of the house who are really not fit.

19433. Mr. MURTAGH.—You have forty-five or forty-six there?—I believe so, but it is a union that comprises half the county, and the hospital accommodation is sometimes not sufficient for the number of people who seek admission. I think we would relieve that by having these lunatics drafted to Ballymonee and attach the Kildare divisions of Ballymonee to Nass and the Wicklow and Carlow portions to Shillagh. I think that would simplify the County Council accounts to some extent. As far as boarding out children, I would be entirely in favour of that; in fact, we adopt it in every instance in Rathfriland to the fullest extent.

19434. CHAIRMEN.—Would you be in favour of increasing the power of Guardians that they could board out all children?—There are disadvantages in that if their parents were in the house.

19435. Would you be in favour of a change in the law?—It would have its disadvantages, too.

19436. Separating the parent from the child?—That would not be so great a hardship, but I believe people would be coming in for the sake of getting their children boarded out and getting their neighbours to maintain them; but if that was guarded against, I believe it would be desirable. I think too much supervision is not required over those children. It happened in Rathfriland in one instance that there was a foster mother that the Guardians knew was a really reliable woman. A lady inspector paid her a visit and found some fault with the surroundings or sanitary arrangements, and the children had to be brought in, and I am sure it was a decided disadvantage to the children, because the Guardians knew well that the children did very well with her, and because absorbed into the population and became decent members of society.

19437. That is a matter of discretion largely. It would be very difficult to lay down a rule on that, but I quite agree with you that there is a danger of close supervision?—It happened in that instance in Rathfriland. We argued the matter as long as we could with the Local Government Board, but in defence to their wishes we had to take the children away, and it was a decided disadvantage to the children. I saw it reported in the newspapers that the cost of maintaining paupers was £9, and the cost of keeping them in a cradle came to £11.

1943. I think you may put that down as a very serious statement—it appeared in a cutting from the Daily News. If that is the case, there would be some change necessary. I believe, too, that there are people who would be in the workhouse hospitals who would be willing to pay, and should be made pay as far as possible, and the majority of respectable people who are sometimes obliged to go into hospital, I think it would be a relief to their feelings if they were allowed to pay. It would remove the stain of pauperism that attaches to it. About tramps, they will always be with us.

1943. In the meantime, you would not like to make them too comfortable!—That is what we are doing. I sometimes get into conversation with tramps, and they say they are very much better treated in Wicklow than in other places. I have got into conversation with fellows who have been tramping in England, and their treatment there is not nearly so kind. In Rathfriland they have reasonable bedding; in England they have only the plank bed and a sheet. That is not much of an inducement to a fellow to tramp to a workhouse. I think if we adopted the plank bed in Wicklow it would help to get rid of a few of them and make them work. I understand in some places there is a certain quantity of straw measured, and until a fellow knows that he cannot go out.

1944. You would be in favour of giving the Guardians power to keep them in until they did a fair task!—Or keep them in a week. With regard to outdoor relief, in Rathfriland they don't encourage people to come in if they can keep them out. In some cases the law works hardly against the people. I would agree with Mr. Byrne's recommendations, and with regard to the widow with one child.

Mr. E. J. BYRNE, J.P., further examined.

I just wanted to mention a matter about the fever hospital. We had an outbreak of typhus in Shillagh in 1895, and the hospital got nearly full, and there was a very large building and four large wards had to be converted into observation wards.

1941. CHAIRMAN.—It was shown us!—If you don't recommend something like that for fever hospitals it would be useless.

Mr. E. J.
Byrne.

Dr. BEADY examined.

I have been Medical Officer of Cooleville and Clonsilla Dispensary District before it was reduced to the present district. I come to give you information about the old district and the new district.

1942. CHAIRMAN.—We are not making any inquiries about dispensary districts at all, and we know the distances!—In what respect would you like me to give evidence?

1943. I don't know of any subject. Have you anything you wish to say?—Not at all, except Mr. Byrne mentioned as regards the fever hospital in Shillagh. I myself was in charge of that hospital when there were upwards of forty cases of typhus fever there.

Dr. Beady.

Mr. MICHAEL FLEMING examined.

I would be very pleased, sir, to hand in a map of Shillagh Union for your inspection.

1944. CHAIRMAN.—Was there anything you would like to point out here? Cooleville, Haroldstown, and Rathfriland have been removed!—Taken from Shillagh.

1945. You wish to recommend the restoration?—Yes; Moyneville, Clonsilla, and Mulhewer. Of course, there is a difficulty will arise there which I wish to remark. I don't know that the four divisions belonging to the County Carlow which were formerly attached to Shillagh would make a rural district. That would be a matter for you in the hereafter to consider.

1946. We have taken a note of the strong evidence in favour of the restoration of these electoral divisions to Shillagh Union, and you wish to express your concurrence with that evidence!—Decidedly. Then there has been a tangled scheme presented before you by Mr. Cogan, M.P., and I think that the representation of Shillagh, at least as far as I am individually concerned, I certainly take exception to his view. I cannot call it anything but a tangled scheme. Now I am in your hands.

1947. There is not much use in going over the same ground again. We have gone over it with so many witnesses. You strongly dissent from Mr. Cogan's view!—Certainly; he has given us nothing definite.

1948. Is there any other matter on which you dissent from him or wish to enforce the opinions of other witnesses?—There is the boarding out of children born in the workhouse. It has its arguments for and against. There is also the tramp question. That, I don't think, has been very definitely settled.

1949. Have you any definite suggestion as regards the tramps?—I would begin the boarding out of the children and the sending away of the mothers of those children to a penitentiary or religious home—some house of detention. If a mother presents herself, before a Board of Guardians and seeks admission, her admission has to be granted, and you cannot separate the mother from the baby for some time.

1945. That is not the way in which it would work. The case would not come before the Board of Guardians—I am speaking of the present. Mr. Cogan suggested to send these children away after four years to industrial schools.

1946. Well, he withdrew that afterwards. He said after all he heard in favour of boarding out he would be disposed to adhere to boarding out—I would say, independent of that, the Board of Guardians should be empowered by legislation. Of course, they are deterred to a great extent at present so long as the parent of the child remains in the house. They are deterred from doing anything towards the future of the child other than keep it in the house until such time as the parent of the child may think well of leaving; otherwise, if it were possible for the Legislature to interfere and allow the Boards of Guardians to have the supreme control over that child, taking it altogether from the parent and having it educated, whether in the house or out of it. That should be left to their discretion, and they should be empowered, say at twelve or thirteen or fourteen years of age, or even if they thought fit, to apprentice this child to some trade or business, that it might become a useful member of society.

1947. Have you anything definite about the tramps?—I think if the Act of Parliament that already exists in England were brought into operation in Ireland it would show beneficial results.

1948. You would be disposed to try that before trying anything more severe?—Exactly. Then, with regard to auxiliary lunatic asylums, I would wish to say that at the present time we are unfortunately tied to the charter wheels of Richmond, and we are paying £10,000 a year or 10d. in the £—we are paying that to Richmond Asylum, and, needless to say, against our will. We have no will in the matter; we are absolutely powerless by the resolution of the Grand Jury. I would ask you to give that your most serious consideration. To make or establish in any part of the County Wicklow, whether you turn Rathfriland or Shillagh into an auxiliary lunatic asylum, would be imposing, perhaps, what I might call not a double rate, but a treble rate, because, of course, a workhouse cannot be reasonably turned into an auxiliary asylum unless it ceases to be a refuge for the sick poor and those who are destitute and seek relief there, and that being so, you have the staff there. It may be reasonable for me to assume that the outgoes of your labour will be, of course, an Act of Parliament, and that being so these officers would have lost their position through no fault of theirs, and must be provided for out of the rates. Going back again to the auxiliary asylum, I would like to point out that in Richmond they are receiving 4s. per head, and if we had an auxiliary asylum at Shillelagh or Baltinglass we would only get 2s. We would then have to provide the balance for the maintenance of each of these inmates. I believe the medical officer at Shillelagh in all probability will not be allowed to be the medical officer of any auxiliary lunatic asylum that may be established.

19454. I am afraid you are going a little into details!—It may be extraneous. Dr. Cassidy Norman has made a statement recently—19455. That is really not the line we are going on. You have given us very valuable suggestions, and I think it is better not to go into these matters!—It is from a ratepayer's point of view I am speaking. Mr. Cogan told us the scheme he had proposed was an economical one, but nevertheless we have heard nothing about his economics.

The Sitting terminated.

FORTIETH PUBLIC SITTING.—WEDNESDAY, MAY 18TH, 1904.

May 18, 1904.

At the Courthouse, Wexford.

Present:—MR. MOORE (Chairman), MR. MURNAGHAN, and DR. COREY BIGGER.

MR. M. A. EMMIS, J.P., examined.

19465. CHAIRMAN.—Now, the County Council of Wexford have furnished us with a printed paper giving their answers. The first query was as regards the amalgamation of unions. What is the view of your Council on that subject?—The view of our Council on that subject is we don't propose any amalgamation of unions; that is to say, we don't propose the entire amalgamation of unions or the blotting out of any particular union, but we propose an allocation in the existing system to provide for the accommodation of the lunatic poor of the county in one union, and we propose Gorey as that union, because we believe the situation of Gorey for the purpose would cause less disturbance than the situation of any other union, being the smallest urban district of the county. The town of Gorey is a comparatively small town and we believe there would be less disturbance created by the transfer of the lunatic poor to Gorey than to any other union.

19467. Then you have a railway communicating with it?—All the four towns are practically communicating.

19468. One union is as convenient as another?—Except for the numbers from the urban district. A very much larger number of the inmates of Wexford Union are from the town of Wexford in proportion than from the surrounding country. Whereas in Gorey Union the larger number of the inmates will be rural.

19469. Does the Council recommend that Gorey Union as a union should continue?—Gorey Union as a union should continue, that is, the hospital should remain there. The functions of the Gorey Board should continue, and all the officials in Gorey should remain in office.

19470. Not superannuated?—No, we don't suggest any superannuation; we look upon it as a waste of public money to superannuate men who are in the prime of life.

19471. You would give them other duties?—Yes.

19472. The master, matron, and other officers, you would give them analogous duties?—It would simply mean retaining the services of the existing officers. The medical officer would remain as medical officer of the auxiliary asylum.

19473. You are not going on the lines of Yeoughal, where the doctor is the visiting doctor?—We don't suggest a resident superintendent in the auxiliary asylum; we suggest a visiting medical officer in the person of the existing medical officer of the union.

19474. He would be the medical superintendent of the auxiliary asylum?—Yes; but then we suggest he should have as a consulting physician the resident medical superintendent of Enniscorthy Asylum.

19475. In fact, he would be a sub-officer to the parent asylum at Enniscorthy?—Quite so. We take it first of all as laid down by the Local Government Act of 1896 that the lunatic poor have a right under that Act to asylum treatment. The circular from the Local Government Board has called upon the Boards of Guardians to transfer the lunatics gradually from their unions to the asylums. The asylums are overcrowded. I am a member of the Board of Guardians of Wexford Union, and of the Enniscorthy Asylum. We have forty at present more than our certified number. The last building operations for the accommodation of seventy patients cost £14,000.

19476. Do you remember the total number of patients in the asylum?—423 or 424 patients.

19477. It looks a huge building for that number?—It is spread over a large frontage, but is not deep. It is a single building, a great portion of it. The total number to be transferred from the county would be something like 140 or 150, shown by the latest returns, and adding to that forty or fifty patients who are in excess of our certified number at present in the asylum, we should require to provide for the accommodation of 200 patients, which I estimate would cost £40,000. Our view is that the interest and the difference in cost of maintenance between the asylum scale and the scale of inmates of the workhouse at present would altogether total an extra expenditure on the rates of between £2,000 and £3,000 a year.

19478. I am not in the least disputing your conclusions, but did you at all ascertain the cost of maintenance in the asylum and in the workhouse?—Yes; the cost of maintenance in the asylum last year. Last year our asylum was the second most expensive in Ireland. The committees have been making great efforts to reduce expenditure, and this year we have considerable reductions, but the figure last year when that report was considered was a little over 227 per head.

19479. Was that in the heavy year?—It was rather a heavy year.

19480. I suppose you could do in an ordinary year with £26 or £25?—£25, perhaps.

19481. What would you put down as the cost of an inmate in the workhouse?—The present cost is £16 6s. a year.

19482. How do you ascertain that?—I got the figures from the clerk of Wexford Union. Those are the figures taken as the total cost, taking everything into consideration.

19483. Not merely in-maintenance and clothing?—No.

19484. Cost of officers and salaries, cost of the medical officer's salary, and the master and all the officials?—Cost of administration, yes.

19485. It seems rather low for that?—That is the figure that is given to me.

19486. Dr. Bigger.—Anything for bedding or interest?—No, in neither case.

19487. CHAIRMAN.—In the asylum the interest for repayment is included?

19488. MR. MURNAGHAN.—Not in the £27?—I think it is included.

19489. CHAIRMAN.—They do not make the double calculation?—I think I am safe in saying that the £27 does not include interest and repayment of the loan.

19490. I expect 5s. 6d. a week, though it is not accurate for a workhouse?—The scale is for the inmates and infants.

19491. They are much better than the able-bodied?—That is so.

19492. I expected it would be a good deal higher than that figure?—Yes.

19493. In giving the figures to Mr. Emmis, what did you take as the basis that brought out the 5s. 6d. a week for the cost of the inmates?

MR. EMMIS.—We included all the expenses of the whole establishment; that takes in everything.

19494. CHAIRMAN.—Officers' salaries?—Officers' salaries.

19495. And repayment of loans for improvement?—Everything in connection with indoor expense. I think it works out cheaper than any other place.

19496. CHAIRMAN.—Mr. Murnaghan is just saying in his union, where they run things very close, it costs £17 10s.

MR. EMMIS.—I don't suppose there is any necessity of repayment of loans in the case of the Wexford Union because there have been no buildings for a long time. I should say the loans have been extinguished altogether.

19497. CHAIRMAN.—Practically none in Omagh. Would you kindly make out the calculation for us and send it to Mr. Mahon?

MR. EMMIS.—I will, certainly.

19498. CHAIRMAN.—Your committee went on to consider any alterations that would be necessary at

MR. M. A. EMMIS.

May 18, 1904.

Mr. M. A.
Eadie.

George I.—Yes, we were very largely guided in our calculation as to Geely. I may say I acted as a member of the Asylum Board Committee at the Lunatic Asylum Conference in Dublin in November last, and at that conference we received some very valuable information from the Most Rev. Dr. Kelly, the Bishop of Ross, as to the Youghal institution and as to the cost of altering that institution to the needs of an auxiliary asylum, and from our own knowledge of the structure of workhouses and of the needs, we should not suggest that these should be any very large structural alterations of any kind, but we estimated a total cost of £1,000 for the buildings.

19488. Did you provide for a waterpipe supply?—No; we wanted to provide for good sanitary accommodation, a system by which the cases which we regard as chronic cases might be dealt with and well looked after. Our idea was that additional experienced care would be necessary, but that the assistant staff of the workhouse, with a few trained attendants, say four, one for the day and one for the night in each male and female department, superintending the ordinary attendants, would be sufficient.

19489. The master, I suppose, would act as a chief over the male side, and the matron as a chief over the female side?—That was our idea.

19490. And as these officers dropped off you would appoint a chief male attendant and a chief female attendant?—Yes, and we should have trained assistants such as in the asylum. My own idea is that an arrangement might be made with the district asylum by which we would take from that asylum trained assistants, already trained, and get new hands in there, and that the medical officer of the asylum visiting the auxiliary would pick out any cases which he thought would be susceptible of treatment that might tend to cure them, and draft them to the asylum, and on the other hand we would be able to draft at least forty extra patients we have as inconvertible chronic cases to the asylum.

19491. You thought the necessary changes could be done for about £1,000?—Yes, and then there is a capitation grant of 2s. per head for the auxiliary, which we believe ought to be 4s. as in the district asylum.

19492. That is generally the opinion, naturally of the Commissioners who have given evidence?—We are no reason why the capitation grant paid for the district asylum should not be paid for the auxiliary.

19493. Or would you say 4s., or half that sum?—Quite so.

19494. It might not come to 4s., but half or up to 4s. 1.—Yes, up to the maximum of 4s.

19495. You are also in favour of boarding out the insane to some extent?—Not more than as an experiment. At the Lunatic Conference in Dublin that question was very fully discussed. Dr. Conolly Norman and other medical officers there gave a very exhaustive statement as to the system pursued in Belgium, but on the second day that we discussed a question of auxiliary asylums the resident medical superintendents seemed rather inclined to favour the sending of the lunatic poor to the asylums, and Dr. Clancy, I think it was—19496. That is the Bishop of Elphin?—Said that on the former day the medical witnesses seemed to think that these people would be safe boarded in the country, and on the second day, when it came to be a question of putting them in an auxiliary asylum, they seemed to think they were quite different and would be dangerous. I asked Dr. Conolly Norman to let me have a printed report of that conference for you, but it has not yet been issued. I should especially like to direct attention to the able paper read by Dr. Kelly, the Bishop of Ross.

19497. You said about the opinion of the resident medical superintendents, as far as I remember from what was published at the time they seemed to be rather of opinion that it was difficult to discriminate between the harmless and the dangerous lunatics, and that a harmless lunatic might become dangerous?—There was a very decided difference of opinion among the medical superintendents on that subject, and my own real personal opinion was, and I expressed it, that whilst I thought it was worth a trial as an experiment, personally I did not feel any great confidence in the success of the experiment in Ireland, because the conditions of cottage life in Belgium and Ireland are widely different.

19498. Was the idea that these people should be boarded out with their own friends or with strangers?—With their own friends if possible, but with strangers otherwise.

19499. Have you many lunatics in your asylum whose friends could contribute largely to their support?—We have a fair number of lunatics in our asylum whose friends do contribute.

19500. There is not, in the opinion of the governing body, any abuse, any people who can pay standing in relation and not paying?—I don't think so. Every individual case comes before the committee, and the committee make a close inspection. In fact, at the meeting of our committee recently we had a case before us in which an effort was made to get a patient taken at half the cost of maintenance or 12s. a year, but we made a very close and exhaustive inquiry, and we heard a rumour that the husband of the patient had failed in for a legacy, and on investigating the matter closely, he had to admit he had married £1,000, and I need hardly say we compelled him to pay the full cost of maintenance.

19501. Then you think that grants should be made by Parliament to assist in boarding out the deserving poor?—Yes.

19502. Are you speaking of the lunatics with which the rest of the paragraph is concerned?—No, of the aged, deserving poor.

19503. On what ground do you base that?—We believe the aged deserving poor would be greatly benefited by being boarded out when it would be done with great discrimination.

19504. Had you an idea it would be the beginning of what is known as old age pensions?—Yes, to a certain extent; but at the same time I realised that in any question of boarding out the aged poor there was one grave difficulty, but if that difficulty could be overcome I should strongly approve of the system; but the difficulty would seem to be this, that many people who at present would not think of entering the union or becoming inmates would, in the event of their finding that money could be obtained for the maintenance of their aged relatives, get them into the union just to qualify for that boarding-out pension.

19505. Or perhaps would be able to get it without sending them at all to the union?—I don't think the abuse could extend as far as that. Undoubtedly I think the condition of the aged people would be in many cases greatly improved, but it is a system that I think could only be carried out cautiously and with great discrimination.

19506. Have you thought of any possible safeguard for such a system which, ideally, I suppose, is the best, that is, of supporting the poor without any establishment charges so far as possible?—I may say, I think this—it does not arise as any of the queries I have seen here, but I may introduce it in connection with this subject—I think myself that under the new Act the abolition of the disciplinary committee was a mistake. I grant you it was sometimes difficult to get a quorum together, but at the same time they gave a certain amount of attention which after a long day's business at the Board of Guardians affairs did not now receive.

19507. With the doctor absent?—With the doctor absent, and if they were still in existence I would suggest the disciplinary committee as the most efficacious to investigate each case.

19508. Did you think at all of making any different area of charge for each outdoor relief union with a view of bringing it home to the locality?—No, we did not consider that question of making an area of charge.

19509. Some witnesses have suggested to erect in the electoral division as the area of charge for outdoor relief?—I don't know. Of course, in the County Wexford there is really only one large centre of population, comparatively large—the town of Wexford, and I should say—of course, you will be able to get more clear information on that subject from the officials of the Wexford Union—but as far as I know I should say the population of the unions is fairly distributed over the county. My idea is that upon a careful advantage is to be procured, changes of system—

19510. Or area of charge?—Changes of system nearly always mean claims for increased remuneration for officials.

19511. Although their whole time is at your disposal?—I mean that where a change is made you generally find a claim that the duties have increased, and it is very hard to decide whether the duties have increased.

19512. At all events, if they were positioned on the basis of their whole time being at the disposal of the Guardians, they would be blowing hot and cold if they claimed an increase of salary for increased duties?—

I should appreciate any change in the system unless I was satisfied some material benefit was to be derived from the change.

19514. It was this question of additional expenditure, going to the substitution of outdoor help for indoor, that, as you point out, is liable to risk?—It is undoubtedly. If any recommendation could be carried into effect—I don't suggest it should, because dispensary committees have ceased to exist.

19515. You would recommend—it has been done all over the country—the restoration of the dispensary committees?—I would.

19516. And such committees should be made relief committees?—Yes, and without their strong recommendation the boarding-out should not be attempted.

19517. Another suggestion was that, taking account experience into consideration, each area should consider what was the fair amount to spend on outdoor relief in that, and that that should be stereotyped (as you say) a year should be paid to the poor in that district division?—Not stereotyped?

19518. Not exceeding, of course; revising that every year, or whatever might be decided upon, and that should be a union charge, but any payment in excess of what you may call the standard payment should be a local charge?—Yes, I should approve of that. I think that would be a very reasonable suggestion.

19519. Now, Query 4: "Whether is the work of an amalgamation or combination of unions being carried out or any other arrangements being made for the relief of the destitute poor, any changes in the law and procedure as to administration and in the chargeability of relief would be desirable?" We have discussed some of that already. How would you administer Govey Auxiliary Asylum, supposing it to be created?—Our reply is contained here. We suggest that there should be one or two Councils appointed from each union to act as a committee.

19520. Rural Councils or County Councils?—I should say Rural Councils. In many cases Rural Councils and County Councils are synonymous. We have active members sitting on both Boards.

19521. And possibly they might be the same?—In fact, I think it would be desirable that they should be in circumstances would permit of it. It would mean a representative on both Boards.

19522. At present you would have the Board of Guardians for the Govey Union administering the hospital, and through the assumed restored dispensary committee, the relief?—Yes.

19523. Then you would have the asylum committee administering what is now the able-bodied portion of the workhouse?—Quite so.

19524. That would be constituted by?—By a committee consisting of one or two Councils from each of the four unions.

19525. And urban districts, perhaps?—Well, urban districts are represented already on the unions. I am myself one of the representatives of Westford on the Poor Law Board.

19526. The urban districts might ask to have a district representative?—I don't think so.

19527. You think they would be satisfied with their share of the unions?—Yes.

19528. How many men would that committee be composed of?—We suggested one or two from each—a committee of eight or nine.

19529. Would they meet in Govey?—I should say so.

19530. That would be very small for a meeting in Govey?—Perhaps so. If we increased it to three from each, making twelve?

19531. You would always have the three Govey men there?—I think if the other members of the committee were interested in their duties they should attend, because my view is very strongly that a man belonging to a public body, if he does not mean to attend to his duties, should resign.

19532. Do you think that is general?—In the County of Westford we very rarely find a difficulty in getting a quorum at our meetings in connection with the County Committee on Agriculture. We generally meet alternately in the four towns. I was going to refer to what we consider the main objection to our proposal about Govey, because I realise no matter what system would be adopted there are objections. A very reasonable objection seemed to me to be that the able-bodied, if transferred from Govey to Emsworthy, would be removed from the visits of their friends. That was one of our reasons for selecting Govey, because the urban population is small compared with Westford.

19533. The sick of Govey would still be treated at Govey?—Yes.

19534. Did you make any inquiries—we have done it ourselves going about the country—about the visits to workhouse inmates?—Yes; I was going to say about that. Westford is a town of about 11,000 population, and Govey, I think, has from 1,500 to 2,000, and I reasoned with myself that if I ascertained the number of visits paid by relatives and friends to the able-bodied poor in Westford Union in the body of the house, that I would be able to form a very fair approximation to what it would be likely to be in Govey.

19535. At all events, it would be in favour of Govey very much, because there is so much of a rural and distant population?—I made the inquiry at Westford, and was informed by the porter that the average number of visits paid to the body of the house in Westford by people from outside would not exceed one or two per week.

19536. That practically bears out our experience. There are practically no visitors to the body of the house, but a great many visitors to the sick?—My own idea is that where children who are in employment permit their aged parents to go to the workhouse, they have not any very great objection for them, and are not likely to visit them.

19537. A good many of the poor people in the workhouse are people with no near relatives?—Quite so, so I believe the incontinence entailed by that would be very small.

19538. Query No. 5: "Whether having regard to the number, capacity, and situation of the workhouse hospitals, county infirmaries, county fever hospitals, and other hospitals existing in the county, additional accommodation is required for the proper treatment of the sick poor in any union, district, or locality in the county, and, if other accommodation seems desirable, how it may best be provided without entailing undue hardship upon the destitute or on the sick poor of the union?"—As that case we believe that a strong effort should be made to raise the status of the hospital as much as possible, and we want as far as possible to take from the hospital the character of a workhouse hospital, which undoubtedly in many cases militates against poor people making use of it.

19539. Would you do it absolutely in the case of Govey?—Absolutely in the case of Govey, but in fact with regard to all the hospitals we should like to see a separate entrance to the hospital. We should like to see it not necessary in order to obtain admission to the workhouse hospital that the name of the person should be entered on the workhouse books as a pauper. We should like to see the patient admitted to the hospital without being obliged to pass through the workhouse as an inmate of the workhouse.

19540. In Govey the arrangement would be, from your point of view, perfect. There would be no workhouse book, but merely the hospital register and the auxiliary asylum register, and there would be no question of workhouse there at all?—Quite so.

19541. You would want to approximate in the other three unions to the Govey arrangement as far as possible?—As far as possible. In fact, it was suggested by my fellow-witness from the County Council, Mr. Peacock, that the Westford County Infirmary should be abolished, whilst I think that every effort should be made to raise gradually the standard of the workhouse hospitals to the standard of the County Infirmary. I was not prepared to go that length, nor was the County Council, because at present the County Infirmary is an institution in which we have trained surgical nurses and an operating room, and all facilities for dealing with serious accidents.

19542. You have nothing then but acute medical or surgical cases?—Well, we have, but at the same time they are the bulk of our cases.

19543. There ought not to be. I suppose you would consider anything but acute or curable cases?—That is so, but then the very difficulty I have before pointed out causes some patients to go to there—people who would not go to the workhouse hospital.

19544. With relatively insignificant ailments or old age?—Oh, no, not for old age, because they would not be admitted unless curable; but still people go to the County Infirmary suffering from chest affections who would not go to the workhouse hospital.

19545. They would be cured in three weeks or so. You would not consider them, after all, unsuitable cases for the County Infirmary?—Oh, no, they are quite within the infirmary rule; but the County Infirmary deals with cases that could be dealt with in the district hospitals, but for the objection of the people to go there. But my view was that I could not quite agree with Mr. Peacock on this question, that even if one endeavoured to raise the status of the district hospitals, it would take some time to do it, and I hold no public body has a right to take action which would tie the hands of their successors. During the existence of the present County Council the thing would not be practicable.

19545. Did you consider at all whether some connection or friendly intercourse or arrangement between the County Infirmary and the district infirmaries might be possible, and whether, if possible, there should be some recognised system of transferring cases for treatment from Garry, Ross, and Enniscorthy to your County Infirmary here for surgical operations or special treatment?—That is a subject we have not considered, but, speaking from my own personal point of view, I should strongly approve of it.

19546. It has been put before us by some county officials that putting the County Infirmary on such a basis would be a systematic and good arrangement for the sick?—I believe it to be an admirable suggestion. It did not occur to me before. We did not consider it, but having heard it from you I think it is an admirable suggestion, because our desire is to make the County Infirmary as far as possible a truly County Infirmary, useful to all parts of the county. It goes without saying that the larger number of governors, those who attend mostly to the institutions, are in Wexford, and there are not a sufficient number of governors residing at a long distance who take an interest in it to send patients forward, but we believe if the Board of Guardians of the four unions were in connection with the Infirmary—

19546a. And the medical officers?—And the medical officers, it would be an admirable system, because the whole county pays for the County Infirmary.

19547. The medical officer would know, "Here is a case which cannot get the treatment here that could be given in the County Infirmary, but I can send the case over." Would you approve of that?—Strongly.

19548. Did any detailed arrangement occur to you on your answer to No. 5 as to how best in Enniscorthy, Ross, and Wexford the wards for the sick could be completely cut off from the workhouse?—No; Wexford is the only union of which I have personal knowledge.

19549. They are all pretty much on the same structure?—I don't think there would be any insuperable obstacle to providing such an arrangement for Wexford.

19550. Did any way occur to you of separating them?—I think that is a matter of detail, but from my own knowledge of the Wexford Union I should anticipate no difficulty in doing it. It would mean a separate entrance, and I have in my mind the place where, if I was to do the architect's part of the business, I should put the entrance.

19551. You would have no trouble in doing so?—No.

19552. Query 6 is answered already. Query 7: "How far in the case of persons who are not destitute it would be desirable to introduce a system of payments or contributions in aid of the cost of treatment of the sick and insane in hospitals or other such institutions?"—Well, in that case we suggest a similar system to the system adopted in the district system, that is, that the committee should consider each case on its individual merits, because I don't believe it would be possible to frame a rule which would be equitable in every case.

19553. You would recommend a discretionary power in the committee in connection with their officers?—Quite so, to fix the amount of the contribution. In the County Infirmary there is a rule somewhat analogous to that. There are three scales of payment; a governor admitting a pay patient puts on his ticket the A, B, or C scale.

19554. That is a recommendation?—Quite so.

19555. Do you find you recover the money easily?—Oh, yes.

19556. It is not a recommendation that is not successfully carried out?—I don't mean to say that there may not be some isolated cases where a difficulty may arise.

19557. You have no legal power?—The question has never arisen.

19558. You would be in favour of that power being conferred upon the managers of all hospitals, county, district, and every other hospital, of recovering out of the public funds as much as they thought the patients or their friends could pay?—Yes.

19559. Have you ever tried it in any hospital of the County Wexford?—Yes, in Woodland Union we had an outbreak of scrofula. We have recently had a number of cases treated in the fever hospital, and at the very last meeting of the Board of Guardians, I think, or the meeting before, the committee were occupied in discussing what was a fair and reasonable charge to make for the treatment of scrofula, because that is clearly laid down that employers are bound to pay for their servants, and we deal with these cases in the manner—I suggest we should have legal authority to deal with the cases—to which you refer. We find a scale; the cost of maintenance in the fever hospital was given as by the union officials as 7s. 7d. per head. But that included the extra cost of auxiliary nurses from Dublin, and we thought it was not fair to impose that rate upon the people.

19560. It would hardly be so cheap as that?—That was the figure given to us.

19561. In some county infirmaries, the County Fermagh and County Antrim, they have for some little time, a few years, had a system of getting governors, and the surgeons of the Fermagh Infirmary explained it to us very clearly. He said the committee had no considered every case that was admitted. For instance, a labourer's child, a man reading we will say 1s. a week, or whatever it may be, the committee take the view of it that at all events the man was relieved of the cost of the child's food for the time, and that they would put down at 1s. a week or whatever it would be, and they would ask him to pay that, and from that up to two guineas a week according to the actual expenses involved, and they find that they are making now quite a large income out of these payments, and the payments are popular. People like to pay their 1s. or 2s. 6d., or whatever it would be that they can afford to pay, and they feel they are paying their way and not in any way becoming the recipients of pauper relief. That would be quite in consonance with our suggestions with regard to district hospitals. It would be carrying it a step further and making the people feel, as you say, that they were not pauper, but independent and paying for the services they received.

19562. You would be in favour of the legal power given?—Certainly.

19564. And maintenance?—Yes, who are roaming about the country idle, and are terrifying the rural population; and no effort should be spared to get us rid of that. And with that view we suggest a system of registration—that a man going on tramp, to get for work, should obtain from the sergeant in charge of his police district a certificate that he was genuinely going to seek for work, and that that certificate should hold in force—19565. And that his road should be indicated?—No; I don't say so. I would let him have his certificate.

19566. If you found a man in Wexford, with a certificate from Coleraine that he was looking for work, would not that rather look like a license to tramp?—That is so; but my idea was, it is very difficult to devise a system which is perfect; but the certificate should only remain in force for six months, and at the expiration of that time the man should be treated as a vagrant, and dealt with.

19567. Or, at all events, you should have power to consider him a vagrant?—Yes.

19568. How would you deal with him?—Deal with him under the Vagrancy Act.

19569. Is not that a very ineffective Act?—I believe the law requires to be strengthened in that respect. That would mean an amendment of the law.

19570. Anything we are talking of to-day would mean an amendment of the law?—Quite so.

19571. Have you at all considered how the law might be amended, so as to do a good deal towards stopping vagrancy?—Increase the penalty.

19572. In what way. At present, we will say, he gets a short term of imprisonment?—We suggest that he should be committed to a reformatory, to which the term workhouse would really apply—a place where he should be made to work.

15675. If you make all the workhouses into hospitals, and if you have, as far as possible, out-door relief, and if practically the only class that would go into the workhouse are the sick, it might be a good thing to retain the workhouse for people of that class.—My idea is, on broad lines, that the best amendment of the poor law would be in the direction of hospitals for the sick, and almshouses for the poor, and the industrial school system for the children, and penal settlements or workhouses for tramps.

15676. Where they would be confined under a magistrate's warrant, and made to work, on make-busines, but real work?—Real work.

15677. There is another class that is not a tramp, that is the in-and-outs, we will say the quay labourer, a man whose employment is intermittent, casuals who come in and out, what do you think about those?—The casuals, I should say, so far as my experience of our own locality goes, the casuals are not large.

15678. Have you many of the class?—We have not many of the quay labourers class, but we have a number of casuals. The casuals we have got are women from the dissolute wards, beggars, people who make their livelihood by professional begging, and go out when the weather is fine and come into the workhouse when the weather is unsuitable, and, in fact, make a kind of base of operations of the workhouse.

15679. You have not many people who really earn for, say, twenty weeks in the year, and are idle for the remainder?—I think not.

15680. That is a class they have in large cities?—I think our officials will be able to give definite information on that point, but I don't think myself we have many of that class; our casuals, I think, are chiefly people who practically do no work.

15681. Do you see any reason why any people of that class should not be treated in exactly the same way as the vagrant, if they merely go out to beg and are non-productive and are raising families in looseness and idleness and begging, and, perhaps, crime and theft?—Quite so.

15682. Do you see any reason why that class should not be dealt with in the same way, giving discretion?—I think it would be desirable to deal with that class as far as the able-bodied portion; but, then, there is an intermediate body of casuals.

15683. You mean the old-fashioned beggar?—Yes; people of a certain age; people who are not quite able to work, but who are not able for heavy work.

15684. Where those people who used to work when they were able?—Yes; and have broken themselves down from drink and other causes.

15685. Are you thinking of such people in the town or in the country?—Chiefly from the town. I quite admit the desirability or advantage of having a workhouse in the town, or in the vicinity of the town, for many reasons; but, at the same time, there are disadvantages, and there can be no doubt about it that if you could remove the Worked Workhouse ten or fifteen miles into the country you would raise materially the tone of the town of Westford.

15686. And they would make a struggle to hold on?—Yes.

15687. There are just a couple of questions, taking the point of view we were on, that is—how to make the hospital quite distinct from the workhouse. If we try and do it by a process of exclusion, taking the several inmates, other than sick, and seeing how they would be dealt with, we may find that there would be very little left except the sick in the end. In the workhouse there are sick, and aged and infirm, women having illegitimate infants, children under fifteen, lunatics, idiots and epileptics, casuals, tramps, and a very small number of able-bodied people, who are not in any of those foregoing classes; they really do come under casuals—they are regular in-and-outs. Leave aside, for the present, the sick and aged and infirm, the next class we came to would be mothers having illegitimate children, of that class you have a very large number in the County Westford?—Yes.

15688. The number of children you have is extremely large, much larger than any of the other counties in Leinster, except Dublin. A suggestion that was made to us at our sitting in Dublin was that the workhouse should be closed to all such girls; that as soon as a girl would have to come to the workhouse, say, three or four months before the birth of her baby, that her case would be considered, we will say, by your relief committee or some body of that sort, and that she should be sent to a penitentiary or refuge under religious management?—Compulsorily.

15689. She would have to go somewhere, poor girl, instead of putting her into a workhouse ward, as at present, where the moment she goes in she associates day and night with women who have gone through similar experiences to hers, and have afterwards had two or three, four, five, or six illegitimate children; instead of putting her with those, that she should be sent, on the occasion of her first fall, to a refuge under religious management, according to the religious she professed?—The cost of doing so being borne by the rates.

15690. Oh, yes, by the rates; that she should be sent there, and that there should be a lying-in ward, if the managers of such an institution approved of it, to which she should be sent; or, failing that, that she should be sent, as she would be sent, to the ordinary lying-in hospital, like the Concombe or some other large hospital; that she should be sent there for ten days or a fortnight, and come back to the refuge, and never associate with any dissolute characters?—I think that would be an admirable suggestion.

15691. That the child should be kept there until it was eighteen months or two years old, whatever age the doctor would consider suitable, and that the child should be boarded out, and that efforts should be made by this religious body to place the poor children in a situation?—Yes.

15692. And she should, as far as might be considered prudent, contribute to the cost of the child?—Yes.

15693. The witnesses who brought this suggestion before we were of opinion, that after her first lapse, and when she was not contaminated by the associations of the workhouse, and with other women, we might hope for a very large number of complete reforms; and even from the point of economy, although we might pay a little more in such an institution for a girl; that, instead of becoming a life-long charge on the rates, and having a large family of illegitimate children also on the rates, that one might have for a reform; that, while we might have as many first cases, we would have very few second cases?—That would have my strongest approval; I think that is an admirable suggestion.

15694. That would exclude a very large number; it would exclude the mothers and all the children they bring in; the number of children in Westford is very large; in Ennisworthy there are sixty-one; there are none boarded out in Ennisworthy?—I may say, with regard to the children, that the Board of Guardians of Westford took action with regard to the orphan children in the school; we realised that when a girl came to the age of fifteen years she must go into the body of the house; that was, from many points of view, undesirable; it at once put her in contact with those women of whom you are speaking; but, in the meantime, before she reached that age we would not find it practicable to teach her the business of a domestic servant, because if we put her into the laundry she was put immediately in association with undesirable characters, and the consequence was, when she came to the age of fifteen years she was not qualified to earn her living as a servant.

15696. As a certified school?—As a certified school, and pay to the rates, for a period of two years, the amount of money that the child was actually costing in the workhouse; and at the end of two or three years, I am not quite sure, possibly then, the child had become self-supporting, and the rates will keep her in the institution until they draft her into a situation, and train her in domestic work. But, of course, we are limited to orphans and deserted; and in the case of a large number of those children whose mothers are in the house, we could not carry that out without their permission, which, probably, we would not obtain.

15697. There are sixty-one in Ennisworthy, forty-four in the workhouse in Garry and four boarded out, sixty-eight in New Ross in the workhouse and thirty-nine boarded out, and in Westford thirty-five in the workhouse and fourteen boarded out. I mistook New Ross for Westford?—The county of Westford, as a whole, has a large number.

May 18, 1904.
Mr. M. A.
Foster.

May 18, 1864.

Mr. M. A.
Baker.

18595. Since this census was taken the numbers have increased in Wexford a little, but not to the extent I thought at first. Then you would get rid of most of these children, as well as the mothers, out of the house. The next class we come to would be the lunatics, idiots, and epileptics, and your suggestion about Gorry would clear those away, and cessals and tramps; your view about that would also clear that class away.—Yes.

18598. And the fact of calling that institution a workhouse might tend to draw public attention completely away from the sick and infirm, and give people still the workhouse to look at, but quite a different class of institution, and take away the workhouse taint or association from the people who were there owing to sickness, or through age and infirmity?—I look upon the suggestion you have made, with regard to the children, as a most valuable one; because, I think, in any system we take into consideration the children are the most important factor.

18599. It seems to be calculated to stop the hereditary pauper?—Besides, I look upon it as the question of the proper up-rearing of the children, which is most important; because, whilst you cannot reform many of the people of to-day who have gone wrong, you can provide against their children following their footsteps.

18600. Then you would only have the aged and infirm to deal with. The sick, you at once say, and it is the general opinion all over the country, that one ought not, except in very rare cases, to lessen the extent of accommodation where there is a considerable number of miles between places where the sick are treated. You would not dream of recommending that any of the present buildings should cease to be used for sick wards?—No; we would not dream of that. Personally, I should prefer, any, an extension of the hospital system rather than a reduction.

18601. Then you would have the infirm to deal with?—In Gorry you solve the difficulty by sending their infirm to Ennisorthy.

18602. You think Ennisorthy would be adequate for the Gorry people?—I am not perfectly sure; but that was our impression. If we found that Ennisorthy could not reasonably accommodate them, I should suggest a division between the other unions as well; but our impression was, that Ennisorthy was quite sufficient to accommodate them when Ennisorthy had been relieved of its quota of imbeciles and idiots.

18603. And children and mothers?—Quite so.

18604. That would give an amazing amount of space?—I may say in general terms, that our recommendation, with regard to utilizing one of the existing workhouses for an auxiliary asylum in preference to building at the existing asylum, was due to the fact that we realised that within the last twenty-five years the number of workhouses have been a steadily decreasing quantity, and there was no likelihood of any further building accommodation being required in connection with workhouses.

18605. Mr. MURPHY.—Is not that largely due to the extension of outdoor relief?—I should say that is so.

18606. CHAIRMAN.—Would you at all consider it possible that, as had been suggested in a great many counties, that while the sick wards should be retained for their present purposes in the same way, that the Gorry people should be transferred, and that the aged and infirm of other unions should, if possible, be transferred to one workhouse, leaving in that workhouse, of course, the sick ward. Suppose Wexford were made, as the county town, and having railway communication with all the towns, as they all have, indeed—but supposing it were made the institution where all the aged and infirm of the county might be sent?—Yes.

18607. You would lose from Wexford, under this system, the women and children. I don't want you to express any opinion if you don't see your way clearly in it—but you would have a great deal of space there?—Yes.

18608. And, if the infirm of Gorry and Ennisorthy and New Ross could be placed in the Wexford Union, so as to save very large establishment charges at the other three workhouses, would you be in favour of such a thing?—It seems to me, without attempting to go into figures, it would seem to me to be carrying out a very desirable system of classification; that is, instead of classification within the union, of classification in the number of unions.

18609. And, therefore, you would be able to sub-classify them, according to respectability or conduct?—I should, certainly; subject, of course, to getting the figures of cost, and satisfying myself that the ratepayers would not be injuriously affected by the change; I should certainly approve of the suggestion.

18610. The suggestion was made on the supposition that it would save a very large amount, owing to the cessation of establishment charges in three out of four workhouses?—The question of the cost of transference would have to be considered.

18611. It would have to be considered in reference to the existing cost. There is a cost of transfer, at present, from the remote parts of the union to the head house?—That is so.

18612. And a number of people would come?—I should be rather inclined, also, when we speak of the cost of transfer, with reference to Gorry, one of the points of objection that may be taken is the distance of parts of Gorry Union from Ennisorthy, and I should be inclined to favour a system by which the cost of railway transit from a more distant part of the union to Ennisorthy might be borne.

18613. That could be easily arranged; the relieving officer could give a third class ticket?—I should be in favour of the relieving officer providing the railway fare.

18614. They would be all able-bodied, and fit to travel?—I should also like to point out that the town of Arklow, which has a larger population than Gorry, as far as I am informed, has no workhouse there, and the urban population of that town must go to Rathdrum—and do go to Rathdrum—so that Gorry would not be placed in any more disadvantageous position than Arklow.

18615. The position of Arklow is very much worse, it is a place where there is a large factory and a fair population, and they have a small fever hospital, which is never used, practically?—Yes.

18616. Then, subject to satisfying yourself on the question of cost and room, and the cost of any structural alterations, subject to that, you would think that idea is worthy of consideration?—I strongly favour that idea, subject to the question of costs.

18617. That would completely get rid of the workhouse associations?—That is so; it would be carrying into effect practically the main outline, that I have already given as my views.

18618. Then you are aware, I suppose, that in your sick wards in Wexford Workhouse the number at present are 128; well, when these sections are taken away—say, 120 in the ordinary medical and surgical sick wards and ten in the fever hospital—I suppose you are aware of that 120 comparatively a small proportion are really sick?—That is so; they are aged.

18619. They are really more in need of what is called domestic care than hospital treatment?—That is so.

18620. If you had your infirmary or almshouse due by the same building, practically under the care of the present nurses, you could have them a much smaller place for the really sick?—I think so.

18621. We received evidence yesterday in the County Wicklow as regards some of the workhouses there, that the doctor, who had made exhaustive calculations for five years, was under the impression that the acute cases were only about a quarter of the total number of cases?—I don't feel myself qualified to give a percentage, but I realise that the acute cases are relatively small.

18622. And the same thing would apply in all other hospitals. In Gorry they could, if they wished, easily treat their acute sick in the fever hospital, sending to a couple of detached wards at a small cost for the very few cases that have to be dealt with there?—In Wexford, the fever hospital is a building totally detached from the workhouse proper.

18623. And at a considerable distance from it is the borough of Wexford?—Yes, a very healthy situation.

18624. We were over it, but you have a considerable amount of fever in Wexford all over, and you are rarely without a few cases?—Well, I remember a period of two or three years in which, I think, we had practically none; but within the past two or three years we have had an outbreak of fever—eighteen months to two years ago; it occurred in some low localities of the town, where the sanitary arrangements were very imperfect, and that held on for some period; and now, for the last year or two, we have not an epidemic of scarlatina and a few cases of typhoid.

May 18, 1904

Mr. M. A.
Bain

1962. So that you really could not well do in Westford without your fever hospital?—No, I don't think with the population of the town of Westford.

1963. It is such a very fine building, and has so much accommodation—say, room for fifty beds?—Fully that.

1964. There is a good deal of waste there, as far as accommodation goes?—That is true.

1965. The question does arise whether you might make it a hospital pure and simple and leave the rest for a workhouse for the aged and infirm?—Speaking without time to consider it very closely, I should say it would be insufficient to provide the hospital accommodation we need without an addition to it; but in connection with your suggestion that only the real hospital cases should be retained in the hospital, and the others drafted into an almshouse, in that case I would say "Yes." But Westford is a sequester town, and we are in constant communication with Liverpool and Bristol, and anything in the nature of a smallpox outbreak or the outbreak of any disease in the large cities on the other side we are very liable to have it imported here.

1966. Yes, when we come to deal with the matter in detail, and understand exactly the conditions, you would most likely be able to make some suggestions that we cannot foresee now?—That is so.

1967. Dr. BROOKS.—Have you any other small hospitals?—In New Ross there is the Haughey Hospital.

1968. But in Westford itself?—No, we have the fever hospital; the union hospital and the county infirmary, also, I should mention. But I look upon it as practically portion of the county infirmary. There is the Lady Kennedy Maternity Hospital, which is a charity foundation, provided by the generosity of a deceased lady, and that is managed by a sub-committee of the Governors of the county infirmary. It is not under the management of the county infirmary in a sense, but it is built on the county grounds, and the infirmary Governors issue tickets of admission.

1969. Is it largely used?—Very largely.

1970. Women will go into it that would not dress of going into the workhouse?—Quite so.

1971. And in that way a number of lives are probably saved—that is, those cases that may not have sympathetic homes?—Yes, it is an institution that the women of the town make very large use of, and are very anxious to be admitted to. Of course, it is a small institution, comparatively, but it does a very good work in the locality, and it is looked upon by the public as portion of the county infirmary.

1972. You speak about trying to restore the standard of workhouse hospitals to the county level?—Yes.

1973. In that way you think their usefulness would be greatly increased?—Yes; we should like to provide them with spacious rooms and a trained surgical staff. Everything to bring them to the level of the present county infirmary, if practicable, but we realise that would be a work of time.

1974. Of course, for some of the larger operations you require more or less extensive fittings and instruments. Do you think that, as far as possible, those might be drafted into the county infirmary from the district hospitals?—Yes, I think the suggestion of the Chairman, that power should be given to the Boards of Guardians to send patients to the county infirmary, would largely meet that, in cases where the patient could be removed.

1975. For urgent cases, there would have to be provision made in the district hospitals?—Yes.

1976. But the other cases, of which there are a large number, might be drafted into the county infirmary?—Quite so.

1977. You said something about trying to make the county infirmary useful to the whole county—have you any idea of the number of patients that come from remote parts of the county?—The number of patients that come from the remote parts of the county is limited; but, at the same time, we do have patients from all parts of the county.

1978. But only one in proportion to ten from the immediate neighbourhood?—That is so; they do not by any means receive the same amount of benefit.

1942. At the same time they pay the same amount of cost; so, to get over that difficulty, would you suggest that there should be a county rate for supporting district hospitals for acute cases, so that the nurses that might be trained or otherwise employed in the larger institution might be drafted to those district hospitals, and charged and relieved in that way and sickness—do you see any benefit in that?—Do you mean the district hospitals should have an interchange of staff in case of an emergency?

CHAIRMAN.—Instead of telegraphing to Dublin for nurses.

1943. Dr. BROOKS.—At great expense; because a small hospital has to pay the cost of a nurse, say, for a fortnight, and her travelling expenses from Dublin; and then another hospital ten or twenty miles away wants another nurse in a short time. If it was managed by one committee or by joint committees in charge of the smaller hospitals—I think such a system as that, without thinking out the details of it, is a good one, and would tend to economy.

1944. CHAIRMAN.—To economy or expense?—Economy, I would say.

1945. Dr. BROOKS.—With reference to the asylum—you mentioned about an auxiliary asylum that you thought to provide for 150 or 200 additional inmates would cost $40,000?—Yes.

1946. That is, $200 per inmate?—I base that on what the addition necessary to provide for seventy patients already has cost.

1947. But those were severely acute, I take it?—Yes, but the district asylum is a building of a certain type and character, and any additions made would necessarily be made of the same class of building, and it would cost fairly in proportion to the number of inmates.

1948. Would not the number that would be admitted from the different workhouses be chronic cases, and would not more administrative arrangements be for those cases; you would not require additional cooking kitchens and medical officers' quarters?—I doubt if an addition of 200 to the existing inmates of the asylum could be dealt with by the existing kitchens and the existing arrangements. I fear not.

1949. A very large number of them? A certain proportion might; but I don't think it would be possible to deal with them, nor do I believe it would be advisable. I believe if we had that large number extra admitted to the district asylum we should probably have an application for a second assistant surgeon.

1950. Very possibly, and quite right, I think?—I don't think it would be feasible for the present medical superintendent.

1951. That would not be a large cost—it would be only a junior, at $200 or $250?—Quite so; but it would mean apartments.

1952. But when you mentioned such a large sum as $40,000 to make provision for 200, I did not think you were going on the same principle when you mentioned $1,000 for altering the workhouse?—My idea is that the workhouse is quite sufficiently large at present.

1953. Would $1,000 provide for very much in the way of alterations?—I don't suggest any large alterations in the workhouse.

1954. The $40,000 would more than build the workhouse, and on a better scale?—That is quite different.

1955. Why not calculate both on the same basis?—Because the district asylum is a building built on certain lines and of a certain type.

1956. It would not be necessary to build the chronic block on the same lines?—They have done it in other asylums.

1957. Merely a simple building, with dormitory and day-room?—It might be possible to build it at a lower cost, but I don't think you would save much.

1958. You would certainly build it for a quarter, on as good a principle, as the workhouse with $1,000 for alterations; would not that make a great difference in your calculation?—Yes. I have had considerable experience in the building trade, and I doubt if you could build an institution to contain 200 inmates for a quarter of the sum I mentioned. You may save something if you build it. I don't think you will save anything appreciable if you build it of the same ornamental type of building as the existing asylum. If you build a very plain block at the back of the other buildings, on the cheapest and plainest method, you undoubtedly will save something; but I don't think it is possible to erect a building, giving the number of cubic feet of air-space in each dormitory that would be considered by accountants necessary. I don't think you can build it for anything like £10,000.

19059. The workhouse buildings which you propose to allocate for that purpose, I think they could be put up for that amount—I doubt it.

19060. £10,000 appears to be very small for alterations, proper kitchen arrangements, water supply, and baths?

19061. CHAIRMAN.—You did not include water in the £10,000?—No, I did not.

19062. Not sanitary cesspools?—No, I did not.

19063. Dr. Bigger.—Therefore, the £10,000 is very small.—My idea was that, by transferring the lunatic poor from the workhouse where they are at present located to a workhouse utilised as an auxiliary asylum, you could very largely increase their comfort, and, in fact, put them in such a position that they would be maintained in an efficient, in a comfortable way, but at the same time they would not have all the modern appliances that they would have in a district asylum.

19064. Would they not have the use of the appliances that are already in the asylum if you built small blocks for them?—If you make an addition to the asylum, and if you don't provide for heating, as is provided for in the asylum.

19065. That is not provided in the asylum?—No; but I say if you don't provide for the heating and all that kind of thing, you may erect the building at a cheaper cost; but, then, I don't think it would be possible to erect a building capable of accommodating all those people for a sum of money that would be anything like one-fourth of the sum I named.

19066. Perhaps we will split the difference, and make it half. You spoke about the average cost, and also the Capitation Grant of 4s. a head. Supposing all the lunatics of the country went to the asylums, and the asylum received 4s. Capitation Grant for all of them, would not that mean a reduction in other grants which the country has already—would not that mean a reduction of the grant from which the 4s. is taken, which is otherwise distributed. I take it, over the rest of the country; it is not out of the Imperial Exchequer direct this 4s. cost.—That is a question which I have heard debated, and on which I have been unable to obtain accurate information as to what exactly is the source from which the 4s. is paid.

19067. Did you consider the question of construction at all—whether it would be desirable to have a special hospital for consumption?—No; we did not take that into consideration.

19068. Would not that be a very desirable change?—I have no doubt it would; but it would seem to me to raise a large question of expense, and to be a question which, if practicable, should be undertaken by three or four counties in conjunction.

19069. According to the size of the county. You have a number of consumptive cases at present in the workhouse for which you can do very little further than, possibly, to some extent, to have isolation, but not perfect isolation, so that other patients run a certain amount of risk from being in the same wards with them?—I think it would be very desirable to make an effort to deal with these cases; but, so far as the County Wexford is concerned, it could best be done by a scheme in conjunction with neighbouring counties.

19070. You think it would be desirable to have some such scheme?—Yes.

19071. CHAIRMAN.—Now Ross would be a fine, healthy site if they had water there?—Yes, I should say so.

19072. Convenient, and fairly central to all these counties?—Yes, so far as the County Wexford is concerned, dealing with the poor law, we have railway communication between our four centres, and Waterford, also.

19073. And railway from Bagenstown to Ross, which brings in Killybeggy?—Quite so.

19074. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—In regard to lunatic asylums, I would like to know how many inmates there are in the Wexford Asylum?—486, odd.

19075. Is there any for any more?—No; our certified number is 440. I cannot say to the exact figure, but, approximately, the number at present is 432.

19076. You think it would be more economical to establish an auxiliary asylum than add new buildings to the existing asylum?—That is so.

19077. Would it not have another advantage—separating these lunatic people from the violent class?—My idea is, as I have already expressed it, a considerable number of chronic cases might be transferred from the existing asylums to the auxiliary, when established, and the Resident Medical Superintendent of the Kinsale Auxiliary would be in contact with both institutions; and where he found a case, in his opinion, susceptible of treatment, he could move the case into the district asylum, and the cases he considered chronic he could transfer to the auxiliary asylum.

19078. The cost in the Yeoughal Auxiliary is estimated at £15?—I heard Dr. Kelly state that.

19079. Supposing there was an intermediate cost of £18 or £20, it would still turn out that the auxiliary asylum would be as economical as the asylum proper?—I believe it to be the more economical.

19080. In regard to the dispensary committee, I did not quite catch how you would say their committees should be appointed—whether by the Guardians or what body?—The committees were appointed by the Guardians formerly, and the committees ceased to exist under the Local Government Act.

19081. But they were a very unruly body; in some districts they amounted to fifty or sixty—I think the number should be limited to a reasonable number. But I believe that although they were not by any means ideal bodies, still they did a certain amount of work which is not done now at all.

19082. Quite so; and the reason for that is, because the area of supervision has been widened from dispensary to union district?—Yes; and also from the reason that every public board having a large amount of business on its agenda, in my opinion, if you increase the responsibility or duties of any public body, it means the neglect of some portion of their business.

19083. You think if the Guardians would choose a number of men to set as a relief committee, it would be an improvement on the present system?—Certainly I do.

19084. CHAIRMAN.—Being a County Councillor, you are aware of the number of hospitals in the county. In Wexford Union you have the Wexford Workhouse Infirmary and Union Fever Hospital and the Lady Edmunds Maternity Hospital; in New Ross, you have the Union Infirmary and the Haughton Hospital; in Enniscorthy, you have the Kinsale Auxiliary Workhouse Infirmary, the Fever Hospital, a detached building, and the Quilist and Newtownhamlets—are there any others?—Not that I am aware of; I know of no other.

19085. The county has nothing to do with either the Quilist or Newtownhamlets Hospitals?—No.

19086. And the Haughton is altogether a private grant?—It is a private charity. There is a committee which manages it, I don't know by whom appointed; I never knew the hospital in those.

19087. We visited it, and thought very highly of it. The matron, one of the Sisters of St. John of God, gave us one of the publications about it. It seems to be maintained out of private funds—I believe that to be so.

19088. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—These fever hospitals don't seem to give much value for the cost of the building?—The fever hospital is very expensive compared with the amount of work done; but, at the same time, it is absolutely necessary to have a fever hospital.

19089. If there was a wing—a small cottage hospital—adjoining this institution, and the nurse from the larger institution could be utilised in the case of an emergency, would not that save a great deal of money?—I have no doubt it would, provided the medical officer considered there was no risk of infection.

19090. CHAIRMAN.—Mr. Murtaghan's idea was, that if a fever nurse was wanted at one of the fever hospitals the trained fever nurse from the county infirmary should be sent for. In some of the fever hospitals there are very rarely fever patients; she should be there for a few weeks, and then come back again.—In the Wexford Fever Hospital we have a permanent nurse, but when over five cases are in the hospital we have also to procure a night nurse; and the travelling expenses and maintenance of the supplementary nurse come to such a high figure, that it has been a subject of consideration by the Board of Guardians whether it would not be cheaper to have another permanent nurse.

19091. That is what Dr. Bigger was asking you about—whether, if you had a certified staff in your own county, you could not save a good deal of money?—Yes; I believe you would economize very considerably in that way.

18602. Mr. MICHAELSON—I will take down a window such as the size of your own. We find we have very few cases in the year, and still we have to keep up an expensive staff, and it does seem to me if some arrangement could be made that a nurse could be got from a central place to look after those cases, it would be a good deal of saving, and would not require so much outlay without any return—I believe the suggestion Dr. Biggar made, that there should be a connection between the four institutions in this county, would be advisable; because there cannot be an outbreak of infectious disease in the whole four at the same time, and, therefore, the staffs of the four working in concert could effect a considerable economy, and be very useful.

18603. All-day that does exist. This is being done in my own county at present to some extent?—I believe that system would be very good.

18604. CHAIRMAN.—They have got over twenty nurses there?—I believe that would be a very desirable system.

May 15, 1904

Mr. M. A. Ennis.

Mr. C. H. PROCTOR, sr., examined.

My, Ennis and I are colleagues, and, therefore, our minds are in the one groove.

18605. CHAIRMAN.—You quite coincide with him as all he has said with regard to those quarters?—Yes.

18606. But when it comes to the end there is an admission. You rather thought that an amalgamation of the County Westford Infirmary might be possible?—Yes.

18607. Did you hear the recent evidence?—Some of it, at all.

18608. On that point, what do you think, would that be such an amalgamation as you had in your mind—that the four hospitals should have communication one with another and transfer; or did you look to the abolition of the county infirmary?—My first idea was that I considered it a very urgent task on the county as a whole, having a county infirmary with the principal number of patients coming out of Westford. I consider we ought to improve our hospitals as a whole, and when they were improved, I think, then, it would be very advisable if the county infirmary was merged into, say, the present workhouse union hospital.

18609. Not that the building should be discontinued, but that the cost should be put on the Westford Council?—Quite so.

18610. What would you think of proceeding in the other way. The acute sick all over the county are a very small number, and the question was raised whether all the acute sick might not be made a county charge, so that Gorey, Keshmorthy, and New Ross and Westford, being small hospitals, say, with an average of thirty or forty, could be county charges?—I could see no objection to it.

18611. And the county infirmary should be the chief hospital for operations and such purposes, and where the head staff of nurses would be employed, to be drafted locally, as they might be required?—The difficulty I see of keeping it as a county charge is the transfer of accidents long distances.

18612. That could not be done. But, then, on the other hand, there are a great many operations, rather than broken bones and cuts and injuries of that sort; there are a great many operations that are most serious, things that could be transferred; that really serious is an ordinary workhouse infirmary shrinks from performing in his own hospital?—It would be very advisable in that case.

18613. In New Ross they have recently gone to considerable expense, and provided an operating room; but, also, there is no water there!—That is essential.

18614. Dr. PROCTOR.—All classes of tumours and operations of that kind could all be transferred. The number of operations required on account of accidents is very small in the rural population, whereas the number of patients is fairly large?—I think it would be a very good suggestion.

18615. CHAIRMAN.—Then, subject to your looking into the matter more closely as regards costs and other considerations, you would be disposed to regard that idea favourably?—Very much.

18616. Now, as regards the charges that are dealt with under the poor law—the sick, the aged and infirm, the mothers of illegitimate children, children under fifteen years, lunatics, idiots and epileptics, and casuals and tramps. Take up, first, the mothers—girls who come in to have illegitimate children?—I heard your remarks before, and I happen to have been requested by members of the Board of Guardians that I belong to, Westford, to draw up a synopsis of what I thought would be advisable is comprehended exactly what you have stated here; I submitted it to my board, and they were not favourable to it.

18617. That is, as regards the girls?—My proposition is identical with what came from the chair today.

18618. And, of course, naturally, you approve of it?—I coincide with it.

18619. When you were working that idea out did you see any difficulty, any objection to such a scheme. It has been stated to us by some of the witnesses—"If you do that, you make it very easy for a girl to escape any consequences; she gets rid of her child?"—No, I looked to the saving of the girl.

18620. That would outweigh all other considerations?—With me.

18621. You would not be afraid that it would be likely to cause other girls to fall?—No, I don't think so; that would not be my experience.

18622. Then, as regards children; we would have to look at these in two groups—children who are actually in the workhouse at present, that would be a very rapidly changing quantity, and the children who would be born after this change in system, if the change in system is made. Under the change in system, the child would be born in or adjacent to one of these refuges, and would be looked after in connection with the refuge—would you have that child boarded out?—I would have all children boarded out.

18623. So as to become members of the agricultural labouring class?—That would be my idea.

18624. You would not approve of having them taught trades and put into the way of living that would be rather above their position?—That would be a very important point, naturally.

18625. It has been represented that putting them into trades would be rather raising them above the class of labourers and independent farmers?—My reply is—I am an agriculturalist, and, naturally, my sympathy runs with the agriculturalist, and we need labourers.

18626. And, therefore, you would have a supply?—Yes.

18627-28. And it would be a good, healthy, honest life for them?—Quite so.

18629. As regards the children where they are at present, would you be in favour of an extension of the law enabling the Guardians to board out all classes of children whose parents are unable to support them, and throw them on the rates, by bringing them into the workhouse?—Certainly; and we pursue that, as far as possible, in the Westford Union, and we would go further if the law enabled us.

18630. Would board them all out?—Yes.

18631. As regards lunatics, idiots and epileptics, in what way would you deal with those?—We propose, in our report to the County Council, to transfer them to Gorey. I am altogether against grouping the epileptics with them.

18632. But the Guardians can sub-divide them. In the South Dublin, Belfast, and other unions they have separate epileptic wards, where they never come in contact with the others?—That rests with our medical officers.

18633. Perhaps you have not room?—Well, I won't say it rests with him. My idea is that epileptics should be put in the country, and be looked after by the medical officer in the country.

18634. If they are bad cases, do you think it would be safe, with a person that gets frequent fits—look at the amount of care they need?—Still, I think they would be better in the country, from everything I have read. I am led to believe the attacks would be less frequent if they had country surroundings.

18635. In Germany, they have them all living in the country and doing work on a farm—that would meet your view?—Quite so.

Mr. C. H. Proctor

May 18, 1904.
Mr. C. H.
Pascoe.

19736. Your idea is that they should not be loafing around a harrack institution?—Quite so; it is a moral and thing; and my experience of our own workhouse is that it really helps to intensify the disease; and, as regards imbeciles, I think it is the saddest thing in this country. I have seen young people drafted into the imbecile ward that were only on the verge of imbecility, and twelve months afterwards they were confirmed imbeciles, and only for the contact with the imbeciles themselves they were curable cases. I wish medical men would grapple with this thing, and try to get rid of the whole system.

19737. Dr. BAKER.—Would you think that if there were no imbeciles in the workhouse that would tend to make the separation still more distinct?—They should be classified coming in.

19738. A person who was on the verge between the two classes would not be sent to the asylum, but, having portion of the workhouse allocated for an insane class, they may be sent there. There are no certified lunatics now in the workhouse, and if they had to be certified, that would classify them?—Certainly; I look upon it as a monstrous thing in a civilized country to have that going on.

19739. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—The fact exists, anyhow, that some people are at present in workhouse mixing with the insane?—Quite right.

19740. CHAIRMAN.—The imbeciles are, of course, insane?—Well, it is a generic term.

19741. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—But the epileptics are not?—Still, they are classed as such.

19742. CHAIRMAN.—They are, in the small workhouses?—I know; with us.

19743. And where there are a large number of them they have separate accommodation; but it would be far better, you think, and I don't think anyone differs from you, if the epileptics were removed from the workhouse, and put into some place where they could be occupied in physical work?—Quite so.

19744. As regards tramps?—Mr. BAKER explained that to you. It was our combined energy that drafted those suggestions, and we are quite agreed on them. Tramps are a very great nuisance going through the country. They come up to your door, and it is a kind of blackmail they enforce, especially with women, to get rid of them. I think they should be grappled with; it is a crime.

19745. If we have to support these men, you would take and make them work?—Certainly.

19746. And put them into what Mr. BAKER called a workhouse?—Yes; but I would centralise them, not localise them.

19747. Say, in a provincial institution—four for Ireland, or as many as would be necessary for Ireland?—Yes.

19748. Therefore, you would put them under a magistrate's warrant for a time?—These are matters of detail. It would require an Act of Parliament to do it.

19749. Everything would require an Act of Parliament. We are trying to increase as many things as possible that should be considered in drafting an Act of Parliament. The question is—would you take these people's children, when they have them, from them?—Certainly I should, or they would become hereditary tramps.

19750. In the interests of the children, you would take them from their parents?—Put them in industrial schools.

19751. And if you take the children away from the parents, it would be hardly wise or prudent to let those people start off again, unnumbered, to start a fresh batch of imbeciles?—You would shut them up?—The father should go in to learn a trade or some business.

19752. And not let him at large as long as the State was supporting his children?—That would depend on circumstances. If he showed himself willing to be honest and industrious, I would let him out on a license.

19753. On the discretion of the governing body?—Yes; I am sure you have been in the country where a man would come up and exhibit his license, showing he was a legalised pauper.

19754. There are a large number of persons in the country living on alms against whom there is no feeling, but a very good feeling—an old-fashioned inhabitant of the parish or neighbourhood, who goes round the same little circuit, and always receives a welcome?—We never class them as tramps. We call a man a tramp who goes to the relieving officer for a ticket for the union.

19755. A sturdy vagabond?—Yes.

19756. Then the casual—the person that comes in and out for no reason, not earning sufficient or having drunk their money, or on one reason or another?—I should prefer to give that man out-door relief.

19757. Supposing he was a man that would mispend the out-door relief?—He cannot starve.

19758. Supposing this were a man that local people would know would never earn his living, would you be in favour of putting him into the workhouse proper, where the tramps would be in a different sub-class?—I think if it were shown that he was in the continuous state you describe, I should certainly do so.

19759. During the local people the discretion to do so?—Exactly.

19760. All these laws would be enforced by the local authority?—Yes.

19761. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—That would be up to a certain age. You would not think of sending old people to a place like that?—No.

19762. CHAIRMAN.—After sixty or sixty-five, when the old-age limit is reached, they would go to the almshouse?—Go to the almshouse or get out-door relief.

19763. Whether was considered best by the local body, and there would be a sub-classification, according to respectability or conduct?—Quite so; leave it to the local people.

19764. Therefore, would you have all the people out of the workhouse except the two classes—the aged and infirm and the sick?—I would like to see the law extended, so that the aged and infirm could be more or less boarded out. Going through workhouses, you find that there are a very large number of these men who have led very respectable lives.

19765. In visiting, for instance, Workford Workhouse, you see honest, industrious people who are there from old age and having a wage that did not enable them to save?—Yes; I should like to see them boarded out, something like the Scotch system.

19766. With relatives, if they had them?—If possible. But, as well as I know, it costs 6s. a week to support these people in the workhouse.

19767. A good deal more than that?—You may be right, but these were the figures given to me.

19768. It is a good deal more; so that the saving would be larger than you have calculated?—Certainly, if that is the case. I am quite sure they could be boarded out for 3s. or 3s. 6d. a week. There are many poor, deserving people in the country who, if placed under the supervision of the medical officer as regards sanitary surroundings, would and their days more happily than in the workhouse.

19769. Mr. BAKER mentioned the body that would deal with such cases of relief for aged and infirm people—whether they would get out-door relief or be brought into the central almshouse. He suggested a committee, a local committee, the revival or the restoration of something like the old dispensary committee, a local body, which would know the local circumstances, and meet as often as would be requisite, and deal with all the cases?—I think it would be very desirable to re-create dispensary committees; but I think you would require a controlling body outside them.

19770. That body would be a recommending body, according to his suggestion, not a body whose rulings would be of force until confirmed by the board?—I should feel quite in unison with that idea; it should be subject to the veto of the central body.

19771. A committee of that sort, as a rule, would always be recommended, but in confirming you sometimes say, "Don't do that again"?—Yes, like the Local Government Board.

19772. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Did I understand you to say that you would be in favour of giving the management of the sick of the county to a committee appointed by the County Council?—That is, when you centralise the sick, you mean.

19773. CHAIRMAN.—When you bring the hospitals into consideration?—I should not do away with the Boards of Guardians.

19774. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Opinion is strongly in favour of keeping on the hospitals. It would neither be practical nor proper to centralise the sick?—I would have everything done by representative bodies—increase their powers, not decrease them. Might I say, I think the blind ought to be looked after. We have got blind, and we have numbers of poor people born blind.

19775. CHAIRMAN.—They would fall into the almshouse, naturally?—Into the almshouse, or go to a central institution for all Ireland, or a provincial institution; they would live the happier, and be looked after.

I go so far as to say they should be a State charge.

19756. Can you tell me how many blind are in your workhouse?—I asked this morning—there are eight there.

19757. Mr. MURKIN.—Do not the Guardians at present take care of the poor blind, and send them to institutions?—Yes; they are in the workhouse.

19758. CHAIRMAN.—Some are too old to go into institutions, I suppose?—Some of them.

19759. Do you suggest any change in the present system?—I would have them all sent to a central institution.

19760. Do you think they would like it themselves?—People, naturally, have their local sentiments.

19761. At all events, for new cases, you would put them to a central institution?—Yes.

19762. Dr. BRIDGES.—Do you know if the blind that are in the workhouse have been long there?—I cannot give you a reply to that. Some of them I do know have been a long time, indeed, in, but I remember one for a long time there.

19773. Do you think he might have been taught a trade if he had been sent to a blind institution?—That would be my object—to have them centralized, and teach them manual instruction, and make them happier.

19774. CHAIRMAN.—Was there anything else you have not touched on that you would like to say?—I don't think there is anything else.

19775. Dr. BRIDGES.—Have you considered the treatment of consumptives?—We, here, in Wexford, built a consumptive ward at very great expense, and I should certainly like to see all the consumptive patients separated from the others, so that the danger of infection might be removed. I think they should be moved to some curative hospital, to give them a chance.

LEON STOKES, J.P., M.B., examined.

19776. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the Gorey Board of Guardians?—Yes.

19777. And also of the County Council of Wexford?—Yes.

19778. The Gorey Board of Guardians dissent, I understand, from the resolution passed by the County Council with reference to Gorey?—Very strongly indeed.

19779. Which of the bodies do you agree with?—I agree with the Gorey Board of Guardians; in fact, I may say that the resolutions passed by them were drawn up by me and were accepted almost word for word by the Board and passed unanimously. The reason we dissent from this resolution of the County Council, which I can say was not passed at all unanimously, and also at a small meeting of the County Council was on several grounds: first that we object to wholesale amalgamation, as I may call it, with the Ennisworthy Board of Guardians, on the ground that the distance the greater part of the Gorey Union would be from Ennisworthy would entail very great hardship on the poor, not only on the poor, but also on the Guardians attending meetings of the Ennisworthy Board. I heard it stated in this court that owing to the train service from Gorey to Ennisworthy communication would be easy. I may call your attention to the fact that if you look at the map you will see the train only runs down one small portion, the outside of the Gorey Union, so that there are many parts of the Gorey Union from twenty-five to thirty miles distant.

19780. Jack is in your union, I suppose?—Oh, dear, yes, and three or four miles beyond. The Union of Gorey goes up to one and a-half miles of Arklow.

19781. Then you take in Carnest?—That is in Wexford; we go within half-a-mile of Carnest.

19782. Where is your boundary in the Camolin and Ferns direction?—It runs very irregularly there.

19783. Where does it cross the railway line?—It crosses the railway about a mile south of Camolin.

19784. Between Ferns and Camolin?—Yes, and then it winds up to a little north of Camolin, and goes down to Cabere and three miles south.

19785. Ford and Kilmuckridge?—Yes, that is the limit. I would also like to say that any scheme of amalgamation would make such an enormous body of Guardians that it would be practically unworkable. If the Gorey Board of Guardians were amalgamated with that of Ennisworthy, the number of Guardians would be, roughly speaking, 150.

19786. Did you consider the possibility of having the existing divisions, but having one Council instead of two?—No, we take the law as we find it as far as that goes. Also we disagree that if there were amalgamation, and taking the existing law into consideration, that is, union rating, Gorey would suffer very considerably in rating, because the rates of Gorey have always been very considerably less than those of Ennisworthy. This present year the rates in Gorey are £2 in the £ less than those of Ennisworthy, and I think I am right in saying that that has been, practically speaking, the difference for many years, and owing to its distance many Councilors would not attend, so that the whole business of the Board would fall into the hands of the Ennisworthy Guardians, who would not know anything of the circumstances of the Gorey district.

19787. This scheme you are talking about is not the one put forward by the County Council who gave evidence to-day?—No, but we look on that scheme as so completely impracticable; we take the whole scheme generally of amalgamation; but to take this scheme in detail, this scheme suggests that the able-bodied should be sent from Gorey to Ennisworthy, retaining the sick in Gorey. Well, anyone who knows the management of workhouses, knows there is very great interchange between the body of the house and the infirmary. There are many of the aged—I don't say the extreme aged—who are in a state you may say very much of going backwards and forwards between the body of the house and the infirmary.

19788. Under the present system?—Under the present system; and to have those people sometimes in Gorey and sometimes in Ennisworthy is perfectly impossible.

19789. That would not be, I fancy, all?—No, but according to this scheme as put before us, it says so. Also according to this scheme, although it is not mentioned here clearly, but either Mr. Ennis or Mr. Pascoe, I forget which, said so at the meeting of the County Council, when I spoke about the inconvenience of Councilors attending in Ennisworthy, said, "Oh, that is not intended," that the Gorey able-bodied should go to Ennisworthy and be there entirely looked after by the Ennisworthy Guardians, so that the Gorey Guardians would have no control over their own paupers. They merely would be Guardians of what they suggest as an auxiliary lunatic asylum.

19790. The auxiliary lunatic asylum, I understood from their evidence, would be under a joint committee, and the Guardians could still be Gorey, according to their scheme, deal with the relief of the poor by means of outdoor relief, and deal with the sick who are in their sick wards, and also pay per capita for the aged and infirm and other inmates who might be dealt with elsewhere?—Yes, but so far as I understood from them, they would also have the general administration of this auxiliary asylum.

Mr. Ennis.—No.

19791. CHAIRMAN.—I thought that would be done by a joint committee—two or three or four or any number from each union?—That is what I understood from this.

19792. I understood that from the evidence to-day, too?—If that were so the existence of the Gorey Guardians would cease.

19793. Oh, yes; but the witnesses who have been examined, Mr. Ennis and Mr. Pascoe, both said they anticipated that the Gorey Guardians would remain and not deal with the lunatics, but deal with the sick and with the boarded-out inmates of various ages, and also with the applications for outdoor relief through a committee. Would you see the same objection to that scheme that you see to the scheme of pure amalgamation, which undoubtedly would be open to the objections you make?—I should not approve of that scheme at all.

19794. Of neither?—Not at all.

19795. What objections do you see to the scheme that has been put forward by Mr. Ennis and Mr. Pascoe?—With regard to sending the able-bodied to Ennisworthy?

19796. Sending the aged and infirm to Ennisworthy?—I think the great objection is that the Gorey Guardians would so completely lose control of their own aged and infirm.

19797. They would not have control at all; they simply would pay so much per capita for their treatment either in Enniscorthy or Workford as might be settled?—Yes, therefore they simply would be in the position of paying what they were called upon by the Enniscorthy Guardians, the average cost, and they would have absolutely no voice in the control of these finances.

19796. That is a proper objection. Can you see any means of meeting that? Suppose instead of having it at Enniscorthy it should be at Workford and should be managed as a county workhouse by a body formed of representatives from the four unions concerned?—Personally I should not approve of that, because I don't think the representation would be sufficiently large from each union to be able to give proper attention to it.

19799. Of course they would only have a very small representation from each union. The work would be done with locally at Gorey?—Yes, but the aged and infirm.

19800. That is a class who live rather a haphazard life, and if one of them were to get sick, the idea is not that they should go back to the hospital of their own union, but that they should be treated in the Workford hospital, and Workford would be better off for hospitals; it would have the County Infirmary and the fever hospital and its own sick wards for acute cases, as distinguished from the feeble and infirm—I have not thought about that particular point, so I should not like to give an answer offhand.

19801. It is not open to the objection that there would be no representation; there would be representation?—Yes.

19802. And you would have an opportunity, would you not, of classifying the aged and infirm according to character?—Oh, certainly.

19803. Which is impossible at present?—Yes.

19804. There are some good points in that scheme?—Yes.

19805. And if you furthermore got rid of the cost of three establishments?—I do not see that the cost of the establishments would be so very much reduced.

19806. Gorey would disappear, according to the suggestion made, into an auxiliary asylum. If it were set, there would be no officials there at all, but that part of the workhouse would be useful. Enniscorthy, if it were not devoted to any public purpose, the officials there would cease to have any work to do, except in the sick wards, the same way in New Ross, so you would save absolutely the cost of the three establishments?—Yes, but they would have to be very much the same establishments for the sick.

19807. You would want nobody but the nurse and the doctor?—You would want a head of the establishment.

19808. Is not the doctor the head?—Would you not require someone to take the place of the master?

19809. Oh, no; under the new rules the doctor is the head of the hospital; the nurses are under him. The master has no responsibility except in extraordinary cases of discipline?—The clerk, of course, would have to be provided for.

19810. Presumably you would want a clerk to manage the business side, but the indoor officers you would want would be the relieving officer still. You would get rid of the cost of the master and matron and other paid attendants upon the able-bodied or infirm?—We also thought that this turning Gorey into an auxiliary asylum would be an unnecessary expense. We did not accept Mr. Ennis' figures any more than you did the £1,500 for the alterations.

19811. It was Dr. Bigger who was a little sceptical on that point; but it did seem small, of course?—There is in existence at the present moment a large building, which is the property of the county, which has been taken up for the purpose of generating electric light for the lunatic asylums—large mills—and at the time that that was being considered, the electric lighting scheme, it was brought forward that this building would be used as an auxiliary asylum. I am not in a position to say whether that could be done at a large or a small cost; I have never seen them.

19812. They must be down at the low level of the river?—I cannot say, but naturally, when the water power is taken there.

19813. Now, as regards the classes who are in the workhouse—you were present during the giving of evidence to-day. Have you formed any opinion as to whether the proposed plan for dealing with girls with illegitimate children would be a good one?—I am here as a representative of the Gorey Union, so I cannot say; but, personally, speaking my individual opinion,

I think the scheme that I heard to-day admirable, but what my brother Guardians would think I cannot say.

19814. They have not considered it, but your own personal opinion would be in favour of it?—Very much so. I think anything we can do to keep women who have had only one child apart from the other inmates should be done, and anything to bring up children as useful members of the community should be tried, even if it cost something.

19815. Is it your opinion that they become habituated owing to the present system which puts them with the old offenders?—I could not say whether the present system has any effect one way or another, but common-sense tells me it would tend to do so.

19816. As regards the children under fifteen, children, if this scheme were adopted, would cease to come into workhouses, and therefore would not have to be dealt with. As regards children that are in the workhouse and may have to be dealt with in the future, would you approve of boarding them out?—Where possible I should board them out.

19817. Would you consider it possible or prudent or wise to take these children from their parents and board them away from their parents?—In the case of these illegitimate children, yes.

19818. Would you not hesitate about being in favour of a change in the law to that extent?—No; certainly I should be in favour of it.

19819. As regards inmates and idiots, ought they to be removed from workhouses to your opinion?—Yes, I think so to a very great extent. Of course in Gorey Workhouse, and I presume in others, there are many on the border line who are extremely weak in and about the workhouse.

19820. They do labour on the farm?—Yes.

19821. You have practically got rid of all your in Gorey?—We have very few there; practically none.

19822. They have taken them in at Enniscorthy for you?—No, I don't think we have sent any there lately; four are there, quiet, and useful.

19823. And with the ordinary inmates?—Yes.

19824. As regards vagrants or tramps, what is the view of the Gorey Board on that matter?—The view of the Gorey Board on that matter was that it was too difficult a subject for them to tackle.

19825. Individually, what is your own view?—I have thought over the subject, but I cannot say I have studied it sufficiently to give any opinion.

19826. You heard our discussion this morning. Would you at all go to the extent of depriving these people of their children, and while their children were being supported at the public expense, putting them under restraint in some institution—say a workhouse?—I think taking their children from them would be aggravating the evil very much. When they saw the children well taken care of they simply—19827. Supposing, as a consequence of taking the children from them, their own liberty was taken from them? If people are so bad that they cannot be trusted with the care of their children, would it be a prudent thing to let them go at large and raise further families?—No, perhaps not; but you cannot keep these people in jails or reformatories, or wherever you like to call it, indefinitely.

19828. Do you think it would be too great a strain to keep them in these institutions, workhouses, as long as their children had to be supported at the public expense, unless the governing body of that institution were willing to try them out with a license to see if they could earn their living honestly?—No, I should not be in favour of that.

19829. You think that would be too great an interference with their liberty?—I think it would.

19830. To what extent would you go in dealing with that vagrant class?—As I said just now, I have not gone sufficiently into the subject to give any opinion that would be worth anything.

19831. In England they have the power of detaining them for relatively a short time?—Yes, a very short time.

19832. And they have not found that at all effective?—No.

19833. Bills have been introduced recently by private members for the establishment of labour colonies or institutions where vagrants can be sent under magistrates' warrants and detained for such time as the law allowed?—I have read of those.

19834. Have you formed any opinion about such institutions?—No, I have not.

19835. The councils, you would not have any to deal with in Gorse, I fancy—people who are in and out during the year many times?—Oh, no; it is practically a rural population.

18830. You might have a family now and again?—Yes, just one or two.

18831. Then I take it that, with the exception of the women and children and lunatics, your own opinion is that the workhouse ought to go on pretty much as it is?—Yes; but what we were agreed on at Gorse was that, supposing an inquiry it were found that there were too many workhouses in the country for the population, that there should be or might be a general amalgamation of unions irrespective of county boundaries.

18832. In 1850 fifty additional unions were opened owing to the necessity that then existed for more workhouses. Your idea would be to see that number burned in 1850 knocked off, and to revert to the original 100 old unions?—Possibly, something on that general scale.

18833. You have not in the County Wexford any union that was made at that time?—No.

18834. They are all of the old type?—Yes. According as the unions are now they are of the most irregular shapes and sizes. Take the Gorse Union—it winds in and out. There is one part of the Emancipatory Union which is a great deal nearer to Gorse than to Enniscorthy.

18835. Was that the result of following divisions of union at that time?—Yes, I believe so. There is another part of the union nearer to Enniscorthy than it is to Gorse.

18836. But the hardship from such contrivances of boundaries would not be so great as to call for the re-estimation of boundaries if there were no other cause?—No, certainly not. The Gorse Board were against the system of boarding out the aged because they thought there would not be sufficient control exercised over those who were boarded out. In the case of those who had relatives it would be easy enough, but it would be very difficult otherwise to get people to take proper care of those boarded out, and people would be inclined to take those old people on speculation for the sake of the money.

18837. Do you think the old people would not be very sharp and quick about getting the worth of their money? They would not be like little children who would not know their rights?—They would know their rights fast enough, but the question is whether they would get them.

18838. They would take pretty good measures for getting them?—Also there is another thing we have to look at, that several of the aged people have really come down to the workhouse owing to their own failure and faults. If these are let out they will have every temptation to revert to their old failings.

18839. There are a number there owing to poverty only?—Yes; if these could be boarded with their relatives.

18840. You would give outdoor relief as far as you could to these?—Certainly.

18841. I should not fancy that anyone would suggest that thieving people or people with drunken habits should be given outdoor relief?—No.

18842. Is Gorse you contribute to the Oulart Hospital?—Yes.

18843. Do you think you are getting value for your money there?—No, I am quite sure of it.

18850. Have you done anything to try to get value?—Any fever cases in that locality are sent there. The Emancipatory Board have the management of that, but we contribute.

18851. Did it ever occur to you that instead of having a fever hospital it might be turned with advantage into a little village or local hospital for medical and surgical cases, and now that there are comfortable accommodations in existence and good fever hospitals within a reasonable distance, that the fever cases might go to headquarters, and that these hospitals would be more useful and a great deal more availed of as general medical and surgical hospitals for really acute cases?—Yes, I should think that could be very easily done, but I don't know what the terms are by which we are bound to contribute to the Oulart Hospital, but I fancy we cannot withdraw.

18852. Yes, but you would be in favour of a change in the law which would enable you to use these hospitals as ordinary hospitals?—Certainly.

18853. Are there many sick in the union as far as you are aware who decline to come to receive medical or surgical treatment in the existing hospitals?—I don't know.

18854. There is no demand as far as you know for the existence of a medical or a surgical nurse for the sick poor in connection with the dispensary?—It would be, in my opinion and of those who know the living of the poor better than I do, it would be of the very greatest advantage.

18855. They would have the power to have them possibly now?—Not under the existing law.

18856. Are you sure of that? You can in England, but I don't think you can here. It has not been tried, as far as I know, in any case except in the County Kerry. There they have combined the office of midwife and district nurse—put it into the hands of a person who is able to do both. It is the only place that it has been tried so far, and it has been found of wonderful use?—I can quite believe it would be, but I was not aware that under the existing law it could be done. That is a dangerous experiment, because these district nurses would be expected to go to all cases. If they had a maternity case they could not attend anything that would be risky, and they are sufficiently trained in their work not to take up such cases. But then there are a vast number of cases—sprained ankles and things of that sort—in which they could be of the greatest use. They could be of the greatest use in showing the poor how to take advantage of what they can get. I should be very strongly in favour of that.

18857. Dr. BARNES.—Have you considered the question of consumption?—It has not arisen before us, but I think any plan by which the consumptive can be separated from the healthy and put in some central place should be striven out if possible.

18858. Do you think the Board of Guardians would be favourable to such a project?—When you bring these things before the Board of Guardians it becomes very much a case of pounds, shillings, and pence, and unless I knew what the approximate cost would be I should be very sorry to say what they would do.

18859. CHAIRMAN.—They would like to have a broader back than the union?—Certainly.

18860. Dr. BARNES.—But personally you are in favour of it?—Very strongly in favour of it.

Mr. J. D. DOYLE examined.

I am Vice-Chairman of the Gorse Board of Guardians.

18861. CHAIRMAN.—Viscount Stopford has enquired to see the views of the Board of Guardians, but they were strongly opposed to any amalgamation with Enniscorthy?—Under the present circumstances.

18862. If the situation were changed—you heard the different methods proposed of dealing with the various classes which would take out of the existing workhouses practically all the classes except the sick—would you be in favour of such a reduction apart altogether from the question of amalgamation? If there was no amalgamation to be done at all, would you be in favour of leaving the sick at Gorse and taking all the other classes out of the workhouse?—There is one class I would not be in favour of taking out of the workhouse—the patients classed as imbeciles. It is a very wide class.

18863. There are only four there?—You have eight in Gorse, but under the imbeciles we have four, quite clean and useful, two more quite clean, but suffering from senile decay. Under the second class we had six at the beginning of the year, but four have died, and we have two more left that might die at any moment.

18864. They are in extreme weakness?—Yes, but still they are quiet and clean, and as long as they were able they were useful.

18865. Would you be in favour of keeping that class still?—Of keeping them still.

18866. Not in favour of sending them to an auxiliary asylum or an asylum itself?—No.

18867. What was your reason for thinking that class might be better kept in the workhouse?—Because it would be a cruelty to themselves in the first instance.

18868. Would they not have a better time of it in the asylum or auxiliary asylum?—Then they believe themselves—

18869. They are hardly conscious where they are?—

May 14, 1904.
Mr. J. D.
Dwyer.

There are those who are only just feeble-minded; their mental vigour has been impaired by old age. In the prime of life they were as sane as anybody, and had a normal degree of intelligence. They wish very much to stay where they are. They like to be amongst their friends or the people they are accustomed with.

19370. Is there any other class?—There is one we have, quiet, clean, and intelligent, but subject to epileptic fits, and if it was possible to have a central institution for Limerick or the whole of Ireland, we would be in favour of sending these patients there.

19371. There are only 400 of them in all Ireland?—We have one dirty and helpless that ought to go to the asylum. It was returned here that there were 150 or 147 in the county. Take out of those the first two classes. In all probability there would be only twenty-five or thirty that would be dirty and helpless and objectionable to be kept in the unions. If it is decided that there are too many workhouses in the county for the population, we suggest that there should be a redistribution of unions between this and the neighbouring counties.

19372. That is in the county or in the country. If there are too many unions in Ireland, you would suggest that there should be a reorganisation of boundaries?—Yes, and out of those unions we could get a sufficient number of these real imbeciles to make it worth while to put an institution apart for them. If Goryy is converted into an auxiliary system, it would be hardly worth while employing a full staff to deal with twenty-five or thirty idiots; whereas if we got the idiots from the neighbouring counties it would swell the number sufficiently that they might possibly be kept without any increase in the rates or any large increase.

19373. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Or if the neighbouring counties got them from you?—Or if the neighbouring counties got them from us.

19374. CHAIRMAN.—That would not be as nice?—It would not be as nice, but it would be much cheaper.

19375. What is your view about the aged and infirm? Would you be willing that they should go to the central institution?—The aged and infirm, these are very much prejudiced against going to Enniscorthy. This has been in the papers, and there is a strong opinion about it.

19376. Would they have the same objection to coming to Wexford?—Yes, to going outside the union. The result would be that they would hold on in their present position until they would become ill, then we would have to give them outdoor relief.

19377. You know, some workhouses have been broken up. I myself was present at the closing of two workhouses, and there were most distressing scenes. The poor people cried as if they were leaving their own homes, but I saw them a fortnight and a month afterwards, and they were as happy as ever in the new place; in fact, they were rather better off. One union was put into Mr. Murkaghan's union, and he made them over so much more comfortable than in their own union, and they like it very much?—But if they refuse to come in, supposing the present infirm would go to Enniscorthy, people that are becoming infirm, that would come in if Goryy Union was allowed to go on as it is, they would refuse to come in, and if a doctor's certificate was given that they were incapable of being removed, the result would be that we would have to give them outdoor relief and employ agents. Our nurses' bill has been enormous.

19378. There is no doubt about it if you diminish the number of workhouses you do tend to increase the amount of outdoor relief. Whether that is an advantage or a disadvantage is, of course, a matter of opinion. You think it would be a disadvantage?—I think it would increase our rates very much.

19379. Would you be against increasing outdoor relief? Would you prefer housing the destitute and aged poor in an institution rather than relieve them outside?—Very much. We have to pay from 12s. to £1 for a nurse.

19380. If an infirm person on outdoor relief got sick would not an ambulance be sent to remove them to the nearest institution?—But they would not go.

19381. It has not been found in actual experience that people refuse to go to hospital when they get sick. What is the greatest distance in Goryy Union from the workhouse?—Some points would be twenty miles.

19382. The Goryy people, of course, may have a special regard for the Goryy Hospital, but do you think the people who are living out near Arklow would have the same homely feeling for Goryy Workhouse that the Goryy people would have?—Well, they appear to have it. There are some people living within half a mile of the union that would not come in; they would die outside.

19383. That is a class that does not impress us, because they won't go, even as it exists at present. But, then, a great many more people get the same idea as these people have at present. Another objection is that we have only three men, four women, and eighteen mothers of children among the able-bodied. These people do the whole work of the house. If we made these a permanent household, and paid for them, we would have to get twenty-five other paid hands to do the work of the infirmary.

19384. I don't agree with you; you would have very few left if all those classes went away from the workhouse?—We might not have to employ twenty-five; we would have to employ some.

19385. You have the nurses already, and instead of the paupers, who are a very undesirable class in hospital institutions, you would have to employ a couple of wardens; would not that be the object of it?—I cannot say. We have thirty-eight men and twenty ladies, women, very feeble people. If these were sent to Enniscorthy, their health is very uncertain, some of these might become ill. It appears the Enniscorthy infirmary is congested; it is not able to carry them, so the result would be they would have to build an additional infirmary to accommodate these people; and if you take into consideration the cost of the additional infirmary for the Goryy people going to Enniscorthy, and take a great many other items—

19386. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—You seem to be assuming that the same condition of things would exist in every other institution. Are you aware that if this scheme is carried out a large number of people would be taken out of Enniscorthy to make room for those who are put into it?

CHAIRMAN.—If the aged and infirm, instead of being treated at Enniscorthy, as suggested by the County Council resolutions, were removed to Wexford?—What would Enniscorthy be utilized for, then?

19387. That is another matter. We will have some opinions from Enniscorthy presently on that?—Do you propose to set aside Goryy Workhouse exclusively for the idiots?

19388. We are not proposing anything. What has been suggested is, that Goryy should be used as an auxiliary lunatic asylum?—For the idiots of the county?

19389. For the county, or, possibly, the same area as is served by the present asylum. In Wexford a county asylum?—As far as I understand, it is.

Mr. EVANS.—Practically it is.

CHAIRMAN.—Then, in all our unions we have waste space. In Goryy we have a considerable amount of waste space.

19390. If girls go out, and children and inmates go out, and children are boarded out, you have a great deal of space in workhouses?—As it is, we have plenty of space.

19391. And, then, if you removed the aged and infirm to a central institution, there would be no reason whatever, according to the suggestions we have received, for retaining the officials who look after the inmates other than the sick?—Then, it has been proposed, also in reference to the Goryy Union, to add a pay ward to the Goryy Infirmary.

19392. You have a great deal of space at Goryy; you have a very large block that lies between the infirmary and the fever hospital, where the night nurses' apartments are at present, that is never used now at all. It is never used now at all; but we made a residence for nursing sisters, and we found it was just as expensive to convert one of these buildings into a residence as it would be to build from the ground. If we laid out some thousands of pounds in creating a ward for paying patients, the result would be, that we would only get odd pensioners from the police or soldiers to occupy it. The farmers have a prejudice against coming into the infirmary. They imagine they are cared better by their own family; and when they are with their own family they are not able to get the advice they require.

19393. Don't you think that feeling is largely giving way before the improvement in hospitals throughout the country; don't you find a great many more people coming in than used to come in?—Not in Goryy. The mind of the farmer would be very uneasy in Goryy Union, because if the farm was at a distance, he would imagine everything was going wrong.

19394. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—All people that have infectious diseases have to go?—Yes; but you need get a well-to-do person going into the infirmary; if there was an infirmary they would not come. It was suggested to isolate the infirmary from the body of the house, but it could be got over—in its present state, without a disproportionate amount of expense, because it is surrounded by parts of the body of the house.

1902. CHAIRMAN.—That difficulty exists in all workhouses, but it could be got over—in its present state, we don't see what harm it does for patients coming in to walk through the body of the infirmary.

1903. Would you not like to reduce your wards?—Certainly; but this tends to increase the rates.

1904. If a scheme was put before you, worked out in detail, which would result in an improvement and a large reduction in your rates, would you then look on it with a more favourable eye than you now seem disposed to do?—I believe the Guardians would.

1905. Your fear is that those proposals mean increased expense?—Twice the expense.

1906. If you found it meant a large reduction to the sub-payers, would you be disposed to look on it with more favour; I don't say favour exactly; I don't like to say you to give a snap opinion; but would it make a difference in your attitude towards it?—In certain respects, it would.

1907. Your objections would disappear, but your reasons for keeping the people near their friends would still remain?—They would still remain. The fear of an increase in out-door relief and the cost of supplying some of the people who got dangerously ill, would remain; and the reasons we suggested consolidation through the neighbouring counties, as that, if the neighbouring counties were taken in under the scheme, there might be a chance that these schemes would be carried out without increasing too much in expenditure. Then Gory as paying £200 a year to the county infirmary, and for several years past we have sent no patients there. It is as easy to send them to Dublin as to Wexford. In Dublin we have a choice of several hospitals, where there are specialists for each disease.

1908. And you pay for those going to these external hospitals?—Yes; but if we increased the efficiency of Wexford Infirmary, the result would be that we would have, perhaps, one or two doctors that would be experts in certain cases; they would not be very much better than the infirmary doctor at other cases of disease; and the result is that it would only be for what they had the name of being good at that patients afflicted with these diseases would be sent to them, the others would be sent to Dublin still. So, as far as we are concerned, it would be better to allow the existing state of things to go on, that is—patients being sent to Dublin, to whatever hospital we thought suited their case best, than to expend a lot of money in improving the county infirmary.

1909. You think if a person got into the train at Gory it made very little matter whether they went to Dublin or Wexford, and that they would have a larger medical aid in Dublin?—So speak from.

1910. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Still, after all, it is necessary that there should be some efficient institution in the county?—When a county is so near Dublin, I don't think it is necessary.

1911. CHAIRMAN.—Now Bess?—That is not so very far from Dublin as the back parts of Mayo and Galway; there might be some reason, then.

1912. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—While you are so situated that it might be convenient for the people of Gory to go to Dublin, there are other people in the county that are not so conveniently situated. Do you not think there ought to be a high-class institution in the county?—If there was an institution in Waterford it would suit such people, perhaps.

1913. CHAIRMAN.—There is a very good hospital in Waterford?—It was suggested, also, that a patient who enters the hospital loses his rate—would it not be very much easier for an enactment to pass that his name would still remain on the register?

Dr. BUCKER.—He does not lose his vote.

1914. CHAIRMAN.—If he pays for his keep?—But if he does not pay for his keep?

1915. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Do you give much out-door relief in Gory?—About £11 a week.

1916. Do you find it works well?—In some cases, except in the case of old people living by themselves; and, then, when they get sick it is very hard to get a nurse to mind them, and we have no supervision over the nurse. I heard of one case where we paid a woman £1s a week to mind an old man, and the report went round that she used to open the door and look at him once a day, and she was getting £1s a week for that.

1917. If the law was so altered that these people who had to be supported out of the public rates when they got ill were compelled to go into the infirmary, would not that get rid of the difficulty?—Yes, if we could compel them.

1918. It does seem a hardship to have a single person living in a house by themselves having no one to look after them when they are ill?—We had one case lately of an old woman living in a thatched house, the rain pouring in on her, and she was in a state of filth, and still she would not come in; we could not get a nurse to mind her at any price.

1919. Don't you think you would get over the sentimental objection of people to leaving Gory if the Guardians were empowered to board people out?—A great many people come down in the world owing to drink; and if these people were boarded out, the result would be that they would be continually hanging around the nearest publichouse.

1920. There is no need to give them the money direct; could you not give them their board?—I understand that; they would be in the neighbourhood of the publichouse, and spending on everyone that came. The publichouse is a general shop as well as a public-house, and a man is forced to go to the publichouse for goods, and when they get him to the counter they would be appealing to him.

1921. Don't you think the publican would soon stop that?—It depends on the publican, if he was a chronic drinker himself.

1922. Could not the Guardians withdraw the allowance if they found the money going for liquor?—Of course they could.

1923. Banning-out would be an easy method of getting rid of the sentimental objection to sending them to a distance?—Then he would become chargeable on the rates.

1924. CHAIRMAN.—What is your opinion about the tramp?—I think everybody is agreed that labour colonies, such as have been found successful in other countries, that a tramp, once there was evidence to prove that he was a habitual case, should be sent into one of the labour colonies, and made self-supporting, as far as possible.

1925. You would not object to that change in the law?—No.

1926. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Have you many of them about Gory?—There were over 1,500 relieved last year.

1927. CHAIRMAN.—They may have been the same men three or four times?—Yes.

1928. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Do they come singly or with families?—Some come with families, and the families never get any education whatever, moral or otherwise, as the children grow up worse than the parents.

1929. You would be in favour of taking the children from them?—Yes, and preventing them having more children; most of these tramps have very large families.

1930. Four or five?—Seven or eight or ten, in some cases; and a great many of these children have something the matter with them.

1931. Naturally, the poor little creatures getting about in wind and wet weather of all sorts?—They are born lame.

1932. If the workhouse was closed to such a class they would not come near the place?—Then it would be a means of preventing the next generation becoming tramps.

Mr. THOMAS BOLGER, J.P., Ennisceorthy, examined.

1933. CHAIRMAN.—That is the view of the Guardians of the Ennisceorthy Union on the question of amalgamating workhouses generally and as regards those there over?—Well, sir, I will tell what they did some time after this Viceregal Commission was appointed. The idea suggested itself to the Wexford Board of Guardians to have a conference of the unions of this county. So they got into communication with the unions, and Ennisceorthy sent also delegates, Wexford eight, New Ross 3, and Gory 2, to Ennisceorthy, on the 22nd of last July, for the purpose of considering and debating this subject of amalgamation of unions.

May 18, 1904.

Mr. J. D. Doyle.

Mr. Thomas Bolger.

May 18, 1901
 Mr. Thacker Budget.

Lady Maurice FitzGerald, who is here present, was one of the delegates from Wexford, and she was voted to the chair. Lord Stopford stated that the general feeling of Gorey was against amalgamation, and spoke in that strain altogether, as you heard him here to-day. Mr. Dan Newlan, an being our senior member from Enniscorthy, spoke against amalgamation.

19027. The Chairman of the Rural Council?—Yes.

19028. And Mr. Hayes is the Chairman of the Board of Guardians?—He is not here. Mr. Murphy, I believe, of the Wexford Board of Guardians, followed in the same strain, and Mr. Collier, for New Ross.

19029. They all agreed with Lord Stopford?—Yes. There were twenty-two present, and eighteen voted against amalgamation and four for; so that was the opinion of the majority of the county. They brought forward the following resolutions, which were passed unanimously:—"That imbeciles and epileptics should be transferred to some suitable institution, and separately treated, provided a capitation grant of 6s. per head be obtained for maintenance." "That all children over two years of age should be boarded out to nurse, as far as the Guardians of the different unions think fit." "That the blind should be a State charge, and supported by some central institution, with the exception of the old and infirm." "That vagrants should be sent to reformatories, and instructed in industries; that the provisions of 5 George IV., cap. 63, conferring power on police constables to arrest for offences set forth in sec. 4 of that Act, should be extended to Ireland." "That the law regarding out-door relief be changed, and that the occupants of labourers' cottages and widows with one child be entitled to outdoor relief." These resolutions were sent to you.

They were unanimously passed; but I think I would agree with the County Council, that Gorey should be made an auxiliary asylum for the admission of lunatics or the insane epileptics of the county. I believe there are 128 in the County Wexford. As regards the resolution, that all children over two years should be boarded out to nurse, that was the unanimous opinion, but at that time, probably, we had not considered it. Since then, as far as I am myself concerned, I gave it a good deal of consideration, and went through the workhouse to see, and I must say, as far as I can see, the children are splendidly cared in the workhouses; they are clean and well-cared, and look very well, and there are almost eighty children in the workhouse in Enniscorthy; they have good teachers, and seem to be in the best of health. If they were boarded out, I question whether they would be so well cared for. There is this difference—that a child reared in a workhouse considers it as his home; it looks back to it, naturally, as we sit in a house we were reared; if we could rid them of that idea, and it had no bad effects afterwards, I would prefer that to boarding them out; but we have had no experience up to the present in our own union.

19030. Are you sure you have had no experience of that in your own union—are you sure none of the girls have come back to be mothers?—The last thirteen years there have been 100 children hired out, and only five of those returned.

19031. At what age would they be hired out?—At fourteen. I suppose. But I saw a girl myself—a very fine girl—and she was hired out by a farmer, and she came in in three days wearing crying; she was sent out again, and she came back again from four or five miles away. It was her home. I don't know whether that fine girl is there yet; but that feeling has to be got over, and boarding out might get over it.

19032. Have you ever heard any opinion expressed by the people who get the hired-out children as to whether they were handy or useful about the place?—In some cases they turn out very good.

19033. Are they found useful and handy coming out of an institution; are they found as handy and useful about a house or farm or place as children who would be reared in the country?—They are not; I know that.

19034. Do you think, then, that that would not be rather an argument in favour of boarding out?—I think it would. That is what I am debating with myself about.

19035. If a girl or a boy is not useful about a farm, he or she will not get on as well?—No; that is what I have been debating with myself.

19036. You have not made up your mind?—You could hardly tell. When you see how clean they are in the houses, and then when you see them in the farmers' houses, not so clean and tidy.

19037. Are you speaking of one occasion that you saw them in the workhouse?—No, several times; I made it my special care since that.

19038. Who are the workers there?—The men for the females.

19039. And the boys?—They are under a National teacher.

19040. Did you find them looking as clean?—Yes. There is a master, a woman, the master is a magnificent master—a better to troops. But as to expressing an opinion, if I thought they were as well treated outside and sent to school, even though it cost a little more in the rates—

19041. It costs a great deal less to board them out?—I find here that in Enniscorthy they only cost 2s. 6d. a week, the children.

19042. That is only for their bare food?—We might try it in Enniscorthy. There is no reason why we should not give it a trial, but having no experience of it, I cannot say. The children I saw in Enniscorthy were splendid, but still if the longing for the workhouse remained it is not desirable, and I would prefer to have them boarded out, if you could get any place where they could be sent to school and educated and brought up.

19043. They are sent to the house where they are boarded out, and they go from that house to the National school—no union clothes?—Yes, in that case I would prefer it, but what age would you suggest?

19044. As soon as they are able to use their teeth; say a couple of years old—I think it would work in this way. If you happened in the first case to get them out in suitable places, if the first five or six got boarded out went on very well, you would have no difficulty in getting people to take them out, because they would be useful to the people themselves.

19045. The evidence we got all over the country is that these children go to families, and they become members of the families. The payment ceased after a fixed time, and the child remains, and there are hundreds of families in the country, I venture to say, now supported by the earnings of their foster children?—Very well, I would be in favour of that.

19046. In Belfast very large numbers of children are boarded out, and they go to work as half-timers, and their wages go to the support of their foster parents?—As regards the plan Mr. Pascoda referred to—19047. The last suggestion made that they should be sent to a central institution seems a kindly and prudent arrangement?—Oh, yes, it does. I would be in favour of that.

19048. Now the vagrants?—Well, there is nothing I can possibly say against tramps but I am prepared to say it and do away with them.

19049. I believe it is a fact that the County Wexford is specially tormented by tramps?—So it is; there are not many about Oneght, Mister.

19050. Why?—On account of our good nature and gentleness in Wexford we are preyed upon.

19051. We have met in our drives about the country large families moving about in that way, and certainly we have not seen as many tramps moving about in other parts of Ireland as here?—They are a curse to the country, demoralising it in every way, and they won't work. They levy blackmail in the country places. I know it myself. I live in the country. They go in twos, for it is very nice to have someone to talk to. There are some very fine young fellows, but they get that down look that comes from their occupation, and that suits them all to pieces in levying blackmail when there are only women in the home. There is not labour enough in the country, and they demoralise young fellows. The boys will say: "Well, look at these fellows knocking it out, and we are killed working at 2d. or 10d. a day." And in that sense they will demoralise the people to some extent. Are they not parasites taking the life-blood out of the country?

19052. Feeding on the body corporate without giving anything in return?—They are ghosts on the living. Whatever possibly can be done should be done to do away with these tramps, but it is the opinion of everyone in the County Wexford and of everyone in Ireland that a man should be made earn his own bread. It is taking from the wealth of the country; it is labour creates wealth. We have not labour enough in the country. If I could add the speemen and other boys in the towns I would be very glad to add them. Last harvest at a twelvemonth the harvest was very late. We had not any help, and these speemen got together in bodies where a poor farmer could not afford to pay more than the ordinary wage to take up the crop. They asked 6s. and 6s. a day.

19031. Did they do any work?—They would work a few hours on the day for St. No matter what way you look at the tramp, he is a curse in the country; he is no use, and should be put down.

19034. You are speaking altogether of these people that go marching around the road. You are not speaking of the poor old people that are in every parish more or less; they have a welcome?—They have a welcome every place. They have given the best part of their life to enrich people of the country, have worked around for them. They are always welcome—a part of Irish life that we don't want to get out of at all. They remind us of the days of old, when they had to sell to the monasteries and places for alms.

19035. They are all decent, poor people?—Yes.

19036. Outdoor relief?—It is hard to speak about outdoor relief. Of course, I would be for giving the deserving person outdoor relief.

19037. Do you find outdoor relief has gone up at all since it was made a union charge, or is it about the same?—It is about the same. It is not very large, but I would have it a union charge for many reasons. I live in Milltown, which is at Farna. I live in a division which is only 6d. in the 8, while Farna was 2s. 6d. or 2s. 7d.

19038. What is your uniform rate now?—Is 7d.

19039. That has hit you?—Yes, but it is this way—there are only fifteen farmers in the Farna division. They had to pay rates for the poor of the whole country that congregate in Farna from the country.

19040. And the shopkeepers?—Yes, but twelve shopkeepers. I think it is fair to have a union charge.

19041. It has hit you hard, but you think it fair?—Certainly.

19042. Would you be in favour of a large extension of outdoor relief? Would you be in favour, as some of the witnesses said to-day, of extending it to all deserving poor people who could be treated outside?—Certainly, but I am afraid both the relieving officers and the Guardians have been played on by underserving cases.

19043. You think they are a bit too soft in Wexford?—I do. It is £365 a week in Ennisceorthy, it is only £11 in Gorey, and Gorey is half the size of Ennisceorthy, so we should pay only £22. I think there should be dispensary committees or district bodies for the distribution of outdoor relief.

19044. Mr. MURPHY.—Would you approve of the suggestion made by Mr. Norris in regard to that?—I would thoroughly approve of that. The relieving officer has to do his duty. The Guardians are too cowardly in a great many instances; they are afraid to stop it.

19045. CHAIRMAN.—Would you say cowardly or soft-hearted?—Between the two; some one and some the other. I could give you several cases where people got outdoor relief who did not deserve it.

19046. What would be the circumstances of the people who got it and did not deserve it, without mentioning names?—I know a young widow woman and she had a fine young fellow, a son. She was married very young. She had 2s. a week, and it helped her to rear this fellow till. He came to work with me, and I gave him 12s. a week. She will stick on to the 2s. My brother offered her 1s. a day to fill socks for him. She would not take it, and we struck off the sock. The son remained idle to see could he compel us to give the relief. We kept the relief away from her, and now she is better off and the son is better off.

19047. That was a very proper action of yours?—I think so.

19048. Do you know any cases in which the people are still getting outdoor relief who ought not?—I have heard the general cry. I only give you cases I know; I know three.

19049. In those three cases was the relief stopped?—It was and is stopped.

19050. I thought you referred to cases in which it was not stopped; it was going on improperly?—It is stopped in those three cases.

19051. That only shows you are administering it well?—I know it helps to demoralise the people in some way to come into the town—1s. 6d. or 2s. going into the house on a Saturday night with the relieving officer, and in a great many cases it is drunk when it goes in. A great many of the girls here won't work for you. Of course they will in Balfin or Omagh, for there are factories there; there are none here.

19052. Are you in favour of the resolution passed that the occupants of labourers' cottages should be eligible, if other circumstances required it, for outdoor relief?—Only what the relieving officer would give provisionally, or it would induce them to sponge on the ratepayers.

19053. These people in the labourers' cottages, of course, are liable to pay rent?—Yes.

19054. If they were getting outdoor relief, presumably they would be destitute and unable to pay their rent?—Yes, the people in labourers' cottages. In the first place they deserve them, they have agitated for them, and the State has given them to them. It is £150 given as a free gift to the labouring man.

19055. What about the rent?—The rent comes back, but as a general rule in Wexford it takes that to keep the house in repair. He pays about 8d. a week, and we pay 2s. a week and the rates.

19056. You are giving him £5 a year as a present and a good house all in one slap. If you commence giving outdoor relief there are clever dodges everywhere who will be able to get the outdoor relief and the house as well?—I would give provisional relief wherever necessary.

19057. And hold the relieving officer responsible for giving it in proper cases?—Certainly. Whoever suggested the idea about the fallen women I quite approve of that. It is the best plan I have heard yet as regards them.

Mr. DANIEL NEWLAN examined.

19070. CHAIRMAN.—You are, I believe, the senior member of the Ennisceorthy Board?—I suppose I am near it.

19071. How long ago is it since you were a member first?—I don't suppose it is more than seventeen or eighteen years—I am not certain. I remember Ennisceorthy a very long time.

19072. You were at the meeting in Ennisceorthy—the Poor Law Conference?—Yes.

19073. Do you agree pretty much with the evidence of Mr. Bolger?—I did not hear all his evidence; I am very deaf.

19074. What is your own view about breaking up the unions and closing the workhouses?—I have got nothing to say as regards other unions, only the union I am acquainted with myself—Ennisceorthy.

19075. What is your opinion about Ennisceorthy Union?—That it would not be right to break it up. A very large number of country people who are reduced in circumstances flock into Ennisceorthy.

19076. Would it be unfair to ask people who are sick to go further?—To the hospitals in Wexford and Gorey; I cannot see how you could remove them. We have no one in the workhouse only the old people, generally speaking, except the girls, some of whom are committed themselves.

19077. What would be the best thing to do with these girls?—If you had a house that you could send them to, such as the Magdalen Convent, New Ross, where they would be made men their living; but in the present state of the law we cannot do that.

19078. What would you recommend? An amendment of the law that would enable you to do that?—Yes; I would see that they had a proper supervision over them in such a place.

19079. If they were placed under religious bodies in these institutions you would approve of that?—Yes, I would.

19080. That is what you meant?—It is, but at the same time they are very well looked after in Ennisceorthy so far, because we have a most respectable staff, and have to be subject to the rules, and they must concede to the rules, or be prosecuted, and they have very good examples at the same time. They are people who should not be allowed to go into the towns.

19081. But they do go, now they can take their discharges?—Oh, of course.

19082. And that is bad, you think?—I would not allow them back to the same locality at all, except. They should go to some other part of the union, but I would rather see them remain in.

19083. What is your opinion about the children in the workhouse?—I would not approve of boarding them out to nurse, that is, indiscriminately, except you get suitable persons to take charge of them and in a position to treat them as they ought to be treated.

19992. Good milk?—Yes, and circumstanced in such a way that they could keep them regularly at school.

19993. If they got good food and good schooling outside at a moderate cost would you be in favour of boarding them out?—I am not aware of any place where they would have a chance of getting a school equal to what they are getting in the workhouse at the present time. So far as the girls are concerned, they have as good a school as there is in Ireland, in charge of the nurse, with a lay assistant teacher under them. In fact, they are taught everything in that school—taught cooking, washing, making clothes, and scrubbing.

19994. You think that as they get such good treatment in Ennisworthy Workhouse, you would be unwilling to run the risk of boarding them out?—I would not get the chance of getting persons suitable to take them out. I don't know who the person is that would take out the children that could afford to do the things I would require them to do, or have the accommodation or be circumstanced so as to send them regularly to school. As soon as they are able to speak and walk they can go to the school in the union. It is a first-class school, and the girls there compare very favourably with the girls outside.

19995. At Ennisworthy you have never boarded out any children?—Yes, I saw a couple come in there, and they were decrepit—a couple of infants.

19996. I say you have no children boarded out?—No; there were a couple out at nurse, and I saw them in the infirmary.

19997. What age were they?—I think a year and a-half old.

19998. They might have been sent out a little bit too soon?—They were not properly minded. You have not the accommodation outside. There are unsanitary houses.

19999. You would not want to give them better houses than the ordinary run of poor people in the country?—With the ordinary run of poor people in the country there is scarcely a house they have at the present time but is condemned by the doctor except the union cottages.

20000. Supposing that all the houses might be unsanitary, you would not propose that the poor little waifs and strays in the workhouse should get better treatment than the children of the workhouse outside?—I don't suppose they would, but the people who would be taking them, if they meant to treat them properly, would not take them at all; it is only to make money by them themselves.

20001. Would you be astonished to hear that great numbers of children are boarded out in other unions? They board out all the children they can, and those children get greatly attached to their foster parents, and the foster parents get greatly attached to the children, and the earnings of the children in after-life go to the foster parents?—That may be so. I know some instances myself, but at the same time they would not have the opportunity of getting the education outside.

20002. Don't you think we are perhaps getting too much education in a small way? What education would you want them to have?—A thorough religious education. I would not allow them out until they were confirmed.

20003. Poor people's children outside get confirmed and go to school?—I find they are not as intelligent as the girls inside. We have hired out a large number of children, and I scarcely know one of them ever to come back to my knowledge. I heard evidence here that girls were not as useful, but I know very good girls entirely coming from the workhouse, and I found they were more competent because they were better educated, and it was easier to learn them to be useful.

20004. Have you had any of these girls in your own house at all?—Never, but they are in the locality with me at the present time.

20005. What do you think about the tramps?—They are not nearly as bad as they were years ago.

20006. They are getting better now?—No, but they are allowed to get lodgings in the workhouse, and formerly there used to be a great many robberies committed, and these were accused, and I suppose properly accused for them.

20007. There is less trouble with the tramps than there used to be?—In the locality.

20008. Whereabouts is your locality?—Two miles from Ennisworthy, on the east side of the river.

20009. Do you think there is any necessity for doing anything at all about the tramps, or would you just go on as you are?—I suppose they should be prosecuted if they did any injury. I cannot see what can be done with tramps. They are allowed in Ennisworthy to stop in the workhouse, but they have to earn almost what they get through breaking stones. There are not so many of them as a few years past. Formerly they were not allowed in Ennisworthy at all. At that time, though, they were very disagreeable through the country.

20010. Is there anything else that we have not asked you that you would like to mention?—You were not asking me anything about the idiots.

20011. Would you keep the lunatics and idiots and imbeciles in the workhouse, or should they go to some institution specially kept for brackies?—I think if there was an auxiliary asylum, but it is my opinion every more increases the rates, and probably they would be no better there. As far as the male idiots in Ennisworthy, they are very well off.

20012. You think every change makes more noise?—Certainly, that is my experience.

20013. If you saw a change that resulted in economy, what would you think?—I would approve of it, if there was not unnecessary hardship attached to it. If there was, I would not approve of it, and I think there would be unnecessary hardship attached by moving persons from one union to another, and of course entailing greater cost.

20014. How do you think the greater cost would arise?—Removing them. You have to treat them in whatever place you send them in and find attendance for them, the same as where they are at the present time, and probably not have as good attendance.

20015. If you had one set of attendants instead of four, would not that be economy?—You have to have a certain amount of attendants for a certain number of patients.

20016. But not to have four times as many as in one place?—In Ennisworthy Union you have as attendants for them, except the nurses, and they are in charge of the nurse; there are no special keepers there, and they appear to be as well off as possible, even the inspector gave it down that he did not see what was required.

20017. You have a good many in Ennisworthy between forty and forty-five?—Yes, and that would cost £450, if you change them to an auxiliary asylum, over and above the extra expenditure. They cost the union of Ennisworthy, at the present time, £15 a year, and, I suppose, in Ennisworthy Asylum the inmates there cost £25, so that we would have to pay 20 sh. out of the rates for each insane person. We could not approve much of that, and have them no better in the end. You would support them, probably, as better than they are at present, and go to the expense of keeping and preparing accommodation and everything in connection with them to get the asylum going. I would have wards set apart for patients willing to pay; and long since the hospital in Ennisworthy would have been arranged in that way only amalgamation in the county was talked about, and the Guardians did not think well of going on with it.

Mr. M. J. WHELAN, Relieving Officer, examined.

Mr. H. J.
Whelan.

20018. CHAIRMAN.—You spend about £2,000 a year in the union on relief?—Yes; on the whole union.

20019. How many relieving officers are there?—Three.

20020. What is your district?—Ennisworthy town, I come to the bounds of the Ross and Carlow Unions; about twelve and a half and ten miles to the bounds of the Wickford Union at Oulart.

May 18, 1904.
Mr. M. J.
Wheeler.

20023. What is your greatest distance?—About twelve miles to Palace Station. The extent of my district is over 80,000 acres, and it includes two-thirds of the population of the whole union.

20024. You visit the people regularly?—Yes, always, on a week. The average cost in Enniscorthy town is 1s. 2d.

20025. How long have you been relieving distress?—Thirteen years.

20026. How much was spent in out-door relief thirteen years ago, if you know, on the whole union? I would like to know that?—I would say 24s.

20027. And how much in your own district?—That would be about £25 or £27. It is now £22.

20028. Has poverty increased since then, or is it that there is more generous dealing with applications?—I could answer both ways. I think there is a little more poverty.

20029. What class of people chiefly are on your out-door relief list?—Sixty per cent. of the cases of out-door relief with me are old widows or old single women, and old men twenty-three or twenty-five per cent.

20030. Are they single?—Some of them married, old ones, old men with wives, and seven per cent. are on temporary allowances; and ten per cent. as even as possible, are able-bodied widows, with two or more children.

20031. Do you find much hardship resulting from not being able to relieve widows with one child?—I have met with extraordinary cases of hardship of that kind, and they are obliged to go into the house. It has to be accepted, because in most cases the child is too young for the mother to go to work.

20032. Do you think it would be a proper and humane thing to extend the out-door relief to that class?—I do.

20033. In any other class?—I don't think so. People in labourers' cottages are in receipt now of relief, as the rent they pay does not repay the full interest on loans. Comparing the relief, the average per head in Enniscorthy is 1s. 2d., and the average for the whole union is 1s. 9d. The people in Enniscorthy only receive about two-thirds compared with the rural districts, but the majority of these old women live more or less by begging from door to door and shop to shop.

20034. And it is to supplement that begging the money is given?—Yes; I mean the amount the Guardians give does not support them; it could not possibly support them.

20035. Does it pay their rent for them?—That is just it. When we have an application for out-door relief from a poor person, they come before the board, and if they don't get something they must come into the workhouse, and what the Guardians give them barely keeps them out. Just one remark. I don't know whether I have any right to mention it?—Mr. Doyle speaks about the cost of nurses in Garry for people who would not come in. I speak from an experience of thirteen years in Enniscorthy, and I have only had about six nurses during that time for old people who refused to come in. Of course, I don't speak of temporary nurses, for sudden illnesses of young people.

20036. When you began first, was there much employment of nurses?—I would not say so.

20037. At present, how much is paid by you in your district per year for nursing; if you did employ them they would have to stay on for a few weeks?—The case Mr. Doyle referred to was until death.

20038. They would stay on for a few weeks?—Yes; two or three weeks.

20039. At how much a week?—It varies very much. From 5s. to 12s.; in one case I gave 15s. for contagious disease more.

20040. Say, 5s. at three weeks, 25s., and six times that would not come to a £10 note?—It would not be a consideration at all, in my mind; and, then, if the hospitals were improved, perhaps, these very people would come in. You have to use all sort of tact to get them in at present.

20041. And the nurse of a hospital?—Yes, of course; if they were better treated.

20042. Do you think it would be much use to have a dispensary nurse, who would act under the doctor—either here and there in the sick in the dispensary district?—In Enniscorthy we don't require that; we have nursing sisters.

20043. Do they go through the town?—Yes.

20044. They don't go through the country?—No, except short distances out.

20045. In the country would they be much use to you?—I don't think so; the cases are very exceptional and far away from each other.

20046. In each of your districts is there a qualified midwife?—Yes. And speaking of the hired-out children, I must say I visit those. There are thirteen of them at present, and speaking to the people who had them employed as late as last Sunday, all were highly delighted with them except in one case, and in that they complained of the boy's eyes being weak, but with the exception of that case they were pleased with them. They were three girls and ten boys. Then with regard to district bodies distributing outdoor relief, I think the existing system would be as good as that or better.

20047. Dispensary committees?—I believe the Chairman, in answer to you, said something about giving it partly from deed and partly from good-heartedness. There would be much more dread with a local body.

20048. Much more softness?—Yes, with nearer neighbours. I find when I bring up a case of relief from Enniscorthy I have all the country Guardians jumping up against it, and there are only four Guardians from Enniscorthy.

20049. Is relief often given in opposition to your opinion?—No, it is never given in opposition to my opinion, and I have never given it against the advice of the Guardians, even provisionally.

20050. Do you mean to say you never have any difference of opinion whether relief should be given?—Practically no difference. It is my interest as an officer. The less cases I have the less work I have to do, and in all reason I try to keep it down, unless the case is very deserving.

20051. You have a good number of cases?—Yes, but they are all getting as little as possible, and 50 per cent. of them should go into the workhouse if they did not get it.

20052. They never struck the relief off to see would that happen?—No, they never put on that test. I need about it in Garry. If a person is destitute and is 2s. keeps him out of the workhouse, it is a great saving.

20053. Of course that would not support them?—That is the average in Enniscorthy.

20054. What rent would they pay?—5s. or 1s. a week.

20055. Dr. Broome.—How do you admit to the workhouse?—I have no authority to admit to the workhouse.

20056. Do you give tickets?—Yes, only to tramps.

20057. The tickets are printed; do you leave these wholesale to be distributed?—When I have to go away to the country to visit recipients of outdoor relief.

20058. So that a person has nothing to do but just call for a ticket?—Yes, a tramp, but only for the night.

20059. Are you in business in Enniscorthy?—No.

20060. CHAIRMAN.—Do you mean to say that you have tickets signed?—No, I leave printed ones.

20061. Kindly wait until I have asked the question. You cannot answer a question before it is asked. Have you ever left signed tickets for people to take from your house for admission to the house?—I have, for tramps.

20062. How do you know what they were? Were you there when they got them? Was your name signed or printed to these tickets?—Printed. May I explain how that came? It may seem rather a queer thing. The tickets were run out, and I gave orders to the printer to print them—the "Echo" in Enniscorthy. And the very week after I gave those orders the press was burned out, so I got a ticket from the workhouse, as a sample, and I crossed out the name that the ticket was filled for, but I did not cross out my own name, and they printed the ticket from that.

20063. Dr. Broome.—It did not prevent your using them?—It did not for the week until I saw the difference.

20064. CHAIRMAN.—It was only used for a week?—A fortnight, I think.

20065. Dr. Broome.—You think it might not have gone on longer if we had not been there?—Possibly, if I did not see the harm.

20066. CHAIRMAN.—Before you got these printed tickets, did you leave them signed behind you?—I have on three or four occasions for tramps.

20067. How do you know for tramps?—The persons I would give these to would know. It is impossible to do a large district like mine, to go out to a case and inspect it, or do any sanitary work and remove a person in the van without leaving them with somebody.

20068. Could you not leave it to the master?—Yes, I do believe that.

May 18, 1904.

Mr. William
Thorne.

Mr. WILLIAM THORNE examined.

20067. CHAIRMAN.—You are one of the Chairmen of the New Ross Board of Guardians?—I am Vice-Chairman of the District Council.

20068. Are you often present at meetings of the Board of Guardians?—Yes, very often.

20069. What is your view, the view of the Guardians, about the amalgamation of the New Ross Workhouse?—They are decidedly against the breaking up of the New Ross Union; in fact, they think it impossible it can be done without, as beyond New Ross there is a stretch of country down to the Hook, twenty-two miles. In fact, they were so sure it could not be done without, that they took very little notice about this Commission; they felt perfectly safe.

20070. I suppose there is a good deal of population south of Dunsmut?—Yes, Fethard and Churchtown. There are villages there. Of course the land is very narrow.

20071. Do many of these people come into the New Ross Workhouse?—They do; the van is down there very often.

20072. I suppose once they get into the van at Churchtown it would not make much matter whether they went to Wexford or Ross?—I am not aware of the distance to Wexford.

20073. It would not be much in the distance?—I think the distance to New Ross is very little nearer than to Wexford—about five miles, perhaps.

20074. So that that part of the union would not suffer so much. Is there any other part of the union that would suffer as much?—Then on the Kilkenny side.

20075. How far up do you go there?—Glennare. The River is on the Thomastown side.

20076. Is the River in New Ross Union?—Yes.

20077. Is it practically as near Thomastown as New Ross?—I would say it is about that; then we come on towards Glennare.

20078. How far is that from Rosbercon?—About eight miles.

20079. Then it is not more than that from Waterford?—No, it is about halfway.

20080. Is there any other part of the union you think would be injured by having to go to another place?—Well, there are the furthest points. Of course all the union is against changing from New Ross.

20081. What other reasons have the Guardians for objecting to the breaking up of the union except the reasons given on the ground of distance?—They would not like to have the sick poor going away.

20082. Supposing the sick were well treated at New Ross and only the aged and infirm?—They would not like to have the infirm going away.

20083. On what ground would they be against that?—The inconvenience to the people going so far out of their own locality where they had been reared. When I speak of the infirm I speak of the industrious people; we would not consider the others.

20084. You mean the decent old people who worked?—Yes, who worked while they were able to work.

20085. Your objection is to take them away from their own neighbourhood?—Yes, and they are nearly all buried in their native graveyards.

20086. Are those many buried in the union graveyard?—A fair share, but mostly people with nobody belonging to them.

20087. You mean all their relatives have died?—Yes, or perhaps gone to America.

20088. As regards people like that who have no friends in the country, do you see any objection to removing them to another centre?—Personally I could not see any, but the people themselves would object and the feeling of the Guardians is against amalgamation altogether.

20089. As regards those who come into the workhouse to have children, were you here when the evidence was given on that matter earlier in the day?—I was here when Mr. Ennis was giving his evidence.

20090. What do you think about the suggestion that was discussed then?—I think it a very good one. The only thing I am in doubt about is whether I would take very strong measures with those at first. I certainly would take the first child from them.

20091. If that girl went back to ordinary life and fell again?—Then I would put her under restraint in some working institution.

20092. The first time what would you do?—I would take the child from her and let her go back to her native district.

20093. Do you think that in Ireland there is not a feeling that would make it very unhappy and miserable for that girl to go back home even if they were willing to accept her? Is there not a feeling against such a fault that would make it unreasonable for the girl?—There is, and I think it right so, but I have known several girls that are working in the district and the mothers are rearing the children for them.

20094. It is known there that the poor girl fell?—Yes.

20095. Do you think that is not a drawback to the girl's welfare in life, that her fall is known? Do you not think it would be better if she were employed far away from her own home, where there would not be this to be thrown up to her or known about her?—I think that she is less likely to go wrong again in the midst of her own people. She would be much more ashamed.

20096. Will she ever hold up her head again properly?—I have known those to do it.

20097. Would she ever be married?—Some of them, not others.

20098. As regards the first fall, you would do nothing except let the girl go home again?—I would not like to take very strong measures about the first.

20099. Would you regard that as a strong measure in the sense of being a stern measure?—I don't think she would consider it in that light.

20100. Would you not rather look upon it as a very kind measure altogether in the interests of the poor girl and her child?—She would be taken away from her own neighbourhood.

20101. The position would be that she would go to this refuge, where efforts would be made to turn her up to a fresh start, and the child would be boarded out for her. She still would have the right to go the child if she could support it?—I certainly think it would be a good idea if it would not be so regrettable to them girls, but I am afraid they would be inclined to do something to conceal the kids of the child if they were forced to go to these institutions.

20102. Do you think they would not prefer to go to an institution of this kind where their fall would be practically unknown rather than go to the workhouse, where they would be mingling with the same class and worse?—I think it would be very much better for them.

20103. Then you really don't think it would be a hard measure?—I think they would consider it so.

20104. Have you had much experience in New Ross of boarding out children?—We board out all we are allowed.

20105. What is your opinion of the result?—We are unanimous in wishing to have power to board all every child in the union. We have twenty-seven boarded out at present.

20106. I thought you had about forty?—That is the return I got yesterday.

20107. About the lunatics, idiots, and epileptics, would you have them removed to a central institution specially for lunatics, or would you have them left in the workhouse?—I think there is no place they will be done as cheaply as in the workhouse, but it is not suitable for a good deal of the imbeciles.

20108. What would you do on the whole?—If there was a central institution and the expense not too great, I would recommend they would be treated there, but any that could be suitably treated in the workhouse, I think it is the cheapest place from the taxpayer's point of view.

20109. Now the tramps?—We are as strong as we can against the tramps; in fact, I would agree with Mr. Belger's evidence on that line. I think the children should be taken from the tramps.

20110. So as to prevent the perpetration of the class?—Yes, at present the system is only multiplying paupers.

20111. Is there anything that I have not asked you that it occurs to you to say?—Our outdoor relief in 1897 was £26 10s. a week, now it is £55 14s.

20112. What do you attribute that to?—Primarily to union rating.

20113. You think the Guardians are more willing to grant applications when the case comes off the board union?—Certainly. The people in one district won't know when a Guardian is asking for relief for persons in another district whether it is an extreme case of hardship or not, and they always go on the safe side and grant it.

20114. It is put forward as a case of hardship by the local people?—Yes, and the Guardians that don't know the difference let it through.

20115. Mr. MURMAGHAN.—Does not a good deal depend on the relieving officer and his report?—The relieving officers are always guided a little by the Guardians.

20116. Don't they make their reports independently?—Certainly; a relieving officer will make a report that this man is in want of outdoor relief, and they can either vote 2s. 6d. or 2s. or 1s. 6d. as the case may be. But the fact remains it has gone up since we had union rating.

20117. CHAIRMAN.—Do you make any suggestion about that?—I think we ought to go back to divisional relief.

20118. You are a country Guardian?—Certainly.

20119. Now the New Ross Town Guardians would not approve of that?—No, but then we had a rate in aid in former times.

20120. For a highly added part of the union?—I think it would be only fair where the country population drift into towns that there should be even a mere liberal rate in aid than they had formerly.

20121. You don't want the indoor paupers made disincorporated charges?—I would make all charges as far as possible on the division, or they might not be on as small a district as the division, but smaller districts than they are at present. Some of the dispensary districts were very large and very crooked.

20122. Mr. MURMAGHAN.—The people of the dispensary district know the needs very much of their own particular part of the country?—No, some of our dispensary districts are most awkward. There is one nine miles long. We would not know at the lower end whether the people at the other end were badly in want or not.

20123. Did you hear the suggestion of the first witness with regard to having relief committees appointed by the Guardians? What do you think of it?—It would be a move in the right direction, but I don't think it would be as good as to have the charge directly made to the district.

20124. A fixed charge on the particular area?—No, but to give outdoor relief as formerly, and the other charges, to go back in that respect, I think it would tend to decrease the rates.

Mr P. A. Pees, Clerk, New Ross Union, examined.

I can only give you my own personal views.

20125. CHAIRMAN.—We shall be very glad to hear them. We know what experience you have had in the matter. You have been present all day and heard a good many new suggestions, perhaps?—Yes.

20126. Will you tell us generally how these suggestions have affected your view?—I would prefer you would ask me questions.

20127. About the workhouse itself, what would your view be about closing up the workhouse except so far as leaving provision for the sick?—I would be very much in favour of closing all the workhouse if possible. If you had 100 instead of 150 or 160 that would be about the right thing.

20128. Supposing you closed practically all the workhouses except for the sick, closed the workhouses so far as making these places where a large number of different classes are kept together; suppose you sent the different classes to different institutions instead of keeping open an institution here in each union for all the classes of that district?—It would be an admirable idea to separate them. The present system is not at all open to be admired.

20129. You don't think it good to have the various classes together?—No; I would send the children away as soon as possible.

20130. Would you admit the mothers at all into the workhouse, or would you prefer dealing with them in some place where a religious body would have charge of them?—That would be my idea.

20131. Then the child would never enter the workhouse?—No; I would have no contact at all with the workhouse on the part of the child.

20132. Then women and girls would never enter the workhouse—that would wipe out the children after the present inmates are dealt with—lunatics, idiots, and epileptics?—They should not be in the workhouse at all.

20128. Still, following the electoral division charge, you think the dispensary committee would be preferable to the existing body, the Guardians?—It would, if you got the right men on it.

20129. Would not that be a consideration for the Guardians to pick the right men?—Yes.

20130. CHAIRMAN.—Would you have the elected Guardians of the district the only members of the committee, or would you add some others to it?—The elected Guardians of the district ought to be enough as proposed to pick from, but it would be well to have the clergymen on that relief committee as well.

20131. You would leave that optional with the Guardians?—It would be a good thing.

20132. Mr. MURMAGHAN.—You say the cost of maintenance in the workhouse is much less than the cost of maintenance in the asylum, notwithstanding the capitation grant? Have you gone into the figures with respect to that matter?—Not very much.

20133. Because perhaps it may interest you to know that the average cost of an inmate in an asylum in Ireland is something like £36 a year; in an institution that I know something about it is £34; in some it goes as high as £38 or £39, but a fair average would be £35. Now the average cost of maintenance in a workhouse is £17. If you get £10 as a capitation grant off the £35 you bring down the cost a little below workhouse figures, so that local rates are less for asylum than for workhouse inmates. You did not look at the matter in that light?—Not exactly. Our average cost in New Ross Union for maintenance is only 2s. 7d. a week; I don't mean establishment charges.

20134. CHAIRMAN.—You might as well take the cost of the tobacco or something of that sort?—I understand; I am not taking the complete charges.

20135. But the asylum has the establishment there?—They have not an establishment that is able to take in the inmates of the whole country.

20136. Very well, if you take the cost per head of an inmate of the institution, you must take all the outgoings and divide them by the number of inmates either in the workhouse or the asylum if you want to compare the two fairly?—You will be able to get that from Mr. Pees in our union.

20137. If you were satisfied that the cost in the asylum or in an auxiliary asylum was less than in the workhouse, would you favour these inmates being put in an asylum suitable for them?—I would, certainly.

20143. You heard Mr. MURMAGHAN's calculation. If you take the same basis of calculation, putting everything into the workhouse cost and everything into the asylum and compare them, you will have less cost, with the aid of the capitation grant, in the asylum than in the workhouse?—There is one thing that people forget—that if they do away with sixty establishments, there may be in the first few years a little extra cost, because perhaps of the pensioning of officers, but then they are done with them, they are a charge no more. People forget that altogether.

20144. They forget that thirty years means a great difference in a pension list?—Yes, or twenty-five years.

20145. Even the most liberal scale of pensions, if you abolish that large number of workhouses, means a great economy, even at the first?—Even at the first.

20146. And ultimately, as soon as the pensions disappear, it will mean a considerable addition to the saving?—Yes, it will tend to a great deal of economy.

20147. And then you will have the system better in every way?—A special class which will be better treated.

20148. And you could deal with the aged and infirm in one of these workhouses?—I should think so.

20149. As regards the tramps and their first cousins, the casuals, what would you say about those?—It is a very serious question with us. Our average of tramps every week is over 130. Last week we had 111; one week recently we had 170. The tramps are increasing every year.

20150. You heard a witness just now say that the tramp evil was less every year?—They are increasing—that is my impression. Perhaps they don't meet as many of them up here as we do, but our union is on the high road between Kinsordy and Waterford, and from Thomastown we have them. They come from Tipperary and Clonmel, all through New Ross.

May 18, 1904.
Mr. William
Thompson.

Mr P. A.
Pees.

May 13, 1904. 20151. Would you be in favour of taking these people's children from them?—Certainly.

20152. And if you take the children, do you think you could fairly allow the parents to remain at large?—Well, I think there ought to be some system of registration.

20153. If you take from a man and woman, or from either, their children, do you think it would be right to let them go off again and probably have another family?—Oh, no; I think we should have no idlers in this poor country of ours. There should be some labour colony or some institution where they could earn money for the country.

20154. And keep them there as long as their children were supported out of the public funds?—Certainly.

20155. Or if they were sleeping well let them out on a horse or ticket-of-leave?—Yes, so that they would not go tramping around again.

20156. There is no question about it, there ought to be good hospital accommodation for a score like Rose?—We always require that.

20157. You could not shut up the sick wards in Rose?—No, but if you had a district hospital.

20158. Would it not become a district hospital when all the other classes were moved?—Certainly.

20159. Any chance of getting water into your hospital?—We want leave that so you.

20160. It is hardly a matter for us, but it might affect our judgment about the hospital if we found you could not get water?—It is a matter for your Board. Our Town Commissioners will not bring in the water unless they are compelled to do so. In any case, they would have to bring it five miles.

20161. At present you have to cart your water, what distance?—About a mile almost every month in the year. We have pumps on the premises.

20162. But they don't act in some parts of the year?—No.

20163. Is there anything you would like to say about the administration of outdoor relief in your union?—Well, it is increasing every year.

20164. What is it this year?—Close on £5,000.

20165. Is there any strong feeling amongst the Guardians similar to what the last witness stated—that there should be some divisional charges?—I have heard them saying very frequently that the outdoor relief would not be so high if there was.

20166. What do you think the majority of the Guardians would say, except the Rose Town Guardians? Do you think they would go with the other witnesses in favour of divisional or some such check?—Divisional is too small. Supposing you had a dispensary district where you would have six or seven or eight divisions, that would be sufficiently large.

20167. There was another suggestion—that one should try to find out what would be the fair amount that ought to be paid in each locality for the sick?—It would be very hard to draw a hard and fast line.

20168. You would have to do a good deal of cutting down by Rose to reach that?—Yes.

Mr. WILLIAM THORPE further examined.

Mr. William Thorpe.

There was one point I forgot to mention, that is, that the County Infirmary is no use to us at all in New Ross. I don't think we ever have a case in it, and it is costing us £200 a year from the rates in or about. If we had that £200 a year to spend on our own hospital and bring it up and make it more efficient than it is, it would be more useful to our district.

20169. CHAIRMAN.—If you and Geary got off that £200 each they would have to raise the £400 of Wexford and Enniscorthy?—I consider they don't want it at all, if they make their workhouse hospital efficient and get an operating room into it. We are getting no value at all for it.

Mr. Pope.—Formerly a great number used to come from New Ross, but latterly they are treated at home.

Mr. Thorpe.—We want to a lot of expense getting that operating room, and I would recommend other unions to do the same.

Lady MAURICE FERGUSON examined.

Lady Maurice Ferguson.

20170. CHAIRMAN.—You took the chair at the Conference at Enniscorthy?—Yes, I did.

20171. And the resolutions that were read out to them commended themselves to you and your colleagues from Wexford?—Yes, it was the universal 20169. You are one of the managing body of the Houghton Hospital?—I am.

20170. That does very good service?—It does. We have had a great number of cases this year more than for a long time.

20171. It is a very good little hospital and greatly liked by the people?—Yes, it is.

20172. I suppose the workhouse hospital is becoming far more popular than it was ten or twenty years ago?—Oh, it is. They are very well treated down, and the attendance there is exceptionally good, and the doctors give them great attention.

20173. And you recently got a very fine operating room?—Yes, a very nice one.

20174. Mr. MURPHY.—Is the Houghton Hospital much availed of?—Oh, it is by shopkeepers and their assistants. I have known one of the members of the committee, one of the most respectable members, when he was ill himself he went in there.

20175. CHAIRMAN.—Are they ever short of funds there?—We have a capital of £10,000, but we are living practically on the income.

20176. Do you find yourselves hampered for want of funds?—We do.

20177. Did it ever occur to you, or would it be open to your Board of management, usefully to take help?—Certainly, I think so.

20178. From the local bodies?—Certainly it would. We would be delighted to receive it.

20179. Did you ever consider the question of negotiating with any of them?—No, we never thought of it at all.

20180. If you got help it might mean some corresponding share of management. Did you face it from that point of view when you had power under your trust deed?—The management is confined to certain classes, subscribers, and two trustees, the Protestant rector and the parish priest. The committee of management is twenty, and they must be half Catholics and half Protestants, so that it works very smoothly.

20181. Is there anything to prevent representation from the Urban or Rural Council going in on that if they contribute?—I think we should get our constitution altered in Chancery. We get subscriptions from the public, and the lowest subscription is 12s. 6d. a year for members of the committee.

20182. I suppose it is difficult to get up the money often?—Yes; we have a collector specially appointed for that purpose, for instance.

20183. Mr. MURPHY.—What class is benefited principally by that institution?—Respectable tradespeople that would not go into the workhouse—shopkeepers' assistants.

20184. Is it not for the poor?—Oh, yes, if they are recommended by the doctor; some special cases.

20185. CHAIRMAN.—An ordinary case of bronchitis would not be taken in as long as there is room in the workhouse?—No.

20187. CHAIRMAN.—You would not recommend the County Infirmary to be brought up to a good pitch for doing the difficult cases of the county, and letting the doctors from Ross, Gorey, and Enniscorthy send cases on to Wexford to be treated?—Yes, except in the case of the nurses. The County Infirmary cannot be more efficient than New Ross. The doctors are of the old standing.

20188. CHAIRMAN.—I would agree to a good deal of what you say as soon as you get water into it. As long as you have to bring water into that huge institution for 500 people in barrels I cannot say anything about it.

20189. CHAIRMAN.—I would agree to a good deal of what you say as soon as you get water into it. As long as you have to bring water into that huge institution for 500 people in barrels I cannot say anything about it.

Mr. Doyle.—In the case of Gorey we have not to bring our water in barrels, so I hope you will recommend to let us off the £200 a year of which we have been robbed for twenty years.

20190. CHAIRMAN.—You took the chair at the Conference at Enniscorthy?—Yes, I did.

20191. And the resolutions that were read out to them commended themselves to you and your colleagues from Wexford?—Yes, it was the universal opinion of my colleagues from Wexford; they were all against amalgamation.

20192. Today the question of amalgamation has taken rather a different turn to what you would have expected from the Enniscorthy meeting, perhaps?—Yes.

20181. It has taken more the form of getting the different classes of inmates out of the workhouse and putting them together. Do you see any objection to some kind of congregating of classes that you would be the amalgamating of the unskilled—I think it might be a new hardship on some of the poor, and would add to the expense in that way.

20182. You think taking away the people from the district to which they were accustomed all their lives would be a hardship—I think it would be, and particularly to their relatives.

20183. That would be the case, of course, as regards the sick. Do you think it would be very much the case as regards the aged and infirm classes? Do you think they have many friends who look after them and mind them or are concerned about them?—Some of them have and some of them, of course, have not. On the whole, I think it would be a hardship.

20184. You heard the evidence that one of the Guardians gave to-day about the number of visits paid to the aged and infirm?—Yes.

20185. Did that surprise you at all?—In a way, but as a rule going round I have seen a good many visitors at the workhouse to the sick.

20186. Ah, yes, to the sick. It did surprise us when we began to make inquiries that there were so very few visitors. The result of our inquiries was the same as Mr. Peacock's. We find there are a great number of visits to the sick, but very few indeed to the unskilled, so that if they are not visited by their people would it not rather be a sentimental attachment?—Of course it might be, certainly.

20187. Without any practical costing off from society?—Yes, decidedly. Then my Board thought that their travelling expenses to and fro would be an increased expense. That was also one of the arguments.

20188. The way it works out now is that an aged and infirm person becomes detestable, say in Goucey or Ross Union, and they get a ticket from the relieving officer. If Wexford is the union, they get a ticket for Wexford instead of Goucey or Ross as the case might be. That would be a long way to go, and would perhaps encourage outdoor relief more. Is that the way you think it would act?—Yes, that is the way, I think.

20189. Would that make you disposed to be against detaching the aged and infirm to go to a distinct institution?—Yes, decidedly.

20190. Then you heard the evidence about our not having girls and children in the workhouse. Do you approve of those suggestions? I do, entirely. I am not speaking for my Board. I think my Board were against it, but my own personal feeling is strongly in favour of it.

20191. Lunatics, idiots, and epileptics?—I should separate the epileptics from the idiots.

20192. Have you any sane epileptics in your own workhouse?—Yes, three or four, and there is no place separate for them.

20193. No place where they might be put?—I think it could be arranged.

20194. If it could not be arranged, you think they ought to be sent to a separate institution?—Yes, those that are insane, but a good many of the chronic idiots I don't think they could be improved by being removed. I am speaking for Wexford, and I think they are as well cared for as is possible.

20195. Do you not think it is desirable to have as few classes of inmates in the same institution as possible?—If it could be managed economically, I suppose it would be.

20196. You have institutions already in the county for lunatics. In Wexford you seem to be overcrowded, but if it were not crowded the natural place would be—?—The lunatic asylum, certainly, with a capitation grant.

20197. If they go there they get the capitation grant. If they did not go there and any other public building, portion of the workhouse building, were available, and they could be kept there at a much smaller cost than they cost at present in the workhouse, would you be in favour of such an auxiliary asylum?—Yes, if it could be done economically.

20198. It is done, I believe, at the Finghall Asylum. They say it is very much more economical, although they only get 2s. a week capitation grant?—I think the average cost in Wexford is 21s 7d. for maintenance, covering everything.

20199. Well, the clerk of the union promised us to-day that he would send us the particulars on which that was based, for we felt rather inclined to—?—

To doubt it; I know you did. There it is (produced).

Mr. KILMER.—I made them up for two years.

20200. CHAIRMAN.—You did not take the collective number of days?

Mr. KILMER.—I took the collective number of days and divided that by the total amount. It works out something like 21s; then, taking into account the extra duty, it would amount to about 21s a year. They are taken for two years, and then we missed the year in which the change of accounts came in—1902 and 1903.

20201. CHAIRMAN.—Establishment, 200, seems low.

Mr. KILMER.—Yes, it was very low.

20202. CHAIRMAN.—This is the complete expenditure on Poor Law purposes?

Mr. KILMER.—That is the complete expenditure for Poor Law purposes. That takes in everything, with the exception of law costs—25 or 35 a year.

20203. Dr. BOGGER.—You have 22 lbs. deducted?

Mr. KILMER.—That is the extra grant.

Mr. POPE.—The Government might not give 22 lbs. if there was a change in the system.

Dr. BOGGER.—I make it over 21s.

20204. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Mr. POPE, have you any knowledge of what the cost per head in your workhouse is?

Mr. POPE.—I am quite certain it is over 21s.

Mr. MURTAGHAN.—That looks very low—less than the average for Ulster unions.

20205. Dr. BOGGER.—How did you make up your average daily number of inmates?

Mr. KILMER.—From the number of days.

20206. CHAIRMAN.—Divided by what?

Mr. KILMER.—201.

CHAIRMAN.—By 205.

20207. Dr. BOGGER.—How do you arrive at 200 or 201?

Mr. KILMER.—I take the average for the whole year from every week.

CHAIRMAN.—I am afraid you are off the track there somewhere.

20208. (To Lady Fitzgerald).—As regards the children who are already in the workhouse, are you in favour of the boarding-out system?—Yes, certainly; in fact, we do it wherever we possibly can.

20209. Have you yourself looked after some of these children?—I have.

20210. From your actual observation, what is your opinion of the boarding-out system?—I think it answers well; except in one or two cases it has not been so successful.

20211. Then you change to a different foster parent?—Yes, I think the ladies' committee has done good work here.

20212. Then you have a ladies' committee that looks closely after these matters?—Not too closely.

20213. Do you think there should not be too close an inspection?—No, certainly not.

20214. For instance, to the extent of making the children realise that they are union children or supported out of the public funds?—I think the less they know of that the better.

20215. Even if you went to inspect or look after these children you would not let them know exactly?—No, but I am afraid they always do know.

20216. Are they inspected closely about the clothing, they wear?—I think so, but at present none of them are under my inspection or observation, but I think from the reports the ladies send in they do it thoroughly.

20217. Do you think it a good thing to examine each child's clothing closely?—Certainly I do.

20218. Do you think it might not be a better thing to give a friendly close eye at a distance?—I think if the foster parents know the ladies are likely to come round to examine the children they are more likely to be kept in proper condition.

20219. Take the ordinary children in the country: there is always a certain amount of untidiness?—I think we must use commonsense as to what is required for these children.

20220. I would be rather inclined to think there might be in the boarding-out system a danger of over-inspection, or rather too close inspection. I think as regards examining the child's own clothing, for instance, and its little body, unless there was some reason to suspect want of care or neglect—I think it would be a fault on the right side, if it is a fault, to have a strict examination.

20221. I have had to inspect—perhaps it is my machines failing—but I had to inspect a number of children when I was an inspector, but then I was satisfied if I saw the child healthy and apparently clean and apparently happy, I came to the conclusion that that child was all right, and that the Guardians were getting value for their money, but if I saw a child looking delicate and dirty and neglected and unhappy, then I made close inquiries. That would be the line I would draw. If I saw a child looking well and clean enough, a little bit untidy, perhaps, the way every child would be, I did not make any close inspection then—Everyone should use their individual judgment on the case.

20232. What would be your advice to the relieving officer? Would you be disposed to suggest the wavy eye or the very close eye?—I am afraid I should go for the very close eye. Perhaps a woman looks upon it in a different light to a man.

20233. Do you find the foster parents recent at all very close inspection?—I should not think they do, but personally I have never had to make such a very close inspection.

20234. We have heard a great deal about tramps all day. Is there anything you could add to our stock of information?—I am afraid there is not. My Board recently insisted upon having stores for them to look, and if they do not do so, we have a prosecution for refusing to work. I am afraid the tramps in our district are on the increase.

20235. Have you prosecuted them?—No.

20236. They have broken the quantity of stores provided?—They have, but it is more difficult to know what to do with the women tramps.

20237. Would you take their children from them?—I think it would be a good thing certainly.

20238. Would you be in favour of some such institution as a labour colony or workhouse, as it was called, for both?—Yes, personally, I am only speaking on my own responsibility. My Board are not anxious to make any change.

20239. Your Board of Guardians are strongly in favour of a repeal of the quarter-acre clause?—Very strongly.

20241. They are the chief holders of between a quarter acre and an acre in the union?—Yes.

20242. You have a very large number of cottages in the rural district of Wexford?—We have, and we have constantly hard cases before us that we cannot deal with on account of that clause.

20243. You also sit on the District Council?—I do.

20244. Do you happen to remember how the collection of rent stands?—As far as I know it is fairly satisfactory.

20245. In those cases that look for outdoor relief these people would hardly be satisfactory?—These cases are more from accidental illness.

20246. Are all those cottages occupied by persons who earn wages and pay in cash?—Yes, I think I am safe in saying so.

20247. The Board of Guardians are also in favour that power should be granted to give outdoor relief in the ordinary way to persons actually destitute without requiring their removal to the workhouse?—Yes.

20248. Mr. MURPHY.—Have you not that power already?—Oh, yes, to some extent.

20249. CHAIRMAN.—But you would not have it for widows with only one child?—Yes, that, I think, is a great hardship. We ought to be allowed to use our own discretion.

20250. Mr. MURPHY.—Any particular age limit in the outdoor relief?—Without a doctor's certificate, I don't think a person can be relieved under 65.

20251. Do you think that age is too high?—Of course, it depends.

20252. Does your Board wish that they should have power?—My Board never expressed a wish on that subject.

20253. In regard to the question about untrained mothers, do you think it would be a safe thing to let these women go free and the child be taken from them and sent to some place to be supported by the ratepayers?—No, I think they ought to have a training first and sent into religious homes until it was seen how they conduct themselves, and then give them a chance.

20254. You think they should be restrained for a limited period?—I think so; it depends on the character of the girl and the manager's discretion.

20255. Do you think there would be any difficulty in getting these women taken into religious institutions?—I cannot say that. There are certain institutions where they do take girls of that description.

20256. Do you know anything of the working of them?—I do not personally.

20257. Dr. BRUCE.—Did you consider the question of separate treatment for consumptive cases?—I think it is most desirable. In the workhouse here we have set apart a male and female ward, but that is more for the helpless cases—invalids, not cure; they come in past cure.

20258. But for the cases that would be curable, what would you suggest?—That is a very big question. If several counties could combine together and buy an hospital on purpose for that, I think it would be a very good thing. I am all in favour of it.

20259. The Board have not expressed any opinion?—My Board have not expressed any opinion; I am speaking for myself.

20260. That might lead to a diminution in the number of cases of consumption and save many valuable lives?—Of course it would.

20261. CHAIRMAN.—Have you left untouched any question that occurs to you?—I think not.

Mr. JAMES MOON examined.

20262. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the Wexford Urban District Council?—Yes.

20263. Are you also a member of the Board of Guardians?—Yes, an elected Guardian.

20264. What do you think of the idea of leaving the acute sick pretty much where they are and removing the other classes to various other institutions? First let us take the girls who come in to have children. Would you be in favour of a change in the system that has been suggested?—I would not be in favour of taking their children from them.

20265. Does the suggestion take their children from them?—It does; they won't be taken in these Magdalen asylums with children.

20266. They would not take them to retain them for any time?—Oh take them at all; and even if they did, I would not separate the children from the mother.

20267. It was not the intention that there should be any forcible separation between the mother and the child. The idea was that the women should go into an institution, and that as soon as the managers of the institution thought possible she should be turned out, she should get a situation, and that she should contribute as much as she could up to the full cost towards the cost of the child, which would be boarded out?—A very difficult matter to arrange.

20268. It is, but it is every day arranged?—Not so well. You could not keep these women in the institution.

20269. It would be by their own free will?—It is only very few would go of their own free will.

20270. Where do they go now?—They remain in the workhouse for a time.

20271. If you had been asked before the workhouse was established, would you believe it possible that a girl would go to such an institution to have a baby and stay there all her life?—It was a matter of necessity.

20272. Very well, you shut the workhouse door and say they shall not go into the workhouse. Then there comes a necessity, and the only place provided for them is such a refuge under religious management. What would you say then?—I don't approve of putting these girls into such institutions at all. I would prefer their taking their chance as at present in the workhouse. They are very uncontrollable.

20273. They are uncontrollable when they get settled in their ways; but don't you think that a girl after a fall of that sort is impressionable and open to good influences and might be set right? At present they go into the workhouse, where they necessarily meet other girls who have fallen once, twice, or up to half-a-dozen times or more?—If they go into these other institutions of course they will meet the same.

20274. No, the separate system is in operation there as far as possible, and they don't take hardened offenders there?—Then you must provide a place for the hardened offenders.

20275. As soon as a girl becomes a hardened offender I would not feel any limitation in suggesting that she should go to the workhouse. That is where the failures go, the tramps and vagrants and all others. You would have done all you could if you tried to save her, whereas these institutions as a rule are only open to first offenders. They go into the workhouse and have no fair chance. They meet these classes much worse than themselves and go from bad to worse—below the same line as the others. You very rarely hear of one who gets right again!—Not often, indeed.

Mr James
Moon

20276. Would you still prefer keeping on to the workhouse system to that effort to try to reclaim them?—I would try to make an effort to keep their child with them, but only for those with a first child.

20277. As regards lunatics, idiots, and epileptics?—To speak of this workhouse here alone, they are kept clean and comfortable, and looked after by medical men every day, and I don't think they would be any better off even in the lunatic asylum.

20278. You don't see any reason why they should be moved from Westford?—I do not.

20279. Do you see a great disadvantage in having a number of different classes in the same institution?—It comes as a matter of necessity.

20280. But if you can devise other means, do you think it would be a good thing to get over the keeping together of various different classes, and, as far as possible, different sexes?—I look at it in this way that the four workhouses in the county are fairly full, and no amount of juggling or shifting the inmates could make them able to contain any greater quantity.

20281. Do you think you are right in that?—I do.

20282. Do you think that the apparent fullness is set due to the fact that the necessity for classifying makes a great deal of the room only partly occupied, and that part may be overcrowded? For instance, there are plenty of small classes, the lunatic class is a very small class, and there are a great many other classes very small, and if you took these away you could have room for three times the amount of that particular sub-class, and if you take away that small sub-class you will increase the accommodation very much in the workhouse?—But even as the thing stands, if you think it is not crowded, further classification would make it more crowded, and we want at present an extended classification.

20283. Take Westford Workhouse; if you had only one class in the workhouse, only the aged and infirm, do you think it would not easily hold all in the county?—I think not.

20284. Do you know how many there are in the county? There are only 373 in the biggest part of the year in the whole county?—That would fill the Westford Workhouse.

20285. It was built for how many?—700.

20286. There you are. You would only have 373?—But it is now a totally different system from what it used to be. They used to sleep on the floor. There have been as many as 1,000 people in it.

20287. You are right about that; the cubic space is different, but at all events there would be room enough for 373?—Yes, if all of one class.

20288. Now, the tramps and criminals?—The average number of tramps in the Westford Workhouse is four a night. They come in and get a crust of bread or shirkout and are discharged in the morning, and the cost is very little. In fact, I think it is money well spent to give it to them. There is scarcely any town or congregation of people in which you won't have three or four people destitute. We are short on an average with the worst of Ireland. We are short on an average with the worst of Ireland.

20289. There are a few places like New Ross?—Yes, some special circumstances.

20290. You then don't see any necessity from a ratepayer's point of view of dealing with the tramp question?—No, dealing with the tramp in the proposed way that is sending him to an institution, of course, means money, and much more money than we spend on them now.

20291. Of course he costs a great deal more to the community, because he is supported by the community and he does not work or earn. It is by blackmail or begging or such like performances he gets his living?—It is just like temperance; you cannot make him good by Act of Parliament.

Mr. MURKIN.—You can restrain his opportunities.

20292. CHAIRMAN.—You would let them run on?—I would, as they go at present.

20293. Would you leave them their children?—Oh, certainly, the more obligations on them the better to prevent them travelling.

20294. That might be true if it were portmanteaus or impediments of an inanimate kind, but what do you think of all these circumstances turning out tramps in their teens?—If they are healthy children they will drift away from them.

20295. They won't follow the old parental footsteps?—They will not.

20296. Do you know how much education those little children have got? Do you know where they go to school?—Very little, except they are detained some time.

20297. Do you know how many of them have any idea of their catechism or of any other religious belief?—Well, they do scold down in spots, these people, and then go on again.

20298. A kind of retreat?—Yes. I have known a steady tradesman to start off from his work where he had good employment and go a four round the workhouse of Ireland and come back again.

20299. Mr. MURKIN.—We are now tramping along the road, going from workhouse to workhouse. Don't you think it would be a good thing to put these people to do some honest work instead of paying on the country?—If they are bent on doing this, if you don't give them accommodation in the workhouse, you send them to highways or other places, where they are likely to do damage.

20300. If it is found that these people won't work or earn an honest living, should not the State take charge of them and put them somewhere where they cannot prey on the country?—If you came to establish that by the law of evidence, you might find it difficult to do so.

20301. CHAIRMAN.—Supposing you throw the onus on the tourist to prove he is a bona-fide traveller?—It is not worth trying.

20302. Mr. MURKIN.—It seems there is a large number of this class in Westford?—Well, you have only four a night in Westford.

20303. CHAIRMAN.—You don't see much of them in the town?—No.

20304. They don't come begging from the shopkeepers?—No.

20305. You heard the evidence about their demanding aid outside—blackmail?—They would in country places.

20306. Don't you think these country people have a fair grievance if these men are allowed to roam about that way?—That violent class don't come to the workhouse.

20307. Mr. MURKIN.—All the more reason for putting them in a place where they won't prey on the country?—All the more reason if they come under the criminal law that they should be punished.

20308. CHAIRMAN.—But as you say the law of evidence is rather in their favour?—Makes it difficult.

20309. Mr. MURKIN.—Have you any means to suggest for the discouragement of vagrancy?—I think if you cleared the whole country of every man and woman that is loitering at present and put them in institutions, that this day twelvemonth you would have a new beach.

20310. Even under the observant eye of the Royal Irish Constabulary?—Oh, certainly.

20311. What about the children? Don't you think it would be well to board out the children amongst the farmers?—It seems hard on the children, but still it is giving a premium to the parents to have the children of tramps provided for at the expense of the community.

20312. It is no harder on the children of these people than on the children of the farmer or labourer. Don't they get the same food?—They don't get the same education. Do you mean if they are put into an institution?

20313. I am speaking of the children in a workhouse who are boarded out?—I approve of that.

20314. If you had that do you know what you would do in this County of Westford? You would cut down about 200 out of the workhouses; you would be thinning them?—In Westford Union we send out all the children that we are satisfied by law to board out.

20315. In one institution alone you have eighty children?—That is the fault of the Guardians.

20316. Do you think it is a good thing to keep these eighty children pent up in that institution?—I do not.

20317. And don't you think the lunatics would be better in an institution to themselves where they could have healthy exercise and occupation instead of being pent up as they are in a badly ventilated day-room all the winter through?—The people we have are capable of very little work, people of that class, and as regards exorbitant, it is quite in the hands of the medical officer to expound them or send them out as he thinks proper.

Mr. James

20312. You know the expense they got is very limited and the occupation all?—If there was an absolute necessity for removing them from the workhouse, I would put them in a lunatic asylum.

20313. Rather than an auxiliary asylum?—I would.

20314. In the auxiliary asylum there would be one class—barnacle people who would not require so much care and could be kept at a lower scale of expenditure?—But if this was locked on to the existing institution, they could be maintained at a cheap rate. With regard to the idiots, the existing institution could mind them. The same officers could do more work instead of getting a new staff.

20315. One staff would do for all, whereas now you have attendants in each house?—No, you only get rid of the idiots, which I don't think is necessary, and send them to the asylum in a place provided for them. It was proposed to send the idiots from the three unions to Gorey, and the able-bodied and others in Gorey to Enniscorthy; that is only a temporary makeshift. For instance, they would send forty persons to Gorey from Enniscorthy, and they would get more than forty into Enniscorthy in place of them, and at present Enniscorthy is crowded. They are thinking of building an addition. You would make Enniscorthy worse than it is.

20316. But you would have classification; you would gain that much?—How could we have classification if we had not room?

20317. But in putting particular classes into a particular institution, you would arrive at that benefit. You would have classification, which you cannot have at present?—It means more cost.

20318. If it could be shown to you in pounds, shillings, and pence that it would not mean more cost, would you change your views?—If it could be shown for a certainty, but then figures can be manipulated so well.

20319. CHAIRMAN.—You would not like to trust anything but the demand note for the rent?—No, I have practical experience for many years of workhouses, and I have been a Guardian in more unions than this.

20320. Your fear is, as one witness said to-day, that any change means more expense?—Well, it is, as a matter of fact.

20321. Therefore you are for the status quo until?—No; there is a way of looking at things. If the present system can be improved at the same cost, make any change you like, but spend no more money.

20322. Mr. MURPHY.—I am delighted I brought you so far.

20323. CHAIRMAN.—Our object is, if possible, to reduce the rates?—The proposals made to-day would not reduce the cost.

20324. Wait until you see their working out and the number of salaries that will be dropped?—But if you know up institutions you must keep up salaries.

20325. How many institutions would be closed in the county?—None in the County Wexford.

20326. Oh, yes, there might be according to the suggestions?—If counties are to be dealt with on their own merits there cannot be any one of the Wexford workhouses closed as long as the present inmates stay in them or a supply comes in to take their place.

20327. You would not diminish the accommodation for the sick?—Oh, no; we have been extending the accommodation for the sick.

CHAIRMAN.—I think we are agreed on the broad principle that what we ought to aim at is the least cost possible.

Mr. NICHOLAS KERRY, Clerk,

Wexford Union, examined.

20328. CHAIRMAN.—How many cottages do you say you have in the union?—620.

20329. Are there many cases in which the occupants of those cottages want outdoor relief?—Yes, very often for a period of a month or five weeks—temporary relief.

20330. How is the rent collection going on in the rural districts?—There are arrears of about £15 a year; they pay up extremely well.

20331. And what these men want is some special relief when there is some illness?—Yes, sir, they want power to the Guardians to grant relief.

20332. And do the Guardians want it?—Yes, to grant relief and not to leave it in the relieving officer's hands in these cases.

20333. The relieving officer says he cannot give it to them now?—Only for one week, and he cannot give it any further except the Guardians make an order, and they are deterred by the section from making the order, so provisional relief runs on from week to week.

20334. What is the recommendation?—They think it a hardship that young men who are only temporarily sick for a month or six weeks should have to break up their homes and come into the workhouse.

20335. Was there ever a case of it in which a tenant of a labourer's cottage closed his cottage and came into the workhouse?—Yes, there was one case in our union.

20336. I don't want the name, but what were the circumstances?—He was a man with a wife and five or six children.

20337. And he was in one of your cottages?—Yes, sir.

20338. What was the reason why he sought relief?—Sickness in the family; the wife was sick.

20339. Was he caring himself?—He was.

20340. And was in receipt of his wages at the time?—Portion of the time, at all events.

20341. Could he not have got the wife into hospital for treatment?—Yes, sir, he could, of course.

20342. And was there no neighbourly person in the neighbourhood that would care for the children at home while the man was at work?—I could not say.

20343. Do you tell me in that case the man broke up his home, left his wages, and brought his wife into hospital, and himself and his family into the able-bodied wards of the workhouse?—Yes, sir, in an individual case.

20344. Now, can you explain why he did so?—Well, I could not.

20345. Could you imagine yourself in his place, w could you imagine yourself in his place doing the same thing?—No, sir.

20346. If that is the only case you have got?—You only asked me with regard to that particular case. There have been a great many cases on the relieving officers' books.

20347. That was the only case that came into the workhouse?—That was the only case in my time.

20348. It does not seem a very strong case?—I don't build on that case, but the Council feel very keen on that matter. They think that if they had power to give relief for a month such a thing would not happen.

20349. I would not say that such a queer case might do it even then?—That is the only case in point, but there are several other cases on the books where the family was sick and the relieving officer had to grant relief.

20350. Could he not send the family into the house?—It would be breaking up his home.

20351. How would it do that if a child was sick, could he not send it into hospital?—But if he wife and the children were sick?

20352. Then they could all come into the hospital. That would be simple?—They don't do that. They prefer getting a month's relief. The auditor made some exchanges in reference to relief in cases of that kind.

20353. I think he was bound to do it, was he not?—Certainly, but it affects our district to a large degree than other places on account of the number of cottages.

The Sittings terminated.

FORTY-FIRST PUBLIC SITTING.—TUESDAY, JUNE 21st, 1904.

June 21, 1904.

At the Town Hall, Waterford.

Present:—Mr. MICKS (Chairman), Mr. MURNAGHAN, and Dr. COREY BIGGER.

Mr. PETER WALSH, J.D., examined.

20360. CHAIRMAN.—You have been for a very long time connected with the Poor Law administration locally in the Counties Kilkenny, Waterford, and Tipperary?—Yes; I was an ex-officio Guardian.

20361. About how long?—I became an ex-officio Guardian in 1876, and then I was on until the new Local Government Bill came in, and then I did not seek election because I wanted to put in another man, and I could not be voting for myself and another, and I put in my man—that was Lord Dunsany.

20362. In addition to that you have held public positions under the Poor Law?—Yes, I believe I am the senior Vice-Guardian of Ireland, and when Mr. Balfour appointed temporary inspectors I was one of them for some time.

20363. So you have experience of Poor Law administration in other parts of Ireland as well as your own district?—Yes, I was a representative of the Grand Jury from my own barony for years.

20364. Taking your queries, if you kindly turn to them, what is your view as regards amalgamation of workhouses? Taking your own district, what would you be disposed to recommend?—I am in favour of having but one central workhouse in each administrative county. I drafted a Local Government Bill in 1892, and I advocated that.

20365. Suggestions for a Local Government Bill?—Yes. And the paupers should be classified and allocated in separate workhouses if you want to amalgamate. This includes housing over the workhouse under section 75 of the Local Government Act to the County Council for harmless inmates.

20366. Coming to details, what would you do as regards your own locality?—My own locality, there is a small portion of the Carrick-on-Suir Union.

20367. It is in three counties?—It is in three counties. First and foremost the workhouse is built to contain 721, in the fever hospital 67, and in the sheds 29—that is 817. Well, the average in 1891 was 221, at a cost of £1,585, in 1901 it was 294, at a cost of £1,977, and in 1903 it was 185, at a cost of £1,585. The union charges are far more. The establishment charges in 1891 were £1,400, in 1901 £1,813, and in 1903 £2,116, and the average number of inmates was only 182.

20368. Did you look into the reason of how it was that the cost went up so much?—I suppose the cost of different articles.

20369. Did you think it was the cost of the articles?—I will come to that by-and-by. There are a lot of officials. The area of the union in the County Tipperary is 25,269 acres and the population 8,554. In the County Waterford it is 54,453 acres and the population 5,313, and in the County Kilkenny 32,130 acres, and the population 4,466; and in the whole union the acreage is 122,852 acres and the population 17,767. The rates struck in 1891 were £3,957 10s., and the gentleman of the County Council will tell you what was their rate. Then the inmates of the workhouse in January, 1903, were eleven able-bodied inmates, and of these eight were tramps. In 1904 it was eleven, females eight, and four of these tramps. In 1903, girls with illegitimate children, three, and in 1904 four; old and infirm, fifty-five, and in 1904 eighty-one. Then there are children, nineteen, and in 1904, forty-four; hospital and infirm patients, eighty-nine, of which twenty-four were idiots, and in 1904 seventy-five. And in 1904 one tramp was included among the eighteen able-bodied females. I don't put down the position of the relieving officers, because they will be wanted, and I don't put down the emoluments of Mr. Mullins, because he will have to do labour for that.

20370. You are going to give us some information?—As to the salaries of the officials.

20371. With what object?—To show the increase;

lastly they have increased. The salaries of the officials amount to £344 2s. 6d., and the cost of their rations is £297 10s.

Mr. Peter Walsh.

20372. What was it when you had a knowledge of it?—In the first place, there were not so many ward-maids; in the second place, there were not seven scrubbers at a cost of £150 13s. 9d.—that was done by the people of the house. Then the car-driver has £22 11s. All these things were done by pauper labour.

20373. What would you do as regards the Poor Law arrangements of the County Waterford? How many unions or workhouses would you keep up?—Only one; in Tipperary I would two; in the counties of Tipperary, Cork, Galway, and Mayo I certainly would keep two in each of these.

20374. Your idea is to have one central institution, say for the County Waterford?—Yes, sir.

20375. And two for Tipperary?—Two for Tipperary.

20376. And one for Kilkenny?—Yes, sir.

20377. Was your idea that all the various classes who are at present kept in the workhouses in this country should continue to be kept in a large central institution, or would you aggregate them in some way?—I would have a radical change. I would have none in the workhouse except those who actually could not be kept out of it. I would board out all children. In the year 1885, I think it was, I brought forward a notice of motion to have all children boarded out, and I was met then that there was no necessity for it at all, that there was a law already in existence. Then I worked it up ever so often since, and I was beaten on it. It seemed to be a party business. In Carrick-on-Suir. I would put out all the children who are illegals.

20378. You approve of having children brought up in the country rather than in institutions?—Certainly.

20379. At present the law only allows orphans and deserted children to be boarded out?—Yes.

20380. Would you be in favour of an extension of the law which would enable the Guardians to board out all children who come in under their charge?—I would if the parents were not able to support them.

20381. They would not be in the Guardians' hands if the parents could support them?—Yes. I would increase the outdoor relief as far as the old people.

20382. Let us finish off the children. About this question of extending the law so as to enable the Guardians to do more in the boarding-out way, a number of witnesses who have come before us have expressed the opinion that it is most undesirable that any children at all should be kept in the workhouse, and that the workhouse should be closed to children. Would you agree with that?—No, I would not; not a hard and fast rule, I would not.

20383. You would not be in favour of closing the workhouse, particularly to children?—No, sir; but I would be for that—as far as possible I would board out every child.

20384. Would you be in favour of giving the Guardians power to do what they can do in extreme cases now, that is, pass a resolution putting themselves in the place of the parent with a right to keep the child?—If they had the right to keep the child, I would say they had the right to board it out.

20385. Why would you be in favour of keeping part of the workhouse open for children at all, having those very strong views about boarding out that you showed as very far back as 1885. Why would you be in favour of keeping parts of the workhouse open for children at all?—The only reason is that there may be extreme cases, but from experience I find any children that are reared like a flock of sheep, I don't care in what institution, are reared as God Almighty never intended them to be. I would say that they should be loaded out and become amalgamated in the population.

Mr. Pear
Walshe.

20385. Family life?—Family life.

20387. Everything you say is in favour of having children boarded out?—Yes, sir.

20388. As you have that opinion, why would you be at all in favour of keeping any word in the workhouse open for the reception of children?—Except that there may be extreme cases.

20389. What kind of case would you call an extreme case?—I never heard before that you should board out every one.

20390. We have had evidence that it would be better not to have any word in a workhouse at all for the reception of children?—Supposing there were a father goes in and that it could be proved afterwards that that father or mother had the means of supporting their own child, I would say that the State should not take the place of the father or mother.

20391. Certainly not, but that would be a very unusual case, where a man having means would be willing to go into the workhouse?—There are a great many men do it.

20392. They might have strength to labour, but they would not have the means at their disposal—people who would not go into the workhouse except for a casual night's shelter?—Any child that the Guardians assume the responsibility of being a foster-parent to, I say that child should be boarded out, but I would have it very restricted. I would not allow that the Guardians would take the responsibility of that in any case where the father and mother could board out the child.

20393. You think it highly undesirable that children should be in the workhouse?—I do.

20394. And if some other institution, which does exist for the care of children, could be used for the temporary housing of such extreme cases as you think might turn up from time to time—for instance, an industrial school, or orphanage of any sort—would you be in favour of allowing any child that might become destitute to be sent into such an industrial school or into an orphanage rather than into the workhouse?—Well, sooner than into the workhouse.

20395. It would be only temporary?—Well, I would, sir; but then I would say that instead of having them in these industrial schools, especially as they are now, the best thing is to board them out and mix them up in the population. We are wanting labourers, and by that means you increase the labouring population of the country, which is desirable.

20396. Mr. MINNAMAX.—Then would homes in which the Guardians could place children temporarily meet your view until they dispose of them?—It might.

20397. Some home certified as a suitable place for the keep of these children?—Yes, or industrial schools.

20398. CHAIRMAN.—There is a case that does occur sometimes—a father or mother who will be apt to prison, perhaps sometimes even for cruelty to children, but at all events they will be sent to prison from one cause or another, and the children in such cases are remanded to the workhouse—would you be in favour of remanding them for the period to an industrial school?—Oh, yes, certainly.

20399. You would be in favour of that?—I would, certainly; in fact, as I said in the letter, I would put the institution of penitents in every way.

20400. Following on that line of yours, there is another class that we have in workhouses—lunatics and idiots. Would you be in favour of sending them all to be dealt with in lunatic asylums or auxiliary asylums?—Auxiliary asylums, according to the Local Government Act.

20401. Similar to Youghal?—Yes.

20402. Have you formed an opinion which would be the more economical and better way of dealing with such cases, whether you would send lunatics to the asylum or to an auxiliary asylum?—The lunatics that are generally in workhouses are harmless lunatics.

20403. You may say they are pretty much the ordinary run of lunatics?—Then don't you see all lunatic asylums, at least around us, are becoming congested—Kilenny and Waterford.

20404. Do you think it is more economical and better to send them to an enlarged asylum. Would you be in favour of enlarging the asylum or taking a closed workhouse as an auxiliary asylum?—For the present, as a temporary thing, I would have an auxiliary asylum in perhaps two or three counties, if it were necessary.

20405. Whatever would be the area that would supply the inmates?—Yes.

20406. Similar to the institution that exists at Youghal?—I don't know that.

20407. It is the only place in Ireland where they have started an auxiliary asylum up to the present?—It was after my time.

20408. It is only just being started, but it is being started on more economical lines than the asylum. Opinions are very much divided which is the better way of dealing with lunatics—whether in a regular asylum or an auxiliary asylum. Have you formed an opinion on that subject?—No, sir.

20409. At all events you are strongly in favour of getting all the people suffering from mental disease out of the workhouses?—Yes, sir.

20410. Then you have another class in the workhouses, you have mothers, chiefly mothers of illegitimate children. We have received in different places a suggestion that the workhouse should not be open any longer to that class, but that they should be sent to a penitentiary or refuge, under religious management; that the girl should be sent say a couple of months before the birth of her child to such an institution as that sort; that she should be there paid for out of the rates as if she were in the workhouse, the object being on the part of the witnesses who put forward the suggestion, that the girl should be reclaimed after her first lapse and be put forward into honest life again?—Yes, that may be if there were such places to receive them.

20411. You are aware of course that there are a number of such places?—I know there are Magdalen asylums.

20412. Do you think that would be more likely to reduce that very large and perhaps increasing class of paupers, that is the infant pauper who is born and brought up in the workhouse and continues. Do you think that would be a more likely plan for reducing that class than the present workhouse system?—Certainly it would.

20413. Would you be in favour of it?—I would.

20414. Do you think if you look at it a bit that it would be more economical than the present system. You are aware what happens in the present system. One of these girls comes in and, as a rule, becomes a permanent inmate, with perhaps two, three, four, five, or six children depending on her before she dies?—I know that.

20415. If a girl were sent into one of these refuges one might hope?—Yes, that she would be reformed.

20416. Even on the ground of economy alone rate-payers would have to support very many fewer paupers?—Yes, but I would not leave her longer than would be absolutely necessary.

20417. They do not, I think, in these institutions. They get them situated outside as soon as they think they can be safely put outside. You would like to limit their stay in such institutions?—Yes, I would not like to say that because they come full that was the reason they should lead a life of idleness.

20418. I think they are worked hard in such institutions, employed in laundry work and other occupations of the kind; that would exclude a very large and objectionable class from the workhouse, the mothers of illegitimate children and the children depending on them; really all the children in the workhouse are illegitimate?—A good deal of them are.

20419. Nine out of ten about?—I don't say very near that; either that or deserted.

20420. Most probably when they are deserted they are illegitimate; that would exclude children from the workhouses?—It would, practically.

20421. Then the only class you would have coming to the workhouse in addition to the sick, aged, and infirm, would be tramps. Have you thought what you would do about them?—What I would do with them is, I would give power to the Guardians to send every one that applies for out-door relief to their own unions, to give a work's notice to the union, and then if they did not send for them I would send them at the expense of the union.

20422. If you get a man at Carrick-on-Sale, supposing that workhouse were kept open, from Waterford, you would send him back to Waterford or charge him against the Waterford rates?—No; I would send him back to Waterford.

20423. That might suit him?—But if a man goes to Waterford and gets a work there and then comes on to Carrick-on-Sale, or any other union, he is guilty of a breach of the law. When I was an ex-officio I got the police to come down there every morning and inspect them. Now the police do it as a mere matter of form. I am informed they come there and look at them and see if they have heads on them. They should make some inquiries. If they found a man coming from Armagh or Mayo, looking for work, he may be compelled to go in there through necessity and seek a night's lodging. I would not punish that man, but then if he kept tramping on and not striving for work I would send him back to his own district, and let his own Guardians, who knew all the circumstances of his case, deal with him.

20438. From the notes of your evidence that you lately supplied us, you put the case of proving that he was not a vagrant on him?—Yes, sir.

20439. A man who is wandering about is to all intents and purposes a vagrant, and you would put on him the case of proving that he was not?—Yes.

20440. If a man had to tramp in search of work, or other bona fide reason, would you be in favour of obliging him to carry some documentary evidence that he was a bona fide workman?—Yes; I would make him go to the police and get a certificate from them that he was a man of good character, and he was really here doing some seeking employment. In some of the unions I had to deal with there were men who came periodically, in Swindon, especially—men and wife and a whole crowd of children. That is in open defiance of the law. If the Guardians had the power, either there or here, of sending that man and his children back to his own place, the Guardians then could give him some relief, if he was incapable of working, or treat him as they thought the case demanded. But I would not have it a hard and fast line, that they should do it. There may be a case where a poor woman or man came in under circumstances that it might be cruel to drive her or him back to their own place. I would leave it to the discretion of the Guardians.

20441. All these tramps are, I suppose, an undesirable class, who do as little work as they can. Is that your view of them?—Yes; and I have formed that view from asking them during my official capacity, and during a long period, as an ex-officio Guardian, I have frequently asked them could they not get work. One man said he never worked in his life; another man said he did not like it, but I don't see why I or any other ratepayer should support a man because he had not a fancy for work.

20442. So this class, which is a large and increasing class in the country, does not support itself at all; it preys on others?—It preys on others.

20443. Would you be in favour of the suggestion that has been made to us in a good many places, that is that such people should be liable to arrest and detention in a place—call it a labour colony, or a workhouse, or whatever you like—that they should be detained there under a magistrate's warrant after the investigation of the circumstances of the case, if they could not explain their vagrancy, and that they should be set to work and obliged to work. It would be virtually a prison?—But we have the power at present if a man comes as a vagrant.

20444. You have only the power of a small sentence. Would you be in favour of giving power for detention for one, two, three, or four years, or any period that might be thought desirable with a view of habituating these people to work?—I would prefer sending them to their own unions.

20445. Suppose you got them back in their own unions—supposing they got in Waterford their share of the tramps of the country, say 100 tramps—what would you do with them?—My idea is I would send them to the union from which they came.

20446. Suppose you had 100 sent to Waterford, their own union?—If they were deserving men I would give them out-door relief.

20447. But they are not deserving; they are chaps who don't want to work and walk about to avoid working. What would you do with them when you had them here now?—In that case they might be sent somewhere.

20448. Is not that the case with the whole of them—four or five thousand, as the case may be, all over Ireland. What would you do with these people?—I would put the vagrancy law in force.

20449. Do you think it would have any effect?—If they got hard labour for a month or two it would alter their opinion.

20450. Would it not naturally make criminals of them; would it put them in the way of getting a start?—If you formed a colony of the class.

20451. I mean an institution here in Ireland; call it a workhouse?—If you do that you might have a joint one for two or three counties.

20452. Or for a province?—Exactly, and make them labour there.

20453. Would you make it an offence against the laws of the country that men and women and their children should go strolling round the country begging blackmail and supporting themselves at the expense of the farmers and other people when they visit; would you make that an offence by law?—I would try the other way first, and then if that did not do I would.

20454. The other thing would be merely grating them a month in jail; do you think that would have any effect; take this gentleman you mentioned—the man who says he does not like work?—A month's hard labour might alter their opinion.

20455. They don't know how to work?—One man says he is one thing and one another.

20456. Take the case of the gentleman with hands fine enough to play the piano, that has never gone through any labour at all, what would you do with that man?—I would try the Vagrancy Act first, and if that did not do—

20457. Do you not think it would be a good plan to try something that would get them into the habit of working?—I say in my suggestions that in the central workhouse there should be a farm attached, as in America.

20458. That is virtually a labour colony, and in such central workhouse you would put these men to work?—Yes.

20459. For what period would you detain them; do you think it would be any use detaining them for such a short period as a month?—I would try that first. I am for the liberty of the subject, and if that did not do I would give them a year. The tramp system was allowed to grow up like many other things; it is there now, and the only thing is to grapple with it in the best and most constitutional method you can; instead of rushing at them I would treat them on the principle of the Vagrancy Act, and if that did not do I would have an Act passed empowering the magistrate to give them a long term—not longer than three years.

20460. With power to give them a ticket of leave or licence if it was thought they really were inclined to work?—Yes; I am one who never shrunk from doing my duty; I did not care what it was.

20461. Those tourists that we speak of are men that take an exactly different view of their duty; they always shrink from doing their duty?—No master.

20462. What remedy would you take, whether the vagrancy law or a labour colony; would you have these people the power to take round their children with them; do you think they are the proper people to have charge of children?—Oh, dear, no.

20463. Do you think it would be an undue interference with the liberty of the subject and the power of the father and mother for a Board of Guardians to step in and separate under the law, if power was given to them to do it—to separate the father and mother from the children—and board the children out?—I would not, as long as they were tramps.

20464. Then if they were to settle down and establish a home?—If they got a ticket of leave I certainly would make them take home their children.

20465. Some witnesses have pointed out to us that if you take away children from a father and mother, and if this father and mother are people of any or bad character, they might be glad to be rid of the embarrassment of their children, and if the children were taken from parents like that it would be far wiser to look up the parents in a labour colony while the State had to support their children?—And make them labour.

20466. While their children were being supported, and to prevent them making a fresh family for the ratepayers, what would you think about that; you would interfere with their liberty so far?—Yes; if they were unfit to take charge of their children they should bear the penalty of it; that is the reason I would be for trying the milder thing first.

20467. Then we would only have two classes in the workhouse—the sick and the aged and infirm. A few minutes ago you told us, I think, pretty much what I gather in your view about the aged and infirm; that is to have one central institution for the county?—Yes, sir.

June 21, 1904.

Mr Peter Wilson.

June 21, 1864.

Mr. Peter
Wells.

20454. Into which you would put all that class—
Yes, sir.

20455. And in that you could grade them according to their character, sex, or other desirable distinctions?

—Yes; but then don't you see another thing—I would be for extending out-door relief. A great many people find fault with that, that it would be ruinous to the ratepayers. I say no, because I went into the matter fully and made up my mind that the proper thing to do is to amalgamate two or three electoral divisions and put in a different class of Guardians—one on a high qualification and another on a lower, and let these men have power to strike an electoral division rate.

20456. Or a dispensary district rate?—Yes, exactly; and then I would board out every old couple or widow with two children.

20457. Or one child?—Well, one or two children, and that under strict supervision; that these people should be people who were not capable of doing much.

20458. People were out from their labour?—Yes; they could rear food or mind cattle instead of being cooped up in a work-house. You may say it is old people, more or less. Then you have the old people in the latter end of their days in the places in which they were born and reared, and then you have them getting some little thing to support them, which, ultimately, would be far better than having a whole body of them in the workhouse with a whole army of officials.

20459. You would rather have that a charge on the dispensary district than on the entire union?—Oh, certainly; if you have the entire union there is no supervision at all. In Carrick-on-Suir Union, with the best ideas possible, they put in a whole lot of applications for cottages; then when we decided to have an electoral division charge a lot of them fell to the ground, but when it was a union charge they were all for it.

20460. Would you not be afraid that your idea of giving the old people that relief on a small area might fall to the ground the same way as the cottages?—No; then I would leave power in the hands of the Local Government Board.

20461. The Local Government Board are prohibited by law from interfering in any individual case of relief?—I don't think it would. I never heard of it. It would be worth trying, at any rate.

20462. The reason you want the small area is as a check on extravagant relief?—Yes.

20463. That suggestion was put forward by other witnesses, and one witness gave me a new idea on that subject—that was that if an Act were passed revising this system of chargeability for out-door relief the Guardians, or whoever body were administering the matter, should decide what is the present law amount that should be paid for out-door relief in any district, be it a dispensary district or anything you like, and that anything over and above that amount—say for a certain area, at a work-house electoral division charge, but that anything that is now ascertained to be what you might call a fair amount for out-door relief should continue to remain a union charge; would you agree to that?—If you had that as a check you might.

20464. That would be leaving the broad back for what is fair, and putting anything that is excessive on the district?—Yes; that is really the principle that there was before; there used to be a rate in aid; this reverses that.

20465. Would you approve of the reverse?—I would; that might do; but my object in having it on the lesser area is to prevent men, from whatever their object may be, being too lavish with other people's money.

20466. Do you think the other arrangement would have that effect?—It may.

20467. And at the same time secure that all reasonable applications should be dealt with in the way you think wise?—Yes; but I would have it in that case that the Local Government Board should approve.

20468. It would be automatic?—Yes; say an area was 1s. or 1s. 6d. in the £, if more relief was required—

20469. That is always left to the local body?—Yes; the rates.

20470. The amount of relief and the people to get it is for the local body to consider; you could not make a central body judges of individual cases?—What I want is to keep a little rein on them.

20471. The only class you would have left in the ordinary workhouse would be the sick; would you be in favour of keeping up at the present centres where union workhouses now exist, would you be in favour of keeping up at most, if not all those places, a little hospital?—I would be for having village hospitals certainly.

20472. Do you mean to suggest a larger number of hospitals than now exist; you have one in Carrick-on-Suir at present—a workhouse infirmary and a fever hospital—would you be in favour of any other hospital within your union, or do you think those hospitals are sufficient for your requirements?—I think so; and then there is a small one in Portlaoine.

20473. A cottage hospital under private management?—I would have it under public management.

20474. But if people wish to have a private hospital, of course, they can have it?—You cannot interfere with them.

20475. That is the Martin hospital. Have you studied the question about what extent of accommodation would be necessary for the sick in Carrick-on-Suir?—I don't think it would be very much, because if you had all the old people that are incapable of doing anything in the central workhouse then the only thing these village hospitals would be for would be broken legs or fever.

20476. Or chest or anything acute?—Yes; but then I would have a fever hospital kept up; there is one in Carrick; I would have the district contribute to keep that up; I would have an area contribute to keep up the fever hospital.

20477. It is in the County Tipperary?—It is just on the borders.

20478. Supposing the County Tipperary kept up that hospital and charged as much a head for every Waterford or Kilkenny patient coming in, would that meet your views?—Yes, sir; that is the very thing. The principle I go on is this, that I would have the central workhouse as a workhouse, and I would have all these village hospitals as infirmaries, and I would have all acute cases sent there, but as soon as they could be removed they would be going on to the central workhouse.

20479. Supposing you don't look on them as auxiliary workhouses or anything connected with workhouses at all, suppose you look on them as village hospitals, where the sick person—the honest labouring man or small farmer, or anyone that wants it—comes in and gets treated for a week, or two, or three, or six months, and goes out when he is cured, then he is not destitute?—Yes; but I would say there should be wards in the central workhouse that should not be managed in a pauper institution.

20480. A minute ago we got our central workhouse with nothing in it but the aged and infirm; then would have to be, necessarily, a very large infirmary, but here besides, according to the scheme you checked out, they would have the aged and infirm for the whole County Waterford?—Yes, sir; but then you need not have it here, because you have the larger hospital, now the county infirmary.

20481. You would want some place for the chronic sick?—For those that are respectable people; the chronic sick I would have in a ward in the central workhouse, but not under proper management if they could pay I would have them pay.

20482. It would be no longer a workhouse at all; it would be a large chronic infirmary?—Yes, sir.

20483. That is your idea?—Yes, sir.

20484. In the small hospitals of the country you would have only acute cases, and if any case was in there that began by being acute, and was under observation for some time, and the doctor found it was going to be a chronic, life-long, or tedious case, he would send that into the general infirmary, we will say, at Waterford, or wherever it might be?—Exactly.

20485. Have a paragraph here as regards persons who use these acute hospitals; you are in favour of getting people who can pay to pay in these local hospitals?—Oh, certainly, anything at all, and also to pay the doctor.

20486. You would not be in favour of the patients of a public hospital paying the doctor?—Not in a public hospital. The doctor at present under the law is obliged to attend any poor, but any man that can afford it—20487. You would give the doctor his right, whatever it might be; if you or I had to go in, going to some of circumstances—if we got a broken leg—you would oblige us?—To pay your full share.

20488. And pay the doctor's fees besides?—Yes. And if a man was a farmer, according to his means.

20489. There are a number of people who could pay a little, but not a great deal, say a labouring man—one of his family, a girl or a boy, might have to go in there, at all events they would cost him at least 6d. a week at home, even if he paid that 6d., do you think it would be a good thing?—I think it would.

20490 And you would give the managing body of that hospital power to recover what they, in their discretion, might declare him liable to pay?—Yes, sir.

20491 I think I have asked you, so far as I see, taking a somewhat different order to what you did, I think I have asked you all your points except that you would turn any diseased workhouse into industrial schools, or such things as might be possible—I would turn them into some things of industry.

20492 You would look to the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction; you would place the buildings at their disposal, if they had any use for these—broom factories or wooden factories?—Yes; I would be for amalgamating the electoral divisions and having two classes of men. I am certainly dead against the present system.

20493 You would be in favour of such administrative county discharging all the Poor Law matters in its own area?—Yes; then I think there are too many Guardians to be a workable body. I would amalgamate the electoral divisions and have two Guardians for each.

20494 Take a county like Waterford or Kilkenny, do you mean to say you would have on the governing body as many as two members for each electoral division?—I would amalgamate a whole lot of divisions and have only two members for the amalgamated divisions.

20495 You would make fewer electoral divisions?—Yes.

20496 Something like the county electoral divisions now?—I would not have them as large as that.

20497 Or would you make it a dispensary district?—That would be too large, I think.

20498 And enable them to return as many as you thought desirable?—That might be. As I said in my suggestion, I would have two classes of men—one elected on as low a franchise as you like—

20499 I follow that, but it is a little bit of a retrograde movement now to have any high property qualification?—But when a man is paying high rates I think he should have some higher voting power.

20500 You perhaps thought anyone having £50 a year—whatever you like; what I said in my suggestion was that the man should have £300 a year, but then I suppose all landlords will be done away with; he should hold land or something rated at £100 a year, and he should be elected by an electorate which would be composed of men valued at £50 a year, then these men would have an interest in keeping down the rates and in the expenditure of the rates. I heard of a man who found fault with the excessive taxation, and that man's valuation was 10s., and he never paid even what he was rated, then he voted, of course, as he was told. I always held, and do hold, that there should be two classes of men, and I don't think that the sensible people—well-to-do farmers or shopkeepers, or any man of that class—would object to it, because the man has a greater interest, and so a man who has property is an educated man. Of course, it would be a retrograde movement to give multiple votes; I don't want that at all, only let it be a rating qualification.

20501 Let everybody who has £50 a year or over, let that class in each electoral area elect a representative of their own, and let those who are under £50 elect one for themselves?—Yes; and that man should hold property of some kind or another at £100 a year. A farmer at £100 a year, I don't think he is a magnate.

20502 You would have very few eligible?—In counties in the West you would not have one at all. In Mayo, I suppose there would not be ten in it.

20503 What would be the body that would manage all these institutions, take first the central almshouse or place for the aged and infirm?—I would have the County Council.

20504 Or a committee of the County Council?—Let the County Council appoint a committee if they like. They are the elected of the people, and when the Government have put all the power into their hands, I would not like to take it from them, but let them either act individually or appoint a committee and work it that way.

20505 You see that is what you call yourself a retrograde movement, but do you think it would be an improvement?—I am sure of it. I am as convinced as of my own existence. Then with regard to lunatics—if I am sending on a lunatic, as unfortunately I often have to do, the doctor that is called in for the certificate must be the doctor of the dispensary district, in which we now are; I say that that is wrong. In Swinford we frequently had our five doctors there, and every doctor used to follow his own case until I broke that up. What I say is that it should be the doctor who was the medical officer of the district in which the lunatic resided, because he knows more of the case and the antecedents of the family than the man who perhaps never saw the lunatic before. As to the tramps, I think we want into that.

20506 Mr. MURPHY.—You seem to be in favour of an extension of out-door relief?—Yes, sir.

20507 You spoke about having a test. What test would you have? You said strict supervision would be necessary—I would have the test that the people were not able to support themselves, that they were aged and infirm.

20508 On whose would you place the responsibility of granting relief—on the shoulders of the relieving officer or of the Guardians?—On the shoulders of the relieving officer first, as recommending it, and secondly, on the committee; whether you will have a dispensary committee or a local committee, as I said, and amalgamate the electoral divisions.

20509 You would not do away with Boards of Guardians?—No; but then, don't you see, let the Guardians be the body; but the Guardians should set as they are now, in District Councils; let them set as Guardians of that district.

20510 You still intend to retain the Guardians to look after the Poor Law business of their own particular union?—Of their own particular district; I would have it all one union.

20511 Of their own particular present unions?—No. Supposing, as the Chairman said, that each dispensary district forms an area of charge—for instance, now take our own, Pilltown, that is a dispensary district, and could form an area, and let the Guardians of that with the relieving officers be the people who will be responsible for it.

20512 You think there would be no other check necessary to curb the spread of out-door relief than simply the report of the relieving officer and the assent of the Guardians. Do you not think there would be something more needed, provided you did extend out-door relief on the scale suggested by yourself?—No, I don't see that there would. The test now is the workhouse. I think that is an inhuman test.

20513 Would you suggest that there should be any alteration in the law as regards the limitation on the extent of land they held at present. You know it is confined by the quarter-acre clause?—Certainly. I would not be for giving it to farmers or shopkeepers.

20514 Well, you would extend it from a quarter acre?—I would not; indeed I think that is enough. I mean that the poor should be relieved, but I would not say that the lazy or the idle should live on the morality of the ratepayers.

20515 Does it not sometimes happen that small farmers of four or five acres are often in as great need of help as a labouring man?—I don't think when a man has land he wants out-door relief.

20516 You would not go for extending the limit?—I would not.

20517 CHAIRMAN.—From your knowledge of the West of Ireland, would you do it there at all?—That is quite a different thing. There are people there who would be well off if they were kept within bounds, but the people were allowed to do as they liked. I used to have to attend Kilkenny Sessions. I used to have to attend that, and when you look Swinford on both sides of the road the turf is cut down as bare as that, and nothing but the primeval forest there—the roots, and trees, and white gravel. I asked the man who was driving me was there over turf there. "Begar, my father told me there were 4 ft. of turf on the top of that hill." They were allowed to burn it until there is nothing there now.

The same about Charlestown. I went out there one time, and all the whole place was dry. That day fortnight I went again and it was all green strips. "What are these?" "These are the trenches," said the driver; "they were dug up and put on the ridge." That day fortnight I went and every one of them was burning. That went on for generations until the roads are 4 ft. above the level of the surrounding district.

20518 Dr. BROWN.—You mentioned small village hospitals. You did not say how you would have them

J. 21; 1904.

Mr. Peter Walsh.

June 11, 1904

Mr. Peter

managed?—I said in my suggestions that I would have them managed under the dispensary doctor, and with proper supervision and a proper nurse, a regular trained nurse, to attend them.

20518. Would that be under a committee of management?—Yes, and ladies could be eligible to be on the committee. We have a lady in Carrick, Miss Grubb, and another we had, Miss Curtis, and they were the two most energetic people on the Board.

20519. How would these committees be formed?—The District Council.

20520. Then every man in the District Council should be a member of it, and if they liked to select one or two outsiders to form a hospital committee, not too large?—Not too large; the Local Government Board could define how many.

20521. Would you have these small hospitals in connection with the county infirmary, so that a large portion could be drafted off to the county infirmary?—Any case that was recoverable I would send to the county infirmary.

20522. You would only have them to supply local wants and cases of emergency, but for larger operations you would draft them to the larger institution?—Yes.

20523. Therefore they would be an adjunct of the county infirmary?—Yes, sir.

20524. With regard to consumption, have you any idea about the treatment of consumption?—I have not.

20525. Do you think it would be desirable to have a county hospital or sanatorium for the county, or two or three counties?—I would.

20526. It is a very great scourge; however, you have not thought anything about it. With regard to the fever hospitals, would you have these in connection with the small hospitals?—People have a horror of going into a fever hospital. I would have an area or district, not absolutely necessary to be in the same county—suppose now, for instance, there is one in Carrick, I would have an area around them in Tipperary, Waterford and Kilkenny. The same way in Callan.

I would have an area outside Callan Union. In that way I would have two or three areas, to pay so much a head for every one that went in.

20527. There would have to be some management for the hospital?—I would give the liberty of sending patients to the fever hospital; perhaps it would be better to have every disease pay only according to its valuation towards the support of the hospital, and send patients in. It would be rather inviting to have Tipperary pay the whole expense and the others having power to send in patients and only having to pay according to the capitation fee for those sent in. I think each district which has the power of sending in should pay some part of the establishment charges.

20528. CHAIRMAN.—They would be paying for the establishment charges to the hospitals in their own county?—Yes.

20529. Would it not be as broad as it is long all round?—Well, it would, but then don't you see I would have the fever hospital separated from the workhouse hospital. They would not have the taint of pauperism on it.

20530. But suppose the workhouse to be closed by that time. By this supposition you have no workhouse in being. In Carrick you would simply have the district or little hospital for acute cases, and a place for fever?—Certainly the aged people would be sent on.

20531. Dr. Brown.—You did not think of any system whereby all the fever hospitals would be connected to some extent—where a fever nurse could go from one to another, and the small district hospital could be connected with the county infirmary, so that a larger staff of nurses would be available all over the county?—There certainly might be such a system.

20532. Instead of having at Dungarvan and the more fever nurses, at very large expense, often for one single case, if you had them at the county infirmary they would be doing useful work and could be drafted there when wanted?—Yes.

Captain W. G. COOMAN, R.F., examined.

20533. I have been deputed by the County Council to give evidence here.

20534. CHAIRMAN.—These queries were sent to the County Council, and they have answered them in a general way, I think, by saying that you would explain more clearly your own views for them on the subject. What was the view of the County Council about the number of workhouses in the Co. Waterford?—I am, unfortunately, in a position, though deputed by the County Council, I am unfortunately in a position to actually not know what the opinions of the County Council are with reference to this matter, and I endeavoured to find out, by communications with one gentleman in the Council, a very influential person. The answer was very much that he approved of the replies of mine pretty fully. That gentleman is here present. He was chairman of the County Council for a number of years, and I think if he gives evidence he will be able to give the opinion of the Council actually better than I can. These are the answers that I formulated.

20535. You think that Kilmacothomas certainly might be closed?—I certainly think that Kilmacothomas might be closed.

20536. You did not think any other in the county?—There is Dungarvan and Waterford; you cannot close either one or the other of those. Then there is Lismore; that is in a district some distance from Dungarvan. I think you cannot interfere with those three unions in the County Waterford. The Kilmacothomas is an intermediary union which might, according to my experience, —

20537. Be closed altogether?—No. I make suggestions with regard to that matter. I would like to read them. I have the extract from the terms of reference.

20538. Kilmacothomas, you think, might be attached to Dungarvan and Waterford?—Yes.

20539. Would you leave any accommodation there for the sick?—You must do something of the kind.

20540. You would leave some accommodation for the acute sick?—I think I touch on that question further down. I would dissolve Kilmacothomas Union and convert it to the purpose above, that is a technical school and experimental plot, which is available there—some thirty or forty acres—and I should turn it to that purpose.

20541. The village of Kilmacothomas is about fourteen English miles from Waterford?—From Dungarvan provision should be made for the conveyance of the sick poor. This might be considered an obstacle to the amalgamation, but it may be easily got over by the railway or an auxiliary hospital, located in one of the present buildings, quite separate.

20542. Which do you think would be the better course, to leave a little hospital or not?—Undoubtedly I think for the advantage of the sick poor, I look upon the regulations, laws, and everything connected with the Poor Law Unions.—

20543. As an outgrowth?—The Medical Charities part of the Poor Law is I think the only thing worth keeping in the whole affair.

20544. You would approve of that?—Yes.

20545. Therefore you would be in favour of village hospitals?—Yes, so far as Kilmacothomas, I would; and of course the medical officers that are at present contented with regard to the looking after the transfer by railway or other conveyance, if necessary, of patients that might be transferred to Waterford or Dungarvan; but in case of sickness, and so on, you would have some receptacle in the shape of an auxiliary hospital at Kilmacothomas. That is my idea with regard to that, but I am afraid you could not carry out my idea with regard to the technical schools.

20546. We could only of course put forward your views?—Further down I also state—I would like to read my observations—Kilmacothomas should be attached to Dungarvan and Waterford, and attach land available for experimental plots.

20547. They are suitable you think for experimental plots?—Yes, and the land is beautiful land; and a technical school of instruction would be a relief to the rates.

20548. Very big for a school, is it not?—Oh, not at all. By reading this through you will see that I suggest an auxiliary hospital separated from the rest of the department. I also suggest that children from Dungarvan and Waterford be transferred to Kilmacothomas. The transfer of children from above two unions could be accomplished, and the proper youth brought up to some useful purpose attached to the technical school, and free from the vitiated atmosphere of the home.

20542. Would you prefer that to boarding-out?—I would, undoubtedly, because they would be under proper supervision. I would work them at the thrupps-are exportation. I would work them at the thrupps-are exportation, and I would teach them trades also, because that is the important matter for youth, and that is to be taught some trade or other that will teach them how to gain a living in after life.

20543. Do you not think the most useful trade for the community and for the people themselves would be that of an agricultural labourer?—Undoubtedly I do; and they are very much required at present, and the future will be the same.

20544. Why would you go further and teach them trades which are already perhaps over-trained in some places?—I don't think so. In the country, as far as my own experience goes, you cannot get a single tradesman of any description except a smith, because I suppose that pays best; they all go into town with trades.

20545. Would they not continue to go into the town if you train them in the country?—Some might locate themselves.

20546. This technical instruction is rather teaching country boys to be lousy about tools?—A good deal.

20547. So that largely of necessity these boys themselves would be taught the use of tools; would not the necessity for tradesmen disappear somewhat?—I don't believe it is the case. In my early days there were tradesmen, and all the children, even in the country, were bound for seven years to take up a trade, but I don't know of a single instance of a young lad being bound to a trade in the country at present.

20548. You don't mean to say that long ago all the country boys got a trade?—I don't say that, but then there were sufficient that took different trades.

20549. They had sufficient employment?—There were sufficient taking the different trades to supply the wants of the locality, but now my experience is that the wants of the locality are totally neglected.

20550. Owing perhaps to the development of trade?—Owing to emigration and better wages in the towns.

20551. And to journey at large concerns which supply all the articles that are wanted at a low cost?—However, that is a question to solve in this country, I am afraid.

20552. But at all events you would rather keep these boys in no institution than board them out and make agricultural labourers of them?—I would.

20553. Have you had any experience at all of the boarding-out system anywhere?—I have, so far as I understand it, as a Guardian for a number of years in Waterford Union.

20554. How have your boys done that are boarded out?—The boys and girls are sent out at fourteen.

20555. You would not call that boarding out. The boarded-out are those that are sent out to nurse at an early age?—I look on that.

20556. How have they done with you? what are your reports?—Well, they are sent out to nurse at the Waterford Union, and they are looked after to a certain extent. A committee of ladies has been appointed to inquire into the houses where the children are.

20557. What are their reports?—And a very necessary thing too. It was originally under the relieving officer's discretion to visit and send in monthly reports as to the state of the boarded-out children; then was added to that the ladies' committee, which was looked on at the time with a little suspicion, that they were in the way; but I thought it a very necessary thing, because I know how relieving officers do their work pretty well, and that every one in assistance, in my opinion, no matter who they are, even myself, waste a little looking after, so I approved decidedly of the committee.

20558. How have the children got on that were boarded out with you. What are the latest reports. Are they satisfactory?—Sometimes they are, and sometimes not.

20559. On the whole, what is the opinion of the ladies' committee. Are they in favour of boarding-out?—I cannot answer for the ladies.

20560. Can you tell us the nature of their reports to your Board?—Well, the clerk of our union is here and he will be able to give the information.

20561. Is your impression that the ladies' committee is favourable to the boarding-out of children?—I don't think they have anything to do as to whether they are boarded out or not; it is the Guardians.

20562. But are they in favour of the system?—I am afraid I could not answer that.

20563. Is your own opinion favourable or unfavourable to putting out young children?—It is as far unfavourable that they are cast away; they are sent into the country and used.

20564. The same way as any little child would be used in the homes?—Exactly, and not taught a single thing.

20565. What would you say they are not taught?—They are taught how to drive cattle, of course.

20566. And to weed?—Certainly not that, because the people with whom they are boarded out have not got a peck.

20567. You think not?—That I am certain of; they are not farmers; they are labourers or old women that want somebody to nurse them and help them.

20568. You mean they are put out with these people as a means of increasing their stipend?—That is why these people take them.

20569. I understand thoroughly your not having an unqualified approval of such a system?—I certainly don't approve of it. I would approve of my system, that is a technical school to teach some useful object, that they would afterwards derive benefit from.

20570. Have you any experience of children that are brought up at a central institution?—That is, for instance, the Union of Waterford?

20571. Any institution, orphanage, or school of any sort?—I have a good deal of experience of children that have been sent out into the country at the age of fourteen from the Union of Waterford, and I have taken an interest in some six or seven of them.

20572. Very good, tell us about these?—My impression is they all turned out badly; every one of them that I have known in the country turned out badly—that is, so far badly, that they were no use to the country. They would not get up in the mornings, they would not do what they were told, or they had no idea of obedience.

20573. Had they any intelligence?—Smart enough. I expect they could not know much at fourteen, and particularly being brought up in the precincts of a workhouse. But my idea was—bring them up where these technical schools will keep them at work, when they are able to work, and teach them how to work.

20574. Have you ever been through any institution where technical instruction was given to the resident pupils?—I cannot say I have, because it is of late introduction into the country, and I regret much that I have not.

20575. Because I am afraid you would find the children that came from such institutions that similar complaints are made about them very often—that they are not extremely satisfactory?—Then I would scold the right boys, and condemn the institution that had charge of them.

20576. Do you not think that instruction in family life is the better education for a little child than in a barracks institution, where children are all drilled, and kept together and taught together?—I am afraid the best of teaching is discipline.

20577. Don't you think they would have more of a friendly, good discipline at home than in an institution?—Yes, if the person that had them under charge was capable of instructing them.

20578. I agree with you thoroughly if you selected a proper home?—That is, the infant school.

20579. Take the child as soon as it can use its teeth or a couple of years or three years old, it is at an attractive age, it gets adapted into the family?—I look on that as a sentiment.

20580. Don't you think it is a real sentiment?—The sentiment may exist.

20581. If there was a little child quartered on you would you not feel a bit tender towards it?—There is no doubt of that; if an old woman had charge of that child she might get fond of it.

20582. Or even a young woman?—My experience is that it is the old women, who get hold of three or four names. No, 2, lunatic, epileptic, or idiot should be removed from the workhouse. There is one objection, of course, the reformatory might have to that, and that is, it would cost them more in a lunatic asylum than it would in the union.

20583. Are you sure of that?—I am very nearly certain of that; about 2s. 6d. or 3s. 6d. it costs in the union.

20584. That is only for their food. What is it in the lunatic asylum?—I think 4s. 6d.; that is the return of the cost of each patient.

20585. In the lunatic asylum cost of maintenance they take everything into consideration—salaries, support of looms, in some cases—and they divide all that annual expenditure by the number of people?—

June 21, 1894

Captain W. C. Coghlin.

June 11, 1904.

Cynthia W. C.
Cogan.

However, I should not look on that as an obstacle at all; for I think lunatics, idiots, and epileptics should be properly looked after; and I consider the unions are not the places suitable for such cases. They should be removed from the workhouse to the county asylum, and not to vacated unions. That is, for instance, I call Kilmacshannon a vacated union, which could be more efficiently used, as detailed above. The above observations dispose of No. 3. No. 4, if the idiots and children were removed, as suggested above, lots of room in the two unions could be found for hospital purposes. These are fortresses or fifty male idiots in Waterford, there are sixty to seventy female idiots there; if they were removed, as I suggested, to the Insane Asylum, then all the room they have could be used then to supply hospital room. No. 5, by amalgamation, the staff, which is the expensive part of the present arrangement, could be reduced without impairing the efficiency of the administration—making the staff of Waterford and Dungarvan Unions perform the duties consequent on amalgamation. Then you would get rid of the staff of Kilmacshannon altogether, and the expense in connection with that.

25693. Mr. MURPHY.—You won't get rid of them. Won't you still have a staff at Kilmacshannon?—You will have only the medical staff.

25694. What about the staff looking after the children; you will have that; you will be going deeper into debt by your proposal—I don't think so; because you have no clerk, no master.

25695. CHAIRMAN.—Well, you will want a clerk, in any case?—It may be so.

25696. I am afraid, as far as economy is concerned, there would not be much to be got in that direction. If you could conduct the business successfully and properly for the care of the sick poor and for the care of the orphan children I, personally, would not object to the expense as far as that part is concerned.

25697. Mr. MURPHY.—But we, personally, have to look after that point, that is our job!—That is the question—the reduction of the rates. Now, then, comes the last of the queries. I would dissolve Kilmacshannon Union, and convert it to the purpose above. The village of Kilmacshannon is fourteen English miles from Waterford and eleven from Dungarvan. Provision should be made for the conveyance of the sick poor. This might be considered an obstacle to amalgamation which might be easily got over by railway or an auxiliary hospital located in one of the present buildings, quite separate from the sick and destitute. I don't approve of auxiliary infantic asylums.

25698. CHAIRMAN.—Why don't you approve of these?—Because that would increase the staff.

25699. You would have a fresh institution and a fresh staff?—Yes.

25700. Mr. MURPHY.—Won't you need a fresh asylum and a fresh addition to the asylum?—Now, for instance, they are spending on the Waterford Asylum at present £40,000 for the purpose of building additional accommodation to supply the wants of the quantity of lunatics that come there.

25701. CHAIRMAN.—Do you know for how many inmates there is accommodation?—I cannot exactly say; I only know we have to pay something like £40,000 for the purpose of building further accommodation there.

25702. If that is being built you would have sufficient accommodation for the idiots of both Dungarvan and Waterford Unions transferred to Waterford Union?

25703. Mr. MURPHY.—Yes, you have 120 in the workhouses of the county?—A question of detail which may not be worked out. 5. Unless distance would intervene, I see no necessity or undue hardship. Certainly, if the able-bodied were made to work, the sick poor and other classes would not suffer. A proper distribution of duties is essential. What is more essential is an official to see that the respective duties are performed. That is one thing that, as far as my experience goes, there is no authority in the different unions in Ireland on the actual requisite in discharging cases. Making tramps work in clearing their latrines is a difficult question to solve. Now, these are obvious values of my own that I have written since I furnished you with that. I would further observe that I am of opinion that under the present Poor Law union arrangements there is no responsible authority except the master, and he can throw all responsible action upon the board. Were a man paid sufficiently well, and given security for his action and duties, then you would have the work done with economy and common sense. He is appointed, and has certain powers; he is answerable to the Board of Guardians; the Board of Guardians inquire into any irregularity, as matter when it may be, which may be brought under the notice of the board that the master has fallen into. I know the working of Boards of Guardians for years, and I know there is no authority whatsoever external except very trifling. However, I don't want to put my foot into it too much in expressing an opinion.

25704. Do you mean to say the Guardians don't insist on the master doing his duty?—I could give you cases in point where I was on committees myself—it was a case of deficiency, it is many years ago, however—it was a case of deficiency on the part of the master in supplies, and there were three of a committee appointed to go in and inquire into this deficiency. I was one member of committee. I cannot think of the other two gentlemen's names, but, however, we came into the board with our report that the master should pay for this deficiency. It was brought before the board, and the master got sent free. For years I did not attend the union after that. I only give that instance, because it came under my personal knowledge of how duties are done. That was a particular case. I have knowledge of cases where charges were brought against a master; the Guardians went into it exhaustively; they brought down a Local Government Inspector, and the result was that the master was dismissed. Boston differs. We have had many instances of where Boards of Guardians have been suppressed. To fully give evidence regarding Poor Law reform I would have to spend too much time to inquire into the economic questions and the administration of the different institutions under Poor Law management in Ireland, so, consequently, no, not, as I would wish, convey evidence and impressions with satisfaction to myself, and correct many errors that I believe to exist. Now, where I see the want of authority, which I say there is in the unions of Ireland, is that the authority vested in the master is transferred from him to the Board of Guardians, which is the actual authority. I have known instances, and I have given one.

25705. CHAIRMAN.—Have you any definite suggestions to make?—That I was just coming to. This would get rid of all the Boards of Guardians. Appoint three men to the unions, and give each of them £200 a year. I am democratic enough to say that those appointments should be in the hands of the ratepayers of that union; and, unless we are an office people altogether, three men could be got from, say, the Waterford Union, to conduct the business of the Waterford Union, and let those three men be appointed by a vote of the ratepayers of the Union of Waterford. It is all a question of efficiency, and you would get efficiency in the Waterford Union with three men elected, instead of being appointed by the Local Government Board, which was the usual manner in which that was carried out. I think, gentlemen, I have given you my ideas on the subject.

Mr. MAYNARD DOYLE EXAMINED.

Mr. Maynard
Doyle.

25695. CHAIRMAN.—We would be glad to hear from you the views of the Yeastall Board of Guardians. You came from the County Waterford rural district part of the union?—Yes, sir.

25696. What are the views of your district?—There was a special meeting of the Guardians—25697. Are you speaking for the Guardians or your own Council?—Both together. There was a special meeting of the Guardians and the Rural District Councils together.

25698. You had not a separate meeting of your own District Council?—No, it was one meeting.

25699. What was their view?—That amalgamation was necessary.

25700. Did they think their own union ought to be broken up?—Yes, abolished. There is portion of the union in the County Cork and portion in the County Waterford. The portion in the County Cork would go to Middleton, and the portion in the County Waterford to Dungarvan.

JAN 21, 1901

Mr. MARSHALL
Boyle.

20531. How far would you be from Dungarvan?—There are eight electoral divisions.

20532. How far is Ardmore from Dungarvan?—Youghal is altogether eighteen miles; Ardmore would be ten or twelve.

20533. Youghal would go to Middleton, and there is railway communication between Youghal and Middleton?—Splendid.

20534. Ardmore would be one of the most distant points from Dungarvan; how far is that?—Forteen miles and a half. There is one district of the County Waterford at the Cork side of the river—that is, Teplenishal, above the bridge—that is a long distance from Dungarvan; that would be over twenty miles.

20535. What county is that in?—County Waterford, at the other side of the Blackwater.

20536. And how far is it from Tallow?—Eight or ten miles.

20537. Twelve miles from Lismore?—Yes, or fourteen.

20538. What ought to be done with that district?—It was originally in the possession of Lismore. The question at their meeting did not decide that point.

20539. What is your personal opinion?—Really, my own personal opinion is that if Lismore were allowed to stand, it ought to go back to Lismore or Middleton.

20540. How far would it be from Middleton?—The train facilities to Middleton are very good from Youghal.

20541. It has a steamboat service to Youghal?—Yes, but it would not serve; the boat is not very regular.

20542. How far is it from Youghal?—Three or four miles.

20543. How far is it by road from Middleton?—It is just in a line with Lismore from Youghal.

20544. How far is it by road from Middleton?—Sixteen or eighteen miles.

20545. You would have to consider that about the removal of the sick; some acutely sick people could not be removed by railway?—To be sure.

20546. What county is it in?—County Waterford, at the other side of the river.

20547. Then, it would either go to Lismore or Dungarvan?—Yes; but Lismore would be the nearest place; that is my own personal opinion. It would be a long distance, eighteen miles from Youghal to Dungarvan, and that is four miles further on, and you should come to the bridge to cross to Dungarvan.

20548. Was there a division at your Board of Guardians or was it the unanimous opinion that the Youghal Union ought to be broken up?—That was the unanimous expression of opinion, owing to the union being divided by the river into two counties; and it would be a very feasible thing to have the portion in the County Waterford attached to Dungarvan; and, then, considering the good facilities to Middleton from the Cork side, to attach it to Middleton. We have a very suitable hospital or sanatorium for consumptives or a convalescent home.

20549. Are the lunatic buildings large enough for the requirements?—I am afraid, hardly. It is full at the present time. There are very nearly 400 or 500 there at the present time, all of the imbecile class—work-minded. Youghal Union would make a beautiful hospital from its situation. It overlooks the Blackwater, and is away from the town completely as an asylum.

20550. Have you a new fever hospital there, or is the old one still standing against over the graveyard?—It is in the same spot, in a very bad way.

20551. Did you consider generally the question of what might be done with the other unions in the county?—Entirely our own union; however, KilmacThomas was spoken of.

20552. You think it might follow your example?—Quite so; that it should be abolished as well.

20553. That is a matter you did not pass any resolution about?—Not exactly. At the same time, it was the opinion of the meeting that KilmacThomas should be abolished owing to its proximity to Dungarvan and Waterford. These were the only two unions spoken of.

20554. Were there any other questions discussed that you would like to call attention to. You discussed the question of caravans or tramps?—Yes, the matter was gone into. The abolition of the Youghal Workhouse would be a means of diverting the tramp business from that part of the county, inasmuch as it would break up the line from Waterford to Cork.

20555. Take a link out of the chain?—Quite so; it is a clear day's walk from here to KilmacThomas, out to Dungarvan, one to Youghal, and so on to Middleton and Cork, and the effect of abolishing the Youghal Workhouse would be to make it more difficult for them to get a rest at night.

20556. Would you be afraid of their looking for accommodation in the out-houses and behind haystacks?—Really, I suppose they would be forced there.

20557. Would you be in favour of allowing people with no business to tramp about the country, getting their support from other people?—Certainly not.

20558. Do you think it would be an unfair interference with their liberty, if they would not work and earn their living, to lock them up in a place, and make them work for their support?—I suggest that the tramps, should, in the first instance, when they go to the workhouse, apply to the police barracks.

20559. Supposing the Youghal Workhouse was closed, would you do in Youghal if tramps came there?—I don't know what you would do with them then.

20560. Would you be in favour of making it illegal for people to go about the country like that?—I certainly would.

20561. And give magistrates power to put them into a workhouse or labour colony?—I would be in favour of that, for really it is not safe to let them go about the country; they will break into houses, as you say, and may do some injury.

20562. I have no knowledge of that exactly, still I am aware they are not favourites on their way round?—I would like to see them work.

20563. It might be a chance of getting them into working habits, so that they could subsequently, after a little training of that sort, earn their own living outside?—Certainly. I, furthermore, say it would encourage them to work if they saw you were in earnest in putting a stop to the vagrancy. I certainly would be in favour of encouraging them, if there could be any means adopted to encourage them.

20564. Mr. MURPHY.—But, in the first instance, when the house of yours would be done away with, what would you do; would you not empower the relieving officer to give that man an order for a night's lodging and breakfast, and only in repeated cases would you apply stringent measures?—Yes; I would certainly say that it should not rest with the relieving officer to give a tramp a night's lodging.

20565. He might be a man out of employment, looking for work, would you put that man at once under the charge of the police?—By having a system of identification established, and let him account for himself.

20566. How would you identify a man until you first saw him, if this was the first house he came to?—Let him identify himself.

20567. CHAIRMAN.—You would require him to have a certificate of character?—It would rest with himself to prove that he was not—20568. A harmless vagrant?—Yes.

20569. Mr. MURPHY.—But would you not, in the first instance, when a man applied for assistance, give some one authority to give him assistance until he proved himself to be a tramp; don't you think he should get assistance—a night's lodging and breakfast?—By all means.

20570. And it would be only after he had been found out to be a tramp?—Yes; we must admit he is a human being.

20571. CHAIRMAN.—How are you ever to put a stop to them if you let them come as often as three times. A man may come three times in eighteen months under a different name, or his face is not remembered?—I would certainly provide some work for him to do in a house of correction, if there was some system established.

20572. Do you think it would be any hardship to oblige a man who was going to go about to have a certificate from the place he came from. Supposing there was a Waterford man started looking for work somewhere, or a Youghal man coming to look for work on the railway here, do you think it would be any hardship on him to oblige him to carry a certificate stating—“This is a labouring man who is bona fide stating.”—This is a labouring man at Waterford.” If he had no work evidence to produce, do you think it would be an unreasonable thing to assume he was a tramp?—I don't think it would be necessary at all to have a certificate.

20573. How would you get at it?—There are well-known tramps.

20574. They cannot even prosecute them as vagrants now, practically?—There are well-known tramps that

June 21, 1904.
Mr. Maurice
Doyle.

visit the Youghal Workhouse, and they apply to the relieving officer for a night's lodging; he gives them a ticket of admission to the workhouse, and they get it.

20655. Are these people who never do a day's work, as far as you know?—They are that class.

20656. Do you think that is a good class to allow to go at large in the country?—If you could get them to work it would be better. Certainly they don't care to work. They go to the farmers' houses; they leave the Waterford Workhouse this morning, and go through the country, and will go to the farmers' houses, and get, perhaps, a crust of bread or a copper, and they go to the workhouse at Kilmartins next night. They are a class of men that don't care to work at all; that is my opinion. If they could be trained to work I think, in the first instance, that a tramp coming into Youghal for a night's lodging, should apply to the police barracks, and on the certificate or requisition of the constable, to the relieving officer, and get a ticket of admission.

20657. Admission where—we are supposing there is no workhouse in Youghal?—Then, of course, he would not go to Youghal for lodging.

20658. He would, if he would be there destitute?—Where would he get a night's lodging?

20659. That is what I am asking you?—I think it would make him work to get the price of a night's lodging; they are strong, hearty fellows, but they won't work.

20660. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you think if there was a workhouse established for these fellows for a province where not only the vagrant class could go, but where men who wanted employment, but could not get it, might go, and get work for a certain time?—I know a great many of them would not go there.

20661. But, still, if you had such an institution, it would take out of their mouths the statement that they could not get work?—Yes.

20662. CHAIRMAN.—Do you think it would be a good speculation to rig up a large institution, with officials, on the prospect of men, like tramps, going there to stay?—They would not stay there.

20663. Mr. MURKIN.—But they could be sent there?—Yes.

20664. CHAIRMAN.—Do you think it would be a good thing to have an institution of that sort, where they could be sent?—I think so.

20665. Mr. MURKIN.—And where, if they were not sent, they could go there, knowing they would get employment?—That would be it; it would be, perhaps, a help to get them to work.

20666. And some little payment given to them for the work they do there?—That would be a very good thing, in my opinion.

20667. CHAIRMAN.—Some of these people have wives and children going about with them; would you be in favour of allowing them to drag these children about the country, as they do?—Not the younger ones.

20668. Or the older, or any children?—The children able to run about with them.

20669. Do you think it is a desirable way to have children brought up?—Younger children should be taken from them, and the Guardians in the meantime act in loco parentis.

20670. Would you let the old birds go on gaily in the meantime without their innumerable?—It would be better to leave the old ones with them.

20671. Mr. MURKIN.—You would apply the trumpet law to the older ones when you took the children away?—Yes.

20672. CHAIRMAN.—I see, you would be in favour of different workhouses for different classes of inmates. That is the answer to No. 3. That certain classes of paupers ought to be kept in separate houses. Therefore, you would approve of having one institution, say, for the aged and infirm, of a whole, large area like a country?—Yes.

20673. You don't approve of the boarding out of adult workhouse inmates, you don't think that would be feasible?—I don't think it would.

20674. But are you in favour of the boarding out or putting out at home of young children?—My own impression about young children where I saw them out I found those boarded out to be better citizens than those that are kept in. Not far away from my place there are a few of those children out; you can see them at Mass every Sunday, and they are as clean as any other children I see there.

20675. Healthy-looking?—Healthy-looking. Attached is it identically the same thing. Where they are nursed is practically a home for them, provided you get a proper place; and the Guardians, as far as I know, when there is a child to be sent out to nurse, select the most suitable persons; perhaps two or three may come forward for the child.

20676. There is a good demand for these children with you?—Yes, sir; in some of the poorer houses, where there is, perhaps, no child at all, the couple, the husband and wife, like to have a child with them, and to get paid for it. As far as I know, I find these children are very healthy and clean, and all that, and the place is really a home for them; they are not school; and with regard to sending them after work, I don't believe that at all.

20677. Why should they not go after cattle?—Generally; but not to send them drudging about.

20678. Should they not get work, and plenty of it?—Quite so; it develops them every way, and gives them an idea afterwards to be hard workers. They draw water and keep the houses clean, and that is certainly a practical technical instruction for them.

Mr. MICHAEL CUNNINGHAM examined.

Mr. Michael Cunningham.

20679. CHAIRMAN.—You heard your colleague's evidence?—I did, and I almost agree with him in everything. I was first in favour of abolishing the Midleton Union, but I found the majority was in favour of abolishing Youghal. My reason was that it was so near Cork, and from Midleton to Cork would go to Cork, and from Midleton to Youghal would go to Youghal. However, I gave in in the end, and agreed with the majority.

20680. But you think it is a matter the Commission might look at, to see whether Midleton might not go instead of Youghal?—Exactly.

20681. Was there any other matter that Mr. Doyle did not allude to in which you differ to any extent from him?—With regard to the boarding out of the children I approve of it very much. I have some from nurse myself and they are excellent; they could not be better cared.

20682. Do these children, as far as you know, get good, sweet milk to drink?—Certainly. Some poor people have goats, and goat's milk is very good for children; and, of course, they can go to farmers and buy milk.

20683. Some of these are boarded out with small farmers?—Yes; we see very particular about giving the children to good houses. We have children at present, and we cannot get a person to take them. There are two or three children.

20684. Were you looking in any particular locality?—The relieving officer made inquiries round—that is his duty—and he could not find anybody to take them.

20685. How many children have you boarded out at present?—We have a good many; and after their term of thirteen or fourteen years they go to work with farmers, and are very useful.

20686. They understand country ways?—Certainly. They are always kept at school until the age, because the relieving officer visits them regularly.

20687. Dr. BRIDGE.—How much do you pay for them?—3s. or 4s. a week.

Mr. ROSSIGNOL.—3s. a week.

20688. CHAIRMAN.—How much clothes.

Mr. ROSSIGNOL.—We don't supply clothes; that covers everything; except, of course, children that are under two years of age. We give them up to 4s. a week, and there are very few of them.

20689.—I agree with what Mr. Doyle said.

Mr. F. R. ROBERTS, Clerk of the Youghal Union, examined.

Mr. F. R.
Roberts.

What the board intended was that Youghal should be the hospital for the Youghal Union; that is to say, sick patients from the Youghal Union, as it at present exists, should be dealt with in Youghal.

20690. CHAIRMAN.—That you should have as many still?—Yes; only amplified.

20691. And fever hospital?—Yes.

Mr. PATRICK O'GORMAN, Chairman Limerick Union, examined.

Jan 21, 1906.

Mr. Patrick O'Gorman.

20701. CHAIRMAN.—You have your replies to our queries, and you might kindly go over them for me?—Our Board are unanimous in saying that it was expedient to amalgamate unions; they went for the principle, but we find it is not very expedient to amalgamate our union; we have a large area; it is seven-and-a-half miles long by fifteen wide, and I think it would be either a hardship on the poor, and it would not be advantageous, I believe, to the ratepayers.

20702. You are between Fermoy and Dungarvan?—Yes, and Youghal; amalgamating with the district down there would give us a larger area still.

20703. Then your Board of Guardians are unanimously of opinion that it would not be wise to discontinue Limerick; what do you think about the proposal to discontinue any other union in your neighbourhood?—I think one union, at all events, could, with advantage, be utilized as an auxiliary lunatic asylum for juveniles.

20704. But that is the case at present in Youghal; they have a building—part of the old industrial school—as an auxiliary asylum?—I did not know that. Then I think the lunatic hospital could be put together there; for myself, I am in favour of a complete classification of inmates of the union. I think all the delicate old and feeble should have a home for themselves; one union should be given to them, and they should not be left associated with these fallen women or respectable characters; these fallen women and their children should have a separate place for themselves, where they could be made to do laundry work or something else; be made earn their living.

20705. Would you approve of placing them in religious refuges and penitentiaries if they are taken in there?—I would; but if they were not taken in there one institution could be devoted to them, and isolate them; we were in favour of a sanatorium for the county; we would contribute our portion of the expense to isolate consumptive patients.

20706. And try to cure them?—Yes. We approve of boarding out children.

20707. Have you many boarded out in Limerick?—We have a good many.

20708. What are the reports about them?—It is always favourable; children that are reared out in the country associate with farmers' sons and labourers' sons, and learn to milk cows, and are useful otherwise; whereas children reared in the union, when they go out at fourteen or fifteen, they are incapable of doing anything; they won't get situations; they are scholars enough, but the market is overcrowded.

20709. Are they handy about the place?—They are not, and the next thing you will see, they enlist; we have them at present in the streets of Limerick, young fellows, reared up in the union, and they are young soldiers going about the town; they thought work was to be had for them. If they are reared up among farmers' sons and labourers' sons and daughters they learn to milk cows and do things that would be useful elsewhere.

20710. And they get employment as labourers?—They do.

20711. Are you aware of some of these children who were boarded out becoming regular labourers?—I am; I know that.

20712. You don't approve of boarding out adults?—No, sir.

20713. What is your objection to that; do you think it would be too much abused?—It would be too much abused; everybody would have friends, and would be wanting to get payment for them.

20714. You had a division on your board on the question of chargeability?—We had.

20715. Right to live, and the majority were in favour of letting the present union retain certainties as it is?—Yes; we thought it less troublesome and safer, and a more equitable way of doing it. And the board too were unanimous in saying that healthy tramps should be refused admission into the union; if you want to put a stop to it you must use extreme measures.

20716. Do you think they would not go into farmers' places?—They would not. If one or two get twelve or fourteen or sixteen months it would stop it.

20706. Do they ever get that?—I don't know whether they ever do; they are bellied singers and bawdy players, and so forth; they are systematic tramps; and each of them earns as much as will pay his lodgings, but they drink it, knowing they will have the money to go to, and every penny they make before they go up to the union they drink it or else put it to hide in holes in chimneys, so that it won't be found when they are searched by the porter.

20707. Have you ever noticed of what class the tramps are; some are musicians?—Yes; and disbanded soldiers. If they had to collect for twenty-one years instead of six you would not have half the tramps. You have these disbanded soldiers that come out after short service that are too lazy to work.

20708. Or cannot get employment?—They would not follow at; they will find some ways—trick of the loop business, or following men, or singing ballads, and what they get they drink, knowing they have a sure bed in the union.

20709. You would be inclined to close the casual ward?—I would.

20710. There are enough of hospitals you say in your union?—I think so, because if you multiply the hospitals you will multiply the expense.

20711. And you don't hear of any complaint that another hospital was required?—I did not; you will have to find a horse and ambulance for each hospital, and a stretcher.

20712. There is no demand for such a thing in your union?—There is not.

20713. How would you reduce the expenditure if you would not back up your union; do you see any way by which you might reduce the expenditure?—When you have lunatics and these women in one union it entails that you have to have an official over each department, and that official may have in charge only four or five patients. If they were concentrated in one place one person could take charge of fifty or sixty; the officials are multiplying every year, consequently the expenses are going up. As regards payments or contributions by persons who are able to pay something I think they should pay.

20714. Do you think that governing bodies of hospitals and infirmaries of all kinds should be empowered to come to a decision how much people could afford to pay?—I think they should; they should have discretion in that.

20715. And give them legal power to recover that?—Yes; it is necessary, because we find treatment upon 5s. or 6s. a day will go for a red ticket and get the doctor's services, and I think they should be bound to contribute something; their children go to the hospital even though they are in receipt of 5s. or 6s. a day; they go in and never pay anything, and I think they are better able to pay than the small farmers having only four or five cows, and I think, too, it is a hardship on farmers having only two or three acres to say that they are deprived of out-door relief.

20716. Would you repeal the quarter-acre clause?—I would; and I would leave it in the discretion of the board, for sometimes a man with seven or eight acres of land is more destitute than a man who has a labourer's cottage.

20717. You would not put any restriction about land at all into the Act of Parliament?—I think with a man having a big tract of land it should be his own fault, or there should be something wrong, if he was not able to pay a little.

20718. It be had to come for relief?—Yes.

20719. Where would you draw the limit?—If it is not drawn it will be very hard for a man who has any influence will try and work it and get the services of the doctor from the board.

20720. I am not talking of the services of the doctor, but in the case of out-door relief?—I think it should be left in the discretion of the board; the board is democratic; you have a representation from every place and the majority should rule, because I find on the County Council or District Council the majority are always right, as a rule.

Mr. MICHAEL MCGRAVE, Limerick, examined.

20721. CHAIRMAN.—You know these replies; the Chairman has just gone over them with me. Is there anything that occurs to you to mention specially or to amplify among these hearings?—The only point is, I Mr. Michael would be in favour of a central institution for all the children brought up in unions.

June 21, 1904.

Mr. Michael McGrath.

20722. You don't agree with your colleague that boarding-out is the best method?—I do; I would approve of it.

20723. Would you approve of changing the law so as to enable the Guardians to board out all children who are in their charge?—Well, I would, provided they get a place that would be suitable for the children.

20724. Of course there are some children that could not be boarded out, that would come in for a very short period, and it was suggested by some of the witnesses that children of that kind, instead of being put temporarily into a workhouse, should be put into some other institution for the fortnight or month, or whatever the time would be, say an industrial school, if the managers would accept them, so as to close the workhouse altogether to children?—I would be in favour of closing it altogether for children and to have a central institution for them.

20725. Do you think you would require another institution if you board out all your children nearly, and only had a few; don't you think some existing industrial school or refuge would be sufficient?—If they could be boarded out, but it is not feasible; at all events suitable places cannot be got to board out all the children.

20726. Do you find much difficulty in boarding out children in your union?—There is a difficulty in getting suitable persons to take these children.

20727. Have you many boarded out at present?

Mr. O'Gorman.—Seven or eight.

20728. That would be very few for such a large union as Lismore; how much do you give for the children?

Mr. Healy, Clerk.—45 a year and a suit of clothes and two pairs of boots.

Witness.—They would be boarded out if there were applications from suitable places for bringing up these children.

20729. You would prefer the boarding-out system?—Yes.

20730. You heard the very strong remarks your Chairman made about how well these children do as after-birth?—I knew they do a great deal better than being boarded out, and I would be in favour of the system.

20731. Is there any other matter you would like to dwell on?—For women of indolent character, I would be in favour of an institution—a maternity home or the like.

20732. A refuge?—A refuge where they would get an opportunity of being reformed, where home industries—sewing and plain cooking—would be taught.

20733. I suppose you would not look forward to them remaining there as inmates for any considerable time, but that they should be taken in there, and after a few months, or whenever time necessary, they should be allowed to go out, and their child be boarded out, so that they could go back to ordinary life?—They could not well go from the child.

20734. If they had to look after the child they could not get a good place?—They could scarcely leave the child until twelve months old, and they would have to remain in the home, and there would be a better opportunity of their keeping reformed.

20735. They might perhaps be better in a shorter time; they might more readily go back to ordinary life. However it is a matter for the judgment of the managers of the institution, I suppose?—Yes.

Mr. J. C. O'Brian, A.P., Chairman Lismore Rural District Council, examined.

Mr. J. C.
O'Brien.

20736. CHAIRMAN.—Were your views practically identical with those of the Board of Guardians?—I quite concurred with them.

20737. Do you not think Lismore should be broken up?—I do not.

20738. But you would be willing that these different classes—lunatics and mothers of illegitimate children and the children—should be put out?—Yes; I am in favour of that.

20739. Would you be in favour of a central pauper institution for aged and infirm if it were found more economical and better?—No; I don't think I would. I would rather keep the old and the infirm and the sick at Lismore.

20740. The whole of your union is in the County Waterford?—Yes.

20741. So that your Rural District is coterminous with the union?—Quite so.

20742. Except for the Urban District of Lismore?—Yes.

Mr. O'Gorman.—We have not an Urban Council in Lismore; we act under the Town Improvement Act.

20743. Is there anything you would like to mention?—No, there is nothing; we have gone through the query sheet, and the whole Board was in favour of the reply I have given.

20744. You seem to have been fairly unanimous, except on the question of chargeability; were you in the majority or minority?—I happened to be in the majority; there are a few of the burning element who are always very narrow against the town, and so pointed out where the injustice came to us under the Government grant, and we considered it was the fairest course, and our clerk also demonstrated and did his best to show what was the proper course.

20745. Still they held their opinions?—Yes; but the majority was against them. I happened to be at a meeting of the Town Commissioners yesterday, and this matter was discussed, and they were in favour of not amalgamating, fearing that part of our union perhaps might be amalgamated with Dungarvan and another portion with Fermoy, and taking the chargeability into account and the fair way we were opposed, and how economically it was worked, we decided against it. We have spent about £5,000 recently in construction and improvement, and extension up-to-date, so that we would not at all be pleased to amalgamate.

Mr. MAURICE HEALY, Clerk of the Lismore Union, examined.

Mr. Maurice
Healy.

20746. CHAIRMAN.—Was there anything you wish to add to the Guardians' evidence?—I don't know, except I would be in favour of a larger distribution of out-door relief. Instead of sending the aged and infirm to the central institution I would give them out-door relief.

20747. You really think it would be kinder and more economical?—I think it would be more humane and equally economical to retain them in their own unions and give them out-door relief.

20748. Do you see any safeguard as a security against over-expenditure?—On the whole, my experience is that the Guardians are very careful in the matter of expenditure, and they are not given to extravagance.

20749. There has not been any remarkable growth in the amount of out-door relief since the Local Government Act came into operation?—The number of aged and infirm is increasing, and there is a tendency to increase, and as the able-bodied people leave the country they leave behind their aged relatives. I think some little employment might be got for a large number of those; if they got a little out-door relief they could go and mind the children for their daughters and sons-in-law, and a small expenditure there would support them rather than send them up to the workhouse, where they are no use, and they idle their time.

20750. Mr. MAURICE HEALY.—You think they would be happier and better off in the country if they were more or less within their own districts, and the cost would not be more?—I don't think so.

20751. They would be satisfied with two or three shillings a week?—They don't get that. If out-door relief is given the contribution is rather small.

20752. CHAIRMAN.—Two shillings?—Not quite, on an average.

20753. One and sixpence?—Yes; if they should not supplement that by begging, and if they were sent out I think they ought to get enough to support them reasonably; I think 2s. 6d. would be ample, and not quite so much in some cases, because most of these people have some shopkeepers about the town partial to them, and they help them, giving them on occasional article of clothes and giving them something to support them.

20754. Mr. MAURICE HEALY.—In your own workhouse how would out-door relief on a wide scale work; are there many inmates at the present to whom out-door might safely be given?—They could all get out-door relief; there are a large number of aged and infirm people there.

20735. There are sixty on the infirm list?—Well, you know, if they were sent—some to their own friends at Oppenheim, and others to Tallow and Ballybeg.

20736. CHAIRMAN.—Are they chiefly from villages?—The towns supply a large amount, and I think all these children ought to be boarded out; I don't think they ought to be sent to a central institution at all. When these who are boarded out become of age they are absorbed into the rural population.

20737. They don't come back as paupers?—No; they support themselves fairly. These children boarded out in the country do not get as good a literary education as would be given in a school, but they become more self-reliant. I would not be in favour of giving these people trades at the expense of the ratepayers. I don't think it is suitable that the public should contribute to give them trades; they would be suited for the agricultural community; they are wanted there, and can get employment at any time; in fact the demand is greater than the supply, but I would not be in favour of sending children at all to a central institution; you would have the same disadvantages increased in extent.

20738. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you see any difficulty in carrying into practice the boarding-out of all supported children; for instance it has been said there would be a certain number for whom no homes could be found. Do you think that would occur?—I can only speak for Limerick; if the Guardians only increased by a small amount, which I really think they ought to do—made an increase in the annual payments—there would be no difficulty in getting homes; some of these people would find an extra £1 a year a magnificent sum; I think if they gave £10 a month and a suit of clothes, and they give a second pair of boots according to the first is worn out—the suit of clothes includes two inner garments, two pairs of socks, and only one coat, trousers, and vest.

20739. So you think if they would do that there would be no difficulty in providing homes for all the children of Limerick Union?—No, Sir. There are only eight of them at present boarded out. There were a large number, but the Lady Inspector who came down some time ago brought under notice what had escaped notice—that one or two of these cases were not legitimate cases for boarding out. They had the sanction of the Local Government Board, or thought they had, but she discovered the facts and made representations and induced the Guardians to take back those children; there were only two of them, but her report established the fact that a better class of nurses was desirable; in one case it was a woman who was herself getting out-door relief, who really was very kind to the children.

20740. She was a good foster mother?—She was.

20741. CHAIRMAN.—She could not give them milk?—She had contrived to give them milk, but some could be kinder, and when there was a probability of her being deprived of the child her Parish Priest wrote strongly in her favour, and said he had often seen the children, and they were well cared.

20742. Mr. MURKIN.—What would you do in the case of truants?—I declare I would be inclined to share the views of the Guardians that as far as possible they should be refused admission to the workhouse in nearly every case.

20743. Perhaps if the casual ward were closed and a penitentiary in its place the numbers would dwindle?—If they believed the law would enable the Guardians or police to send them to jail for a couple of months you would not have half of them coming around, and the people who do go round for these people who can very well afford to pay for their lodgings; there are three little towns—Limerick, Cappagh, and Tallow—and going from one place to another these fellows pick up more than is sufficient to lodge them, but I am bound to say the lodging-house business in a great number of places are not willing to give them lodgings.

20744. You think the short-service system contributes largely to the trouble?—The militia community contribute a great number to them, and the worst class of them. A master of a workhouse usually knows a ruffian when he goes to the workhouse, and I suppose they are the most regular customers the master has got. The ballad singers, however, are worse; they come with a woman—I suppose their wife—and a couple of children. They have an idea, some of them, that if they have a wife or a couple of children they will have a better time in the workhouse; it is not an unusual thing to pick up a woman and say "I will represent you as my wife," and then enter themselves on the books as being married—I don't mean to impute any immorality to them. The tramp mistresses could easily be exposed if they were given to understand that there was a law passed which gave the power of confining them; you would not have them then at all; some of these fellows pick up 15d. or 18d. a day in the course of their tramps through the towns; they have ample means to support themselves and pay for their lodgings.

20745. Could you give a suggestion as to what should be done in the case of unscrupled mothers?—I don't think I can. I must say we have not very many of these in Limerick.

20746. I think there were twelve in the workhouse about a month ago?—There are none like professional prostitutes, none of that class, but it is very difficult to deal with them. I can hardly make a judicious suggestion.

20747. CHAIRMAN.—Do you see any objection to the refuge idea—the Current of Good Shepherd for Catholic girls?—These places are more intended for professional prostitutes.

20748. Are there not some of these institutions that take first cases only?—I don't know, Sir.

20749. There are some institutions in the country that take first lapses only with a view to permanent reformation?—I think a poor girl that has had one illegitimate child can easily get employment again, and in a good many cases it is a sufficient lesson for her.

20750. Don't you know that in the workhouses, when a girl comes in to have a child, in the large number of cases that poor girl stays there, and perhaps goes out again and has another child?—That is, unfortunately, the case; but I really think the persons who are responsible for their fall should be punished. The present state of the law requiring corroborative evidence makes it impossible to convict.

20751. On the other hand you might make it too easy for them to impose penalties to any one they wish?—There is no doubt without credit; there are not many cases in which a girl would select a man who was not more or less responsible; I think the idea of requiring what is called corroborative evidence to the satisfaction of the County Court makes it impossible to prove, except perhaps one case in fifty. I don't think the Guardians succeed, although they have brought several cases.

Mr. O'CONNOR.—Two is all we succeeded in.

20752. Mr. MURKIN.—Could you suggest any improvement in the law?—Let the party who is accused prove that they are not responsible when the girl avers they are.

20753. CHAIRMAN.—And if he swore he was not you would let him off?—I suppose you must, but they would retire with additional crime and penalty on their head.

20754. Mr. MURKIN.—In any case you think something more is needed in order to bring home responsibility to the father?—I do; and the present requirement is a failure, because the offence is necessarily one committed in secret.

20755. Dr. HOSKIN.—Have you considered the question of providing for consumptive patients at all?—The Guardians in Limerick were in favour of having some central institution to which consumptives could be sent. I would be in favour myself of empowering the Guardians to send cases of ordinary delicate health that might develop into consumption to some well-ventilated place to give them a chance; if a doctor saw a patient was likely to develop into a consumptive, if he made recommendations to the Board of Guardians that the person be sent, supposing, to Youghal for a month or any other health resort, I think the Guardians might be empowered with advantage to avail of that discretion, and I think it would be a great charity; it might restore a man or a poor woman to their health.

20756. Quite so, but these that are already affected with consumption, would your district be willing to pay for their keep in a sanatorium?—Certainly.

20757. Or would you pay portion of the establishment charges, joining with other districts?—I don't think my board would handle at all about the cost. The general question of dealing with consumptives was considered, and what suggested itself to them was a sanatorium. If there was a building for their treatment in another union the Guardians at Limerick would have no hesitation in contributing what they thought fair. I think the restriction of out-door relief to the quarter-acre class is one that ought to be abolished. Cases of extreme hardship have occurred in Limerick where a man with a labourer's cottage and one acre was debarred from getting out-door relief—a most deserving case; so much so that the Guardians said if they were overhauled they would pay themselves.

20778 CHAIRMAN.—Would you put a limit at all, or simply repeal the section?—If it was easier to get it repealed I would get it repealed some way or other, but if Parliament would insist on some limit I would acquiesce, provided they enabled the occupants of labourers' cottages to get out-door relief in suitable cases.

Mr. Patrick
McCarthy.

20781 CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the Danganree Board of Guardians?—Yes, sir.

20782. What is your view as regards the Danganree Union; are you in favour of keeping it open or closing it?—I would be in favour of the Danganree Union being continued.

20783. As regards the unions on both sides?—They could be dispensed with.

20784. Kilmacshamus and Youghall?—Yes.

20785. If you dispensed with Youghall would you also dispense with Limerick?—Yes; I think Limerick and Cappoquin at both sides of Danganree could be dispensed with.

20786. Where would you put Limerick town?—I suppose that would be a matter of arrangement.

20787. How would you arrange it?—It is nearer to Fermoy than Danganree.

20788. Who would take from Cappoquin east, and let Fermoy take from that west?—Yes.

20789. What would you use these workhouses for?—I think as regards Kilmacshamus it might be rather late in the day now to speak of it, because there is great expense being incurred at present in extending the buildings of the lunatic asylum; it would be very useful for an auxiliary asylum, such as they have in Youghall.

20790. Have you any idea, as regards Limerick?—I take it that the hospital should be continued at Limerick.

20791. The fever hospital and the infirmary?—Yes.

20792. Then the rest of the buildings?—Perhaps it could be devoted to technical purposes.

20793. Or commercial?—There might be some industry started that the building could be utilised for. I may tell you that I did not weigh that point in my mind at all.

20794. About the disposition of the building?—Yes.

20795. It does not concern you so much because you propose your workhouse should be maintained, and it does not immediately concern you what is done with the outside unions?—Quite so.

20796. You answer queries 3 and 4 with a single affirmative, and say yes to all the questions. Is there anything you wish to add to that answer?—Well, with your experience, I prefer answering any questions you put to me on the spot.

20797. You don't require any additional hospital accommodation in your union?—I think not. Our medical officer is here and the clerk, and they will be more competent witnesses than myself.

20798. You have not used the hospital at the other side?—Not for a length of time.

20799. That was built originally for fever?—Quite so.

20800. I suppose it might be fitted up for fever again if it was needed?—That is the reason we kept it there.

20801. Dr. Brown.—There is a very nice fever hospital at the workhouse?—Oh, yes, lately built; good site, too. The establishment itself was built to accommodate 500 inmates, and there are now 200 in it at present, so there should be ample accommodation for an increased number of patients.

20802. CHAIRMAN.—You approve strongly of any

Mr. PATRICK MCCARTHY examined.

20779. At all events up to an Irish acre?—I think that might be.

20780. Mr. MURPHY.—In 1900 the Poor Law Relief Act removed that restriction as regards inmates and children?—And as regards maintenance in the workhouse too. However, the members of the Board of Guardians are sufficiently careful. I don't think they would abuse it if the restriction was altogether repealed. Certainly the occupants of labourers' cottages with their acre plot ought not to be debarred from getting outdoor relief when stricken down by sickness or accident; one poor man broke his leg, and the neighbouring friends had to contribute to the poor man's support.

person who is able to contribute or pay their cost being required to do it?—Certainly.

20803. You would be in favour of the governing bodies of hospitals throughout the country being given discretionary power to fix the amount and recover it at law?—Certainly.

20804. As regards tramps?—I would be in favour of a labour colony for tramps; it is a good idea, I think.

20805. That would be with a view to removing them altogether from the roads?—Yes.

20806. Take the whole class into street on an appointed day?—And they would pay for their own maintenance.

20807. In Belgium they are self-supporting, but one could hardly hope?—That they would do that here, though they might go a long way towards supporting themselves. There is a large tract of land acquired by Captain Stuart, and they could be set to work there planting trees, and there is a large building formerly intended for an industrial school that could be used for them.

20808. Is it not used now?—It is not; it is empty.

20809. As regards women that come into the workhouse to have illegitimate children?—I would be in favour of sending them after the first offence into a penitentiary, and while there they may earn perhaps as much as would partly pay for the maintenance of their illegitimate child.

20810. That is done now, I believe?—I would keep them there at all events for two years.

20811. I suppose you would let that depend on the discretion of the managers? It would depend on the disposition of the women; some women might be let out sooner than others?—That is quite so, but as things are at present it is really a great temptation to these poor women to go wrong when they have the workhouse as refuge to go into. If they knew they would not be received there they would mind themselves better.

20812. Are you in favour of the boarding out of children?—Certainly.

20813. You would rather have that than keep them in an institution?—Certainly. It is better for the children themselves and better for the community at large, because ultimately they become very useful when they are reared up and trained up in a country atmosphere. As a rule, not only is the air pure in one sense but it is also purer in a moral sense as compared with towns or large institutions, and they will turn themselves to anything they are asked in after-life; whereas, if you keep them in a union until twelve or fourteen years old, they are fit for nothing—they get discontented. If they go out to service they will return to the union again.

20814. You have noticed that?—Frequently. I took some children from the workhouse myself.

20815. To see how they would turn out?—Well, I took them to be useful.

20816. Were they satisfactory?—They were not; but I think the children who are sent out to nurse amongst poor people in the country, provided they are honest and decent, will ultimately be very useful members of society. They become good labourers after a time; they are willing to work.

Mr. DENIS RYAN examined.

20817. CHAIRMAN.—We have had the views of Mr. McCarthy. Have you heard a good deal of his evidence?—No, sir, I heard none of it. I regret I missed that.

20818. He went through the queries that your Board has answered. It will be unnecessary for us to go through them again, but if there was anything you wished specially to mention under any of these heads?—Personally I would be against amalgamation.

20819. Of your own union; but you were in favour of the amalgamation of other unions with yours?—No, sir, personally I would not be.

20820. You would let every union remain as it is?—I would.

Mr. Denis
Ryan.

20321. You are satisfied with the Poor Law and its administration at present?—As far as the Dungarvan Union is concerned, I am perfectly satisfied with it.

20322. You would not touch it elsewhere either?—I personally would not wish to search any of the unions outside with Dungarvan, for this reason, that I think it might not be to the advantage of the Dungarvan Union to have any of these other unions taken in and united with the Dungarvan Union.

20323. Are they troublesome lands outside?—Not exactly that, but the rates would be higher, I fancy, and that would raise ours. And if they would not be higher, if it would be an advantage to Dungarvan to take over some of these outlying unions, it would be a disadvantage to those people, and I would not willingly grow rich at the expense of my neighbours.

20324. You would not like to disturb the present financial balance?—No.

20325. That would put you against any change whatever in the Poor Law if you follow it out?—I don't think it would.

20326. Where money is involved?—Where money is involved, I believe it would.

20327. There are very few changes in which money is not involved?—Of course, money would be involved in almost every detail of the working, but there are certain changes I would wish to have made even in the Dungarvan Union.

20328. What are they?—First with reference to the boarded-out children. I would wish all the children in the house would be boarded out. I think it would be an advantage to the children themselves to have them away from the contamination of the union.

20329. Do you think they are better men and women in after-life if they have outdoor rearing up?—I think they are, and even if everything was not desirable in their rearing outside the union, yet it would be better than rearing them in the union. With regard to the mothers of illegitimate children, it would be better to send them to a penitentiary such as we have in Waterford at the expense of the union.

20330. That is for such a short time as would put them into a position to earn their livelihood again?—Yes, and being reformed under religious influences. With regard to tramps, I would have those who might be called professional tramps, who make it the object of their lives to tramp about from place to place, the only thing they do; I would have those sent to the institution suggested here already—a labour colony. Of course, there may be found amongst the tramps some men who deserve to be treated well—some men who have to go from place to place to seek employment, or go from a place where they have been employed and for some reasons have to be on the road for a short time—I would treat those as kindly as I could.

20331. You would like the relieving officer to be empowered by law to put them in a decent lodging-house, and give them a breakfast if they had satisfactory documentary evidence about them that they were bona-fide labouring men looking for a job?—Yes, or tramps; I would treat them very kindly.

20332. Mr. MURKIN.—Have you many tramps at Dungarvan?—We have not very many; we used to have a great number.

20333. Do they have women or children with them?—They do.

20334. What would you do with the women?—I suppose the women would require some place similar to the men—a labour colony, too.

20335. CHAIRMAN.—A different branch of the same institution?—A different branch of the same institution. Most of the children I would have taken from these people altogether. It is pitiable to see some of these children going about with their parents.

20336. Without any education, sex, or religion?—Some. They can be seen peeping from the union in the morning fairly well-off after the night. They are fat and somewhat clean, and they feel somewhat happy, but towards evening the change is most awful. It is a pity to see these little children dragged about like that.

20337. Mr. MURKIN.—When you take the children out of your workhouses and the unmarried mothers, would you not be aggravating the cost per head of the inmates by still retaining the staff, the house containing so much fewer inmates?—You would.

20338. How would you get over that?—You could not well get over that for the present. The treatment of the people would be better and wiser, I suppose.

20339. CHAIRMAN.—Worth the difference, I suppose?—I think it would.

20340. Mr. MURKIN.—How would it be improved? Do you not treat the sick well now?—The sick, undoubtedly, are treated well. The sick in Dungarvan Union are treated equal to if not better than in any union in Ireland.

20341. Then how could it be improved?—I think this gentleman and I are not exactly on the same point, I am referring to healthy people with children. This gentleman is referring to sick.

20342. You say you would not approve of amalgamation in the case of Dungarvan, but still you would approve of taking the twenty-one children you had there a month ago and boarding them out, and the eight mothers you had there a month ago and boarding them out. That is reducing the number in the house by thirty. When you do that and make no corresponding reduction in the staff, you only add to the cost instead of lowering it per head of the inmates. How would you get over that?

20343. CHAIRMAN.—You would diminish the total cost of money expended, although you might increase it per head on those that remained?—First of all, as far as the children are concerned, you dispense with the cost of the teacher. Of course, you would have to give superannuation, and the benefit would not be immediate; it would come later on. But with regard to the mothers and fathers of these children, it would be an improvement to them and the country generally that a reformation would take place, and the expenditure would be worth the cost.

20344. Mr. MURKIN.—I suppose, in addition to the unmarried mothers and the children, you would put out the eleven bastards you had there a month ago and send them to the asylum?—Yes, sir, but not to the asylum. Unfortunately the asylums we have at present are overcrowded. I would classify those people. There is a certain class even of these individuals who would, by proper treatment, be able to make themselves creditable somewhat.

20345. You don't think the workhouse is a good place for the lunatic class?—The workhouse at Dungarvan is not a good place. I would wish to say, too, that I would like to have Dungarvan made a centre for hospital treatment, because we have a very efficient staff for that purpose in Dungarvan.

20346. CHAIRMAN.—You are a centre for hospital treatment?—Only in so far as Dungarvan Union.

20347. You could not ask people to come greater distances than the length of the present Dungarvan Union. You would not like to bring the Waterford people there?—No, but there are others not in Waterford who might like to avail of it.

20348. You have got a very good area for the sick?—We have, but we have more facilities for the sick.

20349. If you leave Kilmacross and Lismore, how could you take their sick away from them?—You could not take them away, but you could have cases of operations carried on in Dungarvan.

20350. You think the Kilmacross and Lismore and Youghal people would send you their operation cases?—I think they would if they knew the advantages to be derived.

20351. Do you think they would not be likely to send them to the County Infirmary in Waterford?—We have not availed of the infirmary in Waterford sufficiently up to the present. I don't know why it is.

20352. Do you think you have an up-to-date hospital for major operations? Are you informed to that effect?—I am, and I believe it because the operations that have been carried on there for some time have been most successful, and the patients after operations are a very short time on hands in Dungarvan, so efficient is the staff of that department.

Mr. J. E. DOWEN, Clerk of the Dungarvan Union, examined.

20353. CHAIRMAN.—Is there anything else you would like to add to the evidence? We don't want to put you to opinions?—No, there is nothing I have to say.

I think the boarding-out system in our union has worked remarkably well; none of the children have ever come back.

Mr. J. E. DOWEN.

June 21, 1904.
Mr. J. E.
Down.

20354. Is the general impression that the boarding-out system works better than the home?—That would be my view based on experience.
20355. Have you seen the home children coming back again?—Sometimes.
20356. Coming back to be mothers—the girls?—In some cases; very few.
20357. Having been illegitimate children themselves?—Very few cases; but under the boarding-out system I have hardly ever seen them coming back.
20358. Have you ever seen them coming back?—One case.
20359. Under what circumstances did that case come back?—The party went away to America, and they came back to the home.

20360. Was the child of the Guardians' hands?—Yes.

20361. And the foster-parent went away to America?—The foster-parent died, and then the child came in.

20362. At what age was it boarded out?—Eight.

20363. At what age did it come in?—Twenty-four, I think.

20364. Were there any special circumstances in the case—a young man or a young woman?—A young woman.

Mr. WILLIAM STACK, J.P., examined.

Mr. William
Stack.

20365. CHAIRMAN.—You are Chairman of the Rural District Council of Dungarvan?—Yes.

20366. Are you a member of the Board of Guardians besides?—Yes.

20367. You have heard the evidence of the other gentlemen?—Yes, I have heard all the evidence.

20368. Is there anything you wish to add or qualify?—I am for amalgamation.

20369. What unions in the county would you amalgamate?—I think Lismore, Kilmacrossman, and Trough. I think one would be quite sufficient.

20370. You think Dungarvan and Waterford would be enough?—Quite enough, and even if you could do with one it would be much better; but I think Dungarvan, being a centre, must remain.

20371. Would you leave hospitals in all those places?—Certainly.

20372. But for the ordinary healthy inmates you would be quite satisfied if everything could be managed with only one union—Waterford?—I believe it.

20373. You think it would be more economical?—The more you take into a house the less expense of one kind.

20374. You looked into it, I suppose, from that point of view?—Yes, I have a pretty fair experience of things. Of course, I am not as well able to account for things as the gentlemen we have heard here, but I think one house would be quite sufficient in the centre of the county.

20375. And with Waterford you have rail from all the others for the able-bodied?—Yes.

20376. If you leave accommodation at each of those places for the sick, you think the county could get on well enough?—I believe so. I have always favoured the tramps.

20377. You have had a kindly feeling for them?—Yes, for if I take myself and the two gentlemen with you and you got stranded and had no money—

Mr. THOMAS POWERS, Dungarvan Urban Council, examined.

Mr. Thomas
Powers.

20381. CHAIRMAN.—Are the views of the Urban Council in favour of amalgamation?—They did not go into the matter as a body, but they referred the query alert to me and my colleagues to give evidence.

20382. What is your view?—I would leave Dungarvan open or close it. I would leave Dungarvan intact. When workhouses were established in 1841 or so, we had a population of 150,000 in the County Waterford. That population has gone down about 50 per cent. I therefore think on reasonable grounds, and in the interests of economy and efficiency, that the workhouses at present might be fairly reduced by half—that is, dissolve two and retain two.

20383. Which would you dissolve?—For the convenience and accommodation of the people that resort to them generally, I would say Waterford ought to stand, Dungarvan being the centre of the county ought to stand, Lismore and Kilmacrossman ought to be dissolved.

20384. Close up every second one?—Yes. I approve of what has been said with regard to the boarding-out system. And another matter that I would like to bring under your notice. Three years ago the County Council had a committee on the amalgamation of unions, and they went so far as having a report made out at that time, but the representatives of Kilmacrossman could not agree, and the committee dissolved. This (produced) is the report. I am in favour of a central sanatorium for consumptives in Munster.

20385. Or for each county as might be sufficient to require one?—Quite so. I would separate Cork County, as it has taken up the matter for its own area. I would have one for all the other counties in Munster.

Mr. CHARLES J. CURRAN examined.

Mr. Charles J.
Curran.

I am sorry I don't agree with my chairman as regards the treatment of tramps. I think I would agree more with your own suggestion that something should be done to put down the tramps.

20386. CHAIRMAN.—That is, tramps who are doing nothing else but tramping and don't intend to get work?—One way of doing away with tramps is to board out our children. I think a great many of the tramps on the roads are the children of workhouses.

20387. Do you think so?—I do.

20388. We have not heard that mentioned before?—I saw one or two that I knew before at the workhouse.

20389. And you have seen them come back as tramps?—No, but at one time I had six or seven at want boys from the union. I was a contractor for milk, and two or three of those boys went to England and joined their families, and some of them wrote asking me if I would pay their passage to Waterford, and they would come back and work, as they had lost their jobs and had nothing to do, so I assume they went on tramp in England. I think the other children in workhouses could not be boarded out. There should be some institution where they would be sent.

20890. That is the present race?—Yes.

20891. That would be a comparatively small number?—I think so.

20892. Just children between twelve and sixteen?—Yes, and there is an important question now with regard to rating. The chairman of our County Council suggested at the last meeting of the County Council that Clonmel No. 2 should be amalgamated with Dungarvan. The valuation of Clonmel No. 2 is only £14,000, and I think the rates there are pretty stiff, particularly the rural rates, and if that portion of the County Waterford was tacked on to Dungarvan with its small valuation and Clonmel No. 2, as a whole certainly the rates in Dungarvan would be raised considerably.

20893. You have a chain of hills between you and that district?—Most of the hills are in the Dungarvan district. Clonmel is a pretty important town, and we have half the mail-car road from Clonmel to Waterford in that £14,000 valuation. That one road is a heavy expense. That question of main roads—

20894. That is a little off our track?—Is there not a possibility that the whole district would be transferred?

20895. We are only dealing with it as a union. I

Dr. HACKETT examined.

20896. CHAIRMAN.—Now, we are not going to trouble you with any questions about amalgamation, but if you have any evidence you would like to give us about the hospitals and infirmaries?—I quite agree with having lunatics changed from the workhouse hospitals; it is not the proper place for them. Then it is very important that consumptives should be removed. It is not fair to themselves or the other patients.

20897. As far as your knowledge goes from private and public practice, is there much phthisis in this district?—Yes, a good deal. A great number come from time to time to the workhouse hospital, and of course you do no good for them.

20898. Have you observed at all whether the disease is fairly stationary or increasing?—I don't think it is increasing in my district.

20899. Is it largely confined to particular families?—I would not think that. What I wish to say is this, that I think the classification in workhouse hospitals at present is not good. You have the hospitals proper and infirm wards. Then in the infirm wards you have old people that are not able to take care of themselves, and they are not properly taken care of. They are under the matron and paupers. A great number of these inmates are helpless.

20900. Are any of them bedridden?—They are.

20901. And you have not space to take them into the hospital, or do you arrange them purposely?—I want exclude them.

20902. If you had room would you bring them in?—I think you should have a hospital proper, that is a hospital for the treatment of cases; then I think you should have a chronic hospital or infirmary for old people, people that simply require domestic care, and that would do very well under a Sister and attendants.

20903. What class of disease would you put under domestic care?—Senile cases—simply old people.

20904. People that could not attend themselves in any way?—Yes.

20905. Not requiring medical treatment, but requiring nursing—do you think they would not require more than that?—Very simple senile cases. If they had any disease like scrofula, they would be taken into the hospital.

20906. Is not this the very class of persons who would be liable to bed-sores?—If they are kept clean they would not.

20907. Do you think the ordinary domestic attendant would ever keep them clean?—I think she would. We have attendants in the hospital, and I think these atten the force of what you say?—With regard to the amalgamation of Kilmacshann, when the County Council first took off the committee of the County Council, three or four representatives, including myself, took up the question of amalgamating Kilmacshann for the purpose of an auxiliary asylum. We studied the question very carefully, but had to abandon the idea on the ground that we were starting a new building at the Waterford asylum for lunatics, and that the time was rather inopportune for the consideration of amalgamating it as an auxiliary asylum.

20908. Are you a member of the asylum committee?—Yes.

20909. For how many inmates is the new building intended?—Sixty females, and I think the same number of males—120.

20910. That would just take in the workhouse inmates. Was that what it was intended for?—Oh, no; it was intended for real lunatics, dangerous lunatics—that class that is growing.

20911. Where are they at present?—They are in the asylum at present; they have not enough room at all.

20912. They are overcrowded to the extent of 120?—The certified rooms in the asylum is for 450, and at present there are about 540 patients.

20913. Dr. BROOKS.—Then you will have no more additional accommodation there at all?—No additional accommodation.

20914. CHAIRMAN.—Do you know how much you are spending on the building?—The present contract is £10,000. We have taken up only one section of it. There are three or four sections—about £40,000.

20915. Dr. BROOKS.—The cases that are confined to bed continually would require some nursing to prevent bed-sores?—If they are kept clean and bathed.

20916. Well, that is nursing?—But it is not skilled nursing. You cannot get skilled nursing for that number of patients in Dungarvan. You would have sixty or eighty of that class.

20917. If you had this classification, would your fever hospital be large enough to accommodate all your acute cases?—It would.

20918. CHAIRMAN.—And you would rig up the Abbotside hospital for a fever hospital?—Yes.

20919. Dr. BROOKS.—Then you could separate the other cases. Would it tend to economy and efficiency?—It would not tend to economy. You would have two staffs.

20920. CHAIRMAN.—Did you not wish to have an acute staff?—Yes, but I have that in the lower wards. I would have that block for acute cases. I would have the upper block for the chronic cases.

20921. You would have two staffs still. You would have your staff for the acute, and call them what you will, domestic attendants. You would have your second staff there?—Yes, but the chronic hospital would be in connection with the acute one, and I could take my cases up and down as I thought necessary.

20922. Would not that be equally so with the present fever hospital?—It would, but then I have quite room enough where I am for the acute hospital, and for the chronic.

20923. You would not have as good classification if you had them in a separate building?—They are separate buildings practically; you have a yard between.

20924. Dr. BROOKS.—They are not so well cut off as in the other building, but would it not be much better for people of a class above what you have at present?—It would, but at present they come in freely to the Dungarvan hospital.

20925. CHAIRMAN.—You don't notice any prejudice against it?—No, that prejudice is dying out.

20926. Dr. BROOKS.—Do many paying patients go in?—A good number.

20927. Is that class increasing?—Very much.

20928. We have heard you did a large number of operations?—A great number.

- June 21, 1904.
Dr. Hackett.
200329. What about the assistance in nursing these cases?—They are nursed by Sisters, and I am very pleased with the way they are nursed.
200330. I am talking about the medical and surgical cases—I get in the local men. I am perfectly satisfied with the nursing in the hospital.
200331. CHAIRMAN.—Are you satisfied with the conditions under which you operate?—If I had an operating room it would be very much more convenient.
200332. You would not go as far as the Guardians who said the present conditions were entirely up-to-date for surgical operations?—I think it is if I am to judge by results. We practically never see a case of sepsis.
200333. Are the conditions sought?—They are not up-to-date. I have two small wards and I operate there and keep the patient there for two or three days and put him into the other wards.
200334. Ordinary rooms and ordinary furniture?—Yes.
200335. Ordinary window light?—Yes, but I have got light in the ceiling.
200336. Dr. BROWN.—You do have some supposition?—Practically none. I was very sorry I did not meet you at Dungarvan and show you the shape of some important cases. The results are excellent as to the healing of wounds.
200337. Still, would you not like to have things that there would not be the risk. You cannot say that your arrangements are up-to-date; there is always a - risk?—I think if you take the ordinary precautions, I don't know. I think our arrangements are very good there. You cannot sterilise the walls.

200338. Or the air?—If you take other precautions as to your instruments and hands, I think—200339. CHAIRMAN.—You would avoid a good deal of danger, but not all?—Not all. If there was an operating room built there, but you cannot do that, because you could not have one operating room for the two sides, because the convent comes between.
200340. How many beds would the upper hospital contain?—Thirty.
200341. How many acute cases would you have altogether?—Twenty or forty sometimes.
200342. There was not anything like that when we were there?—But you must remember this is common.
200343. What is your total number of cases?—It would average 100 or 150.
200344. We have the census for one of the fullest weeks in the year, and you have 115?—At present I have seventy. There are a good many of those that don't require treatment practically, but if I put them out, they would be put into the infirm wards.
200345. Dr. BROWN.—And you have no nursing there or supervision, and for that reason you have to keep them in your sick ward?—Yes.
200346. You did try to get some of these out?—Yes, and they came back again. You send them out for a week and they come back practically dying.

Mr. DAVID GLANCEY, Chairman, Kilmacshamus Union, examined.

- Mr. David Glancey.
200347. CHAIRMAN.—Are you in favour of the maintenance of Kilmacshamus?—Yes, sir.
200348. Is your Board practically unanimous on that question?—Yes, sir.
200349. If the hospital were left there, and if it were shown to you that a good deal of economy would result from transferring the rest of the inmates elsewhere, do you think you and your colleagues would approve of such a change?—I think so; I would.
200350. You would be willing to have the transfer if the sick wards were left and you could be shown a distinct economy by the change?—Yes, but there is one thing that I would like to have clearly pointed out to me. Those gentlemen who have spoken to-day in favour of having Kilmacshamus amalgamated with Waterford and Dungarvan did not give us any idea at all whether it would be for the benefit of the sick poor of Kilmacshamus or the ratepayers. These were the two points we went on. I hold a Guardian's first duty is to look after the poor. I don't think Captain Coughlan gave you any reasons or proved to you conclusively that it would be for the benefit of the sick poor of Kilmacshamus to be sent to Waterford or Dungarvan. I hold myself it would not, and we discussed the thing between us, and I am under the impression it would be the greatest inconvenience to them to have them removed from Kilmacshamus.
200351. I don't think anyone proposed that the sick wards should be disturbed in Kilmacshamus?—Captain Coughlan did.
200352. As regards tramps, have you many of them?—We have a great many of them, sir; I won't go into statistics at all.
200353. Would you be disposed to take strong steps with them, such as putting any men who would not give an account of themselves into a workhouse—call it a labour colony or whatever you like?—A labour colony by all means.
200354. Take their children from them and board them out?—I don't know about the children; I would not give an opinion about that.

Mr. MICHAEL BYRNE, Vice-Chairman, Kilmacshamus Union, examined.

- Mr. Michael Byrne.
200355. CHAIRMAN.—What is your view? Do you agree with the chairman pretty well, or is there any point in which you differ from him?—I don't think there is any point on which I differ from the chairman of the Board of Guardians. I don't believe in amalgamation from any point of view. As regards the tramp question, I think this business should be left in the hands of the police.
200356. That would necessarily be the case if it were made a labour colony business?—The population of our union is about 7,000, with 50,000 acres of land, and I would like to say that I and my colleagues representing the Kilmacshamus Union here to-day did not come made up in any kind of energetic body, but merely to try and improve our town in any shape or form, and what we said in the boardroom when looking at these queries that you sent down we are going to say the same to-day. Probably the matter may not have escaped your notice any more than mine.

—Are you in favour of amalgamation? Yes, if you don't amalgamate my own union." We know our union is a great accommodation to the poor people, after the lapse of the mines in Barmahall brought a great many chronic cases into our hospital. We find our sick poor are very well done for there, and on several occasions, as a member of the committee, I turned back and asked some of these poor people had they any complaints, after the committee left the room, and they always told me they had not. As regards the two classes of children, we have only one boarded out, because Miss Fitzgerald Kerney was sent round by the Local Government Board, and her report of the children was not very satisfactory at all.

20965. On the child?—More especially on the hired-out children; she had not much to say on the boarded-out child. The Board would be in favour of boarding out the children instead of hiring out, but the fact of the matter is we know from our experience that for the small amount that is paid during the year, which does not amount to more than 2s. or 2s. 6d. per week, you won't get anybody to take proper care of the children.

20966. You would be rather in favour of increasing the amount?—Of keeping the child. I find from the report of the religious inspector and of the Local Government inspectors that the school children are doing very well. I find so myself. It fits them to be very good children, and I find some that have gone out not to be so well done for. Seven children left us about May last, and they are all nice little boys, all earning their bread. I would not be at all in favour of keeping such children as those in, but from the treatment I did see of the boarded-out children I would prefer keeping them in, but if they were any way well done for I would be in favour of boarding them out.

Mr. T. F. Walsh, Clerk.—The Chairman and Vice-Chairman of the District Council are here.

June 21, 1894.

Mr. Michael Hyman.

Mr. JOHN KIRKNEY examined.

I agree with what has been said by the others. As to the tramps, I would be in favour of having them sent to colonies.

Mr. Walsh.—Captain Conaghan, when giving evidence, spoke of the amount of land that is round Kilmacshamus Workhouse.

CHAIRMAN.—You may remember we went over it very carefully with the master.

Mr. John Kirkney.

Mr. Mackey, Clerk of the Union, Waterford.—The Board of Guardians named Mr. Murphy, and Mr. Murphy said he had no evidence to tender.

Mr. JAMES MURPHY examined.

I have no evidence to give, but only, if you allow me, to give my opinion. I am only a short time a Guardian. I cannot see any benefit by amalgamating Waterford with any other union. There were close on a thousand inmates in the workhouse last winter—most part of them are in the healthy portion of the house—and consequently I cannot see how it would be any advantage to the ratepayers and poor to amalgamate the place; in other words, there would have to be additional buildings; there are some already in contemplation.

20965. CHAIRMAN.—You did not go into figures?—If the law could be altered in this way, that the Guardians should have power—because these able-bodied people make it a constant practice of coming into the Waterford Union—if we had power to judge for ourselves the persons who should be admitted and discharged, and give the same power to the relieving officers, so that they would not have blame. This is the way the danger comes in, if he refused a ticket the relieving officer would be brought up. A great many of these people are tramps. They don't belong to the county or city at all. If you could make any alteration in the law that way.

20966. To enlarge your discretion?—Yes; but I cannot see any other way. Waterford Union is in the most perfect order, and I cannot see a benefit to the ratepayers or the poor by amalgamating. I hope you will concur with my views on that subject.

20967. If it were shown clearly that some financial benefit would result, then you would be prepared to reconsider the matter?—Of course I would, but I cannot see how there could be anything in that way done at present, at all events. About these illegitimate children, that is another thing I brought forward myself, but they seem to tell me it could not be done; but I know it is done in England; the putative father can be found out in many instances.

20968. Would you be in favour of making the law the same here as in England?—Undoubtedly; it prevents this demonstration in a great many districts in England. And especially in Ireland, where we are looked upon as one of the most moral countries in the world, it ought to be stopped. That is my opinion, and I think I am right too.

20969. I think every one would agree with your motive at all events?—Yes, it is not hard to be done; it is done in England, and Scotland, and Wales, and according to the means of the reputed father he has to pay. Then there won't be so many; but when they are shielded here it more encourages them than anything else—examining in the union and going out and coming in with another child. That work is not right; it should be ended.

Mr. James Murphy.

Mr. DAVID HYLAND, Chairman, Waterford Union, examined.

20970. CHAIRMAN.—You were kind enough to give me a statement here, which we will have on the notes?—From my experience as a Guardian of the Waterford Union for the past twelve years, I am of opinion in advantage, from a ratepayer's point of view, not in the interest of the aged destitute poor, will accrue from amalgamation of workhouses in this district. Old people do not wish to be brought long distances from their native localities. Being obliged to enter the workhouse is sufficiently humiliating to them, without adding to it by placing them beyond the reach of a visit from their relations or their friends. With regard to the children in workhouses, I believe no institution, no matter how well managed, can compensate for the loss of home associations, such as the nursing-out system secures. The Guardians of the Waterford Union have unanimously approved of this system and adopted it as far as possible. I am of opinion that same discipline should be kept apart from the inmates. The tramp nuisance requires to be vigorously dealt with. The demand for manual labour at the present day leaves no excuse for any able-bodied man or woman to remain idle. I certainly approve of a penal colony or reformatory for such people.

20971. You think it would be a hardship on the poor to be brought from their former home and neighbourhood?—I do.

Mr. David Hyland.

20972. That is necessary, even in the present system in a very large number of the cases where people go to workhouses. For instance, take Kilmacshamus. There are a very large number of people in the Kilmacshamus Union who come from a long distance from Kilmacshamus. They would have to come further if they came to Waterford. You would be against that?—I would, that they would be obliged to enter workhouses in remote parts of the country.

20973. Would you be in favour of an extension of the nursing-out system so as to enable you to board out all children that are in your charge as far as possible?—Really, I would.

Mr. Mackey.—Our difficulty is not in the matter of approving of the system of boarding out, but our difficulty is getting suitable foster-parents. We cannot get them.

20974. CHAIRMAN.—What is the amount you give?—Mr. Mackey.—Practically the same as the other Boards.—3s. a week.

20975. You have thirty boarded out at present?

4 X 2

June 21, 1904.
Mr. David Hyland.

Mr. Mosley.—Twenty. I have written to every parish priest within the limits of the union asking him to assist us in the way of recommending suitable foster-parents. We have advertised over and over. No person in occupation of land of any quantity, personally speaking, will apply for these children at all. 20075. It would be more economical to give a larger sum?

Mr. Mosley.—Those who apply at present apply for the sake of what they make of the children, either money earning or utilizing their labour.

Chairman.—No one will take them except very poor people.

20077. What would you do with the tramps? Would you approve of the labour colony idea?—I have mentioned that. I would approve of something where they would be made work, because they go from union to union.

20078. Without giving it a name, you would approve of some such system?—Yes, they go from union to union and are the terror of the people of the country, and they won't work.

20079. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you think the sentiment of the country would approve of any steps so advanced as to send people to a colony of the kind without having committed any offence?—Well, I would like really to have them compelled so as to make them work, something that would get them out of the lazy habit of leeching from union to union.

20080. If there was a county workhouse where those people could get employment and pay and make them go there?—I don't know how you would manage to get them to pay—how could you make their labour pay.

20081. If they are strong men they could do some work, and surely a day of the work would bring in some pay?—I am afraid it would be a loss to the management.

20082. Is it not a loss at present?—I am afraid it would be adding to the loss; it is so hard to make them work.

20083. If you send them to the colony would it not be the same thing?

Chairman.—It would, but you would take them off finally?—Yes, take them off finally. I would be anxious even to have a loss if we could train them and educate them into the habit of working. Of course, there is labour enough in the country if they could be made to do it.

20084. There is plenty of employment for them if they would take it, but they are not disposed to work?—No, they don't believe in doing anything. Even in Waterford Union we had to increase the rate this year on account of the amount of able-bodied men going through the country—those tramps.

20085. Are you a member of the Corporation also?

20086. Have the Corporation discussed this matter at all?—No, they have not.

20087. They are not giving any opinion on the matter?—No, no opinion whatever. This does not interfere with the Corporation very much. It is more for the unions.

20088. It is altogether, except as a public body, they might have an opinion?—They have not offered any opinion.

Miss Thomas examined.

Miss Thomas.

20089. Dr. BROOKER.—You have had a large experience of the nursing of the sick in workhouse infirmaries. Would you explain to us the system in the Waterford Workhouse?—It is now done under the nurse, who have a set of probationers working under them.

20090. CHAIRMAN.—You are the training sister?—Yes.

20091. You work in conjunction with the county infirmary, the old leper hospital?—Yes.

20092. And your probationers are interchangeable?—Yes, our probationers go to them for six months and then come to us for six months.

20093. What is the period of training for your probationers?—Two years.

20094. Then they have lectures and examinations?—Yes, at the end of the time.

20095. Have you turned out any after a two years' training?—No, the two years will not be up until the end of September.

20096. So you cannot give us the result of your first examination yet?—No.

20097. Dr. BROOKER.—In connection with the county infirmary, you have trained a number of other nurses also?—Yes.

20098. Does the system work very well?—It works excellently.

20099. You have no friction whatever?—No friction at all.

21000. Do the governors of the county infirmary look upon it with favour?—I think so.

21001. Do you know if it is inclined to increase the number of probationers seeking appointments—the fact that they can get the certificate of a fully-trained nurse?—I think it does.

21002. What class of young girls are applying?—Mostly farmers' daughters.

21003. Are they fairly well educated?—They have to pass a preliminary examination before they are accepted.

21004. Is that fairly stiff?—Fair.

21005. CHAIRMAN.—After September next, about how many a year will you turn out? Will you certify each year? What is your total number?—Fourteen.

21006. Will you turn out fourteen a year?—No, seven a year.

21007. You will finish seven next September and each succeeding September unless there are cases where a girl may leave her work?—We shall not finish seven next September, because we have two or three who were qualified nurses. They had an examination in the first year.

21008. Dr. BROOKER.—In fact, that will suit you better because it brings in applicants at different times?—Yes, but we have had no more applications.

21009. CHAIRMAN.—Seven a year you will turn out?—Yes, that is supposing nothing happens to take them away from their work.

21010. Mr. MURKIN.—Are there many applications?—Not a great many, but quite enough.

21011. Dr. BROOKER.—What are the terms under which they serve?—They receive no payment at all.

21012. CHAIRMAN.—Neither year?—No.

21013. Do they make any payment on coming in?—No, they find their own uniforms.

21014. And they get their food?—Their food and their lodgings. They get everything found for them.

21015. And you have taken a nice house for them?—We have a nice house.

21016. Dr. BROOKER.—The Guardians practically get two years' service and those fourteen probationers for nothing, but the cost of their food?—Yes, and the extra training. You have to pay for their lectures.

21017. They have nothing to give them in the way of salaries at all, and they get the services of fourteen very competent young ladies?—They are fairly competent after a time. At first they are not very much so.

21018. You don't take in too many at any one time, do you get a number that are fairly well trained?—Half of them are very useful.

21019. Do you think that would be a good system if it could be extended to other workhouses?—I do.

21020. Have you much experience of other workhouses?—I have been in certain workhouses, but have not studied any time in any of them.

21021. CHAIRMAN.—Have you been in Limerick?—No.

21022. Or Galway?—No, I have been in Dungannon, Kilmacshannon, and Wexford.

21023. You consider it a very great advantage to have a county infirmary in conjunction with the workhouse?—Well, I would rather have the nurses all trained in the one institution.

21024. But they will get there the experience they could not get at an ordinary workhouse?—Yes, but I think it would make a better training school to have one of the large workhouse infirmaries which would fulfil all the conditions necessary.

21025. Where they would have operations?—Yes, and a resident medical officer. I think that would make a still better training school than having the two.

June 21, 1904

Miss Thomas.

21035. But where you cannot get that?—The other is a very good substitute.

21037. Dr. BIGGER.—That would only apply to five of our workhouses in Ireland?—There would be Limerick, Dublin, and Cork.

21038. There is no training in Limerick. There would not be more than five or six. You see, there is an interchange, and the girls must get a very large amount of experience in the county infirmary in the way of operations?—Yes, which they could not possibly have in the workhouse.

21039. CHAIRMAN.—And they see the ways of a large number of doctors and surgeons, so that they are not trained altogether on one gentleman's practice?—But it unites them every time they make a change.

21040. Slightly?—That is the one disadvantage.

21041. What do they do for fever?—We have no nursing in fever.

21042. Dr. BIGGER.—Could you get the same advantage at the county infirmary in the way of fever nursing? They send their nurses to Liverpool?—I know they do, but they keep their nurses for three years, and then I think they have to pay something for sending them; but it is an advantage to them if they keep them for use for private work in connection with their hospital.

21043. They are called upon so much to nurse fever. It is essential they should be trained in fever?—And the advantage would be only to the nurses, not to the union, if they were trained in fever.

21044. Are you not able to give them training to some extent by the connection with the fever hospital?—They have not had enough cases there.

21045. CHAIRMAN.—Is there a trained fever nurse at present?—No, there is not.

21046. Dr. BIGGER.—Does the system of having probationers on duty and doing nursing in the wards under the men in charge work very well?—Very well indeed. She acts as a sort of Sister, the same way as in St. Vincent's or the Mater. She is responsible for her time as many patients as the nurse.

21047. And therefore she just supervises?—She supervises.

21048. And the probationers do the work?—Yes.

21049. Do you go round and instruct them at the bedside?—I do.

21050. All through the hospital?—All through the hospital.

21051. You have no restrictions at all?—No restrictions.

21052. I mean to say at any time or in a severe case, and can you change the nurse from one portion of the infirmary to another, according to the class of disease?—Yes.

21053. CHAIRMAN.—Are they put on night duty in their first year?—Yes, after they have been there three months sometimes.

21054. Dr. BIGGER.—You would not do it if you could help it?—As a rule I like to leave it a little longer.

21055. As a rule do they get good appointments on leaving the infirmary?—Three or four have had appointments—two in Cork, one in Rathkeale, and one is nursing in the union at present.

21056. I suppose you are a firm believer in the efficiency of training them in the way of nursing?—Yes.

21057. CHAIRMAN.—Does anything occur to you that you would like to say?—Nothing that has not been already said except that I think it would be a very good thing to discontinue the hospital from the house. Take away the name of the workhouse hospital.

21058. Dr. BIGGER.—Do you find some patients dislike the idea of coming into the workhouse?—Yes, and I think it would be better for the nurses, too.

21059. CHAIRMAN.—Have you ever had any experience of district nursing?—Very little; I have never done any district nursing.

21060. Have you seen anything of the homes of the poor in Waterford Union?—Not in Waterford; I have in Kilkenny.

21061. What did you find where there was sickness in the homes? Did you find the homes fairly sanitary?—Some of them were not very.

21062. Were there many one-roomed dwelling-houses?—Generally two, I think.

21063. Would that be in the city?—No, in the country near Castlecomer.

21064. Have you had any experience at all of any of the Irish towns or cities?—No, I have not.

The Sitting terminated.

June 22, 1904

FORTY-SECOND PUBLIC SITTING.—WEDNESDAY, JUNE 22nd, 1904.

At the Courthouse, Clonmel.

Present:—Mr. WICKS (Chairman), Mr. MURNAGHAN, and Dr. COFFY BROSSE.

Dr. J. F. O'BRYEN EXAMINED.

Dr. J. F.
O'BRYEN.

22055. CHAIRMAN.—You have been deputed to represent the County Council?—Yes, sir.

22056. Have you your own notes?—No, I have no copy of them.

22057. You mentioned there are nine unions in the County Tipperary?—Yes.

22058. What are the views of the County Council as to whether these unions should be reduced in number or not?—I don't think that they went largely into the question at any meeting, but there was a conference that was attended by members deputed by the County Council the year before, and members representing the rural districts, or some of them, in the unions; no definite conclusion was come to. Of course there was a difficulty in the way that the local men wished to preserve their unions as a rule, but I understand that, generally, their views were in accordance with ours, because I had previously given my views more than once, and in appointing me they for the most part adopted the views I put forward. The resolution adopted by the two County Councils was—"That the representatives appointed by the North and South Tipperary County Councils are of opinion that the principle of amalgamation should be carried out having regard to the unions of the entire county."

22059. In some of the papers I read—I don't know whether it was your view or not—one statement was made that three unions would be sufficient?—That was my opinion, and I think that originated with me.

22060. Clonmel was one of the unions?—Clonmel was one of them, on account of its position.

22061. The second?—Thurles, and the third Nenagh. They are almost equi-distant, and they are in very nearly a straight line across the county. There is a drawback in the case of Nenagh that it has practically no communication from the South, except a very roundabout one.

22062. How would you apportion the various unions. I suppose Carrick-on-Suir and Clongheen into Clonmel?—Yes; there is only a small part of the Carrick-on-Suir Union in this county, a valuation of about £20,000 odd.

22063. Did you contemplate the closing up of that workhouse?—Closing it up as a workhouse unless it served as a workhouse for part of Kilkenny or Waterford.

22064. I suppose you contemplate leaving some place there for the treatment of the sick?—I think they made Carrick into a district hospital some time ago.

22065. Do you think the entire workhouse might be closed at Carrick, and no hardship would result to the sick of Carrick and the district if they had to go either to Clonmel or Waterford?—I think there would be no hardship in it.

22066. What would the distance be?—About fourteen miles to Waterford, and about the same or a little less to Clonmel.

22067. And you think that really the entire establishment at Carrick-on-Suir might be closed?—I think so; certainly as regards the County Tipperary.

22068. There is a fever hospital there. What would you do with that?—I think fever hospitals, if not utilized for any of the other purposes, ought to be maintained in suitable situations. I cannot speak, of course, with regard to the accommodation, whether there is a fever hospital within sufficiently easy reach of Carrick on the other side; that is to say in the part of the County Kilkenny which is within two miles of it, or Waterford, which is across the river.

22069. The nearest union to Carrick on the Kilkenny side would be—?—Kilkenny itself, I think, comes down very close to it. Thomastown is in Kilkenny.

22070. Callan would be the nearest?—Callan is one of those which is partly in the County Kilkenny and partly in the County Tipperary.

22071. That raises the question, did the County Council consider that the entire county of Tipperary should be self-contained and exclusive for Poor Law purposes?—I think that was the view, and with regard to that union, the portion of the County Tipperary that is in it is practically cut off by a chain of mountains from the Kilkenny side.

22072. So you would give up to Waterford the parts of Clonmel and Carrick that are in Waterford?—Oh, certainly.

22073. But you would take them the parts of Callan and other unions that are in Tipperary?—Yes, of course. There is another question later on, which might supply the answer to that, that is the presence of certain unions or portions of counties. In that case, of course, half of the County Waterford might be served by Clonmel Union.

22074. Did you go on the lines of dealing with the Poor Law according to counties or unions?—According to counties, if even a larger area could not be established.

22075. You make a statement that all the workhouses should be utilized; that that is the root of the matter, and the source of local opposition, so that wherever you would close a workhouse you would turn it to some useful purpose?—Yes, I think there is scope for that all.

22076. What would you do with the various workhouses?—I suggested Clongheen as one suited for an industrial school.

22077. That would not be under the Poor Law?—No, perhaps not, but these unions were grouped in the County Kilkenny for that purpose.

22078. That was for a Poor Law school?—Yes, I meant under the Poor Law.

22079. Have you considered the relative advantage of such an institution system of bringing up children, as compared with boarding out?—I have not compared it with or set it against boarding out; if boarding out could be carried out on a thorough scale, I think it would be more advantageous, but boarding out is not resorted to to any great extent.

22080. It is increasing very largely, I suppose you are aware?—In some places I believe it is, and in other I think it is rather dropping back.

22081. We have had almost universally evidence given to us in favour of the boarding-out system as opposed to the system of bringing up children in institutions?—I prefer the boarding-out system, of course very much if proper houses could be got, and I expect labourers' cottages, but I don't know that that has ever been tried.

22082. It has, but it is hardly an ideal place to put a child, where it cannot get a certain supply of milk, for instance?—In many of them they have quite a sufficient supply of milk; in point of fact I think the labourers' cottages, the condition of the people in them, and their general tone and standing, has been very much improved. I have been lately doing dispensary duty in the west of the county—the Ennis district—which brought me into a great many of those cottages, and I think the people are becoming improved very much.

22083. They are getting more employment?—Not only that, but they are getting to have a better feeling, and the building of cottages has had the effect it was intended to produce, and therefore they would be suited for children.

22084. The Guardians nearly all represented to us the desirableness of having additional powers given to them to board out. At present they can only board out orphans and deserted children that come to their charge, or to have a discretion of doing so, at all events—I am very much in favour of it. I think the workhouse is very undesirable.

21285. One of those workhouses you would like to turn into a house for a home for aged people?—One of last.

21286. You suggest Tipperary would make a good centre for a hospital?—Yes, because it has been more improved in that respect than, I think, any other. I have been in most of the union workhouses in the county, almost all but two, though not of late years so much as formerly, but I am of opinion that the Tipperary hospital is very superior to any other I know.

21287. Except Clonmel and all the others that are left?—I would retain Clonmel as a workhouse, not as a hospital.

21288. Of course the hospital would remain still, could it not. There would be a place for treating the sick in such a town as Clonmel. You would not oblige the people of Clonmel to go to Tipperary to be treated for their diseases?—I think that would be minimised as much as possible.

21289. You mean you would send as many as possible?—As many as possible. I don't see the advantage of keeping up any one place as a district hospital if the other hospitals are to be kept up.

21290. That is rather an unusual view to get. Nearly all the witnesses think that in each place a small hospital for acute cases ought to remain?—I don't take exception to that view either; it was on that ground I mentioned the possible retention of the fever hospital at Carrick, that some small accommodation must be provided for acute cases or persons seriously injured. But I refer now to the cases of those chronically sick. Of course the actual practice is that persons remain so long in their homes; it is difficult to get them to go into hospital, and if they were removed somewhat earlier they would bear the journey better, even if it appeared to be a little longer. In Tipperary they have two very fine ambulances, and the distance of the furthest part of the union is sixteen or seventeen Irish miles at present, and no place almost would be further by road than that.

21291. Under your contemplated system you would have a workhouse at Clonmel, another at Thurles, and another at Nenagh; into these buildings you would receive pretty much all the present class of inmates that go, would you?—Of course the view I take is that the number of paupers should be diminished as much as possible. I mean the class of people who prefer to go into a workhouse and spend their lives there rather than do any work outside.

21292. There are hardly any able-bodied people in all Ireland in workhouses?—I am afraid there are a good many.

21293. We have the numbers here in every workhouse, and the total is very small?—I am not sure I rely entirely on those figures, because I think a great many people are retained who are able-bodied and ought to be out of the workhouses.

21294. They would be very old?—Not very old at all. I think the number is rather understated for various reasons.

21295. I think you may rely on those figures, that there are about 4,000 able-bodied in all the workhouses, and that includes the large cities of Dublin, Belfast, Cork, and Limerick?—I am still inclined to believe that there are a great many more who are perfectly competent to work, and any man going into any workhouse can see them there in numbers.

21296. We have done that in all the workhouses up to the present in twenty-three counties, and we find the number of able-bodied, properly so-called, are very few?—Then I will say no more on that.

21297. But that is apart from the question we are discussing, that is, you would receive into these workhouses pretty well all the classes that now go in?—Yes.

21298. There is an alternative suggestion made to us that instead of trying to amalgamate unions and continue the same classification in any workhouse, that we should instead recommend taking as many classes out of the workhouses as possible, and disposing of them elsewhere?—That is in my view with regard to old people.

21299. You would like one workhouse, say, for the county?—Yes.

21300. Supposing you took a workhouse, we will say as we have been, supposing you took Clonmel for all the aged and infirm of the county or of the South Riding?—In mentioning Clonmel, Thurles, and Nenagh I merely mentioned those that appeared to be particularly well situated. I have no very strong view.

21301. It was the railway lines of communication that suggested themselves to you?—Yes. I have a return showing the amount of accommodation, prepared some years ago. I was a member of a committee appointed by the General Council, of which Sir Thomas Stansfeld is chairman. This return was made out by Mr. Donoghue, of Ennisceorthy. It shows that Thurles was built to contain over a thousand. At that day they were more tightly packed than they are now, and that it would contain as many inmates as there are in the entire county at present.

21302. If we go through that process of exclusion for a minute and take all the classes in the workhouse. We spoke just now of children?—I would take them out altogether, and all that could not be boarded out should be put into schools such as I spoke of.

21303. As a medical man, what do you think of the policy of keeping lunatics and mental cases in workhouses?—I am opposed to it very much indeed.

21304. You would approve of removing them to an asylum or auxiliary asylum?—To an auxiliary asylum. I think there are also in the lunatic asylum a large number who might very well be sent there, thus diminishing the expense. The expense for auxiliary asylums is calculated at 2s. 6d. per head, the capitation grant being 2s.; and the expense in the Clonmel Asylum is 12s. or 11s. 6d.

21305. That is under all heads and without allowing for the sum refunded from the Government?—That is the total, and the Government grant is 4s. out of that; so that it is 7s. or 7s. 6d.

21306. Did you ever calculate the cost of a lunatic in the workhouse?—Not as they are at present.

21307. Because the difference would be very small as compared with the lunatic asylum, when you take into consideration the grant. The lunatic asylum charge is made up by taking the entire expenditure and dividing the number of patients into it?—Yes, including the loans.

21308. The only thing given in the 'Guardian's' return is the cost of the food, and it does not include salaries or establishment charges, which are included in the lunatic asylum returns, so if you take all into consideration, including the grant from the Government, you will find that the lunatics in the workhouse cost very nearly as much as in the asylum?—No, but I look upon it that the workhouse is not a proper place for them; the cost I have not considered at all.

21309. But as a reliever you would like to have them as economically treated as could be done with reason and efficiency?—Yes.

21310. Then the lunatics would go?—I think you would require two workhouses to provide accommodation for the number. There are about 250 in the various workhouses in the county, and there are certainly nearly 200 in the asylum here who could be put out, and they would require the accommodation of two workhouses.

21311. Would the asylum here hold the additional 250 that are in the workhouses?—No, it is overcrowded at present. I am on the asylum committee here, and we have plans for building three additional blocks—two of them as hospital blocks undoubtedly, but still to give further accommodation. There is no doubt that if matters go on as they are there will require to be very large additional buildings.

21312. A third class are criminals and tramps?—My opinion, derived from experience from travelling about a good deal, is that a tramp does not wish to do more than ten or twelve miles at the outside, and this county is a Paradise for tramps. There is a workhouse about every ten miles.

21313. Did you think of any direct method for repressing the tramp evil, or would you be satisfied with that indirect method?—I think there is a great deal of laxity in the imposition of tests—the amount of work they have to do in some places. I see by this return, three years ago, that the number of criminals relieved annually in Nenagh is 500; Thurles, 2,300; Roscrea, 1,853; Mounscloane, 1,111; Clonmel, 936; and Callan, 250. That looks as if some places were made a little more attractive to them, that is to say that a more severe labour test is imposed on others.

21314. They have a regular road, these men?—I know they have. The great influx takes place on Saturday night. They go out on Sunday morning because no labour test is imposed on them. They should be kept over until Monday and made do a double task.

June 22, 1904.

Th. J. F.
O'Ryan.

21115. The English law gives authority to the Guardians, according to the number of times the tramp visits the house, to retain them for a longer period?—I would rather get rid of them if possible.

21116. It would be with a view of making the place unattractive for them?—I think they are an evil class.

21117. Would you go the length of some witnesses we had yesterday, who thought they should be dealt with by the police and sent to labour colonies, to be detained for one, two, three, or four years, whichever might be thought right?—I have not gone into that.

21118. There is another class you have in the workhouse, that is the girls who come in to have children?—I think they should be in one institution and not scattered through the workhouse. It is the greatest evil I know.

21119. Would you have in view a county institution?—A county institution.

21120. Or would you have in view an independent institution under religious management where the Poor Law authorities could pay so much a head for the people they send?—I am dealing with it altogether from the Poor Law side.

21121. Taking it as a Poor Law Guardian, would you be in favour of paying so much per head for each case you send, or keeping up an institution with a staff?—I think I would keep up the institution.

21122. Don't you think that would be far more expensive?—It may, but I have perhaps some knowledge of how that would work. I don't know how the other would work. I don't know that there are any such institutions.

21123. There are a good many institutions—whether they would receive this particular class or not is not quite certain—but there are a number of institutions under Catholic and Protestant management where efforts are made to reform girls?—These are mainly in large cities. There were small institutions established in the country a good many years ago, but they all failed or were closed up.

21124. Would you be in favour of sending a girl to such an institution as that under religious influence, where she could be reclaimed, if possible, and given a fresh start in life?—If such an institution were established, I have no doubt it would have a good influence, but as I say I have considered it only from the point of view of dealing with them as a class who go into workhouses.

21125. Are you aware of the result at present to those girls who enter such institutions as workhouses. Are you aware when a girl enters a workhouse she very often remains there off and on for life?—Yes, returns again and again.

21126. The suggestion that was made to us with a view of stopping that was, that an endeavour should be made to reclaim the girl on the occasion of her first lapse, and having perhaps the child boarded out, she contributing to the support of the child when she got a situation?—I would still, I think, prefer an institution under lay management. Of course the members of the religious community could be there, as they are at present in workhouses. On the whole, I think that may work better.

21127. So that if you had an institution you would like to have it under the management of the local bodies, but with religious superintendents and managers if they so wished?—Oh, certainly; just as they are in the workhouse.

21128. If you get all these classes out of the workhouse you would only have the aged, and infirm, and sick left. The aged and infirm you have already suggested should be in one or two institutions; now the sick you would divide into two classes, the acute and the chronic?—Yes, the acute to be treated locally, if necessary, and if the acute stage passed off they could be passed on to the district hospital.

21129. Or take their discharge?—Or take their discharge. Of course if the case became chronic they would need to go into hospital for further treatment.

21130. Are you aware a good many people make their first entrance into the workhouse as sick, and remain by being transferred to the chronic wards?—They do.

21131. Would you be rather in favour of discouraging that by admitting them to the acute wards and discharging them altogether from the workhouse when cured?—As soon as it could be done; just as in a general hospital.

21132. Did you anticipate converting any of these closed workhouses into a sanatorium for consumptives?—No, I did not entertain that idea. I am doubtful if it would succeed. I don't know that the situation of any one of them is favourable. Perhaps Clonsilla in one sense is more favourable than the others; but all buildings which have been used for so long a time for what I may call, without objection, as workhouses for kind of people, would not be suitable. The opinion is that small buildings are better.

21133. And even temporary buildings?—I am afraid the temporary system would be very expensive, and there would not be a sufficient amount of shelter. I don't go so far as to think that open air altogether in this country would be suitable.

21134. You would be in favour of a sanatorium of some sort, but would not approve of an old workhouse?—No. I would actually sooner take an old fever hospital which had only one kind of infection in it, whereas the workhouse would have every class. You could disinfect a fever hospital, but you would find it very hard to do it with a workhouse.

21135. Have you any knowledge of the working of the boarding-out system?—No, I have not. General Massey is here, and I think he has the figures with regard to that.

21136. Mr. MURPHY—You spoke, in regard to the labour test, that these granges have been informed that the labour test in Tipperary Workhouse was a little more stringent than in other workhouses in the county?—I know they get a large quantity of stone broken, and can dispose of them very well.

21137. Do you know what effect it has had on the tramps, whether they avoid that workhouse?—No, I have not the returns with regard to Tipperary on this, and I did not wish in any way to trespass on the province of other witnesses, who were more conversant with that part of the subject. I have no information with regard to the effect of the labour test, but I have seen the result of the working. They break large quantities of stones, which can be easily sold, and both the county authority and the Urban Council have bought them.

21138. In regard to the lunatics at present in the workhouse, you are in favour of transferring them to another place?—Into an auxiliary asylum.

21139. Have you a preference for an auxiliary asylum over an ordinary asylum?—Very much; that would be more economical, and I do not think that the crowding of such very large numbers together is beneficial.

21140. Then you think it has the double advantage of being more economical and more suitable?—Yes, and more beautiful and wholesome for them, because in a central asylum like Clonsilla there is a fearful amount of noise and uproar going on, and patients who are tolerably quiet themselves get upset by it. I think only the severe cases should be retained in the central high-class asylum, and all who are peacefully harmless should be removed to auxiliary asylums. Of course that does not meet the views of the officers of the asylums generally, who have naturally a tendency to have a larger institution under their management.

21141. You being a professional man and having professional evidence so much on the other side, I would like to hear you on the subject?—That is my opinion. I have been a member of the General Lunatic Committee for the last five years, and I have put there as often as I practically could, but I have not gone round the ground and gone into different parts of the building, and I formed a very strong opinion about it.

21142. You think it is not a good thing to have too large a number of lunatics segregated in one institution?—I think not; they have a very bad influence on each other when in that condition.

21143. And you think if there was an auxiliary asylum there would be some opportunity for these harmless lunatics to get recreation, and some light occupation more than they have at present?—I think so.

21144. Dr. BROOKS—You mentioned about having small acute hospitals in each of these places where you closed your present workhouses?—Yes, a wing of the workhouse, or any separate building they may have. In Thurles or Cashel they have separate fever hospitals and probably in other places.

21145. Thurles has a very good fever hospital, which would make a very good small hospital, but you intend to keep a workhouse there?—I merely suggested that on account of its central position. I take enough with reluctance, because I think it is badly situated.

21146. Supposing the workhouse are closed and there is a small hospital for acute cases in different unions, as at present?—A very much smaller space than is afforded by either of these fever hospitals would suit. A small portion of a ward in a workhouse might be set apart, for there are seldom fever cases unless there is a local outbreak, which brings a number in together. I think the amount of accommodation required if a district hospital were set up would be very much smaller than either of these buildings I have spoken of would afford.

21147. I was not very clear about what you meant when you spoke about the fever hospital in Clonmel being used for fever and acute cases?—I did not say that. I said there were buildings, such as the fever hospitals at present at Cashel and Thurles, and I have no doubt there are separate buildings in other unions, for instance, in Carrick, and they might be retained for acute cases as well, clearing fever under acute cases; but much less accommodation than is now afforded by any of them I know would do, therefore it is not essential to get a separate building put up as large as that.

21148. Do you propose that you should treat acute cases and fever cases in the same building?—There may be parts of the workhouse, I mean merely wards in them. I am not of course intimately familiar with the subject, but as far as I know the amount of accommodation really required for many years past is not very great—half a dozen cases of fever perhaps, possibly not as many acute cases.

21149. If the workhouses were used for other purposes, would you propose that they should still retain portions of the workhouses for hospital purposes?—I don't know intimately the construction of all workhouses. There may be small portions that could be retained for the purpose, if a better one could be found for the larger, but if there is no such thing I would retain the other buildings.

21150. How would you propose that these small institutions should be managed?—I have not quite gone into that, because it is only a tentative part of my view.

21151. CHAIRMAN.—The doctor means what would be the governing body?—The public body that governed all in common, I think, could govern this, as there would be a central body with, I suppose, local committees probably.

21152. Would it be by the county?—A county rate. I am very strongly in favour of having a similar rate for all purposes over the entire county for all Poor Law purposes. Without wishing to say anything that may offend anybody, I think those small local ideas that the rate is lower with us than with you, and so on, I don't attach any importance to that, because amalgamation should produce a general lowering, and all being placed on the same footing would really pay less under efficient management than any one pays now.

21153. Dr. BROWN.—Do you think having a county rate and county sanatoriums there might be more harmony?—And more efficiency.

21154. And more uniformity?—And more uniformity.

21155. And possibly some of the staff might be transferred from one institution to another in case of sickness?—I have not entertained that idea.

21156. In the case of nursing?—Oh, yes, if they required aid in any case, they might be transferred from one to another.

21157. The same would apply to the fever hospitals of the county?—Yes, but I think it would be a great advantage, for the provision of nurses has been a very serious tax on the various unions. Nurses are brought down specially and often obtained with difficulty.

21158. Whereas if the county had them available in some central institution they could be drafted off to a smaller place when required?—Yes.

21159. You said something about 3s. 6d. being the cost of luncheon in the auxiliary asylum?—That is as contemplated in the Act, of which the grant is 2s.

21160. There is no institution in Ireland where they can be maintained for 3s. 6d.?—I don't think they can, but it is mentioned in the clause that provides the 3s.

21161. It is merely the food that that refers to. You are comparing 3s. 6d. with 11s. in asylums; the 11s.

includes every cost, even interest and sinking fund; that is quite a different basis from the 3s. 6d.—Undoubtedly. I don't of course think they could be kept up for 3s. 6d., but I merely quote that as the sum that is mentioned in the clause.

21162. Mr. MURPHY.—Can they be kept for 6s. a week?—Yes, I think so, or less.

21163. And if you take 2s. off that it brings it down to 4s., and it would still mean a saving of £4 to £5?—Yes; in this case there might be some interest on account of improvements and alterations necessary, but I think they ought to be maintained for 2s.

21164. Dr. BROWN.—You said something about some of the institutions being too large. Have you any practical experience of this? You said some of the patients suffer from noises. Would that not apply if there were only twenty patients as well as 500?—It may occur, but there would not be so many within hearing. I have been spoken to about it, and on that account I strongly urged the erection of a hospital block, on the ground that no patient suffering from a bodily illness had a chance of recovering.

21165. Could they not be kept in different parts of the institution, and so far away that they could not be annoyed by them?—They are not kept in a separate part at present, for we are about to put up a block to enable us to do that. Some improvements have been made in the asylums here by which they are less exposed to disturbance.

21166. Mr. MURPHY.—You have expressed the view that you are in favour of changing the method of administration from the present system, that is taking the management of the Poor Law out of the hands of the Poor Law Guardians and placing it in the hands of the County Councils through committees?—I am not prepared to say too much on that, on this ground, that I don't know that the County Council could manage the entire of it; it would take up too much time. Their meetings at present are rather numerous, and their hands are pretty well occupied. The central control I think ought to be in the hands of the County Councils. I mentioned local committees. I cannot say that I have gone further than that, smaller bodies. The creation of the present Board of Guardians, so enormously enlarged from what they were, has been, I think, the greatest blot on the Poor Law system. The numbers of them ought to be reduced to one-half of what they were before rather than doubled.

21167. Can you give any instance of any harm the present Poor Law Boards have done?—I am not prepared to mention them.

21168. Is the management any worse than it formerly was?—There are seventy-eight members in Tipperary, and there is not much less than that elsewhere.

21169. Then the only thing you advocate, I am to suppose, is the reduction by one-half in the number of the Guardians?—I think the business is very much better done by a very much smaller number; that the number is too great.

21170. You only go so far as to say that the number of representatives is too large, and that it ought to be reduced?—It ought to be reduced, because I think it prevents business being done as efficiently. I am quite certain of it, that there are too large a number of people to be heard.

21171. CHAIRMAN.—That is so in every matter?—In every matter.

21172. Mr. MURPHY.—I suppose you are aware that it is the general experience that by the widening of the area you lessen the supervision, and consequently if you give to the hands of the County Council the duties now performed by the Guardians you would be going in the opposite direction to economy?—I am not aware you would. I have not entertained the question so far as to be prepared with any scheme for the administration. I think that would require greater knowledge considerably than I possess. I don't know that the entire thing could be managed by the County Council, but the general government of it I think might be done by the Council.

O'Ryan.

June 22, 1904.

Mr. John Butler.

Mr. JOHN BUTLER, J.P., examined.

21173. CHAIRMAN.—You have a copy of the notes you were kind enough to let us have?—Yes. The following are the notes I have made, which have been adopted by the Children Board of Guardians:—

AMALGAMATION OF UNDOES, OR ABOLITION OF WORKHOUSES.

In view of the Commission at present taking evidence on the question of amalgamation of unwholes in Ireland, it appears an opportune time to discuss the feasibility of abolishing the workhouse system, which is admitted to be a gross abuse of public funds, and a cruel wrong on the deserving poor, whom it attempts to relieve.

The subject is a very wide and important one, including, as it does, a necessary reform in the nursing of our sick poor, as well as providing better accommodation for the treatment of ordinary diseases for the general public in our hospitals and infirmaries, and making suitable provision for our laborers when incapacitated from age or infirmity.

The question then arises: Has the present workhouse system answered its time, the circumstances under which it was established having changed? There are now no able-bodied in the average workhouse in the provinces; the inmates are confined to hospital and infirmary patients, children, and the overflow from the lunatic asylums, for the latter of whom no provision worthy of the lowest grade of civilization exists in workhouses.

Where, then is the suitability of the present system, which insists on the breaking up of all family ties—divorcing the parents, and relieving them of the care and responsibility of their children, and wresting the children from the natural protection and control of their parents?

It is then a question of re-creating the entire system to meet existing circumstances; and in the consequent readjustment, we have at our disposal the workhouse buildings, which can be made available for district hospitals and infirmaries, to be supplied with such appliances and comfortable surroundings as are consistent with the needs of every class requiring medical or surgical treatment, and where duly qualified nurses will be in constant attendance.

Assuming, then, that the workhouse as we know it at present, is to be abolished, the question presents itself: How are the inmates at present sheltered there to be disposed of, who are not already receiving medical treatment in the hospital or infirmary attached?

Take, first, the able-bodied males, who exist only in name, as, with very rare exceptions, this class in our workhouses is composed of men over sixty years of age, "who have borne the burden and heat of the day," and whom, worn out, and generally suffering from some physical disability, are compelled, under existing circumstances, to enter the workhouse, "to husband out life's latter at the close."

These should be relieved from this imprisonment and enforced idleness, and receive a weekly allowance, enabling them to live amongst their relatives and friends, and assist in agricultural and other work for the greater part of the year, so far as may be.

The females answering the above description to be similarly provided for in the country, where they could assist in child nursing, poultry feeding, etc., etc. But apart from such, the mothers of illegitimate children have to be dealt with, and might be provided for in a portion of the workhouse buildings, isolated altogether from the grounds of the hospital and infirmary, and having a separate entrance from the public road. These women to be discharged on the medical officer's certificate, or compelled to do laundry work for the hospital or infirmary, and the public, and not be allowed to assist in idleness at the expense of the ratepayers, or, preferably, to a penitentiary, specially provided for first offenders, and, on probation, be provided with suitable situations, and to contribute to support of child.

The children at present in the workhouse to be put out to nurse, or apprenticed, with fair remuneration, to respectable foster-parents in the county, under suitable inspection, for which provision is suggested later on.

It appears to be generally agreed that heretics lunatics, epileptics, and others, more or less similarly affected, should receive special treatment in a separate institution, for one or more counties, where a district workhouse building may be available.

The workhouse hotel and the absence of uniformity in the administration of the Vagrancy Acts have developed the professional tramp. With the disappearance of the workhouse, and the uniform application of these Acts, this itinerant school of vice must yield, if not altogether disappear, to the immense relief of the community at large, and in particular to those householders living within their sphere of influence, near all main roads leading from one workhouse to another.

Having formulated our plans for the disposal of the present inmates of workhouses so far, the administration of the new arrangement has to be considered.

A Board to be formed for the management of the district infirmary and hospital, to consist of from twelve to twenty members, half to be nominated by the District Council, and half by the County Council. Ladies to be eligible. To meet weekly, and appoint visitors, inside or outside their body, to look after children boarded out, and also each of the aged and infirm as may be in receipt of a weekly stipend out of the rates; and to report to the Board of Guardians—now District Councils—on the merits of applicants for outdoor relief, as aged and infirm.

District Councils to act as Board of Guardians. To be formed of one elected representative for each Poor Law electoral division, and in most cases such electoral divisions to be formed by the amalgamation of two or more of the present electoral divisions, according to area, population, and value. This Board to have administration of outdoor relief, and the funds for the support of the district hospital to be dispersed by the Board of Management. The cost of the district hospital to be a distinct charge, as at present constituted for District Councils. Outdoor relief, including children boarded out, to be an electoral division charge; lunatics, epileptics, etc., to be county-at-large charges.

Where the present union is formed out of different counties, the hospitals and infirmaries to be controlled by a joint Board of Management for general purposes, the members of such Board of Management to be in charge of the children, and aged and infirm boarded out, each in its own county, and subject to the District Council of its respective county.

The district hospitals and infirmaries to be placed in charge of a secular or religious community, with a duly qualified staff of trained nurses, with a medical officer specially in charge, to be appointed by the District Council.

If, out of these suggestions, and such as may appear feasible on further examination of the subject, a scheme be formed, the question of the disappearance of the demoralising and extravagant system of workhouse administration may be regarded as practical.

To some, this may appear a dangerous upheaval, and that amalgamation would, under existing circumstances, be more desirable.

Let us then suppose that one workhouse in each county be allotted to the able-bodied, one for lunatics and epileptics, and one for workhouse children as an industrial school.

In this case it must be borne in mind that 80 per cent. of those females classed as able-bodied are the mothers of illegitimate children; the greater number habituals, with a few first offenders—possibly betrayers. Can it be contended that the collection of this class from all parts of the county, and their enforced cohabitation, will improve the moral tone, or even lead to economy?

The economic side, as well as the social, moral, and charitable, will necessarily come up for discussion; and the question will be asked: Where does the economy appear in the proposed abolition of workhouses?

In the first place, the workhouse master, matron, schoolmaster, and schoolmistress can be dispensed with, as well as a host of Local Government Inspectors, whose occupations as Inspectors of Workhouses will disappear; but this retrenchment, though the most visible to outsiders, is, to the Poor Law Guardian of operations, but a small item compared to the extravagant waste, mismanagement, and cost, attendant on the upkeep of the present huge establishments, now containing but a fraction of the number of inmates for which they were built.

The defence of the present system, where the administration costs between 30 and 50 per cent. of the annual sum levied and intended for the relief of the poor, will not bear the light.

Doubtless, like every institution that topples from its very shores, it will have ardent supporters and defenders in those who profit by its weakness; but here, the employers' interests and those of the poor should be paramount, and brought to light before the Commission at present engaged in considering the general question.

Having dealt with the question in the general aspect as regards the classes of inmates who have hitherto resided of the workhouse, it may seem to bring more clearly into view the feasibility of the abolition scheme by applying it to Callan Union, of which I have been a Guardian for very many years.

The Callan Workhouse at present contains:—

Able-bodied males, ...	2
Do. females, ...	2
Do. females with illegitimate children, ...	6
Old and infirm males and females, ...	50
Children, ...	38
Hospital and infirmary patients, ...	72
Total, ...	176

The last class remains as at present under medical care. The children to be apprenticed and boarded out; the 50 infirm to get outdoor relief with their relatives or friends in the county, where the majority can be of assistance in various ways, and where they can be maintained at less than half what goes to keep them in the workhouse, where they cost at present 5s. 3d. per week each—£209 per year.

Comparing these figures with the cost of outdoor relief as at present administered, amounting in the year to £1,450, distributed to 200 households, relieving at the very lowest 950 individuals, which works out at 5s. 12s. per head, instead of 2s. 12s. per head for the same class in the workhouse.

The only objection to the extension of outdoor relief is the allegation generally made that almshouses may creep in by extending it to persons not in need, and that a larger weekly allowance must be made when the present check of admission to the workhouse no longer exists.

The figures I have quoted should, I submit, at once dispose of these objections, showing that even if the present rate of outdoor relief per head be doubled, it will still be less than half the cost of indoor maintenance per head. In other words, if those 50 infirm at present in the workhouse be placed on outdoor relief at double the present rate, they will cost the ratepayers 4s. 12s. per head per annum, instead of £13 12s., their present cost in the workhouse.

The tramp question can be regarded only from the moral point of view, as their cost amounts only to 4d. per head per day for food and lodging; but though the 3,400 tramps who pass through the Callan Workhouse in the year cost but £45, it must be admitted that the presence of this wandering horde of idlers, mostly criminals, is a danger to the well-being of the town and district, and should not be tolerated in any well-governed community.

It may be necessary in the large cities and towns to have some shelter for waifs and strays, but such houses come within the province of the municipal authorities of those cities, and do not affect the applicability of the abolition scheme to the county-at-large.

The tramps whose workhouses at present exist should be put in charge of the Royal Irish Constabulary, to whom they should apply for night shelter, with an allowance of 1 lb. of bread.

The Royal Irish Constabulary to enter particulars of each applicant, and to prosecute on second application of any person within twelve months, or on proof that such person had applied for, and received shelter, at any other station.

21174. Would you just give your views in your own way from your notes. I think in your notes you follow the lines of our queries very closely?—In going into the question it appeared to me that the abolition of the workhouse would be much preferable to any patching up. The word may appear a strong one, but when we come to the several classes of inmates, and dispose of them, such as are fit to go out, we have then left the sick and infirm in the workhouse, which workhouse on each case might be used as a district hospital.

21175. Portion of it, I suppose?—Yes.

21176. Take your own workhouse at Callan, do you think the entire of that large building would be at all necessary?—I don't know that it would, but I think it would be a mistake to do away with the district hospital having the ground in Callan, as it is, even if you have a portion of the building, never used.

21177. Would you be in favour of treating there more than what you might call the acute sick?—Oh, yes; I would have a home there for those old people to whom out-door relief might not apply.

21178. As far as possible you would relieve such people out of the workhouse?—Out of the workhouse.

21179. Then the old people who could not be dealt with by giving them out-door relief, you would like to bring them to Callan?—Those belonging to the Union of Callan.

21180. Would not that make necessary a very large and expensive institution still?—Oh, I think not.

21181. I would be afraid that if you keep up a number of homes for the aged in that form that you still would have a large cost for officials?—I think the percentage, as far as I know of the country, would be very very small; it would not be 1 or 2 per cent. of the lot.

21182. The aged and infirm, oh, they are very large; the total sick in Callan is 30, and infirm 55—that is a very large number?—But those should remain under medical care.

21183. The fifty-one are not under medical care, and a great many of the eighty don't need any medical attention at all, but only domestic attention and nursing?—Yes are taking the infirm as distinct from those under medical treatment?

21184. Yes?—I think the outdoor relief would apply to the vast majority of those.

21185. There are a great many of those sick who are really not sick as far as regarding the doctor's attention; if you had twenty-five out of that number it would probably be all?—My estimate would be that the old people if offered the chance of out-door relief would go and they would be of use in the country where they would go, no matter how old.

21186. Then you do not contemplate the keeping of a large number of old or sick people at Callan?—No.

21187. Men who could not get out-door relief and the acute sick?—People who would have no friends in the country to go to. I take it that an old man or woman would be of great use in the country, particularly where they are known, and there might be some friends to harbour them, and with a weekly stipend of 5s. or 6s. they would be very welcome guests in small farmers' homes, and be useful for many purposes.

21188. That is a high amount?—Well, even at that or 4s. itself.

21189. Would you not contemplate the removal of any who could be removed to a central institution, say in Kilkenny, from the Kilkenny part of your union, and from the Tipperary part to whatever would be the central place for Tipperary?—I cannot see the advantage.

June 22, 1904.

Mr John
Butler.

21190. The advantage would be of course the abolition of the numbers of local staffs and officials for looking after the people?—I don't think there would be much economy.

21191. If you only left the acutely sick you would only need a doctor and a couple of nurses; everybody else might go, the master, matron, and all officials for the healthy?—I don't see the necessity of keeping a matron or master where you would have half a dozen old people, as would be remaining at the home at Callan.

21192. If there were so few in Callan, might they not be sent to Kilkenny?—Quite so, but I am against amalgamation.

21193. But it is not amalgamation. The suggestion is on the basis of abolition. Abolish the workhouses and have a central home or almshouse in Kilkenny, and another in Tipperary, for the sick of these portions of Callan Union respectively which are in those counties?—For those who could not be boarded out?

21194. Quite so?—I am not against that view. The first view of the matter I put forward here is what we are to do if we came to the conclusion that the workhouses as workhouses should disappear—first you have the buildings of the workhouse to be made available for a district hospital and infirmary, to be supplied with such appliances and comfortable surroundings as are consistent with the needs of every class requiring medical and surgical treatment, and where duly qualified nurses will be in attendance.

21195. That is the institution we are just speaking of?—That is the Callan institution. When we discharge the ordinary able-bodied pauper I contemplate that people from the unwork-at-large will have recourse to such a hospital where you take away the character of the pauper from it, and there should be a good staff there for the safety of the people generally, that every one should have recourse to the public hospital properly kept. Then I go to dispose of the several classes that are at present in the workhouse. First, take the able-bodied males, who exist only in name, as, with very rare exceptions, this class in our workhouses is composed of men over sixty years of age, those should be relieved from their imprisonment and enforced idleness, and receive a weekly allowance enabling them to live amongst their friends, and assist in agriculture and other work for the greater part.

21196. Those who could not be dealt with in such a way, you would send them to that central county home?—I am rather divided between the feasibility of a county home or having them attached to the infirmary.

21197. I think all the medical men are very much against mixing up the sick and the half-sick in that way. Any evidence we have got so far is opposed to that. The doctors like to have the acute sick under their charge, and they don't like to have wards, or beds in wards, occupied by people who are not proper subjects for medical treatment?—At present you have very separate portions.

21198. They are very largely mixed up at present?—Well, I am not against the central county home for that purpose solely.

21199. Then the females?—I would dispose of them like the males—give them out-door relief and send them to the country amongst their friends, where they would be of use.

21200. We discussed just now with the last witness the question you go to next, about mothers of illegitimate children. You have heard his evidence and the discussion that took place—what is your view of that?—My view is that the best place to treat them is in the local hospital—have a separate ward, a separate place, and a separate entrance from the public road.

21201. In the local hospital, or grounds of the local hospital, that would be for maternity purposes only, or do you mean after? Supposing a woman stays in while nursing her child for about a year, would you keep her all the time in the local institution?—I think she could be made use of.

21202. But would she ever be likely to get on her feet socially and morally again?—I have not quite decided the question whether it would be better to discharge them immediately on the doctor's certificate, or retain them for the purpose of establishing a laundry.

21203. Would you be in favour of letting them go to a place to be reclaimed under religious management?—I think it is a very good thing, but I don't quite see that the bringing of people of that class from all parts of the country, some very old hands—

21204. You are considering those who are at present in workhouses?—Yes.

21205. If legislation takes place following this report in a year or two, then it would apply to all future cases. No doubt the present people who are there would be an embarrassment. You would have to deal with them in some exceptional way, but all future cases of first lapses, do you think it would be a good thing to send them to some place where they would be kept apart from evil influences and be put under good influences?—One for each county.

21206. Not necessarily. You might send them to Waterford from here, or to Cork, as the case may be. There are already in existence some of these institutions, if they would receive, at so much a week, people from various?—I think sending a person like that away to an institution branded with these surroundings, it would be rather against throwing the clock around them. I think it would be better leave her at home.

21207. So many said it hard to be kept at home among their own friends?—When I speak of at home, I mean in the local hospital.

21208. Then would you not drop into the present evil that exists in workhouses, that is that a girl who comes in for the first time would meet hardened offenders, and the possibility of her coming right after being with one, two, or three, or four other women of the same kind, would be very small?—But you would increase that danger if you sent them to the larger institutions. That is exactly the point I am against.

21209. The view of the witnesses who have put forward the matter was that girls who go in there are kept for a comparatively short time, and the managers of such institutions find situations for them, and out of the earnings of the situation if they cannot get anything from the father of the child, they contribute towards the support of the child who a boarded out?—I was not considering reclamation so much as the present disposition of the classes in the workhouse. I think an institution would have a good effect on these people if they are treated as you describe.

21210. Mr. McNEAGHAN.—Do you not think there would be some danger in sending girls to large ones from country places?—I do. I think the worse ones they are left the greater probability of reclamation, at least after first or second offences.

21211. When one talks of sending them to a city, they may be in a city, they would not be of the city; they would be well looked after; and on their discharge would, no doubt, find proper employment?—I have an idea that the larger you make an institution the greater the danger.

21212. Even when managed with strictness by a religious order?—Oh, yes, the communication is not entirely influenced by the religious.

21213. But still they have great influence over them?—I have no doubt about their influence.

21214. They classify these people, and then set very strict rules of silence imposed on them?—I think they would be very clever people if they did carry it out.

21215. That might be, but there is a determined attempt made to carry out such reformation?—Not I think there is no association so dangerous as the one these people are likely to indulge in, and old hands are mixed with first and second cases from the institutions.

21216. That is what we want to avoid. They won't keep old hands in these institutions. There are some institutions for the abandoned, but I am referring to institutions kept for first lapses?—Then you would have institutions according to the degree of the fallow.

21217. There are already two. There are three supported by charitable contributions, and then what the witnesses proposed was that the Guardians or other bodies who send these people there should pay for them so much a week?—I think if you apply the same sing that you are contending for at home in the district hospital in a separate institution where there may be five or six. You can have them under a religious community. They are now nearly all through the south in charge of hospitals and infirmaries.

21223. I have spoken to ladies in charge of such institutions, and they consider the present system hopeless where girls are mixed together—I cannot see how it would improve them.

21224. You are so strongly here against the workhouse system that I thought you would see that at once the objection to the different classes herded together—what you point out yourself. You have actually in the same sitting room, day room, and sleeping room women with five or six illegitimate children, with a girl who has come in a couple of months before her confinement!—That may be so.

21225. There is no such want of classification in penitentiaries!—That may be so.

CHAIRMAN.—I think that is so. If it were not so, I would never consider the suggestions we get as worth a moment's attention.

21226. Mr. MURKIN.—Perhaps what Mr. Butler means is that under this new reform scheme these classes will be out of the workhouse and there will be nobody in the workhouse but the sick. When these girls go they won't find the class there they find now. There will be nobody in the infirmary but sick people!—Except the occasional fallen woman.

21227. The presence of these unmarried mothers, don't you think, causes a good deal of the objection to the workhouse!—Of course, they are objectionable, but you cannot get rid of them.

21228. But supposing you close the workhouse and do not admit them, I am taking that as the starting point, that in future no woman be admitted into the institution we know as a workhouse, but that the governing body should give her a note of admission, having arranged for it, to some penitentiary?—I am not contending against the penitentiary so managed, but I am against amalgamation and putting them together in one house in a county under the present management.

21229. Oh, certainly, I don't think that idea was ever suggested?—I think it would follow amalgamation.

21230. I am not thinking of amalgamation. I am following your line of abolition, and instead of a workhouse where all classes are received as at present, having merely a small institution for the acute sick, and a few people of the semi-sick class possibly, so that the workhouse of Dublin, we will say, would be inhabited by nobody except the acute sick!—But my argument goes altogether in the direction of repudiating the amalgamation scheme as applied to the several classes of inmates. I am not arguing against institutions where these women might be disposed of, but I am against collecting them together in one county house.

CHAIRMAN.—I think you are arguing against a question that has not been raised by any witness before us.

21231. Mr. MURKIN.—I understand Mr. Butler conceives that if these new institutions grow up there will be a large number of women in these institutions, and then the danger is that they will mix with these other cases. The Chairman pointed out before that these girls would remain a short period in the penitentiaries. They would be drafted off into institutions, and it is to be hoped got a fresh start, and then the number of women in that position in Ireland is relatively very small compared to the number in England and Scotland, and the number of illegitimate children in Ireland is largely made up of workhouse births owing to the same girl not having been reclaimed, and having three, four, or five children afterwards, whereas if she were reclaimed at first it is to be hoped she would be put into a proper position in life and do well—I will concede all the reasons you put forward in favour of an institution, but in disposing of these women in the local hospitals it was to get rid of the danger of the central one, and I cannot see how you will have amalgamation in the county. For instance, if you take my county, Kilkenny would be the one. It is central in every sense of the word, and if you bring there sixty of these people it would be a very bad atmosphere.

21232. I think everybody will agree with you in that!—I am not against disposing of them in a better way, but it is one of my arguments against amalgamation, if amalgamation is carried out in the whole.

21233. Then children?—Yes, the children to be boarded out. The number of children in workhouses is so very small that there is no opening at all for having a school there. I see that in thirty unions there are only ten children.

Mr. MURKIN.—There are fifty-two in the small union, Clonsilla.

21234. CHAIRMAN.—And I think eighty-two here in Clonsilla?—I prefer the boarding out to any other. I think that is the proper thing.

21235. As to these any observations you would like to offer about the boarding-out system? You suggest that in the reply, without any detail?—I suggest later on that they be put under the inspection of the board of management for the district hospital, which is supposed to be nominated by the District Council and County Council.

21236. A local body with some ladies on it?—With some ladies on it. Lunatics and epileptics are quite unfitted for workhouses.

21237. Would you be in favour of giving local bodies power to board out all children who come into their charge?—Board out all children.

21238. Take the extreme case of tramps and casuals, lads and cuts—people who need do any regular, steady work. Would you be in favour of taking away children from such parents?—But they are no longer in the workhouse, and children won't come under your charge.

21239. I am talking of children who sometimes come in as tramps—children of strolling parents. Would you be in favour of giving the Guardians discretionary power to separate these children from their parents?—I am entirely against the reception of tramps. I think they should be placed under police supervision.

21240. Then what would you do about their children?—I have not an idea.

21241. It has been suggested that the children, in the public interest, ought to be separated from these unworthy parents, and the parents who are thus relieved of their children should be incarcerated as long as the parents of the children were maintained at the public expense?—It would entail the question of taking hold of the parents.

21242. You would certainly take the parents if you took the children from them?—Yes.

21243. It has been suggested that tramps and such people should, instead of being allowed to go at large, they should in satisfactory proof before a legal body before Sessions, that they should be committed to the labour colony or workhouse—a place where they would be kept under order of the court—I think with the disappearance of the workhouse as a hotel for tramps he will be a rare article.

21244. A great many would sleep out and manage to get enough earnings to pay a low-priced lodging?—I think the police should have power to stop every tramp and inquire into his surroundings.

21245. It has been suggested that any man bonafide on the road looking for work should carry with him a certificate testifying in regular form who the man is and what he is doing?—That would become necessary if you stop the "flop of tramps. Lunatics, epileptics and all that class should be disposed of in a suitable institution, and ought to be collected in any county or two counties into one institution.

21246. If the county or district lunatic asylums were large enough to accommodate all the lunatics in the workhouse, would you put them into the central asylum?—I don't think so, and I think the supposition is a great improbability.

21247. You think the asylums are so full?—So full they have been spending hundreds or thousands of pounds in every county I know enlarging the lunatic asylums, and I don't think an institution is ever served by growing too large.

June 22, 1904

Mr. John Butler

June 22, 1904.
Mr. John
Butler.

21243. You would rather have than a county auxiliary asylum?—Quite, for the very harmless.

21244. And if they develop dangerous symptoms, send them to the asylum?—In fact, my suggestion is simply for the treatment of such lunatics as are at present sent from the lunatic asylums to the workhouses.

21245. There are a great many persons in the workhouses without having been found out to be lunatics. They come in as destitute persons, and have been put without any due order into the lunatic wards?—Quite so; it happens again and again.

21246. Do you think it is wrong that people should be put into lunatic wards without a formal order?—As needed at present, I see no grievance.

21247. Do you think a family might not object to have one of their number put into a lunatic ward without anything except a transfer by one of the officials of the workhouse, no two doctors finding?—I think it is always done under medical supervision—the doctor of the institution.

21248. No lunatic goes into a lunatic asylum in such a way?—But these are harmless people.

21249. It is very hard to say when a man with mental disease is harmless and when he may be dangerous?—Yes, you have only to await events.

21250. You have not considered that point about how a man ought to be put into the lunatic ward?—He first becomes a pauper, and then if he is seen not to be able to take care of himself, he is put in charge of a man who is nominally a keeper of lunatics and epileptics and idiots.

21251. You don't object to that?—I think these people ought to be put into a separate institution from the ordinary county asylum.

21252. You were going to speak about District Councils acting as Boards of Guardians?—Take, for instance, our workhouse. We have eight divisions in Tipperary and twelve in Kilkenny. I would not disturb the present arrangements as far as the receipt of people into the district hospital is concerned. I would not disturb the audit at all; keep it where it is, and have the board of management formed out of both counties, nominated by the District Council and nominated by the County Council.

21253. You would place the district hospital and infirmaries under the charge of a mixture of a religious community, with a duly qualified staff of trained nurses, the medical officer being appointed by the District Council—would you say the dispensary medical officer?—I did not decide for myself whether it ought to be given to the dispensary doctor.

21254. If you had only one doctor in the place?—He would naturally be the man. In going into the management I suggest that the District Councils act as Boards of Guardians and be immediately under the County Council, strike their rates and estimates, and submit them to the County Council, and have the administration of the place in the hands of the local Board, and for that purpose I suggest that there should be one representative for each electoral division.

21255. That is practically halving the present number?—Much more, and that each electoral division be formed by the amalgamation of two or more of the present electoral divisions, according to area and valuation. I would lessen the representation. As a Guardian of thirty-five or forty years' standing, I find that the accumulation of members on a Board takes away from its efficiency. A certain percentage of the Board are the working body, and if any little thing goes wrong that is unpleasant to an outsider they come in from all quarters and actually upset your three or four or six months' work.

21256. Mr. MURPHY.—There is some disparity at present in the question of representation. For instance, some electoral divisions have a very small valuation, perhaps £2,000; other electoral divisions have a large valuation, perhaps £5,000 or £6,000. Would you think some change in that respect ought to be made?—I would resent the whole thing according to area, population, and valuation. I am not speaking now of towns but of the country electoral divisions. That I think the representation is entirely too large. It is no advantage to the people outside.

21257. CHIEFMAN.—It hinders work?—They would be better represented by much fewer people. And then the cost of the district hospital to be a district charge. You cannot make separate charges for people going to the hospital.

21258. You would make the cost of the persons in the district hospital?—You may call it a union—large charge.

21259. You are not in favour, are you, of making it a county unit for Poor Law management, of making it a comprehensive unit? You have part of the union in Kilkenny and part in Tipperary. Your hospital would become, according to the boundaries of the county, a County Kilkenny District Hospital—for practical purposes, hospital purposes, the Union would be undisturbed, but for no other purposes.

21260. Then you would have the County Tipperary in some way striking a rate for your Kilkenny hospital?—For the lunatics for its own district.

21261. As far as the present union is in the County Tipperary you are not in favour of having separate bodies for Poor Law management?—Yes.

21262. For instance, that your Callan district hospital should only be supported by a rate on persons of the County Kilkenny, or on the whole of the County Kilkenny?—No, that is not my idea, that the union should remain for hospital purposes, but the administration and funds and estimates—

21263. You would have to have a Tipperary rate, then, struck for your hospital at Callan?—Yes; I would have the estimates sent forward according to the number received from the Tipperary portion of the union. I would have the estimates sent forward to the Tipperary County Council.

21264. Would you be willing to have the Callan hospital maintained by a rate on the County Kilkenny, and give power to any persons who find in the adjoining Tipperary district to come in at so much a head, payable by the County Tipperary?—That is practically it.

21265. Well, not quite. It would get over the difficulty of a rate, if you pay so much a head?—The rate per head will be made out of the weekly expenditure, and you put down your estimate according to the number of people coming in from Tipperary.

21266. In the old rate per head you would not have any rate struck for establishment charges. You would charge for so much in the rough way, representing their share of the establishment charges and maintenance. I cannot see the difficulty. You have the estimates from the two counties. Your entire establishment charges come to a certain thing. You apportion it according to the number of lunatics. Supposing it was £1,000. You apportion it, £400 to Tipperary and £600 to Kilkenny. If you struck a rate to meet the £600 and then charged the Tipperary district so much a head for those coming in, you may be at a slight loss. They may not come in in sufficient numbers to pay you the £600?—I cannot see how the difficulty comes in. The idea is to charge Tipperary for the people in the district hospital and Kilkenny for the people in the general fund. We make out our estimate, and the regulation is sent forward to the Tipperary County Council and another to the Kilkenny County Council for both union purposes and District Council purposes. I would preserve that.

21267. Now, as regards the outdoor relief, you say the only objection to the extension of outdoor relief is the allegation generally made that abuses may creep in?—That is the argument in public; I don't set my value on it.

21268. You don't see that in your practical experience?—No.

21269. Is your outdoor relief increased in Callan?—Yes, since it became a union charge.

21270. Is it still increasing, or do you think it has reached its limit?—I doubt if it has reached its limit; I think the tendency is to increase.

21271. And you think that is right?—No.

21272. How would you check it?—I would check it by making the outdoor relief an electoral division charge when you have the electoral division increased and recast.

21273. That is, the new electoral division, which would be something not much less than the present dispensary division?—Something less—about one-third. There is no doubt about the freedom with which outdoor relief has increased since it has become a union charge.

21274. Would you put the whole of that on, or would you say, as one witness suggested, that we might ascertain what the present amount is and fix that, something that, and so let that be a union charge, and say any increase on that should be an electoral charge?—The new administration of that would require that it should be an electoral division charge. My idea is that the outdoor relief would increase. You would have a good many applicants, and to my mind entitled to receive outdoor relief, who at present are too shy to go to the workhouse.

21275. You would trust to the check of the electoral rate?—Yes, I would trust to the local knowledge and that very useful test of a man's own pocket.

21276. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you not think that might work some hardship in regard to towns?—I have not considered the towns. My evidence must be taken as far as I know to apply to the county.

21277. There are small towns in the country. Take Callan. It is a town?—I think a town like Callan should get the relief given to it some years ago, and the way I suggest in outdoor relief coming up to a certain amount. Any surplus I would distribute on the county divisions, because the tendency of the people is to come into towns and settle down there.

21278. In regard to the county infirmary, do you see any inequality in regard to that? It is situated in such a way that only the adjoining area can benefit by it. Could you suggest anything to equalise matters in that respect?—I cannot. The benefit of the institution must accrue to the town.

21279. A large portion of the people of your county cannot take advantage of the benefit of the county infirmary, still they have to pay for its upkeep?—I think they will become perfectly useless under the new arrangement. If you have district hospitals for each union, I cannot see the good of a county infirmary. You will have the best medical assistance with nursing quite as good as it can be hoped for in the county infirmary.

21280. We found, for instance, in Waterford a very fine county infirmary, and within a few paces of it we found also a very good district hospital or workhouse hospital. It does seem that these two institutions are very close together, and that all the advantages that are would expect cannot be got out of them. Do you think it is necessary to have a district hospital in any locality where there is a county infirmary?—I think you cannot do without a district hospital. The county infirmary in most places that I know it has not the accommodation at all required. The county infirmary belongs to another age, and it was not disposed of when the union hospitals were brought into working order.

21281. Then you think the district hospital should be enlarged and extended?—And made infinitely better than it is.

21282. And the county infirmary got?—Yes. My idea is that it should be brought up to the standard, that a respectable man's family who require treatment would have recourse to it as they would to hospitals in Dublin.

21283. Dr. ENGLISH.—How do you propose these hospitals should be provided?—The funds, by the County Council, as at present.

21284. You have no such hospital in Callan?—The district hospital I allude to is the present workhouse turned into a district hospital.

21285. The infirmary in Callan was never constructed as a hospital for the admission of cases from outside at all?—I cannot see the difficulty. There are the buildings there.

21286. CHAIRMAN.—Without any of the modern appliances or fittings for a hospital.

Dr. ROBERTS.—The stonework and all that sort of thing are not in keeping with a hospital such as you speak of?—I don't see any difficulty in remodeling our institution.

21287. It would practically mean gutting it out and building it all over again except the walls. Have you contemplated such an expenditure?—I don't see it.

21288. Have you contemplated what it would mean to provide enough wards for the treatment of every class of disease?—I think they would be more than amply sufficient. I think the number of wards would be entirely in excess of the requirements if you take the Callan one.

21289. That is the whole workhouse?—Yes.

21290. Would not that be very expensive?—I cannot see it.

21291. To convert the Callan Workhouse into one large hospital?—It would not be a large hospital; it would simply meet the requirements of twenty electoral divisions that at present constitute the union.

21292. Have you formed any idea of the nursing staff you would require?—I think it should not be very large. I think your nursing staff should be in proportion to the number of patients you would receive.

21293. You would have to start it on a certain basis to begin with?—The basis with us is the number at present in charge of the doctor of the house.

21294. That would be very small if you take acute cases?—The number is not very large.

21295. To provide all the modern requirements for a surgical hospital and all that sort of thing is very considerable?—I think there is plenty of accommodation for any amount of appliances.

21296. Do you not think a better arrangement would be to have a small hospital in these districts for acute cases, and draft any cases requiring major operations to the central place?—I am entirely against multiplying buildings or erecting new ones.

21297. But the county infirmary is already in existence?—Well, I don't know about other counties; ours has been very useful for a certain class.

21298. There are so many difficulties in what you mention. First of all there is the building and arrangement and proper equipment, and then the most important thing is the medical staff. In very few districts in Ireland is the medical officer capable of performing major operations, and another point would be that he would have so few operations to perform that he would not be as well able to do it, nor would private cases that could afford to pay be likely to go into the district hospital. They would much prefer going to an institution where they would get a doctor of larger experience?—But there are such facilities for sending patients to Dublin to the principal hospitals of the name that I have experienced no trouble on that head. Where there are special cases for treatment in the Dublin hospitals we are empowered to send them forward, and where you have a local case you have five or six dispensary doctors belonging to the union, and they can be summoned if there is an amputation to be carried out.

21299. If you ask the ordinary dispensary doctor you will find that he is not very keen on doing major operations?—I have never experienced any difficulty on that head, and I am a very close attendant for a long time at the Callan Workhouse. We have no trouble with our doctors.

21300. Would you tell me how many major operations have been performed in the Callan Workhouse?—I cannot. I know hands to be blown off, and shot off, and cut off, and right well done.

21301. The operations were done in three cases before they went in?—Where there is the treatment of the eye we send them to Dublin.

CHAIRMAN.—You always would send these special eye cases to Dublin.

21302. Dr. ROBERTS.—If you send eye cases you might as well send persons for the removal of an internal tumour to Dublin?—And we send every difficult case to Dublin when recommended by the doctor.

June 22, 1904.

Mr John
Baker.

June 22, 1904.

Mr. John
Butler.

21303. Would it not be better to have an institution in the county for these particular cases?—You would have to provide an institution in a great many cases in our county. The county infirmary is a very small thing.

CHAIRMAN.—We have seen it. Of course, it does need expenditure on it.

21304. Dr. Bigger.—But there has been very good work in it, and where a surgeon devotes himself to surgery he is better qualified to perform operations at the shortest possible moment—he has instruments and dressings and surgical nurses—whereas you could not expect that in every district hospital!—It is rather an invidious thing to be talking about the character of any professional man; I see no difference between Killybeg and Callan.

Dr. Bigger.—I don't know the professional men. 21305. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—But from a ratepayer's point of view, don't you see the inequality or unfairness of any people who don't get any benefit from this institution having to pay for its upkeep?—Decidedly I have always had that objection.

21306. And you think these district hospitals, being improved to a certain standard, would take the place of the county infirmaries?—Yes.

21307. And let the county infirmaries be done away with except in special cases, and then let them go to Dublin?—That is my idea in fact.

21308. Dr. Bigger.—Would it not be less expensive to do it on the other system—to have a small hospital for acute cases, and the large hospital for which the whole county pays at present to have the large operation cases drafted there?—We never complain of the expense of removing patients to Dublin.

21309. CHAIRMAN.—It is rather a hardship to poor persons to have to go so far from their friends to a distant place like Dublin?—It is generally on their own application.

21310. I suppose it is a case of Hobson's choice!—They are free to go to the county infirmary.

21311. Dr. Bigger's idea was the improvement of the county infirmary a little to make it adequate for dealing with all major operations in the county if the county infirmary occupies a central position.

Dr. Bigger.—Because it costs so much to put one of these small hospitals into a proper state of equipment. You would require to spend £1,000 or £2,000 on some of them, and would not have a very efficient institution then. The difficulty is with the medical staff and nursing staff!—It appears to me there is no structural difficulty; you can have lifts to take patients up and down.

21312. You cannot put lifts in without spending money?—Oh, no.

Mr. J. J. FENNELLY examined.

21313. CHAIRMAN.—You have heard Mr. Butler's evidence?—Yes.

21314. When he went into the Callan question at considerable length?—I am in the Tipperary portion of the Callan Union. I am in favour of amalgamation with some of the Tipperary unions.

21315. You would rather throw in your lot with Thurles?—With South Tipperary; we prefer Cashel, but our District Council, St. Lawrence, passed a resolution in favour of amalgamating with the Tipperary unions.

21316. How far is the extreme bounds of Tipperary in your union from Cashel?—Nine Irish miles.

Mr. PATRICK KEATING examined.

21317. CHAIRMAN.—In what part of the union do you live?—In St. Lawrence.

21318. You agree with the last witness that you would rather go to Cashel than remain with Callan?—Yes, sir.

21319. What are your grounds for that opinion? Are they financial?—Yes.

21320. You think you would have a lower rate in Cashel?—Yes; it is always lower—considerably lower.

21317. That is the extreme edge of the county!—That would be twelve or fourteen miles.

21318. That is below near Callan town?—Yes.

21319. Is that very populous?—No, there are very few people, but the district near Cashel is where all the poor are—a mountain district.

21320. Your view is to go to Cashel and cut off all communication with Callan?—Yes.

21321. So you differ in that way from Mr. Butler. You would not wish to have it maintained as a district hospital, but to come in and deal with Cashel and cease to have any connection with Callan?—Yes.

21322. Is there anything else you would like to say?—No.

I suppose you would like me to be as short as possible?

21323. CHAIRMAN.—I am sure you naturally will be!—Well, I heard Dr. O'Ryan's evidence, and I don't at all agree with him. At all events, as regards the doing away with Tipperary Union.

21324. His proposal about Tipperary was to make it a sort of infirmary for the county—I know, but I would not approve of that. I think it ought to be kept as it is. It is at the far end of the county. I don't see how we could send people to Clonmel. It is twenty-five miles away; Cashel is thirteen or fourteen miles away, and we also take in a large portion of the County Limerick. One-fifth of our valuation comes from the County Limerick. That again is beyond Tipperary another thirteen or fourteen miles, so how we could send into Clonmel or even Cashel I fail to see.

21325. What class of poor people have you in your mind when you talk about sending them? You don't mean sick, of course! They would be still treated locally?—There was an idea of a central hospital.

21326. That was just suggested by one witness?—I was thinking of that.

Lieutenant-General MARRY, C.B., D.L., examined.

21327. If you had a central hospital at Tipperary you would have the best medical and surgical treatment on the spot?—Yes.

21328. So you would not have to send your sick any distance?—That, no doubt, would be. How would it then be proposed to do with our Guardians. Would they be supposed to come into Clonmel? What would happen to the Guardians?

21329. The evidence that we got from Dr. O'Ryan was a particular suggestion. I think it would be much better, perhaps, if you gave your own views, and as far as you remember his and dissent from them you should say so!—My own view is that amalgamation is a very good thing if it can be carried out with a regard to economy, but if we are going to amalgamate and at the same time keep up every existing building, I fail to see the economy. There may be efficiency, but there would be no economy, and I understand one of the great objects you have is to see could there be economy without loss of efficiency. By keeping up existing places there would be no economy. If some of them could be done away with absolutely there would be economy, and then I would be strongly in favour of it.

Mr. Patrick
KeatingLieut.-General

June 22, 1904.

Lieut.-General
Mans.

21336. Or if you could do away with the healthy portions of the greater number of workhouses and keep only the doctors and nurses for looking after the sick?—That would be very good; that would be economy. There is no doubt they have a very fine workhouse in Clonmel, and they would have room here for pretty well all the paupers of the county, but I think Tipperary is so situated locally, and having regard to the fact that they have got a great portion of the County Limerick in their bounds, I think Tipperary could not be done away with. I would say keep Tipperary and Clonmel for the South Riding, but I don't want to go into that question; I only want to point out the importance of Tipperary and the inappropriateness of interfering with it unless in the direction you say. Our population is 32,000, our area is 180,000 acres, our valuation is £144,500, it is about one-fourth of the valuation of the whole South Riding, and the weekly average of persons in the workhouse is 440.

21337. Can you tell me the annual amount you pay for outdoor relief?—I am sorry to say it is very high, much higher than I myself approve or would like to see continued. We pay about £3,600 a year for outdoor relief.

21338. That is a great reduction from the time when I was an inspector here?—I will read you the expenditure for ten years:—1895, £3,374; 1896, £3,333; 1897, £2,978; 1898, £2,454; 1899, £2,324; 1900, £2,300. Now we come on to the new system under which we were popularly elected and outdoor relief became a union charge:—March, 1902, £3,470; 1903, £3,566; 1904, £3,472. Our total expenditure for the union is £35,500, so the outdoor relief comes to considerably more than one-fourth of our charges. It is a thing I have been trying to keep down ever since I was on the Board, and I have not been able to do much. I attribute it to union rating, which I think is a great mistake.

21339. But you heard one of the witnesses suggest that outdoor relief might be increased considerably with a check that it should be made an electoral division charge?—I quite approve of that, and also what he said about towns. There is a great tendency to come from districts into towns, especially of late years. And in the town of Tipperary, near which I live, they would be very much injured indeed if outdoor relief was made an electoral division charge, but I think that might be met in some way such as you suggest—to fix a certain limit, and beyond that limit it should go on the division that wants the relief. But at present it seems to me that all at once in our union it is an enormous charge, and to a great extent an unnecessary one. Another thing I quite agree with Mr. Butler about, there being too many members in these Councils and Boards of Guardians. In Tipperary we have 38; that is a perfectly ridiculous number.

21340. In some unions like Tralee they go up to 100?—Do they? I thought we were about the largest. It is perfectly ridiculous any chairman trying to keep seventy-five men in order.

21341. A few ladies thrown in might improve matters?—We should be very glad to have them, and they would divide things exceedingly. If it comes within your province, I hope you will recommend the reduction of the numbers. I am aware when the Act was being passed it was intended only to have one member for each division, and I am sorry to say the clause to which I belong, the landlord class, asked for the second member and got it, and have not benefited by it. The class of men you want in these councils has his own business to attend to. He is a sensible man, and says, "I won't go into Tipperary," and he won't come, and we get another class of men who are not so good.

21342. You could do better with a smaller number?—Far better, and even if we put two electoral divisions in some cases into one, and gave only one member for the two, it would be better still. The division I myself represent we have only got about sixty voters altogether. We don't have any contests because they know it would not be any use to oppose me. The other point is about towns. That, of course, as you know, and have been saying, is a great evil, and I should be very glad indeed if something was done to check it. I would suggest there should be a police shelter in each town where there was a union, instead of leaving them to go into the unions.

21343. Would you give that power to the constabulary to send deserving cases to a registered lodging-house without going to the expense of additional buildings?—Certainly, I would be satisfied with anything that would put them under the control or supervision of the police, because at present it is a great evil.

21344. I think I heard you say that Tipperary had adopted some course and checked them?

Mr. MURPHY.—I made that remark. I understand an effort was made to compel them to break a large quantity of stones some years ago?—We are always making efforts and doing the best we can to keep them down.

21345. It was told that that effort had been very successful, but not as successful as it might have been because the adjoining unions did not follow their example?—There may be some truth in that, but I will read the list of stones admitted in the month of June:—£112, or an average of 62 per week. It seems a large number.

21346. Have you the numbers for five years before?

—No.
21346a. That is not a very large number for your union—about six a day?—Well, we certainly do our best. I have seen it suggested somewhere that the most effective way is to make them take a bath. We have not tried that yet.

CHAIRMAN.—It has been tried, but it is not generally approved of.

Witness.—They don't approve of that at all.
CHAIRMAN.—It would not do to give an exhausted man a cold bath after a hard day's work.

21347. Mr. MURPHY.—In England there is the power of detaining up to seven days, and also of compelling them to give seventy-two hours' notice of their discharge. What would you think of such a change as that?—I think it would be very good. There is another suggestion to keep them over Sunday. Saturday is a favourite day of theirs to come in. Keep them over Sunday and make them do double work on Monday.

21348. CHAIRMAN.—Would you be in favour of locking them up in an institution under a magistrate's warrant if it was proved they were habitual vagrants?—Would that come on the rates?

21349. It might come on the criminal expenditure of the country at large?—I think that would be very good. Anything would be very good that would try and stop that class.

21350. How you had large experience of the boarding-out of children?—We don't do much in that way. In our union there is a great difficulty. People don't seem to want to take them. Practically those who are boarded out are only taken by their relatives, grandmothers, and people like that. Seventeen children were boarded out during this last year, and the cost was £3 0s 2d per head, including clothing. We have in the workhouse seventy-four children, and they cost an average of £9 3s per head.

21351. That is for their food merely and clothing. You don't give them their share of the establishment charges?—No; in all the houses I have here I don't mention that. For instance, I heard some talk about lunatics. We put them at 6s 6d each; that is purely their food, nothing whatever to say to the establishment charges. The same way with the children. We give their total cost as £9 3s of those we maintain in the workhouse, so that they cost rather more than £1 a head than the boarded-out children. We would be only too glad if we could board out the other children on the same terms. I had recently just talks with the relieving officers on the subject, and they said that they thought it would be impossible in our union. I believe in Clonmel it is possible, and has been done. They have a different class of country. They have mountains where there are sheep and the children could be utilised. With us there is no particular way of utilising them; therefore I don't see how we could carry out to any large extent the system of boarding them out, but if it could be done I would very highly approve of it—anything to get them out of the workhouse. I think a suggestion I heard made by you to have them all in one building would be even better if there were such a thing as a diurnal workhouse.

21352. It was suggested by one of the witnesses that there should be a central school such as there is at Glins?—Then they would be taught trades and things there, would they?

21353. That was suggested, but the balance of opinion we have received is very strongly in favour of boarding out against any institution?—Supposing, as in our case, you cannot board out?

21354. That is a matter well worth considering. I will ask the inspector who has special charge of that

June 22, 1896.
 Genl-Mr. J. Fitzgerald.
 Mary.

branch of the work to look into it and give us the benefit of her opinion?—The advantage I see in the school over boarding out is that they would be taught trades.

21355. Do you think it desirable that the waste and strays should be turned into tradesmen in a country where agricultural labour is so much required?—I don't mean exactly tradesmen, but certain things such as carpentry, or with the women, laundry work.

21356. They are more likely to be turned into both tradesmen than regular tradesmen?—I was only thinking they should be given some means of living. A tradesman can get better wages than a labourer.

21357. A boy who goes out registered as a tradesman?—He is not much use, and on the other hand it might lead to greater emigration. If they knew their trades and did not get work they would probably emigrate.

21358. Your district is one of the districts in Ireland where the least agricultural labour is wanted?—Yes; it is mostly pastoral, very little tillage.

21359. That might be a reason why boarding out is more difficult. Are you aware you have power to board out in the Connell Union or any other union you like?—I was not aware; we would be very glad to board out if we could.

21360. Many of the Dublin children are boarded out in the County Wicklow?—There is one advantage in boarding them out—they get much more open air, and lead a healthier life, and are useful for agricultural work.

21361. But you are in favour of boarding out. It is only in your own union you find a difficulty in getting suitable homes?—Quite so.

21362. Have you heard of any cases of neglect of these children?—No; they are mostly taken by their own relatives, who practically use the money we give them as an addition to their own earnings. My view about auxiliary asylums is—I am a member of the Connell Lunatic Asylum—and I would prefer to see them tucked on to that.

21363. You would rather have one institution than two?—Yes; but I think a very large institution would be objectionable.

21364. What are your total numbers?—250.

21365. If you had them all in it would come to a thousand?—Yes. I have been talking to the superintendent of the asylum to-day, and he says up to a thousand could be managed quite easily. Beyond that limit it might not be advisable.

Mr. JAMES J. FITZGERALD examined.

Mr. James J. Fitzgerald.

I am Chairman of the Tipperary Union. I don't know that there is anything that I have to add, considering that there are so many other witnesses to be heard.

21374. CHAIRMAN.—Do you agree generally with General Manly's evidence?—I do to a great extent. I differ only in the recommendation for the abolition of union rating. That would be a serious matter for the towns.

General Manly.—Mr. Fitzgerald is a representative of the town.

Witness.—He does not exactly recommend the abolition of union rating, but, as you suggest, a certain 21366. He has an assistant?—Yes, he has one. I believe in most other asylums of the same size they have two. We have a young man very competent, and we are getting on all right with the one assistant. Of course, if you brought in these other people we probably would have to appoint a second, but even then I don't know that it would not be an economy. At present inmates in the workhouse are very badly treated. They are more like wild beasts caged up than anything I know. We do our best for them, as do the other unions do, but are very cramped.

21367. They have no good exercise yard?—They have one yard, not very large, but they have no means of getting out like they have in the asylum where they have acres of land in which to walk about and land to till.

21368. The general evidence we have is that the workhouse is no place for them?—It is not, but I would rather have them tucked on to the asylum here than have an auxiliary asylum established. I think they would be better looked after by people who know their wants.

21369. Which do you think would be the more economical?—I don't think if there would be any difference. I assume that if they were put into the asylum we would get the full capitation grant, and in the other we would only get 2s.

21370. Unless the law were changed to give them 4s?—The law might be changed, but my opinion is that they would be better here than in an auxiliary asylum, and they would be better either in the pauper or auxiliary than in the workhouse at present. About consumptive cases, it has been suggested to turn some workhouses into hospitals, but I don't think there would be enough consumptives to fill any large portion. We have only ten in our large union.

21371. Have you any idea of the recorded number of deaths in your union last year from phthisis alone?—I don't know, but I have no doubt it is heavy.

21372. They don't come to you because you have no proper place to treat them?—We have no proper place. It is one of the objections made by the Inspector. We put them into a ward in the fever hospital, but at all events we have only ten, and we being the largest union in the county, I suppose the others would not have more than twenty or thirty between them.

21373. That is not really the way to look at it. The question is, how many cases are outside, and the record of deaths from it is one indication, looking over it for a number of years.

Mr. FRANCIS HEFFERNAN examined.

Mr. Francis Heffernan.

21376. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the Board of Guardians?—I am a member of the Board of Guardians, and have been deputed to give evidence.

21377. You had under consideration the question of the breaking up of your union?—Yes. The view of the Guardians was that it would be a most objectionable proceeding to break up our union or any other union. Work them up to any standard you like, but let the unions remain, and let the area of expenditure within that union remain a union charge. Keep the union charges and district charges and county charges entirely distinct.

21378. As they are?—Yes, and localise responsibility for the maintenance of the poor and the amount contributed by that particular district.

21379. Then the Guardians are not in favour of a change of the present system?—Entirely opposed to any change, and they think it is entirely against the principles of local self-government to extend the area, but localise control and responsibility for the maintenance of the poor within the district. Improve the hospital if you wish, improve the treatment of the sick, but by all means leave the whole control and the responsibility in the hands of the people of the union.

21380. Would you allow all the different classes to remain in the workhouse as they do at present?—The only people that our Board consider should be removed from the workhouse are the insane and epileptic, and those they consider should be treated in an asylum controlled and financed by the County Council—never in the workhouse. We have had a good deal of trouble in these cases in conveying these people when they become refractory into the central asylum.

21381. With that exception, you are in favour of a continuance of the present system as it exists?—As it exists, and it is the unanimous wish of every member of our Board, and I believe every person in the district.

21382. There is a strong feeling on the subject?—Yes, that they should be left to control and manage their own affairs. We have done our best as far as possible to centralise the management of the business of the district and improve the conditions existing at present. We have improved our hospital, and it is in charge of a practitioner second to none in the country, and when operations have to be performed he has the assistance of the local practitioners, one or the other, as the case comes from the particular dispensary districts embraced within our union.

21383. And you have good nursing there?—Yes, our nursing staff has been increased since the passing of the Local Government Act. We have got in six extra wardmen, and in addition to the three men nurses that have been there, we have a trained nurse. We are building apartments for that trained nurse, and have all arrangements made for the building of an additional fever hospital for males and converting the old fever hospital into a consumptive ward. We have gone to a great deal of expense both as regards the increase of the nursing staff and as regards the general maintenance and treatment, and we find that we have been able by carefully attending to the business of the union to keep the rates within the limits of the standard rate. This year it has gone just a halfpenny in the £ over the standard rate.

21384. Have you a lower rate than Clonsilla?—Considerably lower.

21385. And of any other adjacent union?—It is not lower than Cashel, but with the exception of Cashel our rate is lower than the general average.

21386. Compare well with Mitchelstown and Lisnacrogha?—We don't mind them; we want to keep the County Tipperary distinct.

21387. But your rates are lower in Clonsilla?—It is in the present rate for union charges, and I think if you go in for some proposals I have heard here and amalgamate rates and make a county-at-large rate, you will do away with the efficiency of local management. Centralisation inevitably leads to extravagance. The only little departure I would have is giving the control and management of epidemic relief to members representing dispensary districts.

21388. Would you put the charge on that district or the union at large?—The charge of expenditure by committees should be borne by the districts those committees represent.

MR. THOMAS RYAN EXAMINED.

I am Chairman of the Poor Law Guardians of Thurles.

21389. CHAIRMAN.—What is the view of your Guardians?—They are for amalgamation.

21390. Would they wish to break up Thurles, or keep on Thurles and break up some other union?—Certainly, they wish to keep on Thurles.

21391. And break up Cashel?—Borrisokane, Urtingford, and Roscrea.

21392. What do you think about Cashel?—You have heard a good deal about Cashel already.

21393. You would rather say nothing about Cashel, but if Cashel or Thurles had to go, which would you wish to stay?—I would prefer Cashel to go.

21394. But your Board is in favour of a general system of amalgamation which would provide a better system of classification?—Certainly.

21395. And you think diseased workhouses could be used as auxiliary asylums or industrial schools or factories for industrial purposes?—Yes, that is the conclusion.

21396. You don't think any further accommodation is necessary in the way of hospitals? You are well hospitalised in Thurles. As regards the system of contribution or payment by the sick when they go into hospital, you say "We consider it would be desirable to introduce a system of payment by which the sick poor in fever hospitals or infirmaries should be made to contribute the full cost of their treatment when they can afford it"?—Yes.

21397. Would you think it much better, perhaps, if you gave the discretion to the Board of Guardians to charge each an amount as the patient or his friends could afford to pay?—I think the difference would not be much.

21398. It would. If a patient could afford, or the parents of a child could afford, to pay £d. a week, that would be something. Would you wish to have power to charge that and recover it at law if disputed?—I would.

MR. JAMES HACKETT EXAMINED.

I am Chairman of the Rural District Council. My views are contained exactly in the documents sent to you.

Mr. James Hackett.

MR. JAMES J. RYAN EXAMINED.

I am Chairman of the Thurles Urban Council. Their view is they are in favour of amalgamation for the purpose of classification. One of the workhouses could be utilised for children as in Glin, another for old and infirm, and another for sick, and one as an auxiliary asylum.

21405. CHAIRMAN.—You might have the sick treated

21406. You say the Guardians can suggest no better system than the present for dealing with tramps. Do you find you have a good many?—We do. They have to break a certain amount of stones before getting away in the morning, and they find that pretty hard; but when we have the amalgamation they will have a little further additional work and we won't have so many. For instance, Urtingford is only eight English miles from Thurles; they have only a short day's journey there.

21407. Would you be in favour of some plan of abolishing them altogether if you could do it—take them off the road and put them in some place where they should work?—I would. I would be in favour of what you have heard already, to have police supervision over them. We adopted the boarding-out system some years ago, and pretty extensively, too, and we found it was not working very well, and we had a ladies' committee appointed, and while they had control of it it worked fairly well.

21408. Why did you take it away from the ladies?—The ladies left us.

21409. Do you think you could not get them to go back again?—I believe it is impossible to get some of them back. We have at present only three boarded-out children. We consider they are better done for inside. When we send them out those who apply for them only want to make money of them, and they don't send them to school, and they apply for clothes and let them drag about.

21410. Is that what you heard, or do you know it to be the case?—I know it to be the case; the relieving officer brings me in returns.

21411. Would you mind getting me a few of the reports from the relieving officers mentioning the want of interest these people have in the children and their anxiety to pull what they can out of the Guardians? I would be very glad to get these reports and look into them?—It is easy to get them.

Mr. James J. Ryan.

June 22, 1904.

Mr. James J. Ryan.

21406. You could get all the chronic cases into one and keep the acute cases locally?—Certainly.

21407. You agree with that view?—I do.

21408. Is there anything else specially about Thunders?—I think the children ought to be boarded out. The system is a good one, but liable to grave abuses.

21409. It wants good inspection?—More inspection.

21410. The last Guardian told us that the ladies' committee had ceased to act?—That is easily got over. I think when children are sixteen or fourteen they ought to be sent to a school like Glm, where they would be taught trades.

21411. When we want agricultural labourers in the country, why would we teach them trades?—We could teach some of them farming. When children grow up to a certain age they get beyond the control of the people who have them.

21412. All our children do that at a certain age?—I think this class of children do more than any others.

21413. What good would it do to make a carpenter of an unruly chimp?—You are trying to make tradesmen of them at present in the workhouse, and it is a failure.

21414. Do you think it would be a proper thing to make tradesmen of these waifs and strays and put them in a better position than the children of small ratepayers?—Many a waif made a good tradesman.

21415. Let him work into it himself. Don't provide for him by public money?—I would facilitate him.

21416. Don't you think it is better to facilitate him to live the life of an agricultural labourer, which is most wanted in the country?—I certainly think so. I would not send tramps to workhouses at all; I would have a ward in town for them. I think a workhouse is not a proper place in which to send them.

21417. Who would manage that ward?—The same as they do in England—have a man in charge of it.

21418. Under the Poor Law?—Under the Poor Law.

21419. A separate building, where they would be kept severely to labour?—Yes.

21420. You would have a small number in it?—We always have a small number; they don't average more than six.

21421. And having a highly-paid body of men to look after them? Would it not be a waste of labour? You would want someone to clean it up?—You would have the satisfaction of keeping them isolated.

21422. Supposing you put them into one big institution for lunatics?—That is when you use restrictive measures.

21423. Would you approve of that?—Yes, with those that were confirmed tramps.

21424. Those that a court of justice would find were no use for anybody but living on society?—They do live on society.

Dr. KENNEDY examined.

Dr. Kennedy.

21425. CHAIRMAN.—We would be very glad to hear your views. The chief subject on which you wish to give evidence is the boarding out of children?—The boarding out of children and increasing the outdoor relief of aged people.

21426. What are your views?—My union, Clogheen, is opposed to the boarding out of children, and I am more or less substantially in agreement with them. I have my views on the fact that the people to whom these children would be entrusted are in very many cases unfit to take care of them. First, they have unsanitary houses, and, secondly, I am not quite satisfied with the way they take care of their own children as regards cleanliness of their dressed person, and you cannot expect that they will take better care of other children than of their own, and though I say this of my own union, I don't think it is inferior in any way to any other union. Visiting the houses of the poor, I have great experience of their condition. I have found the clothes of the children anything but clean, and the sanitary surroundings very poor again and again. We have made a great improvement since the Labourers' Acts. There could be no greater blessing, and I am of opinion that phthisis has lessened since the Labourers' Acts. I won't find the same number of cases in labourers' cottages as in the mountain huts.

21427. This unsanitary, dirty, and venereal condition you find equally among the ordinary children and the boarded-out children? You don't find it exceptionally in the case any more than in the other class?—I would not say so, that they would neglect the boarded-out children any more, but they won't take more care of them than of their own.

21428. But their own are in that condition?—Generally speaking, very often.

21429. The tendency is to improve?—Yes.

21430. Of course, we would all like the children to be clean and free from vermin, but would you ask it for the boarded-out children more than for the children of the small ratepayers?—I would in this way: I would like to do my best for these children, and by doing my best for them I think I would be keeping them in the workhouse. They are kept scrupulously clean and are regularly bathed, and they have very reliable people to take care of them, who have leisure and the necessary training to instil good manners and morals into these children, and I don't see why they should not have as good air in the workhouse as out of it. They can be walked out in the evening.

21431. What do you think about their after-care in life? Would they get on as well outside as the boarded-out children? They will not for farm purposes, if you want them as agricultural labourers. If a child commences little jobs at the beginning he will grow gradually familiar with farm work. My idea would be to rear him to a certain age in the workhouse and then send him to an industrial school to learn a trade. It may be objected that that would put him in a better condition. It is open to that, but still I think we should do the best for them, as they have been entrusted to our care.

21432. Mr. MURPHY.—Do you say the manners and morals of children reared in the workhouse are better than those of the children reared outside?—I would not say that, but there are better opportunities for cultivating these manners in a workhouse than outside.

21433. How are these opportunities better?—I consider a school teacher, let him be male or female, must be a man or woman of character, high character, and you cannot guarantee that for the people to whom you will entrust these children.

21434. Is not the school teacher outside a man of equally high character?—Certainly, but the children will not always be under the care of the teacher outside, whereas in the workhouse they are always under his care.

21435. Don't they get associating with other inmates?—If a proper classification is carried out, they cannot.

21436. Can it always be maintained?—I don't see why it should not. It is luxury on the part of the master or mistress if they don't maintain proper classification.

21437. Have you looked into the after-life of these children?—I have. It may be said in after-life they are well-to-do and criminals, but you must bear in mind that these are children of a tainted inheritance, and that counts for a good deal; you cannot ignore it.

21438. That only partly affects the question I put. Have you ever traced the history of children reared in workhouses and traced the history of children born in the workhouse and boarded outside, and how their careers compare?—Boarding out is in its infancy; it is rather early to make these comparisons. So far as I am concerned, I cannot give an opinion.

21439. Dr. BAKER.—Therefore you only know the one side?—I just know the side I have spoken about.

21440. Is that a proper thing to give evidence upon if you only know one side and are comparing it with another side that you don't know?—I am not comparing it; I am only comparing it generally with the children of the poor outside and how they are kept.

21441. Do not the poor outside follow useful lives?—Oh, certainly, as well as they can.

21442. Do you get many of that class afterwards drifting into the workhouses or the same proportion?—I am told by the clerk of the union that very few find their way back into the Clogheen Workhouse.

21443. That is not our experience?—I asked that because I have heard it alleged that they found their way back, and I asked about Cloughen Union. My experience is only about Cloughen.

21444. You seem to be taking the part of those brought up in the workhouse, and say their heredity accounts for a good deal?—I certainly said that.

21445. Therefore you are making an excuse for them?—I am not. Don't take me as saying that they develop into very excellent characters, but I say when they become criminals their tainted inheritances may account for it, not their training.

21446. CHAIRMAN.—Would you not rely more on association than heredity?—I would not; in some cases I would, but their associations in the workhouse are chiefly with the schoolmaster and schoolmistress, therefore on the ground of association they ought to be excellent, but I account for their not being by the question of their tainted inheritances.

21447. Are they not also with the children of tramps and criminals and are and cove?—We have not a good deal of those children in Cloughen. I would make better classification altogether. I would have them as a ward to themselves if possible, and not let them mix with the children born there.

21448. At present they do mix with them?—As far as they come in.

21449. Dr. BIGGS.—How many children have you followed in their after-life after being reared in the workhouse?—I cannot follow them very far. Some have gone to America, and, judging from the accounts, have done very well.

21450. Have you taken any list, and gone through the list and followed as far as you were able?—I never did that; it was not possible to do it.

21451. If you took a list of those boarded out and did that you would be surprised to find how well they have done. Would your opinion be altered if you knew from some person of experience what happened to the boarded-out children and found most of them did well and merged into the general population?—If I had an account of how the children indoors did I would compare one with another, and all things being equal, my mind is open on it.

21452. Mr. MURRAY.—There are we to understand you have really no personal experience as to the relative value of boarding out children or keeping them in the workhouse?—I have not any very great experience, and I think very few people have, because I believe it is thoroughly impossible to gain that experience, because most of them emigrate.

21453. We have found witnesses who said they did keep a record of children passing through their hands for twenty years, and the inevitable report was that the children boarded out had done much better than the children kept in the institution?—I should be glad to hear that, but I think it is extremely difficult to follow up their careers. With the few children who will remain at home you can do it.

21454. Do you think if the Guardians at Cloughen decided on boarding out children could they find homes in the locality?—That is a great difficulty, and they would want to have a perfect system of inspection.

21455. A ladies' committee has been found useful in other unions in the country?—I don't know how it would work in Cloughen—whether there would be ladies who would sympathetically pursue the matter. I know of committees that were appointed and they never did much afterwards. A lot of the poor people in the case of amalgamation would not like to have this union amalgamated with Clonmel simply because they consider their friends would not have access to them. And again, about the boarding out of these poor people. A lot of the outdoor relief goes to pay rack-rents for old unsuitable houses. I think if these people were better classified inside of the workhouse, and if we tried to make it more of a home for them than a workhouse, they would frequent it much more. They do frequent it now, because there is often friction between the mother-in-law and the daughter-in-law, and the mother-in-law goes to the workhouse.

Mr. M. F. ROSE-LEWIS, Clerk.—The Cloughen Guardians have never adopted the boarding-out system. It was simply hiring out the children reared in the workhouse, and as far as my experience of the Cloughen Union is concerned, none have ever returned except a few of the boys who enlisted in the army and have returned for a few days.

21456. Dr. BIGGS.—You are only speaking for the Cloughen Workhouse. We don't know how many have gone into other workhouses.

Mr. ROSE-LEWIS.—Yes.

Mr. JAMES GALVIN, Vice-Chairman, Cloughen Union.

I must say, as representing the extreme West, that hardship on the destitute poor.

amalgamation in whole or in part, would be a great

Mr. James Galvin.

Mr. RICHARD CHADWICK examined.

21457. CHAIRMAN.—You are the Vice-Chairman of the Central Board of Guardians?—Yes.

21458. Tell us generally the views of your Board on the question of the amalgamation of unions?—Our Board would not be for amalgamation with other unions because our rates are so much lower than in the adjoining unions.

21459. You think you would have to pay more if you took in adjoining territory?—No, but if we were amalgamated with another union, our rate is so much less than in all the other unions, and, besides, we are paying 5s. in the £, which is included in that rate for the railway from Clonmel to Thurles.

Mr. W. PHOEN, Clerk.—There are only a few years more to run.

21460. What is your present rate for union purposes?—1s. 9d. for all purposes.

Mr. PHOEN.—About 1s. 8d. for union purposes.

Witness.—I think we would all like to see the imbecile taken from the union.

21461. And put into better quarters?—Yes.

21462. Is there any other class you would remove from the workhouse?—We are going to try to board out the children now.

21463. And appoint a ladies' committee?—I suppose they will.

21464. You will find that a great help to you. They will look into matters that a man would not think of?—Cash is so central between Thurles, Clonmel, and Tipperary that we get all the tramps from the three places, and if they were put under police control it would be a great help to the unions.

21465. Would you put them under police supervision or under restraint in a place where they would have to work for their food?—I think if they were put somewhere where they had to work for their food it would be far better. They do that in Germany, and if the children were taken away from there, for the children follow on the same lines. It is something awful with us.

21466. What would you think about the girls who come in to have children?—I would not like the present system to continue, because when they go out they come back again. I think I would take your suggestion on that.

21467. That is a penitentiary?—Yes, they come back again.

21468. What class would you continue to keep in the workhouse?—I would keep the sick there certainly, and the aged and infirm.

21469. That would be nearly all your inmates?—We have very few able-bodied.

21470. Is there anything that occurs to you that I have not asked about?—I don't think there is; but that is our objection altogether to amalgamation—our rates are so much lower, and our outdoor relief has decreased.

21471. If by any change we could suggest your rates were diminished, would you be in favour of the change then? If by sending your aged and infirm, for instance, to a general county institution, would you be in favour of such a move, if you found you had to pay a lower rate?—Certainly I would if I found we had to pay a lower rate.

Mr. Richard Chadwick.

Mr. James Galvin.

Dr. Thomas Wood.

Dr. THOMAS WOOD EXAMINED.

I represent the Urban District Council of Cashel.
21472. CHAIRMAN.—What is the view of the Urban Council about the continuance of the workhouse in Cashel?—They would not like to have it done away with.

21473. Why would they wish it to remain?—It is an institution that is working very well and giving a good deal of satisfaction, and the people of the district are pleased with the way things are done there.

21474. If you found you would save money by closing it to all except the sick would you be in favour of that?—That would have to be shown to them very clearly.

21475. Certainly, I am not talking of a mere speculation, but if it could be established, would you be in favour of closing the house except for the sick?—That is a question they have not gone into. I could not give you an answer on that.

21476. Why do you hesitate to give an answer on that?—That is a question we have not considered. Our Union is working very well, and our rates are so low we don't think you could make them less than they are.

21477. But if it could be made lower and you had less to contribute to officers' salaries, assuming you could have a substantial saving?—Of course, that would be a very important matter. I would not altogether agree with General Maugham about reducing the number of members. I was a member of the old Board and I am a member of the present, and I think the present system works very well, at all events in Cashel.

21478. How many Guardians have you?—Fifty-four.

21479. How many had you under the old system?—Mr. Phelan.—Forty-eight.

Witness.—The ex-officio need not to attend except occasionally. I would be inclined to give the board-out system a chance, but I am not very sanguine about its success.

21480. If the lady Inspector of the district visits you and explains it more thoroughly, I am sure you will then be willing to try it?—The difficulty is the class of people who would take these children in charge. I am afraid they would not do it through motives of philanthropy.

21481. There are a great many things we do that are very good, and we don't all do it through philanthropy. It is a great thing for these poor people to get 25 of dry money in the year?—Yes, but some of these children are talented, and respectable, poor people would not like to take them, but I would be very much inclined all the same to give it a chance.

Very Rev. Dean WHITE, B.A., EXAMINED.

Very Rev. Dean White.

I have a letter here from Dean Kinane:—

"Cashel, June 22nd, 1904.

"Gentlemen,—I am sorry that important and sudden parochial duties prevent me from going to Clonmel to-day. From long experience I am most happy to testify that the county infirmary is doing splendid work, and that the officials are giving general satisfaction to the public.—I remain, gentlemen, yours truly,

"T. H. KINANE, P.P., V.C., Dean, &c."

I endorse everything Dean Kinane has said. It has been an old institution, and for years and years has done splendid work, and in the neighbourhood of Cashel and all round it is a most popular institution. The only objections I have heard to it are that the people who live in the North Riding don't get value for the money they are paying.

21482. That is obvious?—I suppose it is. We cannot deny that that is the objection, but as far as Clonmel and all round Cashel, so far as that part of the country is concerned, they are all delighted with it. We often get cases from Clonmel and near Clonmel and Thurles, and the beds are very well filled.

21483. Multumhane?—Yes, we get them from there, and I don't think an institution could do better work than it is doing.

21484. I suppose the state of uncertainty you are in just now about the continuance of various institutions in the county would account for your not having done something towards putting it in a more up-to-date condition structurally?—Yes, but still it is very fair. A good deal has been done and new beds put in.

21485. Well, a good deal would be necessary if you thought it wise to incur the expenditure?—I am strongly of opinion that that should be an institution kept for acute diseases. A good deal has been said lately about levelling up the workhouse hospitals. Well, at the same time, there is a certain class of people who never like to go to the workhouses. There is no such objection to the infirmaries, and I don't believe in levelling up, because it would be the workhouse all through.

21486. If one got out all the various objectionable classes now in the workhouse, I think you would find that that feeling would disappear, though there might be a certain amount of objection?—That institution has done wonderful work ever since it began.

21487. You seem to be a most harmonious and active committee?—We are active, but we are not so harmonious as that always, but otherwise, you know, as the life of trade, and I think we are all a good deal better for having little discussions on subjects in which we don't all hold the same opinions.

21488. Doctors differ occasionally?—So it appears.

21489. What is your income for the infirmary?

Dr. Wood.—There is £200 from the South Riding and £200 from the North—that is £400.

Witness.—The subscriptions are about £70.

21490. So it is under £1,200?—Yes.

21491. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you not see a hardship on these districts that get no benefit for the money they give?—Did I not mention that as an objection at the commencement?

21492. Can you see any way of getting over that?—No, I do not.

21493. Would you think it fair that that should continue?—I would, for although they are very distant, still a good many come from the North Riding.

21494. Is there not something really sound in what has been said about these workhouse infirmaries—that they are being brought up to a standard now almost equal to what the infirmary standard was ten years ago?—Possibly.

21495. Do you agree with the statement that the county infirmary might be done away with?—No, I would keep it for acute cases and cases of operations.

21496. The local hospital would treat surgical and acute cases?—It has not up to the present. Cases of cutting off legs and serious operations always came to the county infirmary.

21497. Dr. BROOKS.—Do you know the average number of inmates?—Dr. Russell can tell you.

21498. The only thing that would strike one is that you would require a large sum to make some modern improvements in the infirmary. Is there any chance of getting that?—We had a bazaar and raised a good deal. I think there is quite a chance. We might get up a bazaar and entertainment.

21499. It is worked as economically, I suppose, as possible?—I think so.

21500. But it is rather limited in funds?—It is.

Dr. GEORGE RUSSELL, Surgeon, County Infirmary, examined.

Dr. George Russell.

21501. Dr. BROOKS.—Can you tell me how many inmates there are on an average?—I have taken it for the past five years. In the year 1899-1900 there were 474 intern patients and 2,735 extern patients.

21502. What would be the average daily number in hospital?—The average daily number is not kept, but I should say it would be about 38 to 40.

21503. Then that would run down your average cost is nearly £30 a year for each inmate.—The yearly average is not kept.

21534. That is very cheap.—We don't expend £1,300. Our total income is £1,000 from the county, £1,300, and the amount of money from private sale, £1,300 last year amounted to £300 ft. 6d. This sum I don't know what it is. It is not anything like what I don't know what it is. It is about £1,100 a year. Then last year there were 483 intern patients and 2,531 extern. 1903-04, there were 505 intern and 2,885 extern, and last year 443 intern and 2,892 extern patients.

21535. Do these patients come from all over the county?—Yes, they come from all parts, but of course the larger number naturally come from near at hand.

21536. But you do get cases from Clonsilla and Clonsilla?—Yes, we get them sometimes from the banks of the Shannon opposite Kilsbane.

21537. Templemore?—A good many from Templemore, but now that railway communication will be established with Clonsilla in a few months' time, I expect there will be a great many more coming from places that were almost inaccessible before.

21538. Have you thought of any system whereby there might be more co-operation between the county infirmary and other hospitals in the county?—I have a very strong feeling on the subject of consumption.

I certainly think there ought to be no admittance for consumptives into general hospitals; there ought to be an hospital set apart entirely for the consumptives of the county.

21539. You don't take these cases in at present?—I have to sometimes when patients come a long way—seven or eight or sixteen miles—and are in a pretty bad state. The mere fact of telling them to go home might be the cause of their death. You have to make provision for them some way or other, but we have as few as possible.

21540. If with Tipperary or Clonsilla or Clonsilla there was some arrangement whereby you might get the major operation cases transferred to the county infirmary?—That would be a very excellent idea.

21541. Instead of sending those cases to Dublin if you could treat them in the county infirmary, I don't know whether you would not require some alterations in the infirmary?—I am trying to get an operating room with modern up-to-date furniture, and we want certain other alterations carried out, but while we are in uncertainty we don't like laying out money.

21542. Is there any chance of the county subscribing more than £1,000 a year?—There might be possibly. I would not like to offer an opinion on that point; they have never been asked for it.

Mrs Rebecca Green examined.

21543. CHAIRMAN.—What are your views about the amalgamation of unions?—I give evidence on behalf of the Women's Suffrage and Local Government Association, of which I am a member.

21544. That is a Dublin body?—Yes, but it has members throughout Ireland.

21545. What do you think in Carrick?—I approve of amalgamation to a certain extent. Our workhouse was built for nearly 600 people. We are down now to about 150, and it is a great waste to be keeping up an establishment for such a small quantity.

21546. Would you be satisfied yourself personally with a hospital in Carrick that would provide sufficient accommodation for treating the acute sick?—Yes, certainly, because our Board at present represents three counties—Kilkenny, Tipperary, and Waterford—and I consider the Kilkenny people might be sent to the workhouse in Kilkenny, the Waterford members to some place in Waterford, and the Tipperary to some place in Tipperary; but I would retain the hospital.

21547. And Carrick-on-Suir might be broken up as a workhouse?—We should retain a hospital of some kind.

21548. But as a workhouse it would disappear?—Certainly.

21549. Is that the opinion of the majority of your Guardians?—I was not present at the meeting when the questions were answered. You have their answers, and I believe they approved of amalgamation because they considered we are so reduced in numbers.

21550. They say the Guardians are in favour of amalgamation, feeling satisfied that ample provision can be made for the sick in the fever hospital of the workhouse so long vacant, added by district hospitals?—I could not agree in that about the fever hospital, because it is in a bad situation—too low.

21551. But it is not damp?—It would take an immense amount of money to put it into repair and make officers' apartments. As long as we have it as a hospital we get it at a very low rate.

21552. You cannot use it for any other purpose?—I am not sure whether you would call an auxiliary as an hospital. I suppose you might, but it is in a very bad situation, and is very much disliked by the townspeople.

21553. You don't think that could be converted with the approval of the townspeople into a general hospital?—I think it would be very expensive to improve it properly and make a proper hospital of it.

21554. In looking over it we saw certain possibilities about it?—Yes, if we were prepared to spend money on it.

21555. But you tell us there is a hostile feeling towards it amongst the people of Carrick?—Well, it is in a bad situation; it is on the river bank; it would be hard to drain.

21556. Is it ever flooded?—The grounds in front are flooded, and the dispensary is flooded by back-water. I would be inclined though to remove the fever patients to the block of the present hospital or a part of the workhouse, and have the one nursing staff. It is perfectly absurd to keep a second nursing staff and pay them for doing nothing.

21557. You have only one woman acting as a nurse in the fever hospital?—We have two. We do get a trained nurse whenever a case of fever comes in. The person we have is not a trained nurse.

21558. No, she is a woman of a very long experience?—Of very ancient history. She is a very capable woman to take charge of the place.

21559. The Guardians would be in favour of using the workhouse as a district auxiliary infantic asylum?—Yes, if it could be suitably arranged.

21560. If they did that you would be in favour of keeping over a couple of blocks of it for the sick and infectious diseases?—We have plenty of room at present for the sick if we take our chronic cases out of it. I would keep a small block for fever patients, and would give up the remainder for anything else that was wanted. I would rather give the inmates the fever hospital.

21561. It would hardly be suitable for the inmates—people who are going about on their feet?—Beautiful ground—there is a good expanse of ground. I don't think any harm could come to them.

21562. It would hold very few feet?—It would. I quite agree about making it into a hospital if it could be properly made, but I think the expenditure would be great. There is no sanitary system there now.

21563. There is plenty of ground?—Yes.

21564. The Guardians say greater facilities might be given to Boards of Guardians as to the administration of outdoor relief under certain conditions and restrictions to be fully defined. That is in favour of enabling Guardians to give relief to some classes that don't at present get it?—I don't know what the Guardians meant by putting that in. I believe it was that some older people might get a larger amount of outdoor relief to keep them out.

21565. One of the classes that cannot get relief now is the case of a widow with one child. Would you be in favour of including her?—I think the system of outdoor relief is very much abused, and I think it requires inspection, which it does not get.

21566. Do the Guardians not inspect it at all themselves?—At the Board we look through the list, but why should not an inspector inspect some of the cases personally?

21567. I think he would if you called his attention to it?—It would be much better to have it a divisional charge.

21568. That would be hardly fair to the towns?—Yes, but there are people in the country who get a certain number of townspeople to come and vote outdoor relief for them where perhaps they don't want it. On the question of giving old people outdoor relief, my opinion is that if some of the children of these old people could be made contribute, that is to say, we would give so much if they gave so much; it is rather increasing at present. When children are grown up and married, and perhaps not married but working, they are very ready to relieve their parents on the union when many of them could support them or give something towards their support.

21539. You say all deserted children should be boarded out, and all children are eligible for boarding out should be sent to local day-schools. Would you be in favour of a still wider extension of that and give the Guardians power to board out every child they had control over?—I feel rather strongly on that point, that parents should not be relieved of the responsibility of their children.

21540. It would not be a question of relieving them so much as of depriving them of the society of their children?—Some of them would be very glad to be deprived of the society of their children.

21541. If they were deprived on account of bad character would you be in favour of locking them up as long as these children were supported at the public expense?—I would not lock them up, but I would keep them so, so that they could not go away when they had got rid of their children.

21542. In a labour colony?—Oh, yes, certainly. I would not take children away from tramps or casuals and let them go free.

21543. No, that would not do. Then as regards getting situations for children, what is your experience?—It is exceedingly difficult to get situations for children that have been reared in the workhouse.

21544. Do you find it necessary to look at all about the boarded-out children, or do they manage to get situations and a living for themselves?—They get on very much better. Of course, they require supervision.

21545. You find it hard to get situations for children who are ready to go out of the workhouse?—Exceedingly hard.

21546. Do they come back to you again?—Yes, some of them find fault with the situations they have been in because they are too lazy to work.

21547. Are there many cases of which you have personal knowledge?—I have personal knowledge of one case sent out to two good situations, and absolutely refused to work in either of them. Personally I know them to be good situations, and her own determination was to remain in the workhouse or to be allowed to go out and do as she liked.

21548. Have you other cases?—You must remember I have only been five years a Guardian. There are other cases of children who have been troublesome about leaving their situations. That case was before my mind; I had a great deal of trouble over it. But by the boarding-out system, there is no doubt they get absorbed into the population. A board-out child from the workhouse is not always well treated, and even the very best of them are branded with the workhouse practically all their lives. They have the taint of the workhouse about them.

21549. Who have?—The children that have been reared in the workhouse.

21550. Do you mean to say they are not handy and useful?—They are not handy and useful, and another thing is that their manners and morals have more the taint of the workhouse.

21551. What do you mean by the taint of the workhouse?—They use bad language and mix with bad company.

21552. How do you think they pick up their bad language?—They mix with their parents and there are peeper assistants, and they get in communication with the peepers.

21553. And you think their language is not edifying or proper?—It is most improper. In some of the cases mentioned here to-day, perhaps, the difficulty has been that not enough has been paid for the children.

21554. The case that General Maury mentioned—28 10s. 1.—I think that is plenty; but perhaps General Maury did not know, as he said he did not, that you could board them outside the union; but there is a difficulty about that on account of supervision.

21555. That is not insensible?—Then you mentioned about the committee—that is practically a dead letter.

21556. Have you a ladies' committee in Carrick?—We have on paper.

21557. Are you on paper there?—Well, I am not on paper.

21558. What do your committee do?—Nothing, except that their names are read out once a year.

21559. Don't you meet and go round and inspect?—I have tried a good many and none of them would come.

21560. There are some children boarded out within a reasonable distance of your own home—say within three or four miles?—That is the very nearest. It would take four hours of a journey to see some, and it is pretty stiff, uphill. Our expenses are not allowed, which is the difficulty.

21561. On a cycle?—Our bicycles wear out, and we are not allowed a new one.

21562. If you had children near you, you could inspect a few children yourself?—I do inspect a few; I tried to inspect them all.

21563. Tell us about your inspection; how do you find them?—Very well cared indeed as a rule and very satisfactory, and I do find that what are called our children are better cared than they care their own children, because they are afraid of our inspection. I have seen them better dressed and better washed than their own children owing to not knowing when to wash and when to dress.

21564. Then the inspection is not so bad in Carrick?—It is very bad, because it is all on paper except the inspection. The visiting committee, generally speaking, is an unsatisfactory system, because you cannot get ladies in many country districts.

21565. To agree to meet at some hour?—Or spend their time inspecting.

21567. The following officer, of course, immediately. Well, I won't say anything about that. I think a female relieving officer should be appointed. If that is a system of amalgamation is carried out, and hospitals near the country dispensaries—21568. You mean practically a dispensary hospital?—Yes, under the dispensary doctor.

21569. That would be a great number?—I would not put one in every dispensary until we saw how it would work.

21570. Take your own union. Do you think any dispensary district hospital would be desirable there?—I think Carrick would be within reasonable distance of all.

21571. I think you will find that will be the case in most unions. There are some unions in the West of Ireland where the distances are very great, but a Guardian here pointed out that nearly all the unions were ten miles from each other?—Yes, but if you dropped some of the unions.

21572. But you would still keep up the accommodation for the sick in all these?—I could not answer for the others. I only propose having a small plot if there was not a district hospital within easy reach.

21573. But if the district hospital were kept up where the old workhouse was?—Then there would be no occasion.

21574. You are in favour of a district nursing system for sick and urgent cases?—I consider, in the first instance, that all the midwives should be under inspection.

21575. They all are?—They are not under formal inspection?—I mean to say that trained nurses don't go round and inspect them at their own.

21576. But the doctor of the district?—The doctor of the district under the present system very often never sees the case, because a blue ticket is issued, and the doctor now may never see the case.

21577. But still he is responsible; I am sure he feels himself responsible for the success of these cases, and he sees the midwife very often. Don't you think he would bring anything forward?—A great many cases he never sees nor hears of on account of the blue ticket system.

21578. You know, it is the duty of the midwife to send for him if she thinks he is required?—Yes, but that is not inspecting her at work in an ordinary case.

21579. I don't see what better inspection you could have than the inspection of the dispensary doctor, who would see her at a great many cases?—Oh, no; in cases where the doctor is called in, but not where he is not called in.

June 22, 1944

Miss Rebecca Grubb.

2598. But he would see her and have a very good knowledge of her way, and if she was not a good woman the probability is the doctor would be called in a good deal—I have seen where inspection did such good, and if there was inspection a great deal of good would be done because we would get a better class of midwife.

2600. How do they go?—By train to Waterford and to Dublin.

2601. Not to Cashel?—No; Waterford is the nearest to us.

2602. The insane—you would not have these retained in workhouses?—No; the insane and epileptic ought not to be retained in workhouses.

2603. As regards recompense for contributions from patients, you would be in favour of giving the Guardians power to fix rates of payment and proceed for them?—Yes.

2604. Now about tramps?—I think our Irish law ought to be made practically the same as the English law, and give these power of detention; but I also don't think that is an effective case. In England they propose to put these who work into labour colonies. I also think that work ought to be made more compulsory in workhouses than it is. Ours are not asked to work.

2605. If this new system was put in force tramps would not go to workhouses?—No, I agree they ought to be under police supervision. There is no doubt a consumption hospital is very much wanted in the south. It is almost impossible to get a vacancy in the present Newcastle hospital. You generally have to wait until your patient is dead.

2606. The increase of consumption is very great, and people now are more willing to be treated in a regular sanatorium?—Yes, much more willing and more anxious.

2607. Dr. Brogan.—What suggestion do you offer regarding the treatment of consumptives?—That they should be treated in a consumption hospital.

2608. For what district?—One for the south if you can get a suitable one.

2609. There is one at Cork or going to be?—But it is not yet, and I don't think that would take all the cases from the south. It is something appalling the increase with us.

2610. I think the statistics have shown that there has been an increase all over Ireland. Would you propose that there should be one for a county or a combination of counties?—One for two counties, I think, would do. I don't know the statistics sufficiently.

2611. But you would have to consider the cost. Perhaps one for two or three counties to start with?—We have power at present to build. We could get a provisional order from the County Council. Then about women who come in with children, I think that there ought certainly not to be kept in the workhouse, because the time before and after is the time they get so much babies mixing with others, and I think the suggestion to send them to other places would be the best, provided there was supervision and they were not allowed to remain there. Then there are some of these institutions mentioned where they do not take them.

2612. CHAIRMAN. Where they are really only for abandoned characters?—Yes, and where they won't take the children.

2613. I don't think they will take the child in any of them?—Then what becomes of the child?—There is the difficulty. There is, no doubt, a great many of these cases do get harm by being in the workhouses. And I also think the law ought to be altered. At present the Irish law is most difficult.

2614. You would have the same bastardy law as in England?—Yes, I think that is very important.

2615. Dr. Brogan.—You don't propose in the small village hospitals that they should do all the operations and treat all the cases?—Oh, no, certainly not; I would send any operation I could away.

2616. Where?—I would send operations to Dublin or to the county infirmary.

2617. You would not approve of the system of interchange of nurses?—Yes, I think there ought to be trained nurses, not qualified nurses. If you have a nurse trained at all she should be properly trained and finished, not what is called qualified.

2618. Some of the qualified nurses are very well trained?—But they have not finished their three years' course.

2619. CHAIRMAN.—Two years is considered enough by a great many people who know better than we in England, Ireland, and Scotland?—I know it is, but I would like to see a nurse go through a large hospital, not through an ordinary country workhouse.

2620. They are not recognised from ordinary workhouses?—Cork and Waterford are recognised.

2621. CHAIRMAN.—Waterford is recognised for full training.

Dr. Brogan.—That is the workhouse and county infirmary joined?—That is only now. I think no nurse should be called qualified if she is not finished entirely.

Dr. Brogan.—In the Dublin hospitals, where they are required to stay for four years, you get very few trained.

2622. CHAIRMAN.—You have to work up by degrees to the best, not get it all at once?—I would not take a qualified nurse.

2623. We are all agreed on that, but cannot get it?—Because the system was intended of admitting qualified nurses. I am very strong on the question of the children, and I hope everything possibly that can be done will be done to eradicate all the children from all the workhouses. As long as we have them in the workhouses we shall be rearing paupers for Ireland. If they had to be kept, I would keep them away from the workhouses. I very much approve of sending children to day schools instead of having them educated in the workhouses.

Hon. Mrs. DE LA POSE examined.

2624. CHAIRMAN.—You are the Chairmen of the County Board of Guardians. The Guardians have not given their views on paper. Could you tell us generally whether they are in favour of reducing the number of workhouses in the county?—Mr. Maloney, Hon. Mrs. De La Pose, and I think, could better answer that than I. He is the late chairman, and understands it much better than I do.

Mr. J. P. MURPHY examined.

2625. CHAIRMAN.—Will you kindly tell us the views of the County Board of Guardians on the question of reducing or amalgamating the unions?—They have not considered the question at all.

2626. Do you know what their sentiment is?—They think that amalgamation ought to come in some shape or other. At least one or two unions might be closed.

2627. They are not prepared to offer any plan of their own?—They did not, but they think that the unions all over the county could be put into one of these unions if it was dissolved, and they think they might be able to get a capitulation grant.

2628. And there would be a saving?—Yes, 2s. per bed per week, if I remember rightly.

2629. And that would be a saving to the rates. Is Mr. J. P. Maloney.

2630. Is there anything else that occurred to you personally on that question of amalgamation? You have nine unions in the county. Did you take a wide view of the county?—No, we were thinking more of South Tipperary.

2631. What would you do in South Tipperary?—I think if you dissolve a couple of unions it could be managed. I think Clonmel would be one and Cashel. Of course, the difficulty would arise with regard to the dispensing of outdoor relief.

2632. Would you also dissolve Carrick-on-Swift?—I think so.

June 22, 1904. 21615. Would you close the wards of this workhouse for the accommodation of the sick, or would you only close what might be called the healthy part? You would like to keep the hospitals on in each place?—Yes; in the Clonmel Union we board out all the children as far as we can, and I believe it is generally satisfactory.

21616. You have a great many children in the workhouse here—seventy-five?—Yes.

21617. Are some of these eligible for being boarded out?—I think all we have eligible for boarding out we have boarded out.

21618. Would you be in favour of extending the powers to board out all children that might be in your charge?—I would, but I would not take a child from the mother, as it might be a premium on misconduct.

21619. Supposing a mother and child were in the house, you would not separate them?—No. If a mother came in with a child and that child was boarded out, she might go away and come back again.

21620. Take the case of a girl falling for the first time. If she were sent to a penitentiary or place of that sort, and her child were boarded out from her, and the girl was put back in a situation, herself again, is being the belief of the managers of the penitentiary that she might safely be tried again at work or employment, would you then see any objection to separating the mother from the child?—There is an objection all the time; I don't see where you could draw the line.

21621. You would leave that to the discretion of the managers of the penitentiary, if they thought a girl could be trusted to go out and lead a steady life and giving portion of her earnings towards the maintenance of the child—you would be in favour of doing that in the interests of the girl?—It might be tried. We have cases in Clonmel where people have come to the house three or four times.

21622. Is it not the case that they are free to go at any time?—Yes.

21623. And it is because of that that some witnesses have come forward and urged that that system should cease and efforts should be made to reclaim these girls at the start?—I think it would be a good thing. I agree with what Miss Grubb said, that there is a disinclination on the part of people who have been reared in the workhouse to leave it. In Clonmel there is one chap that cannot be got out.

21624. What age is he?—He got married in the house. They sent him to America before the new Act came in force. He came back and married an inmate in the house.

21625. And they went back to their respective parts of the house?—Yes, and still the family grew. We had some cases of girls before our Board who were over the age to go to work, and refused to go, and had to be transferred to the able-bodied side of the house, where they found the conversation more interesting than in the laundry. That proves that the boarding-out system would be the best—to board them out as soon as possible.

21626. Do you find tramps trouble you here?—Yes, a fair share before the rains.

21627. Do you live in the country or in the town?—In the country.

21628. Do you find many about the country?—No many; perhaps one or two a week might call.

21629. Of course you have in every district worsted poor old people who would get charity from the neighbours?—Those are the worst. There is the travelling tramp who goes from one union to another, comes in load, and goes to the next union before a fair or a hen. All these people bring their lady friends with them, and send them into the union to get their night's lodging. If a man who went in there had to break a half set of stones in the morning that would be an annoyance to him, but the ladies are not asked to break anything; the gardeners wait outside to receive the ladies.

Dr. CROGAN, Medical Officer, Clonmel Workhouse, examined.

Dr. CROGAN. 21630. CHAIRMAN.—You have a pretty large number of sick in your hospital here?—On an average about 110 in the infirmary; our average in the fever hospital is rather low.

21631. In winter it goes up even higher?—It has gone up to 180.

21632. You might take 120 as a fair winter average?—That would be a fair average for the winter.

21633. You have got a good staff of nurses for that number?—Yes, and I think though the greater number of our nurses are qualified, they are excellent nurses, fully equal to the trained.

21634. You do train qualified nurses at Clonmel?—Yes.

21635. Dr. BROOKER.—What is your length of service for qualified nurse?—They must be at least two years, all that time spent in the wards; they assist at operations, excisions, amputations, hernia, lithotomy, removal of tumours, in fact all the capital operations. And it is not merely in the Clonmel Workhouse Hospital that these operations are performed; they are also performed in other workhouse hospitals in the county.

21636. Where do you operate?—We have not an operating theatre.

21637. Where do you operate?—In the surgery.

21638. Do you think that is a proper place?—I do not think it is, but I do not wish to call upon the Guardians to go to too much expense.

21639. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose you would be very glad if the Chairman suggested a new operating theatre?—I would. We have a number of paying patients. At least one of the Guardians objects to the number of paying patients.

21640. Dr. BROOKER.—Don't you think a good operating room is essential for the training of nurses?—I should say it is almost essential, if not quite.

21641. How can a nurse know if she has never been shown what arrangements should be made?—If not quite essential, it is almost essential.

21642. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose as soon as this Commission removes any uncertainty from your mind about your continued existence, the Guardians would be willing to consider the provision of a suitable operating room?—I find the Guardians disposed to be very liberal; they have been doing a great deal.

21643. The cost would not be much; just fitting up one room with proper appliances, and water laid on?—No, the expense would not be much.

21644. Mr. MURPHY.—Except in the matter of the operating room, is there anything in your hospital that will not compare favourably with the county infirmaries?—I should say not; and not only in mine, but in some of the other workhouse hospitals.

21645. Dr. BROOKER.—You have a system of training. How many probationers have you?—Eight.

21646. How do they get lectures?—I give them a lecture once a week, my colleagues, Dr. O'Flynn, lecture once a week also, and the trained nurse once a week.

21647. What about the bedside teaching?—We now lose an opportunity of giving these instructions by the bedside, I and my colleague. The trained nurse has been doing it; we have not had her long.

21648. That is essential, too?—Quite essential.

21649. Whether with nurses or medical students, the bedside teaching is really most essential?—It is most important.

21650. CHAIRMAN.—No scheme of amalgamation would, in your opinion, make it feasible that Clonmel Union Infirmary should be touched?—I should say it could not be touched. A large hospital is necessary here. Our population is over 10,000, with a good country round, and the average number of admissions in the year is about 600, not including those from the workhouse; that would be about 75 in the year.

21651. Would you be in favour of making it as hospital more for the acute cases, aged and infirm, and those that require less nursing, and the chronic cases being separated?—I think they should be sent to a separate institution, where they would receive proper care and be looked after when sick.

21652. Could you and your nursing staff do sent justice to the acutely sick if you had those only who were acutely sick?—We do separate them, and they are sent to it frequently, and I think the Local Government Board have received complaints of our sending them from time to time. Some of the Guardians that they know better than the medical men who should be under treatment and who should not.

21653. Mr. MURPHY.—Do you think that the people of Clonmel get any benefit from the county infirmary at Cashel corresponding to the amount of money they have to pay to it—I really cannot say. I don't know of any people from Clonmel who have been there. They may have gone without my knowledge.

21664. Do you think if union hospitals were brought up to a high standard there would be any need for a county infirmary?—I don't like to say a word against any medical institution, but it does seem to me that Cashel is getting the special benefit.

21665. At the expense of other portions of the county?—If you were to press me, I am afraid I should have to agree with you.

21666. Dr. BROCKE.—Of course you are the workhouse medical officer?—I have been for a longer number of years than I would wish to tell.

21667. Have you any views to offer regarding the treatment of consumption?—I think there should be a sanatorium for consumption cases. We have a great many cases of consumption in Clonmel. About one-seventh of the deaths that occur in the workhouse hospital are caused by consumption, and about one-twelfth of the cases treated are cases of phthisis.

21668. CHAIRMAN.—Do you happen to remember the death-rate in the dispensary district?—I am not able to give that.

21669. Dr. BROCKE.—Would you suggest the site of the district the sanatorium might serve?—Two or three corners. I am afraid we would send a great many from Clonmel. All along the valley of the Suir consumption is very prevalent.

21670. Have any means been taken to enlighten the people regarding the prevention of it?—Oh, yes, these posters are to be found everywhere. With regard to the young girls who have fallen for the first time, I think it is a sin and pity that an effort is not made to rescue them from their downward course.

21671. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose you do observe in your long workhouse experience that these girls remain there practically for their lives, in and out increasing their families?—If they spend one year in the workhouse they are lost to all sense of decency and shame, and come in again and again with illegitimate children.

21672. Mr. MURKIN.—Have you any suggestion to make in that respect?—I would send these girls to penitentiaries, but I would have them classified.

21673. CHAIRMAN.—These penitentiaries would be classified. They would only take one class of girls. The classes that take first offenders would not take depraved women.

21674. Mr. MURKIN.—Would you take the children from such mothers?—Those who have fallen only for the first time. I would be very much disposed to bring up their children at the expense of the State.

21675. CHAIRMAN.—Taking contributions from them?—Yes, when recoverable; not relieve them of all responsibility.

Mr. JOSEPH H. GUNN examined.

21676. CHAIRMAN.—You are a Guardian of the Clonmel Union?—Yes, I have been so for a long time.

21677. You have heard the conversation about Clonmel workhouses. Have you any opinion of your own to express on the question of amalgamation?—I think it would be an advantage if there was amalgamation; certain districts might be added to the unions.

21678. To the chief unions?—Yes.

21679. Would you be in favour of diminishing the number of places where the sick are treated in hospitals in the county?—There might be some reduction in the number of places.

21680. Mention any union infirmary that might possibly be closed in the South Riding of Tipperary without hardship?—I could not tell; I am not acquainted with the other ones.

21681. Now Carrick, for instance?—I don't know that it could be done without.

21682. Clonmel itself, Cashel, Thurles, Tipperary, all these places are centres of population. Do you think any of them could be done without?—It is hard to say, indeed.

21683. As regards lunatics, would you be in favour of leaving them in the workhouse?—No, I think not; it is not at all desirable. I think they should be put into proper asylums.

21684. Have you ever heard it proposed to board out lunatics?—No.

21685. In Scotland they board out their lunatics in a great many cases with advantage, they say, but you would at all events remove them from the workhouse and put them either in a county or district asylum, or an auxiliary asylum?—Yes.

21686. Have you considered the relative merits of district asylums and auxiliary asylums?—Not particularly.

Hon. Mrs. DE LA POER examined.

I was just going to say a word or two about paying patients. It strikes me as absurd that people well-to-do should only pay 4s. 6d. or 4s. 2d. a week for doctors and nurses and everything they get in the hospital, and the suggestion was made that there should be power given to the Guardians, with the guidance of the medical officer, to put on a certain charge. It would make respectable people who come into the hospital feel much more independent; it would put them in a different position, and take away the terrible prejudice that at present exists towards going into the hospital. If the Guardians were given discretion to charge a certain amount I think it would do away very much with the feeling there is at present. About the boarding-out of children, I think the great thing is to get the children out of the workhouse as much as possible, and those children that we are not at present allowed to board out, it would be a great thing if the Guardians were empowered to do so, and get all the children we can out of the house into a better atmosphere.

Alderman POSE, Clonmel, examined.

21687. CHAIRMAN.—Are you also a Guardian?—Yes.

21688. What is your view about the proposed amalgamation of unions in the southern riding of Tipperary?—I don't agree with amalgamation.

21689. You prefer letting the unions remain as they are?—There would be a grievance for the people of Cashel and Thurles. They believe the Union of Clonmel owes a large amount of money and is paying a big percentage on it, and these people will be asked for it afterwards; it is to be repaid in twenty-five years. The gentleman who gave his evidence last is in receipt of interest for it, and I don't know that his evidence could be relied upon. In the second place, as to the matter of paying patients, that is a matter that should be very much taken up. I am at it for years. I find big farmers, with fifty or sixty acres of land, make their way into the union. They get in at the average cost of 4s. 1d. I wrote last night to the clerk of the union to produce the separate register and the medical returns, and I would show the different treatment the poor man entitled to the union by law and this big farmer is in receipt of. That should be done every week.

21687. What would you suggest as the best means?—To let them stop outside and let their own doctor attend to them. They seem all to be clients of one particular doctor.

21688. Look here, Mr. Pope, we would be very much obliged to you if you avoid personal allusions, which are not relevant to an inquiry like this—I want to make things as plain as possible.

21689. You are only making things as offensive as possible?—Then on the point of tramps coming in and out, I believe this tramp nuisance is more or less encouraged by ourselves, because in harvest time a man comes in, and he is fully entitled to come into the union. His intentions are next morning to look for work, but if he is kept in the house until 10 or 11 no man wants him for work that day. He may be a desirable workman, but he is classed with the bad characters and men who have just come out of jail. There is very little supervision or difference made between the bad character and the deserving poor person who has been benefited.

21690. How would you discriminate between the two classes?—He ought to know them by this time; they are long enough going in and out.

21691. You would leave them to the discretion of the master?—Yes.

21692. Have you ever brought forward any resolution at the Board of Guardians to give such instructions to the master?—Yes; and I think we carried it, where tramps were not to be allowed in any more, but some places were burnt and they allowed the tramps in again.

Mr. Maurice Scally.

I am the workhouse master. I merely wish to mention about the boarding-out system. From my experience for the last seven years, and for years before I came to the workhouse, it has been a great success, and the children who have been boarded out never return,

Mr. MAURICE SCALLY examined.

while the children resided in the workhouse return regularly with the mothers or fathers.

21703. CHAIRMAN.—Do those leaving the workhouse at the age of fifteen come back in after life at all?—Some of them do.

Dr. Thomas
Lefan.

Dr. THOMAS LEFAN, Medical Officer, Cashel Workhouse, examined.

21704. CHAIRMAN.—You wanted to supplement a little the evidence you were kind enough to give in Dublin?—Yes, and add some more. I think I said something about the Colaba scheme in Dublin, but with the additional experience and the great mass of evidence you have had since, I think there can be no doubt now that the conversion of the workhouse hospital into a district hospital must be made compulsory. The whole trend of the evidence before you, as well as my modest views, were all in favour of that conversion, and after the length of time that now has elapsed, nearly two or three years, and the very few cases, if there be any, where the conversion has been carried out—

21705. None?—I think the law will have to be made compulsory. There are plenty of people who can pass patriotic resolutions, but when it comes to a question of practical help to the poor, they find a difficulty in giving that effect.

21706. It was a difficult section to work; a real effort was made in Rathfriland, for instance?—If that conversion took place all the objectionable features about the hospital would disappear. The sick cannot be removed indefinite distances, and the very sick must have a hospital within a circuit of a few miles. They cannot be moved twenty or thirty miles, and at present when they have to pass under the Claudine Parks of the workhouse, many of the decent poor decline and prefer to remain out under an imperfect system of treatment. The treatment must be imperfect, because it would involve an amount of attendance on the part of the dispensary doctor which would be impossible. These cases must be sent into hospital, they don't go into hospitals because they are objectionable, and they should cease to be made objectionable by carrying Sir John Colaba's scheme into effect. It is greatly to the honour of an English Member of Parliament to introduce a section productive of comfort to the Irish sick.

21707. Is he not a Kerry man?—Well, he is an English Member of Parliament; it was not one of our own Members of Parliament who made an effort to do it.

21708. Mr. MYNAGHAN.—It was at the expense of the Irish ratepayers?—Even so, they might show more interest than they did.

21709. I resisted it!—Oh, worse and worse. Then with regard to charges. I entered into that matter before your Commission, and I have only to repeat that there are two classes to be taken into consideration in connection with paying patients in hospitals. I have the same objection to the admission of paying patients into my hospital as I have to their admission to the county infirmary. I myself am paid for attending the poor, and so are the whole of the profession to which I belong connected with Poor Law hospitals. We are not paid for attending to the rich, and I object to their quartering themselves upon the ratepayers and obtaining the services of the medical faculty for nothing. If these people were asked for a load of hay, or a bucket, or a milk cow, they would look queer if you did not produce the price on the spot, or if they were of the landed class, and you asked them for an acre of land, their looks would not be pleasant.

21720. You say that the hospitals should not be open to people of means?—No, I say there should be a graduated scale. Let me repeat that the poor, the pauper and the policeman are the only people admissible to a workhouse hospital or fever hospital. In the town of Tipperary, from which witnesses were examined to-day—and there was loud talking done by some of them—they have drawn up a schedule of charges for pay patients. They had no power to do so. The sanitary authorities should be invested with the administration of the fever hospital. The Guardians have no power to admit to the fever hospital any pay patients. I brought this matter before the auditor, and only my legal friend did not serve me in time, I would have brought Mr. Cyril Browne into court for not surcharging in a particular case. There was not a word about the robbery of the doctors in the neighbourhood.

21721. CHAIRMAN.—How would you meet that?—I would have a graduated scale, and make the well-to-do patient pay not only all the expenses the hospital was put to, but I would make him pay the doctor as well.

21722. That would not remedy the defect. If he came from ten miles off you would be robbing the doctor from the price off of his patient?—If the case was one that could be treated in his own house, I would not admit him at all.

21723. He might die before you all made up your minds?—So he might.

21724. Dr. BROOKS.—Have you any experience of hospitals that allow the medical officer to charge fees?—No, I have not.

21725. Did you ever hear that it did not work satisfactorily?—No, on the contrary, the Maison de Santé in Dublin works very satisfactorily.

21726. It is a small private hospital?—It is not a small one. The patients go in there and are under the care of the individual doctor whom they select. Their own doctor outside can follow them and attend them.

21727. In this case the doctor outside could not follow his patient?—If the case is only one that could be treated in the hospital, it is only legitimate and proper that he should be removed to hospital, and the doctor who would have the trouble and whose skill would be exercised in the treatment of the patient, should naturally and justly treat him and be paid for it.

21728. Your argument seems in favour of doctors holding appointments in institutions only. It is no benefit to the ratepayers, and it is no benefit to the private medical doctor who sent the patient in. He is deprived of his patient?—He is only deprived in cases where the patient could not be treated at home.

21729. The supposition is that he would not come into hospital at all if he could be treated at home. The ratepayers who support that institution should be anxious to find out. Could you not do it easily by saying the doctor in charge of the institution should do all the duties in connection with the institution and get a fair payment for his work?—It would imply that the ratepayers should pay for the rich as well as for the poor. A decent man, who will pay for his wife or daughter at home and engage his own doctor, should enjoy the luxury of paying for the mean skulking wretch who sends his wife or daughter into a public institution.

21730. When a patient pays a guinea or two guineas to an institution, won't the ratepayers get the benefit of it?—Yes, but the doctor will not. Now with regard to male nurses, I state here that no hospital can be carried on without a male nurse; the Local Government Board appear to think it so. I got this to the Commissioner of the Commission: are there not forty and one things about a man that cannot be done by a woman, and if you have forty-one patients, as I have, some of them with inflammation of different parts, if you don't want to convert the doctor to the hospital into a nurse as well, you must have a male nurse; and the attempts made by the Local Government Board to have nobody but what they are pleased to call an attendant is a complete breakdown. I fail to see why the doctor cannot train an intelligent man and convert him into a nurse adequate enough to meet all emergencies; that is the point which the Local Government Board, in my particular case, deny me. They say we cannot train a young man to put on a ponicle or apply a leech. There are 156 hospitals without a male nurse.

21731. Dr. BROOKS.—You are training a male nurse?—I am not allowed by the Local Government Board to train him; they say I am not competent.

21732. Your hospital is small?—It has 100 beds, and there are eighty patients; there are at least forty bad patients.

21733. Have you not a male attendant?—We have; but if he did anything and it came to the knowledge of the Inspector of the Local Government Board—anything under the head of nursing—he and the doctor would be dismissed.

21734. What was he doing before he was appointed to the hospital?—A farm servant.

21735. Up to what age?—I don't think he is over twenty.

21736. He looked thirty?—You refer to the female who was a nurse in a New York hospital, and his Irish tendency towards the drop terminated the connection between the hospital and himself.

21737. Would you propose there should be a male nurse where there are not twenty patients?—I would. The male attendant we have at present would be quite willing for an additional £8 to discharge the duties.

21738. You spoke of 169 hospitals; a large number of them have not more than thirty or forty patients, and, perhaps, only fifteen male patients?—I would not propose a male nurse for fifteen males.

21739. CHAIRMAN.—How many hospitals in Dublin have male nurses?—They have; the resident students are male nurses. I had a case sent into me where the patient could not be attended except by a male nurse. We had at the time a male nurse that the Local Government Board did not raise any objection to. I called your attention to the distressing business—of course, the conversion of the hospital into a district hospital, everything would follow from that. With regard to those beds, I think you showed me up in Dublin on that point—the list of medicine and medical appliances that have been latterly drawn up by the Local Government Board in restriction of the right of the doctor to prescribe for his patients.

21740. We have nothing to do with that?—I propose merely to say that precisely the same course has been adopted in the army, and the result has been such that it would be well worth while to pursue the evidence before the South African Commission; and although the results are not exactly due to the interference with initiative and independence of prescribing of the Army Medical Officer, one of the elements most active at work and which has produced the most deleterious result, has been the very thing the Local Government Board has introduced into Ireland—interference with our initiative, and, I believe, our legal rights; because paragraph three of the Regulations puts upon the responsibility of directing the treatment of the sick. I don't know what the meaning of the English language is if it does not invest in him power to prescribe what he thinks proper for the sick.

21741. Dr. BROOKS.—Has he not power to order?—What is the use of ordering if you cannot get it.

21742. The Guardians can order it?—Yes, and then they have to pay the whole of the money out of the pockets of the ratepayers. You have to come before the board, and fight with the board; they say they don't see why this medicine should be got, that it is some new-fangled thing, and they oppose you tooth and nail. You are wasting your time, and some of the intelligent public say, "This is a fighting man." I now come to my friend, the county infirmary. I am a member of the governing body of that interesting institution.

21743. CHAIRMAN.—And medical officer of the adjoining?—Medical officer of the rival shop.

21744. Dr. BROOKS.—Were you elected to that position?—Yes, under the old system. I was elected by their worship, the County Council for the South Riding of Tipperary; they sent me there, and I hope they are satisfied with the amount of talk I indulge in. The first thing I have to say is this: The hospital was established under the Act of 6 Geo. III., when there was no hospital in the county from the Shannon to the Suir; now there is a hospital in every town, and the reason of this is entirely different. The original Act gave to the subscribers the power of nominating or recommending patients, and so careful was the Act to secure justice between the different statements that the parties were to be admitted in the order in which their tickets were presented. The surgeon was ordered to file them, so that if questions arose afterwards as to whether he acted equitably between the governors or not he would be in a position to prove that he did. Whenever I ask that some measure should be taken to ascertain that the parties recommended by the governors are desirable parties, I am always met by the statement that nobody can be refused who comes with a governor's token. On the tickets issued by the institution there is this statement, that it is recommended and requested that no person who is able to pay for medicine or advice shall be recommended. That determines the charitable character of the institution—that it is for the poor, not for the rich. That being so, the question is, how is the staff to be wooded from the wheat. Now, what objects in Cashel are there. A number of people who don't want their neighbours to know that they are going to get treated for nothing, don't go near the local man; they come into the town, and get tickets, and one gentleman, who is very well known to some of our Grand Jury officials, Mr. Thomas Walsh—the newspaper of October 22nd, 1902, which, together with three other Chronicles, I will lodge with your Secretary, as they contain very important matter, indeed, Mr. Walsh says: "I gave as many tickets as any member, and I must say that when I question the parties looking for them they tell a number of lies." Then, Mr. Molloy said he knew other cases where persons applying for treatment tried to conceal their poverty, and would say they had land. It shows that the parties who had land are the whitewashed boys, who are wanted by the institution, whereas the poor people who have poverty stamped on their brows, and no arse to correct the bad impression, are not wanted at all. And that is the interpretation to put on the statement of Mr. Molloy, who is Chairman of the Board of Guardians.

June 22, 1904.

Dr. Thomas

21734. CHAIRMAN.—It is, at all events, an ingenious inference? Of course, there is another inference; but as it would be uncharitable to put the other inference, being a man of considerable amount of charity, I won't draw that inference. The result of that is this: That the parties coming from a distance go into three or four shops, or other places in the town of Cashel and get tickets. I have driven over and over again to correct that. I have suggested that the parties coming ought to bring a letter. If Protestant, from their minister, and if Catholic, from the parish priest, and I might have added, from the clerk of the union as regards arse, and from the dispensary doctor as to their ailments.

21735. Dr. Baggot.—Would it not be very cumbersome to compel a person going for relief to bring these certificates?—The other point is this: That by the Local Government Act, 1896, the Governing Committee were invested with the control of admissions; apparently that repealed the previous and ancient Act, but you will not attempt to get the Governing Committee to exercise their legal powers, and, consequently, legal obligations completely broke down. On one occasion, in March, 1903, I even toned down to the very mild performance of asking that the names of the admissions should be read out. You know, in the union the chairman has to sign the admission books. I asked that the names should be read out.

21736. Was that with the object of getting these publicity?—Exactly.

21737. That is not done anywhere else?—But it ought to be.

21738. CHAIRMAN.—Did you any second?—Oh, yes, Dr. Coyle; and by a majority of eight to two they refused as much as ever to read the names.

21739. Dr. BIGGER.—Did you arrange for your second beforehand?—Oh, yes. Then they manipulated the minutes, so that the fact that that resolution was proposed was not entered on the minutes. I called the auditor's attention to the fact, and Mr. Brown stated that when a resolution was proposed or a protest handed in, it was the duty of the officers of the place to enter that on the minutes. The auditor's report was not dry when an identical case occurred again, and the presiding chairman refused to put a motion or take a protest. Here is a report of the committee:—

"We beg to report that the finances cannot be balanced by reducing the number or salaries of the staff, and it can only be accomplished either by a material reduction in the number of patients or by charging those able to pay. This latter method made the Limerick County Infirmary self-supporting when the Grand Jury grant was entirely withdrawn. The difficulty will be, to ascertain those who are able to pay, for at present this latter class, by avoiding their neighbours, and seeking tickets from those who do not know even their names, obtain a ready entrance. As a matter of fact, the medical officer was bound by the original Act to admit every person in the order in which the parties presented the tickets, and he was bound to preserve those tickets, numbered, for the purpose of verification. Only a case of accident was any discretion left him. Under the Act of 1898, however, this purely mechanical process was abolished, and the committee, as a body, were appointed to control the admissions. It is obvious that it is only by the exercise of such control that improper patients can either be screened or charged. Patients, therefore, could only be admitted provisionally, and it will be for you to examine into their circumstances subsequently, in the hands of other poor-rate supported institutions do, and to prevent abuse, each applicant should be obliged to sign, before admission to either ward or dispensary, a paper binding himself or herself to pay in the event of being found able to do so.—Signed, Thomas Lefter, Michael Coyle, the other member of committee (Colonel Murphy dissenting). That was the report of the committee appointed by the county infirmary, and that report was not acted upon; and that is all I have to say about the institution, except that the medical officers of the various unions have exactly the same qualifications that the medical officers of any county infirmary possess, and there exists the same means of treating the patients there as in a Dublin hospital, except, perhaps, in special cases, or some of those rare cases, when a conscientious man will not operate, because they occur only once in a lifetime, and these only fall into the hands of parties who have a reasonable amount of practice in them. The medical men connected with the workhouse hospitals have the same diplomas; and, as far as my hospital is concerned, all the operations in surgery, except operations on the brain, which have not been performed in the city of Dublin itself half-a-dozen times, have been performed. And I distinctly question the right of anyone to say that in a hospital where we have first-class nursing and everything money can supply, that surgery cannot be attended to there as well as elsewhere.

21740. Laparotomy?—Yes, that has been successfully performed. I have only had two cases; they make their way to Dublin.

21741. What other major operations?—We have had amputations of the thigh, an excision of the hip joint, a successful case.

21742. One case?—Only one; excisions of the hip are not very numerous. We have had several radical operations for the cure of hernia.

21743. Where do you operate?—There is a ward in which there is only one patient, a convalescent patient; but the board are about taking a contract for an operating room.

21744. Are you well supplied with instruments?—Yes, by fighting for them. That is where the Local Government Board comes in. The other day I had to look for a Thomson's splint, and in looking into this list that article was not on it, though the list was drawn up by a committee of the College of Surgeons. And I say they must have been over their wine when they made that list. I wrote to Sir Christopher Nixon, an old pupil of mine, to find out the name, and I intend to give them a dressing. I have been put to a world of trouble by them. It is necessary to fight occasionally, and as long as I have the fighting stuff in me it will come out.

21745. Have you a sterilizer?—We have everything and a beautiful operating table, and I got a present of £50 worth of Montague Ray apparatus.

21746. Do you use it?—We use it occasionally, and it often gets out of order. I have a competent person to assist, Mr. Bourke, of Grove, who charges it for me whenever we require it. Mr. Webb, of Egham, charged it for me more than once; but as thanks to the Local Government people, they throw every obstacle in the way.

21747. Have you ordered all the necessary instruments that a hospital requires that are on the list?—Oh, yes, and a great deal more.

21748. I am sorry to say we did not see them all. You did not put into the process sufficiently close; if you come there another day I will have them exhibited, for I am very proud of showing them.

The Sitting terminated.

FORTY-THIRD PUBLIC SITTING.—THURSDAY, JUNE 23RD, 1904.

June 23, 1904.

At the Courthouse, Nenagh.

Present:—Mr. MIDDS (Chairman), Mr. MURNAGHAN, and Dr. COET RIDGER.

Mr. ARNOLD POWER, Solicitor, appeared for the North Riding of Tipperary County Council.

Mr. M. GLEESON, Solicitor, appeared for the Nenagh Board of Guardians.

Mr. G. CORBETT, Solicitor, appeared for the Bonmahone Board of Guardians.

Mr. THOMAS CONNORAN, J.P., Chairman, County Council, Tipperary North Riding, examined.

21760. CHAIRMAN.—The County Council of the North Riding have considered the queries that were sent by the Commission?—Yes; but I did not see the answers sent to them.

21761. The first query is, what is the view of the County Council on the question of the breaking up of any unions in the county, or closing any workhouse?—It is from the Board of Guardians the first answer that I wish to give, carrying their views as Chairman of the Board of Guardians of the Bonmahone Union.

21762. We are taking first the County Council?—Then it is from another point of view I have to answer that.

21763. But your opinions are the same, I suppose?—Yes, I may say, all the same.

21764. What do the County Council think first?—My own personal opinion is in favour of amalgamation, if that is a general amalgamation for the county—that is if I can see the figures—but I certainly say, and have said in Council, that unless I could see the figures laid before me I could not come to a conclusion, for I have only the knowledge of my own little union in Bonmahone.

21765. But it occurs to you that if there were fewer workhouses there would be less expense?—Yes; that is the general thing.

21766. In closing the workhouses, would you retain some place for treating the acutely sick of each district?—I have not gone into that part; that should be in the general scheme.

21767. If you were closing up any workhouse do you think it would be desirable to leave some premises in the district where those people who become acutely sick could be looked after?—I would look on that as part and parcel of the general amalgamation.

21768. Your general opinion would be in favour of amalgamation?—If it could be done with economy.

21769. And without hardship to the sick?—Certainly.

21770. If any workhouses were closed up in the county could you suggest any use that the vacated buildings might be put to?—No; I have not gone into that.

21771. The question we put in the next query is as regards boarding out the workhouse inmates; have you formed any opinion about the boarding out of inmates?—No, I have not; I could not see any way in that.

21772. Or children?—I can only speak from personal knowledge of Bonmahone Union.

21773. How you tried it there to any extent?—There is one in Bonmahone Union, that is all that is out, and there is another thing I have to say in regard to that. I am not speaking for Bonmahone now.

21774. For yourself, what do you think yourself?—In regard to the boarding out of children, that is a point that strikes me as having a great deal underlying it. In our unions we have no occasion for boarding out children.

21775. You have twenty-seven children in the workhouse, though?—There are, but we have not a single inmate in the union that has been a child there.

21776. Do you think the children are as brought up and reared in the workhouse as are good citizens in after life as the children brought up outside?—Taking Bonmahone as an example—I am only speaking for Bonmahone—there is not a single inmate there that was reared in the workhouse.

21777. Do you happen to know how they have turned out?—No; how would we follow them. They are all taken out by farmers, and unless women come back sick they never return.

21778. Are there any men or women in your neighbourhood who were workhouse children?—I have not followed them; but then, coming to that point, it is a question that I have made a calculation on, and it strikes me it is one of the very serious questions underlying the whole of this business. If you board out the children won't the teachers be done away with?

21779. Yes!—And I see that the teachers' salaries, according to the report of this year, amount to nearly £9,500; that is a serious item; that is for the year ending 31st March, 1903.

21780. What will be the value of their salaries?—If that saving is made, what recompense will the ratepayers of the county have for that?

21781. Get off the ration for one thing?—Certainly; but so the large amount the Government will get of that; would that money come back to us in grants or be wiped out entirely.

21782. That I cannot say?—It is a difficulty I see.

21783. Even looking at it from the children's point of view, you have not formed an opinion whether it would be better for the children to be brought up in the workhouse or outside?—As far as Bonmahone, I give you my experience of that; I don't know the workhouse of any other union; I have been thirty-three years in Bonmahone.

21784. How much do your teachers cost a year?—The male teacher £25 and the female £20.

21785. You would not like to lose the patronage—£25 a year—unless you got some equivalent for it?—No; what I would like to see, instead of my giving evidence, is to have a scheme laid down, and that I could see it.

21786. That is what we have to do, and to assist us in making such a scheme we come round to get the opinion of men, like yourself, experienced in Poor Law administration?—The difficulty I see is that the Government may reap a great benefit and the ratepayers receive very little; indeed they may be put in a worse position. My mind generally is that there may be a saving, and I should expect it would be a saving if there was a general amalgamation over the county; I think three unions sufficient for the entire county.

21787. What three unions would you keep?—We agreed to that at the conference between North and South—Nenagh, Thurles, and Chinnel. I am not exactly binding myself to Thurles, but the southern members seemed to think that Thurles was the most central. I said at that conference, and say it still, that unless I could see a scheme showing that there was a saving, and a good saving, that would make up for the discomfort the poor would have to go through—21788. What would be the discomfort?—The long distances they would have to travel, though, certainly in Bonmahone, some of our poor have to come very nearly from Berrisoleigh, near Thurles, but there are discomforts, and there is a lot of the sentimental feeling of not wishing to go away from their own place; the poorest may have friends and connections that would not wish to see them going.

21789. Would what you say under that head apply to both sick and aged and infirm?—In regard to the sick—

Mr. Thomas Connoran.

June 25, 1904.

Mr. Thomas
Crosnan.

21779. I mean about visitors?—I am telling you that we have very long distances to travel to Roscrea.

21780. Take the people from the town of Roscrea itself, which is just close beside the workhouse, the sick who are from there would get visitors?—Certainly.

21781. Have you made any inquiries about the number of visitors that the aged and infirm receive?—I have not.

21782. We have made a good many inquiries on that point, and we find that the visits that the sick receive are numerous and the visits that the aged and infirm receive are very few indeed; you have not made any inquiries on that?—I have not.

21783. Do you think that the people from Roscrea might have to come too far to a hospital?—No; I say they have to do that at present. What I mean by speaking of the distance is that the people complain that the poor in the amalgamation will have to travel a long distance. I say that at present in our union we have people that have to travel a long distance, still there are very few in that case.

21784. Then you don't think it would be necessary to establish a cottage hospital there, or anything of that sort?—I do not.

21785. Are there any administrative or financial changes that occur to you that would be desirable in order to secure a more economical system for the relief of the sick of poor?—There is the question of out-door relief. Although I am not representing the Board of Guardians at present, I don't agree with the way it is going.

21786. What do you object to, and what do you think would be a better system?—I will have to go back to explain what I mean. I am thirty-three years a Guardian of Roscrea, and it is over twenty years since I formed the opinion, and have stood to it since, that never union rating was the proper thing; that was never done until the Local Government Act. And the reason I formed that opinion was, I myself live six miles from Roscrea, and represent a country division, and I found there were divisions too lowly rated, and had no poor either inside or outside, and, undoubtedly, that was because the poor had left the country and gone into the towns, and my honest opinion was that union rating was required at that time to equalise the taxation, because more of the divisions who were poorer were bearing the burden of the up-keep of the establishment. But since the Local Government Act began and things were equalised then the wrong side of the question began to turn up, and we find at present in Roscrea Union that we have the electoral division of Roscrea swamping us with out-door relief. Naturally as you will say that is the fault of the Guardians, as there is a natural shrinkage on the part of the Guardians from refusing out-door relief, and once things were equalised there should be divisional rating, once you had relieved the burdens of the past; there is no poor coming in from country districts now, and therefore there should not be an extra amount of out-door relief to be given to towns.

21787. What relief would you give to the towns?—The out-door relief that is granted is all in the towns.

21788. You were just telling us that all the poor of the country go into the towns?—Have gone in in the past, are not going in now.

21789. I suppose a few of them would go in now?—No. I have said I would defy them to show me a country case that has gone in that is at present on out-door relief.

21790. Are there not healthy people that go from the country into Roscrea looking for work?—No; because they have too much work to get outside.

21791. At all events people have gone into Roscrea in the past times?—That is what I am saying. My mind was for union rating to make up for the past times, and once that union rating was done and the thing equalised all over then I say it should be divisional rating. I would make them hold to that level, and anything extra that they gave they are to make themselves responsible for it.

21792. Would you not be going back to the old system?—No; because the poor are not going in now from the country.

21793. If you merely made all out-door relief in towns a divisional charge—do you mean the present cases on out-door relief should be divisional charges?—I would you make the support of the out-door paupers of the Roscrea electoral division a divisional charge for the future?—Starting on the basis of the level rate, anything over that?—

21794. You would leave all the people who are on at present a union charge?—No; I would go back to the time we began union rating, exactly where we got it.

21795. Go back to 1838 and take the amount spent on out-door relief then, and anything in excess of that?—I would agree to union rating and the equalising of the rate and bringing it up, and to allow the cost of the average to Roscrea.

21796. Mr. MURPHY.—You say that in the past divisional rating was unfair as regards the towns?—Certainly.

21797. Because the poor flocked from the country into the towns and that put an unfair burden on the towns?—Certainly.

21798. Now you say that things have changed from what they were in the past, and they are so equalised that a balance has been reached; is that what you say?—Yes; it is out of proportion entirely now.

21799. You say the towns have no grievances now in the matter of out-door relief; do you say that?—The saving is in the country places; the town has increased out-door relief.

21800. And you say the tide is turning now from the town and going into the country?—I did not say that; I said there are no cases going in from the country now.

21801. And what you would wish to do is to strike a balance at present, and in future have out-door relief a divisional charge?—Yes.

21802. But you would be willing to start at the present condition of things?—I suppose I would, but I would sooner go back to the beginning. I don't exactly see how the thing can be done, but I have it in my mind. I want to have the country divisions bear the burden of the out-door relief and in-door relief of the towns up to the day the Act of 1896 passed, but I want them to mind themselves after that.

21803. You admit the towns did receive the people from the country?—Yes.

21804. You admit the towns had a grievance; do you want to continue that grievance, or are you willing to do away with the grievance by starting now as the present condition of things, and in future have out-door relief a divisional charge?—If I start on the present condition of things it means an increase of 30s. a week on the relief that is in Roscrea district, whereas in the country places outside there is very nearly that much of a saving.

21805. You admit the towns had a grievance?—They had up to the beginning of the Act.

21806. Don't you want to redress that grievance?—I want to equalise it.

21807. CHAIRMAN.—How much did you pay in Roscrea in 1888 for out-door relief before the Act passed?—I have not the figures.

Mr. Dooly.—Something about £1 a week.

21808. CHAIRMAN.—And now it is £2 10s. a week? What you would like to do would be to make the £1 a union charge and to make the 30s., or anything above £1, an electoral division charge?—That is the way thing; now you have my point. I want to equalise in the country places the out-door relief up to the Act.

21809. Are you in favour of moving the houses out of the workhouse?—There are some houses in our workhouse, and I don't think it would be beneficial to remove them.

21810. Would you be in favour of claiming contributions, that is getting people who came in sick and who could pay a certain amount; would you be in favour of giving the Guardians discretion to charge for the relief?—There is not much of that in our union; I have not much experience.

21811. And you would not care to offer an opinion?—No. We have some cases that come in—polio—where you pay, but we have very few others.

21812. Take the case of a man in employment in Roscrea, who would be making 15s. to £1 a week, if one of his sons or daughters came in sick to the workhouse there would be a certain saving in the best bed and everything else, and it would not much cost to pay 6d. or 1s. for the maintenance of his child in the workhouse; would you be in favour of getting power to enable you to charge?—I did not take that into consideration; we have not felt any grievance.

21813. What do you think about transport?—I have my own mind about transport; they are people that it will be very hard to get shut off, but if there are any three workhouses in Tipperary their lodging-houses would be taken away; it is the best means of getting rid of them.

21814. Don't you think they would get quarters outside the workhouses?—I don't know; the cost is not very much. We had over 1,200 tramps in the last twelve months, and the cost of them is very small. It is not the cost of the tramps, but the damage they do going through the country. If we had only a few women we would stop their lodgings.

21815. Do you think they would not keep on going round and put up at cheap lodgings where they could get them, or put up in out-houses?—I know they are on evil in the country, but I cannot see a remedy.

June 23, 1896.
Mr. Thomas
Cormican.

Mr. CHARLES C. C. WISE, J.P., examined.

21816. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the County Council?—Yes.

21817. And the County Council have not answered our queries precisely, but have left you pretty much free to express your own opinion?—Yes.

21818. First, about amalgamation?—I was down at Chinnel with Mr. Cormican, where we met the representatives of the South Riding, and we were all unanimous in considering that a scheme of amalgamation as broad lines would be a great economy in the general working of the county.

21819. And you indicate three unions that you thought would be enough?—Yes.

21820. I asked Mr. Cormican whether it would be wise, if you did close up the unions except these, whether it would be wise to leave at each union centre a place for the sick?—I have no instructions from the County Council with regard to that, but my own opinion is that it would be well to have a place for the acute sick. I think the chronic sick might all be lodged, as at present, in the unions.

21821. Would you leave these acute sick under the visiting workhouse medical officer as long as he lived, and then hand them over to the dispensary doctor?—If that was the most economical way of working, I would. I think myself if there were a hospital of that description—a small cottage hospital—it might be well to have beds for pay patients there. I am aware myself that there are many people, small farmers in the country, whose relatives sometimes get sick or infirm, that have no means themselves and could not afford to employ a trained nurse to come to their houses and look after them, and I think it would be a great boon to many of these people if there was a hospital of that sort, and that they could, by paying, have their friends properly looked after.

21822. And you think, perhaps, their present condition is a little worse than that of those who are poorer?—Indeed, yes.

21823. In closing up these workhouses one would come to consider how to dispose of the various classes of inmates in the workhouses at present; you have told us what you would do with the sick, and the aged and infirm would also go, would you say, to a central institution?—I think the aged and infirm might stay in the workhouses, as at present.

21824. Now the children, do you think it would be desirable to get all the children out of workhouses?—I certainly do, from all I know about it. I think all the children should be taken out and either boarded on—some people are in favour of boarding out; I cannot say myself personally that I have any experience of it, but if it could be done I think it would be a right thing to do—otherwise I should say that the only course open would be to turn one of these district workhouses into an establishment for keeping these children, not necessarily for the children of one county if it were more economical to take them in from others at a per capita rate; that would be a good idea if boarding out could not be managed. Then with regard to lunatics, I think on no account should they be kept in workhouses.

21825. You would move these to a district asylum or an auxiliary asylum?—I think an auxiliary asylum would be the cheapest, taking into consideration that I think we would be entitled to a capitation grant of 2s. a head. I belong to the asylum committee at Chinnel.

21826. Would there be room in the present asylum to receive any considerable number?—No; we are overcrowded at present; in fact we are making additional buildings this summer.

21827. Would these buildings be sufficient to take in any additional, or it is merely for the over-crowding of the house?—At the present time I think we are sixty or seventy over the number.

21828. But you are making accommodation for about that number?—For a few more, but what I would fear would be that if you were to run all these in it might still leave us overcrowded. I was looking through statistics furnished to me with regard to the Unions of Nenagh, Berrisokane, Roscrea, and Thurles; on May 28 there were 449 harmless lunatics, imbeciles, etc. I cannot say the numbers there are in the union workhouses at the South.

21829. There are fifty-eight in Tipperary alone?—Would it not be advisable that one of the district workhouses should be turned into an institution for them, not necessarily for the County Tipperary alone, if it were more economical to take them in from a larger area.

21830. Passing to another class, that is the girls who come in to have illegitimate children, have you thought of any way by which that class could be dealt with in a better way than it is dealt with at present?—I have not thought much about it.

21831. The suggestion which I saw made here by the Nenagh Board of Guardians is that these girls should be sent to penitentiaries?—Yes, or Magdalen asylums, a course which would be highly beneficial to the community, as it often happens that the woman, in consequence of losing her virtue on one occasion, is obliged to enter a workhouse.

21832. What do you think of that suggestion?—I think there is a good deal in it.

21833. Do you think it would be likely to lessen the number of illegitimate children in the country if you could detain a girl after her first lapse?—I think so.

21834. Some people say it might have a bad effect if girls could get rid of their children so easily, but you would be willing to try the experiment?—I think so.

21835. Have you had any experience of boarding out?—No, I have not. I saw some suggestion with regard to boarding-out the old and infirm. I don't think I would approve of that.

21836. Would you approve of trying to reduce the number of aged and infirm in workhouses by giving them out-door relief, with the object of having as few in the institution as possible, or would you be afraid that that might lead to extravagance?—I would rather be afraid that there might be collusion—getting their friends supported.

21837. Do you think Mr. Cormican's idea would operate as a check on that if any future cases were made electoral division charges, leaving only the old amount as a union charge, if it were brought home to the people that they themselves over a narrow area would have to pay the cost of any additional relief that was being given?—It would tend to check it.

21838. Do you think it would be a sufficient check?—Well, it is hard to say; however, I suppose something must be done, and it might be more economical. I could not really offer an opinion on that.

21839. Is there any other use to which you would put the district workhouses except making one an institution for children, if you retained such a one, or an auxiliary asylum for lunatics?—No, not that I have thought of.

21840. The treatment of consumptives, for instance. Have you had your attention called much to the very high death-rate from consumption that exists in the country, and the desirableness of having means taken to stamp out this disease, which is infectious?—I certainly think it would be well if there was some such institution, but I would say one for all Ireland would be sufficient.

21841. I am afraid that would not meet it; say for a province?—Perhaps so.

21842. Do you happen to know, in the ordinary general way, whether many people are suffering from consumption?—I am not informed. I don't know.

Mr. Charles
C. C. Wise.

June 24, 1896.
Mr. Charles
C. C. Webb.

21843. Dr. Baggan.—When you spoke of an auxiliary asylum, was it on account of using a diseased workhouse?—Not on account of using it, but as they are there I think it would be a suitable place.

21844. Did you consider the difference in the cost of management in a new institution compared with an addition to the existing institution?—I think that it stands to reason that if you have to build in the new it would cost more than utilizing a building already there, though I have no doubt there would have to be alterations in the existing building.

21845. Taking into consideration the amount you would spend on alterations, and the amount you would spend on the additional staff, and additional kitchens and stables—I think I see what your point is. You think it would be better that they were all sent to the district asylum?

21846. I am not offering an opinion at all. I was only wondering if, when you made your recommendation, you had worked it out—I don't know what place you mean to add it to.

21847. Of course for Tipperary it would be Clonmel Asylum?—As far as I know, you cannot send anybody to that except dangerous lunatics.

21848. Oh, certainly; all the lunatics in Clonmel are not dangerous, any more than all the lunatics might be in the workhouse, perhaps, as dangerous. The lunatics in the workhouse are very much the same class as those in the asylums, and the lunatics that are sent into the workhouse at present are sent in very often because they are poor, and their friends don't want to have them sent to the asylum. They are not certified as insane, although they are treated when once in the workhouse as lunatics?—Yes.

21849. Then if you establish an auxiliary asylum, unless it is in connection with the county asylum, their friends might say afterwards:—"If they are to go into any asylum at all, we might as well send them into the county asylum, where they would be best treated," and send them into the county asylum, for if there is to be a difference in the two places there will be a difference in the treatment. This will make a provision for those in the workhouse, but how are you to keep it up when people would cease sending their friends to an auxiliary asylum?—I did not think of that; there is a good deal in that.

21850. As regards the management of the small district hospitals, the acute hospitals, how do you think they should be managed?—I think a very small staff would be necessary, as the chairman stated; the dispensary doctor could manage it.

21851. But under what body would they be?—I suppose it would be the same as the Guardians are at present. I should think it would be under the Board of Guardians.

21852. You did not consider it, perhaps?—No, I did not.

Mr. HUGH DELANEY, Chairman.

21853. CHAIRMAN.—Are you a member of the Berrisokane Board?—I am chairman of the Board.

21854. I know from your statement here the view of the Guardians; you are strongly and unanimously against any amalgamation?—Certainly; and so are the ratepayers, and here is evidence of their opposition (producing document).

21855. That is the objection?—From the several electoral divisions of the union. "We, the undersigned ratepayers, object to the amalgamation of the union with any of the adjoining ones, as we would derive no benefit or advantage by dissolving Berrisokane Union; on the contrary, our rates would become higher than they are at present."

21856. About how many ratepayers have signed this?—Over seven or eight hundred.

Mr. Liffey.—Ninety-nine out of every 100 ratepayers of Berrisokane Union could be got to sign it.

21857. CHAIRMAN.—We may take it that Berrisokane is solid?—Yes. There was no pressure used in getting these signatures. It was voluntary by the people in each electoral division. The Tipperary Council have struck the following rates:—Burr No. 2, on land 2s. 11d., on buildings 3s. 6d.; Berrisokane, on land 1s. 6d., on buildings 2s. 10d.; Nenagh, on land 2s. 5d., on buildings 4s. 4d.; Berris, on land 1s. 6d., on buildings 3s.; Tharles, on land 2s. 1d., on buildings 3s. 10d.

21858. Mr. MORRISMAN.—Is that for Poor Law purposes only?—For maintenance and clothing, 5d.; outdoor relief, 2d.; establishment and salaries, 2d., and rations for officers, 3d. That will compare very favourably with any other union.

21859. CHAIRMAN.—You spend much less?—The ratepayers built that union without any help from any outside union, and I cannot see for the life of me why Nenagh or Burr should come in and say "We will annex that union." What right have they to that?

21860. Do you think that if the union was not broken up the workhouse would be long standing? Is it not in a rapidly crumbling condition?—No; we will paint it in a short time.

21861. You must remember that we were ruined it very lately?—I know you were. You saw two bad doors there, and they would have been taken down only for one of your inspectors.

21862. The whole place was in a most ruinous condition?—Were you in Nenagh, sir. You surprise me a little. You have heard explicit evidence from two of the County Council. I hope you won't follow it up. Here is now an extraordinary case that would surprise you. The death-rate in the Nenagh Workhouse was forty-five in six months—one-sixth of the whole population of the workhouse.

21863. You think they are killing them off?—They are bringing back a recurrence of the Fenian years again.

21864. You have taken a very short period?—You have great experience and you have served a good name. I hope you will maintain it, and will treat these poor people fairly. We have had an instance of overcrowding in the asylum in Dublin.

Berrisokane Union, examined.

21855. Do you think there is hot-bed at Nenagh?—You will have sickness, no doubt. One of your inspectors has laid down 60 square feet for each person. How will they get that room in Nenagh if they fill it up with half the county. In the Burr Union, another heavy spot, there is a cesspoo there that would poison the whole town.

21856. It is a very beautiful workhouse?—You did not see the cesspoo.

21857. There is litigation about it. You know they are arranging about drainage there?—That will be a long time. It will cost them thousands of pounds. In our union the death-rate for the last year was 14, and three of those were over 50 years of age—a fine age—two were over 80, and seven were over 90.

21858. You don't turn them out when you see them getting very bad?—No, as long as Providence allows them, we let them die easily. In the house we have 60, twenty-three over 70, thirteen over 80, and eight over 90; that shows a healthy workhouse. Owing to the sanitary condition of the place, our death-rate for a number of years was very low—in 1901, 14; 1902, 14; 1903, 16; and 1904, 14.

21859. How many were children?—We have very few children in the house.

The Clerk.—I don't think we had the death of a child. Witness.—There was one child. We commenced it about seventeen years ago, and we boarded out those two classes of children, orphans and deserted, and in that way we cleared out the workhouse all the children that might be there for years.

21860. How many have you boarded out?—Over 70. Clerk.—At present only two.

Witness.—We have boarded out for the last seventeen years. We gave the foster-parents 25 a year and two pairs of clothes for the children. They are bound to send them to school regularly, and the children get as fond of their foster-parents that when their time was up they remained with them.

21861. Are you strongly in favour of boarding-out?—I consider that it is far better for the Guardians and ratepayers than sending them to any school. For if you keep them at a school they remain there until sixteen, and then go out with a little education, but are unfit to work.

21862. I suppose most of the children you have are illegitimate?—Yes, and orphans.

21863. Would you be in favour of a law enabling the Guardians to board out all the children who come to them?—Certainly; that would be a better training for them than sending them to school, for they won't be used to country life, and you will only convert them into traps. We had no trouble with the children only one. He was a troublesome boy, and broke away from his foster-parents.

21874. What age was he when put out?—Eight or nine. His father was an itinerant something, and he got bad training. There is no decrease in the pauper; there is an increase. In 1845 we had 125 paupers; there is an increase. In 1845 we had 125 paupers in Ireland, and the numbers were 50,300 in those workhouses. According to the last report of your Board, we have 41,300 in daily attendance, and 20,000 daily on out-door relief.

21875. There was no out-door relief in 1846?—No.

21876. So that of that number in 1846 they were all in-door?—Yes. There was a pauper then for every 24 of the population; to-day there is 1 in 64. No one who ever saw a workhouse in those days would care to witness the appalling death-rate that took place then; hundreds of thousands of the finest men and women I ever saw died, and that was due partly to overcrowding, not to say for want of food. If you amalgamate half a dozen unions, don't you believe that the salaries will be increased in proportion, and those you extinguish, and Guardians of the dissolved unions will have to superintend their own offices, and get no relief from the unions they join. If we were to join Nenagh and take up a share of their loans, £46,000, would not that be a great injustice to the ratepayers of Berrinokane. They have got no benefit from the building of those cottages or from the labourers in them.

21877. That would not come in at all, that is under the Labourers Act?—But it would be the same thing. It would come on the District Council, who are the same ratepayers.

21878. We are only dealing with the Poor Law Guardians?—But that would be the outcome of the amalgamation.

21879. Not the necessary outcome. The unions would be increased with, but not the District Councils?—The out-door relief would come on us; that is £30 a week in Nenagh.

21880. Then all you sensible men from Berrinokane would come in here and put things right?—The establishment charges, and the salaries are higher in Nenagh, and we would have to take our share of all these things.

21881. You think some of the County Tipperary at present in the Birr Union might be transferred to Berrinokane?—Yes, six divisions.

21882. Those divisions you think would wish to come to you?—They memorialised your Board for that purpose, and the County Council passed a resolution in favour of that.

21883. What will the Birr people say to that?—It is not their country; it is outside their bounds; they would be opposed to it, because they would lose on a valuation of £12,000 a year.

21884. You would not let any little consideration of that kind stop a useful change like this?—It was the wish of the ratepayers themselves. They suggested to have this transfer made; it came from them. They will come in for a lower rate than in Birr.

21885. Now you consider the existing arrangements for administering indoor and out-door relief are working very satisfactorily, and require no change. Is that what the various inspectors who have visited your union have been telling you?—I don't know that they do.

21886. Are you quoting from their reports when you say that, or are you expressing an opinion diametrically opposed to theirs?—I was expressing my own opinion, but I was thinking since I wrote that, that if out-door relief was confined to dispensary districts it would be better. When cases come before the Board seldom a Guardian would interfere, because it is a union charge, and the chairman has not power to go against a whole Board, but if you put it on the dispensary district, seven or eight Guardians would be more concerned, and they would discuss the case better.

21887. What do you think of the arrangements of the workhouses. Do you think they are all satisfactory?—I don't think so.

21888. But you say here they are?—Well, what I would refer to would be, if there is an inquiry into the management of the workhouse, there would be more economy carried out, because there is a great want of management in workhouses, and a great waste in clothing, food, and fuel.

21889. In Berrinokane?—In every union.

21890. Certainly in Berrinokane?—Not more than any other.

21891. But you are aware of it there?—When taking stock some years ago, I went through the house, and went to the piggery, and found lots of white bread there. I asked the master the reason of the waste, and he said the inmates could not use it. I asked why he did not curtail the allowance, and he said he could not.

21892. I suppose you proposed the cutting down of the allowance?—No, I did not. I think the cause of it is there is too much sweetness in the dietary; cold milk and bread every day; if that waste bread was made into a bread pudding. But that cannot be done until you have lady inspectors to go round the workhouses and teach them domestic economy and cooking.

21893. Have you any lady Guardians in Berrinokane?—No, they would not give the time to it. You would want lady inspectors appointed by your Board, and to spend a week at each union. Then in the clothing—if that was given to people in the world it would last four times as long. And the fuel consumption would be reduced.

21894. You have not modern grates there?—No, we are using turf. It was proposed, at the time we were making the change, which was delayed, that all these grates would be altered, and we had plans and specifications, and we were to borrow money to make these alterations, and if the union lives that will be carried on.

21895. The next point you allude to in the petition is that the Berrinokane people have to contribute to the county infirmary at Cashel, on the ground that you get no benefit from it?—I think we only sent two patients there during my time, twenty-eight years.

21896. And you think it hard to have to pay for an institution that you get no benefit from?—It is.

21897. You say the arrangements for the sick are as good as in any other workhouse in the county?—That is what I believe.

21898. Are you saying that from your friendly disposition towards Berrinokane. What other workhouse have you visited. Did you ever come up to Nenagh?—No, I would not visit it at all; the death-rate is too high.

21899. You did not see some of the hospital wards there?—No; but we provided everything the inspectors pointed out—beds bedstead and hair mattresses—for these poor people. There are fewer in the wards, as Dr. Smyth recommended 60 beds to every patient; in that way they are healthy and clean. I see them nearly every week.

21900. Do you really think now that the arrangements for the sick are as good with you as in any other workhouse in the county?—I think they are very fair.

21901. I would be afraid we would give you the last place; we visited them all?—When I spoke of Nenagh, an inspector said to me: "Don't speak of Nenagh; don't mention it."

21902. He was getting on the soft side of you when he said that. How far do you think it would be possible to get contributions from the people who come into the workhouse?—I don't believe there would be any, or a very few would come in, because the people who are any way well off would not care to come into a workhouse hospital.

21903. You heard Mr. Webb's evidence on the subject. He would be rather inclined to have pay wards, where people who could not be nursed properly at home would be treated?—I don't believe they would go in. People who could afford it would get a doctor and nurse. Any connection with the workhouse is very objectionable. If you frescoed the walls, and used any amount of hygienic aid, it would still be a workhouse, and to compare those with Dublin hospitals would be a mistake.

21904. What do you think about the tramp?—I think they are a remnant of an old wandering race.

21905. Have you not two classes of wanderers, the person who begs round the parish and neighbourhood, and is more or less welcome in all the houses to a bit of a sup, and the tramp who goes about from union to union all over the country?—They existed in larger proportions before the workhouses were established.

21906. Were they of the same class?—No, there are ex-soldiers and militiamen now; some of them are tradesmen going from town to town; it would be a hardship to send those to jail.

21907. Do you think it would be a hardship to require a man who was on tramp for work to carry a certificate?—Mr. Nicholls, the English Poor Law Commissioner, when he came to Ireland to make a report on the state of this country, said a law "You shall not steal or beg, you shall starve," would be opposed to natural justice.

June 23, 1906.

Mr. Hugh Dalrymple.

June 25, 1904.

Mr. Hugh Delany.

The Poor Law Commissioners in the early stage of the Commission gave directions that any one, whether he belonged to the union or outside the union, should be accommodated in the workhouse.

21903. That is the law?—These tramps come here and demand admission, and how can you refuse them?

21904. Do you think the workhouse has not been an indirect means of fostering a kind of habitual tramp?—I am afraid if they were refused more harm would be done to the ratepayers of the country. Now their cost after all is not so very large, 2s. 6d. and 2s. 6d. for a woman, and 2s. 6d. for a child.

21905. Do you think it is a good education for a child tramping over the country?—You cannot take the child from the parents.

21906. That is just the question I was going to ask you. Don't you think it would be a Christian and proper act to take these children from these wandering people. If you were with Mr. Murnaghan in the House of Commons, would you put your name on the back of a bill for taking away their children from them?—It would be very hard to get Parliament to pass such a law.

21907. There was a more severe law sixty years ago in Belgium, where people were taken up and put into the house until they showed signs of repentance, and then they were let out, and if they were again they were put back to that house for life!—We deal with our tramps in a reasonable way, requiring them to break 5 out of stone every day before they leave the house. The value of their labour would be about 6s., and the cost for the time, including women and children and Saturday nights, would be 11s., leaving about 6s. loss on the ratepayers. If we took one of those and sent him to Lancaster Jail it would cost 12s.; that would support seventy tramps, and would it not be wiser and more humane to support seventy tramps than to send that man to jail?

21908. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—But while the question of money is an important one, there is something still more important. Do you think it is a good thing to have such a class confined in the country and grow?—I am afraid you cannot put a stop to them, for this generation will not see the last of them. And if that man came back from jail and got licensed with the Guardians, what would prevent him doing more harm to the union than forty tramps?

21909. CHAIRMAN.—Do you think a man of that kind ought to have his liberty at all?—They are human beings, and there is no use in going to experiments with them; they have them in all countries; they have them in England.

21910. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—In order to take away the children from these tramps, the English Parliament has passed such a law four years ago. The Board of Guardians, by resolution, can place themselves in the position of parents of these children, and send the children out to board. Do you think that ought to be done in regard to the children of tramps here?—If it can be done legally; it is very hard to deprive a parent of his child.

21911. If he does not take care of the child!—He says he is going to look for labour throughout the country.

21912. CHAIRMAN.—Don't you know very well he is not?—These belong to some union originally that they could establish their chargeability to and make themselves a burden on that union, whereas if they divide their patronage among different unions it makes it lighter.

21913. Do you think that is a thing to be encouraged, a wandering life?—With some classes I object to it, but not with the class of tramps.

21914. Oh, with the honest tradesman looking for work, that is different?—I think tradesmen are the largest proportion of tramps.

21915. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—Have you ever been to Roscrea?—No.

Mr. MURNAGHAN.—If you were there you would find them on the streets at night.

CHAIRMAN.—Thinkers, and all sorts of wanderers.

Witness.—Well, unless you pass a law as in Belgium or Denmark.

21916. CHAIRMAN.—That is the point—would you approve of such a law?—It would be very serious to put a man into a house of correction for life.

21917. No, not for life, but to put him in to try and get him to learn honest industries. If you put him in there the first time for six months or a year, then let him have a fresh chance out again, always giving the governor or managing body of that institution power to let him out on a ticket-of-leave, if they thought he was likely to mend his ways and work honestly. Do you think that might not be a useful thing—not to punish the man, so much as to reclaim him and make an honest workman of him instead of a strolling vagabond?—I am afraid, like all criminals you let out of jail, he would go back to his old habits.

21918. Would you be in favour of keeping him locked up?—If he was locked up it should be for a long period; I don't think a short period would have any effect.

21919. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—Don't you think the opportunity for passing his occupation being made a little more difficult is more likely to deter him from following it?—I don't think it would.

21920. CHAIRMAN.—Is there anything we have not asked you that you would like to mention?—With regard to the lunatics, we have only forty-eight in the North Riding, and I don't know why the County Council would go out of their own administrative county. We have eight of those in Berwickshire, and the Inspector in Lunacy visited that place lately. Here is his report on the six:—"None of these are epileptic or of mad habits; one man was in bed"—one old-bodied man who lost his hearing—"the other appears to be fairly healthy and was walking about the yard; two women were clean and tidy, and two did some little work." These are not hard cases at all, and it is to equip an auxiliary asylum would cost a great deal of money. I think if those who have something on the brain with regard to lunacy agreed to take a union workhouse, and appropriate that for these people, and put these forty-eight people into it under a different system, they could be treated there as well as in any auxiliary. Taking away from the parent house would be a great mistake, because you relieve the Treasury of a part of the capital grant.

21921. Have you ever had any troublesome lunatics there?—Never.

21922. If you had I suppose you would send them to the asylum?—Yes.

21923. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—But you get no capital grant for lunatics in the workhouse?—Yes, but they would require special treatment and higher class officers, and to equip the place to please the Inspector in Lunacy.

21924. You say they are well treated in your house. They cannot ask for more than that wherever they go?—The lunatics of course are better treated and have a higher class of staff than the inmates of the workhouse.

21925. Do you think it is a humane thing to keep these poor afflicted people there?—No, I would give them a wing in the workhouse where there is room, and put them under different treatment altogether. On one occasion we sent the children from Berwickshire to Roscrea to avoid expense, and the appointment of a teacher, and after the Guardians got a bill from Roscrea they found they had to pay more than they had at home; there will be great trouble in mixing up different counties like that.

Mr. GLEASON.—I suppose it would not be allowable for any representative of the Neneah Guardians to ask any questions of Mr. Delany?

CHAIRMAN.—I think it would be a very fair thing. I am sure Mr. Delany has no objection to say over again what he said about the Neneah Union.

21926. Mr. GLEASON.—As regards the building, you were making a comparison between the Neneah Union and in favour of your own. Do you think a dilapidated building is a more healthy and satisfactory place than a well-equipped house; you don't think that?—No.

21927. You think the best-equipped and best-built house would be the best place for the inmates to live in?—Taking into consideration the healthfulness of the situation and the sanitary conditions.

21928. I am not comparing Berwickshire for the world. You made the allegation that in the Neneah Union there was a very large death-rate. Would you be surprised to hear the majority of those people were over eighty years?—I took it from the report, and one of the Guardians said he was surprised at it.

21929. But you never came here to ascertain the state of affairs?—I did not, the deaths are there. (I got the matter in 1903).

21930. You did not inquire to see what the condition of it was?—The report of the Board of Guardians for six months only.

21931. CHAIRMAN.—Why did you take such a short period?

Mr. GLEASON.—It happened to suit.

Witness.—It was not in the winter season.

2237. Mr. Glendon.—Do you think it is far the advantage of the poor to have a poorer class of diet as compared with the other workhouses, and to have less cramped bed and bedding?—I would like to see the two scales before me.

2238. Do you think it is a proper thing for the Guardians, for the sake of not having to buy blankets, to give only one blanket to the poor in winter?—That is not the case in Berriestown; our bills for clothing are large.

2240. CHAIRMAN.—Shorter carriage?—Yes; if we came to Nenagh we could not get turf, and we get milk cheaper.

2241. Mr. Glendon.—You are Ed. a head more expensive than in Nenagh?—Because our old people are infirm.

2242. What was your rate in the Berriestown Electoral Division before the Act of 1868?—I have all the figures. From my recollection, for the last twenty-eight years we were always lower than Nenagh.

2243. Some idea of this amalgamation was in the air for the last two or three years?—Yes.

2244. And did you not make a nice little plan, or scheme, by which you would look as if you were reducing your rates every year. You made an estimate in 1903-04 of £2,567, and you did not spend that money, and you had money to your credit; next year it was the same thing, so that this year you were able to make a low rate, in comparison with previous years. Had you a little plan of that description?—That is not so. There was an item of expenditure included in that estimate; there was no desire on the part of any of the Guardians whatsoever; but the clerk of the union made out and submitted his account to me for the workhouse, and he included in that a large sum for pumps, which were not carried out, and that went back to the credit of the accounts. We got on two occasions a couple of hundred pounds interest on our money from the bank, and when we closed our account in 1899 we had £400 to our credit in bank.

2245. CHAIRMAN.—I am sorry you did not spend a little on paint?—We practised economy in every possible way. We are not like the County Council, increasing the salaries. We keep the salaries of our officers down.

2246. Mr. Glendon.—You did everything beautifully and well for the purpose of making the rates look small. About the tramps. That is a general matter that affects all the unions. Do you mean to say that it is a proper thing to have tramps moving about like this, with their wives and a crew of children?—It is better and safer for the community to have them under lock and key.

2247. CHAIRMAN.—You mean in the workhouse, under lock and key at night?—Yes; we have no control over them during the day.

2248. Mr. Glendon.—Last May you had thirty-six tramps accommodated in your workhouse, and there were only seven in Nenagh. I suppose they know you have a safe berth?—No, that is not so; but always on the eve of a fair we have larger numbers than at other times; and even on the approach of the fair of Nenagh we have these cattle-drivers and others.

2249. How did they come through Berriestown?—

That is the direct road between Galway and Tipperary.

2250. Do you think the aged and infirm of the respectable class that have, through no fault of their own, to go to workhouses, should be compelled to mix with the ordinary, common inmates of a workhouse?—Why should they come there at all?

2251. Say, you had an aged couple, husband and wife, they are separated in the ordinary circumstances at present?—They are.

2252. Do you think that a proper thing to do?—That is the Poor Law discipline.

2253. I am asking you your opinion?—I suppose for the purpose of classification.

2254. Don't you think that really it would be a proper thing to have an institution in the country, belonging to the country, where the respectable aged could be segregated from the lower class of inmates, and pass their declining days in peace and comfort?—We have not many families of that kind in our workhouses.

2255. Suppose you had several workhouses combined?—I am not going to offer an opinion on that.

2256. Would it not be a proper thing to do?—It would entail considerable expense.

2257. I am putting a general question?—Like the inmates, it would depend on the number you would find.

2258. If it turned out on investigation that there were a sufficient number in the country to be kept in a special house or home for themselves, would it not be a proper thing to make a home for them?—You can give them a ward to themselves in any workhouse. Would not that do?

2259. No, it would not?—You could do it. They would have a separate ward and separate bedroom accommodation.

2260. You think, for the purpose of avoiding amalgamation, each union could provide for its own imbeciles and aged and infirm separately?—Yes.

2261. CHAIRMAN.—They have so few inmates in Berriestown that they could do it?—Here is a wealthy union of grass land and cattle trade taking from a poor tillage district of small farmers, and increasing their taxes; that would be contrary to justice and humanity.

2262. Would you be surprised to learn you did form portion of the Nenagh Union once?—That was at a time when the population was large.

2263. The reason you were allowed to form a union at all was that in the former times there was such a number of poor that Nenagh could not accommodate them, and you had to put the auxiliary workhouse?—We got a divorce, and did not get either bed or board. We had to build a house ourselves; and now, after fifty-three years, like a repenting husband, they say you must come back and pay one-third of our expenses. You must allow that?—Would you allow me to give my experience of amalgamation with Nenagh District Council. The four districts agreed to take up the maintenance of main roads in the country, and the result is, Berriestown is paying £200 a year more than it should pay.

2264. I am afraid you are too soft to have the management of your own affairs?—I put the facts before Mr. Cooke, and said—"If you cannot deal with these questions will you put a note before your board?" He did not do either. We are at a loss of £1,000 in five years. Why, with that experience, should we join with Nenagh?

2265. And now you are only five miles from Berriestown?—I am more than five English miles.

2270. If a hospital for the same sick were left at Berriestown, do you think there would be any hardship in closing the union, so far as it is a refuge for the healthy?—I would think it is a hardship; and why, there are so many urgent cases. Are the Guardians going to attend here when an urgent case turns up in Nenagh?

2271. What kind of an urgent case?—I mean, supposing where there is a family with fever.

2272. That is not by what I say. If you leave at Berriestown sick wards for treating the sick, would you be in favour of closing the house to all the able-bodied?—I would not.

2273. Why would you be against that?—Because of

Mr. P. O'Donoghue examined.

Mr. P. O'Donoghue.

2266. CHAIRMAN.—I am sure you are pleased with the way in which Mr. Delany put the case for your union forward?—I would agree, only for certain things he left out. He spoke nothing about the hardship and misfortune on the poor of the district if amalgamation was to take place; but from beginning to end I was most heartily in accord with him; but to remove the poor of the district would be a terrible thing.

2266. How far are you at Berriestown from Nenagh?—I live five miles below Berriestown, fifteen miles from Nenagh.

2267. Where was your part; before the Berriestown Union was formed, to what union did it belong?

Mr. Delany.—It was in Nenagh.

2268. CHAIRMAN.—You would have fifteen miles to come?—Yes.

June 26, 1904.

Mr. P.
O'Donoghue.

the great economy. With regard to the ratepayers, I think we are living very safe. We represent the ratepayers of the district, and trust the people respectfully and honestly; but to come so many miles into Nenagh Union, very few farmers would like to undertake the business.

21974. Mr. MURPHY.—Would you not get over that difficulty if the management continued the same, and the Guardians still looked after the finances of their union, and only paid to the Nenagh Guardians, or some other Guardians, the cost per head of the inmates they sent there; you would get over that difficulty; you would still provide accommodation for the sick, and you would considerably reduce the cost to the ratepayers by such a method?—Do you mean to tell me they would reduce the rates down to the standard we have at present?

21975. And why not; you would get rid of the staff you are paying for there; you would only have to pay a share of the staff of the Nenagh Guardians?—It would be a large staff, and we would have to increase the salaries in Nenagh.

21976. I don't think you would have to increase the salaries commensurate with the saving that you would make by the amalgamation. You say there is a large house at Nenagh, it has to be kept up anyway; there is a great deal of expense in connection with the heating and lighting, and there will be no more expense in the future than in the present; you will get rid of the cost of the firing of your institution, of the staff and of the repairs, all three things, so it is possible really by a system of amalgamation, without interfering at all with the present management, to make improvement and bring economy?—I don't see my way in that line. I see myself we are working with the greatest economy possible. It differs from the other parts of the country. Nenagh is not a tillage country, and all my part of the country is all tillage land, and there is more poor there in a square of five or ten acres than in 2,000 acres in Nenagh.

21977. You cannot have very many poor when you have only seven in the house?—It is the smallest union in the county, it is not in the country; but we have a great deal of poor people on out-door relief. It would be a great hardship to bring the poor people to Nenagh.

Mr. Stephen
Lilly

Mr. STEPHEN LILLY examined.

21993. CHAIRMAN.—Have you anything to add to the evidence of Mr. Delany and Mr. O'Donoghue?—Very little, and I have no documents prepared.

21994. We have had the view of Berrisokane very fully from both those gentlemen, but I thought you might wish to add something to what they said. What part of the union do you live in?—Ballygarry.

21995. How far is that from Berrisokane?—Four miles.

21996. And from Nenagh?—Eleven or twelve miles.

21997. And from Berr?—About eight.

21998. Would you object to go to Berr and the people in your district?—Certainly; I would prefer to remain as I am.

21999. For what reason?—Financially, we can do better where we are; that is the most important; and then going long distances. As a rule, I find the Guardians won't go long distances to look after the relief of the poor, and the out-door relief would not be properly administered under the present system.

22000. Do you think there are too many meetings of the Guardians held?—No, I don't think so.

22001. How often do you meet in Berrisokane?—Once a week.

22002. If Berrisokane was broken up you would go to Berr?—Probably; but as Mr. Delany and Mr. O'Donoghue said, I would prefer to remain as I am for many reasons. The Guardians won't go long distances to look after the interests of the poor, and, consequently, the management is likely to develop 21978. Still, if you were satisfied there was no increase, but, on the contrary, there would be a reduction, in the rates, would you then still have the objection you have now?—I would; in consequence of the poor of the district. Who is going to look after their interests only the Guardians of the district?

21979. Why not look after them in the future as you do now; you would have the management of your own concerns?—I don't understand.

21980. CHAIRMAN.—You think you would not like to entrust your sick to the Nenagh people?—I would not, honestly; I think they are better cared where they are.

21981. Mr. Glavin.—How far are you away from Berr?—I suppose about fourteen miles English or eleven Irish.

21982. How far are you from Berrisokane?—Five.

21983. If you were amalgamated with Berr—your division did belong to Berr once, it did not belong to Nenagh as all—you would not think eleven miles was a distance to travel to attend at Berr Union?—Indeed I would think it too much.

21984. You, a man who takes such an interest in the poor; an extra five miles would not prevent you going to Berr?—Indeed, I do take an interest in them.

21985. Would you object to an extra five or six miles to go to Berr?—I would object to go regularly, and he is no Guardian who does that so regularly. I am not a very strong man to go that distance.

21986. Would you be surprised to learn that the Guardians have to come sixteen or seventeen Irish miles, some of them, into Nenagh to attend to their work?—I am not a bit surprised, because very few you have from that part of the country; it is not a village country.

21987. Take all the Newport district up to the County Limerick bounds, away to Killeale and west to Monrogh, the Guardians don't object to come to Nenagh?—Is that a village country?

21988. You have seventy in your workhouse, thirty-two in your infirmary, and the rest are poor in these great tillage districts—that is all you have got?—How many are getting out-door relief?

Mr. Delany.—That division, Terryglass, belonged to Nenagh.

Witness.—It did; but I would be very far from going to Nenagh.

into a ring around the vicinity. Certainly, if it was divisional relief, I would not object to it so much, but the present system of union relief I would object to.

21999. Does any other point of view occur to you?—No. But so far as auxiliary workhouses are concerned, I would prefer to have a whole general asylum in Clonmel and send them all there; not to establish an auxiliary asylum at all, because, as a matter of fact, I believe it would be expensive, and not equipped in as good a manner as one for the whole county.

22000. Did you calculate how much it would cost, for instance, to enlarge the asylum at Clonmel?—Yes; there is a question of enlargement at present.

22001. That is only to meet the overcrowding within the asylum?—It would meet the objection, I think, from the different workhouses; it would have ample accommodation for the few extra that might go from the several workhouses. So far as the noise and means that are quiet, they do very well in the workhouses; those quiet people, that don't get wholly overworked and inclined to do harm to themselves or anybody else, I think they would do very well in the workhouses, a small proportion; but any dangerous cases, that would develop dangerous symptoms, the proper place is where there would be a proper asylum. (Mr. Delany's answer produces return of rates.)

CHAIRMAN.—Business is really lower.

Mr. Power.—Last year Nenagh came to nearly the same rate as Berrisokane.

Mr. MICHAEL M'KENNA examined.

Mr. Michael M'Kenna.

22002. CHAIRMAN.—Is there anything you would like to add to the evidence of your colleagues?—I have not much to say, but I would just like to explain a few reasons why the amalgamation should not take place. First, I think there is ample accommodation for all classes requiring in-door relief, viz.—the able-bodied, the infirm, and the sick; second, the sick in the hospital at present express their desire not strongly to be left as they are in their own union, where their friends outside can conveniently visit them who is town. It is a great thing for the poor patients to receive visits from their friends.

22003. I think we would agree with you there?—All the inmates express themselves fully satisfied with the diet they get in there, and their treatment also, consequently all have a strong hatred to the removal to any other union. Fifth, I think the drainage system is good, having a sufficient fall from the house to keep the place free from any foul air, as frequently found in other workhouses. We had no disease there for a great many years, and by very little improvement it can be made very suitable. A very small outlay would make the Barrickane Workhouse second to none in Ireland.

22004. That is a very big statement, and I would be more inclined to differ with you on that than on anything else you have stated?—I say if there is a sufficient outlay, which we intend to lay out, and would have laid out before this only for some delays. With regard to the fever hospital, it would be better to convert the present infirmary into a fever hospital; you would thus save £8 a year, and transfer patients from the present infirmary to the front block of the buildings. We intend doing away with that fever hospital.

Mr. GEORGE HACKETT, Barr, examined.

22011. CHAIRMAN.—Do you wish to add anything to the Tallamore expression of opinion which you have already given?—Just a few observations. I heard Mr. Delany's evidence, in which he said that Barr No. 2 would be in favour of amalgamation with Borrickane, and the people also; I deny that. I am Chairman of No. 2, and Vice-Chairman of the Barr Board of Guardians, and I deny Mr. Delany's statement; and I say, from the state of the Borrickane Workhouse—I believe it is in a very dilapidated state, and only contains about seventy inmates, and they have to keep up a large staff—I think it would be for the interests of the ratepayers that it would be amalgamated with Nenagh and Birr. You are aware that several electoral divisions of Borrickane originally belonged to Birr, and if we had those back it would satisfy us.

22012. And if Nenagh had theirs back it would satisfy them?—Yes; and I don't see what earthly good Borrickane is there. We have ample accommodation, and could take in the county. We had out about 21,000 in the last two years in enlarging and improving the hospital, and I think it will bear favourable comparison with any workhouse hospital in Ireland.

22013. It is a very good one?—We would be quite satisfied if we got back the divisions originally belonging to us and now attached to Borrickane. A large portion of Borrickane lies near Birr; one point is not more than four Irish miles; about Gurteen and Shadoo is about five Irish miles from Birr. Our union at present stretches down very close to Athlone, Ballinacorney, and we never want a fair attendance of Guardians. Some of the Guardians seem to think it a great hardship to have to attend Birr, ten or eleven miles away from them.

22014. They don't think anything of that from Birr? No, we have a fair attendance always. I don't think there is anything more I have to add to my evidence at Tallamore.

A Guardian.—You have no right to say Borrickane Union is in a dilapidated state. Have you ever been in it?

CHAIRMAN.—I am afraid he was quoting me.

Witness.—I think I have very good authority for it.

22015. Mr. Corbett.—I represent the Borrickane

22005. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Do you want to sell the fever hospital?—Yes; we think the other would be more suitable. As far as the tramps, we don't suffer any loss by them.

22006. You have a good many of them there?—We have, most unfortunately.

22007. CHAIRMAN.—It comes to £4 or £5 a year on you?—No, I think not. They are nearly able to pay for their maintenance. We had 327, and they broke seventy-one tons of stones from July to May.

22008. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—The women broke no stones?—No.

22009. You have a good many women?—We have.

22010. And make nothing by them?—No. We had fourteen deaths; three of them were over seventy years, two over eighty, and six over seventy, and two over sixty, and one child. In the house altogether, at present we have six over eighty, twenty-three over seventy, thirteen over sixty, eight over fifty, four over forty, and we have only five children; so I think it would be a great hardship on the ratepayers and upon the poor inmates to be amalgamated with any other union.

Guardians. You say it would be in the interests of Mr. George the ratepayers to have this amalgamation?—I say so. Hackett 22016. I assume you mean the Birr ratepayers?—Yes; and I think it would be to the advantage of the ratepayers of Borrickane. They have a large amount of salaries to pay at present; a small increase to the officials at Birr would meet the thing.

22017. Assuming this amalgamation was carried through, almost all the officials in Borrickane are young men but Mr. Ralph?—Yes.

22018. All these would have to be superannuated?—Being young men, the scale would be small, except in Mr. Ralph's case.

22019. You have made absolutely no calculation as regards the saving to the ratepayers?—I did, to a certain extent.

22020. Did you make a calculation as to whether it would or would not be a saving to the ratepayers?

CHAIRMAN.—It would be very difficult for him to make calculations that way when he did not know what scheme would be adopted.

Witness.—I just took a simple view of the matter—the doing away with the big staff.

22021. Mr. Corbett.—You were not here when Mr. Crooman was giving his evidence. Would you agree with him, that only the poor come to the unions from the towns and very few from the country?

Mr. Crooman.—I said no such thing.

22022. Mr. Corbett.—Would you say that most of them come from the towns to the unions?—Of course, a good deal will depend on the town.

22023. Would you not say that the large majority of the seventy inmates in Borrickane come from the town of Borrickane?—From my personal knowledge I cannot say.

22024. Would there not be a hardship on the poor people of the town to have to go to Birr?—It is only ten miles. They have to go long distances to Birr.

22025. What is the furthest distance from Birr if you get this amalgamation; would not Portlanna be the extreme point?—The town of Portlanna is in Galway, and the ferry is a mile and a half on the Birr side of Portlanna. It is counted ten miles to the town; it would be about nine miles to the Tipperary side of the Shannon.

Mr. HENRY DOOLEY, Barr, examined.

22026. CHAIRMAN.—Did you wish to hand in some figures?—Nothing, sir; but I was just asked by the Guardians to attend in case Mr. Hackett should want some figures.

CHAIRMAN.—We will be asking Mr. Lowry to furnish us with statistics later on.

Mr. Hackett.—I just wish to mention that No. 2 District, the Tipperary portion of the Birr Union, adjoins the town of Borrickane, and the Urban District of Birr comes to the bridge of Riverstown.

Mr. Barry Dooley.

June 23, 1904.

Mr. James Maher.

Mr. JAMES MAHER, Chairman, Nenagh Union, examined.

22037. CHAIRMAN.—Are you Chairman of the Nenagh Board?—Yes. We had a copy of your queries, and considered and discussed them, and sent in a reply.

22038. You could afford accommodation for 300 additional inmates?—Yes.

22039. And your Board of Guardians think that it "ought" to be for the general advantage if the Borrisokane Union was broken up, and divided among Nenagh and Burren?—We would just go in for the broad question of reform, in carrying out a great scheme of reform, if it was considered expedient that there should be amalgamation with other unions, I don't say whether Borrisokane should be amalgamated with Nenagh or Nenagh should be amalgamated, whichever it was considered expedient.

22040. Would you be in favour of breaking up the Borrisokane Union?—It is a very small union. It was formed after the Famine years, in the year 1850, and the reason for which it was formed has disappeared long since.

22041. There is not the population in the country now, and there was not room then in Nenagh and Burren?—Yes, sir.

22042. You say you think the poor of that district could be more liberally and generously treated than the Borrisokane Board could afford?—Yes, sir.

22043. To meet the argument against the removal of people from a distance, you refer to the town of Newport, how far is it?—Fifteen miles from Nenagh. It is a district of country far more difficult of access than Borrisokane.

22044. They have to come over the Silvermines Hill from the valley?—Yes, it is very mountainous; and the seven divisions proposed to be annexed to Nenagh from Borrisokane are a level country.

22045. Did you express any opinion at your Board of Guardians as to what might be done with Borrisokane Workhouse if it were closed?—That it should be converted into an institution for harmless lunatics, idiots, and epileptics, or into an industrial school for children.

22046. Are you in favour of keeping children in institutions or boarding them out?—I think the institution would be preferable.

22047. Have you had any experience of the success of children in after life who were boarded out?—Well, no, sir.

22048. You are not acquainted with any cases in which boarding out was tried?—No, sir.

22049. You are only acquainted with the system of rearing children in the workhouse?—Yes, sir. I think they should be taught some habits of industry when they come to the use of reason, between that and fourteen; they should be taught habits of industry and self-reliance as well as to read and write.

22050. Do you think it would be a good way to have children taught industry by having them boarded out with people in houses where they would be doing whatever came to hand, for little children, according to their strength?—I would; but there would be obstacles in the way of that. The only children we had boarded out were orphans.

22051. You think it would be an obstacle if the parent objected?—Yes.

22052. Most of these children would be illegitimate children?—Yes.

22053. Do you think it would be much hardship if the parent could not support the child, and the child had to be supported out of the rates, do you think it would be much of a hardship to board out the child instead of keeping it in the workhouse?—I would prefer to have the child boarded out.

22054. What is your view about relief?—The expenditure under the head of outdoor relief has gone up.

22055. Your board says: "The board think it would tend to both advantage and economy if the system of divisional rating, if not for both indoor and outdoor relief expenditure, certainly for outdoor relief expenditure alone, were restored, as more care and supervision would be exercised in those districts where the expenditure is rather high." Do you agree with that?—I do; because it was increased since the Local Government Act came into operation.

22056. And you think the county infirmary at Coolish should be maintained without calling on your board for a subscription?—I do; because we get no value; it is only in the immediate neighbourhood road.

22057. I see your board is in favour of having only those who are really sick and in need of medical attendance and skilled nursing kept in hospital?—Yes.

22058. You can go on to say that a large percentage of the paupers consist of feeble, aged, and infirm, who merely require attendance, and are not subjects for medical attendance?—Yes; we are in favour of having the able-bodied boarded out.

22059. Your board is also of opinion that the insane should not be kept in workhouses; where would you put them?—Harmless lunatics might be kept in a special workhouse.

22060. As regards tramps?—If you had fewer workhouses you would have fewer tramps, in my opinion.

22061. Do you think they would not manage to get up at night at some place between the workhouses; supposing Borrisokane was closed and they wanted to go to Burren, do you think they would not get put up somewhere at Borrisokane?—The inducement to travel through the country would not be so great if the workhouses were fewer.

22062. Mr. MURKIN.—You think the distress would help to do away with some of them?—Yes.

Mr. THOMAS BURKE examined.

Mr. Thomas Burke.

22063. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the Nenagh Board of Guardians?—Yes, for twenty-three years.

22064. Are you a country member?—A country member.

22065. What are your views about the area of charge question?—My view is decidedly in favour of electoral division charges, and for various reasons. I think the system has been very much abused since we got union rating, because I know from experience that Guardians come in from a distance, Newport, and so on, and tell us that certain parties want outdoor relief, and they increase the amount. We have not an increase in numbers, but the amount has increased since we got union rating.

22066. You think the amounts are unnecessarily increased?—I think they are; and we, the local Guardians, are not able to check the statements made to us from outside Guardians.

22067. Is most of the relief given in the town of Nenagh?—Not at all. There is a good deal given in Newport. A good deal is given in Nenagh, but that was not the case when Nenagh had to pay for its own relief; but since it was made a union-at-large charge Nenagh became more prosperous and so did Newport.

22068. Mr. MURKIN.—You think the Guardians who decide the question don't have a knowledge of the merits of the case, because they have only to listen to the relieving officer's report and the statements of the Guardians who advocate the relief?—That is so.

22069. CHAIRMAN.—Do the relieving officers tell you fairly what they consider?—As a rule they do; but the relieving officer has to be guided in a measure by the opinion of local Guardians. Take my own division. When it was an electoral charge I was accountable to the ratepayers of the district, and I looked closely into what I was doing; and now, if I increase relief to any individual, and when I go back a respectable farmer asks me why I increased the relief, I say, "Don't you know it is on the union-at-large."—Oh, that is all right.

22070. What would you suggest as a proper means to limit any excess of grant?—You would be in favour of giving outdoor relief, and not subject poor people to come into the house, if it could be done without abuse?—It is about the best thing connected with Poor Law relief if it was kept within proper bounds.

22071. How would you keep it within bounds?—To make it a public charge. I heard Mr. Curwen's evidence, but I don't think you understood him. What I would suggest would be, that a certain amount of money, or at least a certain rate, Old or Old in the S., would be levied on the union-at-large for outdoor relief, and if it exceeded that amount I would make each division pay the extra.

22072. You would have a union contribution to start with, and then, if there was anything extra over that to pay it?—Kearney.

22062. Dr. BARNES.—Would that lead the Guardians in each of the districts to find out how many persons they could relieve out of the general rate?—It would be a check.

22063. If you limited it to 50s. or 60s. in the £ for the whole union, that would bring in so much for out-door relief; would not each of the Guardians be still as anxious to get as many as they could on the general rate?—They would, as far as that amount went; but when that was exceeded the Guardians would be very careful in giving any more relief.

22064. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—You want to relieve the pauperism of the towns, and having got rid of that pauperism, you want to begin on the square, and let every electoral division look after its own particular poor?—Quite so; because at present, if you strike a general rate for out-door relief in the union, there are some divisions that their out-door relief would not reach that amount at all, consequently that amount would go to the relief of other divisions.

22065. Dr. BARNES.—Would not every Guardian in every division see that he would get his fair share of it?—Some Guardians would not require it at all, because the number on the relief list would not come up to the 50s. in the £.

22066. The same argument you are applying against the union raising would apply to that 50s. £.—The very same to a limited extent.

22067. The town Guardians might, in a body, try to get a whole number on out of the 50s. £.

22068. CHAIRMAN.—Am I right in thinking that this is a fact that each division would have its pull out of its own penny in the £ at first?—Yes.

Dr. BARNES.—Then you might as well start on divisional relief.

22069. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—How would this appear to you? Suppose the rate was taken as it exists at present, and in future anything in excess of what it is should be an electoral division charge?—It is better than the present system.

22070. Don't you think it would be even better than you suggest?—I don't know; it may be.

22071. It might be possible the town would get no benefit at all, because every electoral division would, naturally, want to get up to the amount it was paying, a penny in the £, and no relief at all would be given to the towns, whereas, under the other system, the towns would start on an equality?—I understand; but at the same time you cannot look out for clients for out-door relief in any one division.

22072. But you will admit that in the past a great many people came from the country into the towns and lived there?—Yes.

22073. And it would be unfair for the towns to have to support these people then?—Yes.

22074. Now, having reached a fair adjustment of the system, do you not think in the future the proper share to do would be to start from this, and after this make all the money for out-door relief a divisional charge?—I think it would be an improvement on the present system.

22075. CHAIRMAN.—What do you think about township?—Of course, I endorse all the statements there. With regard to women and illegitimates, I think any woman that goes in more than once should be sent to some asylum and sequestered.

22076. Don't you think it might be better to send her to a reformatory or refuge before she had the second; send her there after the first, to give her a good start under religious influence?—I know from experience that a good many girls that fall once, and only once, very often become useful members of society; but when they fall a second time they are gone, and do a lot of harm in the workhouse, and I would send those to a central institution.

22077. That is as regards the present people, but for the future people, the girls who fall for the first time, would you send them to a penitentiary?—I think I would give them a chance; I often see them to get on fairly well. The girls who come in a second time have a corrupting influence, and they often take out young girls for bad purposes; coax them into the towns.

22078. What do you think about the tramp question?—I would not prescribe a cure for the tramp nuisance. I think emigration of unions would have a very good effect on the tramp system; the number of workhouses in the country making it a convenient refuge for these tramps has encouraged the tramp system; and I think it would be a very good thing to take away the children from the tramps, because these children will become tramps later on.

22079. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Do you think it would be enough to compel these tramps to go to the police offices to look for relief?—I don't know. It is very hard for a policeman to define who should get relief and who should not.

22080. Would he not have as good an opportunity of knowing as the relieving officer?—I would say the relieving officer would have just as good an opportunity.

22081. Would it not have a deterrent effect?—On criminal tramps it would. I would expect to find the police just as generous as the relieving officer.

22082. Do you think it would be any hardship to ask a man looking for shelter at the public expense to go to a magistrate and ask for some certificate of character in his own district that would entitle him to support?—That might be a very good thing, but I am sure the magistrate would not like to undertake that duty.

22083. CHAIRMAN.—Or a stipendiary magistrate?—I don't think any magistrate would care to discharge that duty.

22084. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Still, we are trying to cure an evil?—Yes.

22085. CHAIRMAN.—Or the police officer could, on the statement of people of position—clergy or Guardians?—I don't know; I could not recommend any such thing; in fact, I have not studied the question.

22086. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Do you think the power of detention for a continued period would be any check?—I think if they were liable to prosecution in some shape or form it would have a very good effect on them.

22087. Is England they can keep there up to a week?—That might be a very good thing to try here.

Mr. LAWRENCE BULLER examined.

22088. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the Nether Board of Guardians?—Yes.

22089. You have heard the evidence of both the gentlemen who have gone before you?—Kearney.

22090. Is there anything you would like to add to what they have said?—No, nothing.

22091. You agree with them generally?—Yes.

22092. The statement I have been quoting from has been submitted to you all, and you approved of it before you came?—Yes.

June 23, 1894

Mr. Thomas
Scries.

Mr. LAWRENCE
Buller.

Mr. THOMAS COCHRAN, J.P., further examined.

I am appearing now for the Union of Roscrea.

22093. CHAIRMAN.—Now, you have had the advantage of hearing a good deal of the evidence from Guardians of the different unions; is there anything now you would wish to add to it with reference to the Roscrea Union?—I only want to voice the opinion of the Roscrea Guardians.

22094. They don't consider it expedient to dissolve the Roscrea Union?—Yes, that is their opinion.

22095. And you don't like to offer a definite opinion regarding any other union?—No.

22096. You are opposed to any arrangement, you say, whereby the poor of this union would be sent away to be maintained at your expense to some other workhouse in another town; this, in your opinion, tends towards the restriction of the liberty and freedom of the poor; an arrangement of this kind should only be made for persons of unsound mind and criminals; the former have no feelings in matters of this kind, and the latter, of course, are completely dethroned in jail; compulsion should not be made on the poor—use these your views?—They are not exactly my own views. I gave my views before.

Mr. Thomas
Cochran.

June 23, 1904.

Mr Thomas
Conoran.

22007. What are your views as to the removal of the poor to a distance?—There is a feeling—and a natural feeling—against being taken away from their own place; and if I saw a good saving that would be a recompense for that, I would be in favour of it; but that is only my own personal opinion.

22008. The Board of Guardians are disposed to think that a boarding-out system would not work satisfactorily; is that for grown-up people or children?—It is for the elderly people, I think.

22009. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you give much outdoor relief in Roscrea?—It is in or about the same that we began with at the Local Government Act, but the saving effected in the country parts is run away with in the towns.

22010. Do you think it ought to be extended?—On the lines I spoke of to-day. What I meant to say was that there should be a levelling of the out-door relief at the time of the Local Government Act; anything that would go over that each division should bear it, and the towns would have the benefit up to the levelling point.

22011. But they had no benefit at all. You admitted there was a grievance up to 1846?—I would give them the benefit of the levelling amount. There are a good many divisions had no rate at all. I would give them the credit of the whole thing; that much money should go into the out-door relief fund.

22012. Would you not give them the benefit up to now, and start fresh?—They have gone ahead a great deal since 35c. a week in Roscrea, and we have about that saving in the country districts.

22013. Do you think the quarter-acre clause might be done away with?—I think so. I think at present the thing is too small with the quarter acre. There are people over that amount of land as poor as can be, and I believe in out-door relief as the most beneficial way of relieving the poor.

22014. The only thing you are afraid of is that it would spread too much, and a division would get an undue share?—When the Guardians meet there is a natural disinclination to refuse out-door relief, whether the case is deserving or not. The case is brought forward by the relieving officer belonging to the town, and the country Guardians won't refuse.

22015. In other words, they are not doing their duty?—I think, by having it a divisional charge, they will have to mind their own business.

22016. And if they let the rates get too high on the division the people will put them out?—They are in the hands of their own people there.

22017. Dr. BRUCE.—What do you mean by levelling up?—Whatever the out-door relief cost in Roscrea it costs so much in the £.

Mr. Deasy.—Say, £500 a year, roughly.

22018. CHAIRMAN.—We want to find out what Mr. Conoran means by levelling up?—I would say, dividing that money all over.

Mr. Deasy.—£545 was your last year's out-door relief. £592 is £4. in the £; 13d. would meet the out-door relief expenditure at the present day.

22019. Mr. MURKIN.—Would you be willing to start there?—Yes, that is the very thing I am putting; then each division if it goes over that, let it bear its own cost.

22020. Dr. BRUCE.—Won't there be a number of persons at present on or off inside six months, and won't other people go on; do you want to get each division strike as much as they are getting at present out of the £500?—I would leave that £500 to equalise everything.

22021. Do you want the 13d. to be put into a common fund?—Yes.

22022. And any addition to the £500?—Should be charged to the place it is coming off.

22023. Don't you see these people are constantly varying—some there might be ten, and another twelve; would you start with ten as a basis?—There are a lot of divisions with no one at all on out-door relief.

22024. Do you mean if they put another as they would have to pay the local cost of the one they put on?—Yes.

Mr. MURKIN.—His point is—he would allow each electoral division 13d. in the £, and after that he would make them responsible for anything in excess.

Mr. Deasy.—He would propose to apply to the out-door relief the same provision as was applied to indoor relief under the Poor Law Relief Act of 1876. He wants a standard out-door relief at a stated time, and anything over and above that standard should be assessed on the divisions itself.

Witness.—Yes, whatever would be the difference between 13d. and what Roscrea costs.

22025. Dr. BRUCE.—You year there might be no person in a certain district and next year there might be three or four; would they have to pay the entire cost of those three or four?—Yes; give the heavily-laden places the difference between the position they stood in and the levelling rate.

Mr. Deasy.—I think Mr. Conoran means the same thing as myself.

Mr. Liffey.—If there was an accumulated fund, everyone would be rushing to do away with the accumulated fund.

22026. CHAIRMAN.—It would not be an accumulated fund; you would not strike a rate until you wanted it. I understand up to 13d. for divisional out-door relief would come out of the union-at-large rate, and anything over that would be divisional rating. What else have you to say?—There was a feeling of dislike over the whole Board of Guardians as to the expense that would be incurred for amalgamation in a general way, without going into figures, myself among the number. What I spoke about the teachers is one thing; another man, and a very serious item, is the medicines and medical appliances. Up to the time the Local Government Act began we had no costs, only the costs of the medicines, and we had to take them on the standard price, but since that, I find that, allowing for the dispensary districts in Ireland and the unions in Ireland, that the amount of cost that a medical comes to nearly £2,800, and all the benefit that we reap is about £415, and the Government pays as much more; so that, accordingly, to get about £200 we have to go to the cost of nearly £2,800. I am speaking of all Ireland. We have to start each year, and to send up a list of medicines for every dispensary district.

22027. We have nothing to do with dispensary districts any more than with Grand Jury roads?—I am not saying you have; but what I want to say is, the doubt that is on us, that even doing away with a lot of unions itself, the cost that will come on afterwards will more than counterbalance all the advantages. I take one case, over these medicines, and I am sure we are upwards of £3,000 out of pocket.

CHAIRMAN.—I don't know what you mean. If you be kind enough to write out your statement about the out-door relief and send it to the Secretary, we will consider it; but we cannot understand it as you have put it now. We have nothing to do with dispensary districts; keep to the Poor Law.

Witness.—Is not that part of the Poor Law CHAIRMAN.—No, it is the Medical Charities Act.

The Sitting terminated.

FORTY-FOURTH PUBLIC SITTING—TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 20TH, 1904. Sept. 20, 1904.

At the Courthouse, Sligo.

Present:—Mr. MICKS (Chairman), Mr. MURNAGHAN, and Dr. COSEY BUDGER.

CHAIRMAN.—Mr. Vernon, are there any witnesses here from the County Council?

Mr. W. T. FERRON.—There were three named by the County Council—Mr. John O'Dowd (the Chairman), Mr. James HANSON, and Mr. John McLaughlin. I received a telegram from Mr. O'Dowd this morning—"Cannot possibly leave; kindly explain." Mr. John McLaughlin is the only witness present now on behalf of the County Council.

CHAIRMAN.—I see Mr. Colliery present; he is also one of the County Council.

Mr. FERRON.—He is also one of the members of the County Council. You have also another County Councillor present, but I think he is giving evidence on behalf of Droemore Union, Mr. Mitchell.

CHAIRMAN.—The County Council have not deputed you to give evidence on their behalf?

Mr. FERRON.—No, sir, they have not.

Mr. JOHN McLAUGHLIN, M.O.C., examined.

Mr. John McLaughlin.

22118. CHAIRMAN.—Perhaps you would, in your own words, give us briefly an outline of your views on the questions that have been referred to us. You have the question, have you?—Oh, yes, I have seen them. Well, the only point that I would be very anxious to give evidence on is, that I would be strongly in favour of the amalgamation of the workhouses, particularly owing to the overcrowding that we have in the Sligo District Lunatic Asylum.

22119. You have in your county the Droemore West, Tobacurry, and part of Boyle Unions?—Yes; Boyle No. 2 and Sligo.

22120. Have you any idea of what changes you would suggest?—I had an interview with our chairman, Mr. O'Dowd, and he always informed me that Tobacurry was built to accommodate between 300 and 350 inmates, and that money is about the average that they have there.

22121. Both Tobacurry and Droemore West are comparatively recently-built unions?—I could not say that.

22122. They were made after the famine times?—Oh, I believe that. And if we could amalgamate, and have a closed one, that we could turn into an auxiliary asylum for the accommodation of the harmless lunatics, it would relieve the overcrowding. At all our late meetings of the County Council repeated demands were made by the authority of the Lord Lieutenant that we should see and relieve this overcrowding in the asylum; and I think the only course open to us presently, as representing the ratepayers, would be if we could carry out this amalgamation.

22123. What workhouse or workhouses would you close?—I would say whichever one has the smallest number of patients.

22124. Either Tobacurry or Droemore West, according as may be thought best?—Yes.

22125. You would not propose to close both—you would close one for the purposes of an auxiliary asylum?—I would be anxious to see one closed so long as it would give accommodation for the harmless lunatics, and let the others stand. I represent the twenty electoral division of Keshmarron, which has a valuation of £14,000; the ratepayers there are generally against additional buildings, so long as we could use some of the workhouses we have already built. There was a resolution to build two additional wings to the asylum at a cost of £40,000, not including rates.

22126. Having regard to the long distance by road from Sligo to Droemore West, do you think it would be possible or convenient to make Droemore West an auxiliary asylum?—I think Tobacurry would be more suitable.

22127. On account of the railway?—Yes.

22128. From what counties have you lunatics in the Sligo Asylum?—From Sligo and Leitrim.

22129. Are you aware that some of the Leitrim people think that it would be fairer, from their point of view, that one of their workhouses should be closed and made into an auxiliary asylum—say, Manerhamstown?—I would not be against that.

22130. They think, I understand, that you have the spending of all the money in Sligo at present for the lunatics of both counties, and if a workhouse is set apart as an auxiliary, they suggest it would be fair that one of the Leitrim workhouses should be taken, such as Manerhamstown, which is convenient by rail, that it should be taken rather than one of the Sligo workhouses?—Well, if it would prove beneficial to all parties and relieve the overcrowding here I would be satisfied.

22131. What would you suggest as regards the two Sligo workhouses, Droemore West and Tobacurry, if a Leitrim workhouse were taken instead of a Sligo workhouse?—I would have no complaint.

22132. Let them stand as they are?—Let them stand as they are. It is a peculiar difficulty with regard to the overcrowding of the asylum that I am giving evidence about here; we must relieve that overcrowding one way or another.

22133. Did you look into it at all from the point of view of economy, trying to reduce the expenditure all over the county, and to see whether you could, without hardship, close either or both of these workhouses?—The only point of view of economy that I looked to was to save £50,000 or £60,000 in building additional wings at the asylum. I saw a former building that was carried on there, there were £12,000 expended, it was the late Grand Jury that gave out that contract, and it took eight years to complete it. If we are to spend £40,000 or £50,000, it is likely it may take fifteen or twenty years to build, and where would those unfortunate patients be all that time; but if we amalgamated workhouses we could relieve them at once.

22134. Or as soon as some little changes could be made?—Yes.

22135. You did not consider the question apart altogether from the lunacy question; you did not consider whether it would be possible, without any hardship to the poor or not, to close either or both of the other workhouses—Tobacurry or Droemore West?—No.

22136. And you have no view on that subject?—I have no view on that subject.

22137. Your constituency is in the Sligo Union?—In the Sligo Union.

22138. You act as a Poor Law Guardian as well as a County Councillor?—No, sir.

22139. Then you cannot offer any evidence as regards the administration of Poor Law relief from your own knowledge?—No.

Mr. JAMES HANSON, M.O.C., examined.

Mr. James Hanson.

I don't know that I have anything to add to Mr. McLaughlin's evidence.

22140. CHAIRMAN.—Are you a Poor Law Guardian?—I am a County Councillor; I am not a Poor Law Guardian.

22141. But you don't think you could add anything to Mr. McLaughlin. Was your evidence from the same point of view?—Yes.

22142. Having regard to the question of providing extra accommodation for lunatics?—Yes, we would like, if we could economise in the way of lowering the rates by amalgamation; but I really think it would be necessary to have experts to go into that matter very fully and carefully.

22143. Mr. Colliery is both a Poor Law Guardian and a Councillor?—And an expert.

Mr. RICHARD COLLEY, J.P., M.C., examined.

Sept. 30, 1904.
Mr. Richard
Colley.

22144. CHAIRMAN.—The County Council did not pass any definite resolution on the question of amalgamation from a Poor Law point of view, they just deputed certain gentlemen to give evidence?—I think that is what they did.

22145. They did not offer any opinion themselves?—I think not. I think it never came before them in that way.

22146. Well, we went the quarter, and asked for their views; they did not offer any views, but named Mr. O'Dowd and the two other gentlemen to give evidence; they don't seem to have regarded it from a general point of view. You have been a Poor Law Guardian and Chairman of the Board of Guardians for a long time?—For some time. I was chairman under the old system.

22147. The Board of Guardians have considered the question from a Poor Law point of view?—Yes; it came before a meeting of the Guardians.

22148. Having regard to the extent and population of the county and the requirements of the sick and poor do you think any change might, with advantage, be made in reducing the number of unions in the county?—Well, I am inclined to think that amalgamation to a certain extent would be of use. I don't think you could very well centralise the hospital accommodation, so to speak, because it would be difficult, in my opinion, to drag the old and infirm people from, say, Tobercurry or Droimere West to Sligo; but I think the unions, as regards the other classes that are accommodated there, could well be amalgamated.

22149. That is, the people who could be removed without hardship?—Yes.

22150. Or, in a word, suppose you had a workhouse, properly called a workhouse, for one class and have a hospital in Tobercurry and another in Droimere West for the old and infirm, that could not well be removed, or for the acutely sick?—Yes, something of that kind. I think to have one central workhouse would be very inconvenient in parts of the county, although Sligo is a small county, yet I think it would be very hard, if a very old person took ill, to drag him from an extreme part of the county, and vice versa.

22151. From the borders of Ballina Union, that would be twenty-five or thirty miles?—It is forty miles from here to Ardara, in the Droimere Union.

Mr. Mitchell.—They took two parishes at the time of the Local Government Act and added them to Ballina Union from Droimere West.

22152. CHAIRMAN.—So that they don't come from Ardara?—Not quite; within a few miles of it.

22153. If it were found possible to break up some unions for certain purposes, say, for the people who could be removed, you think strongly that it would be injudicious or improper to require the sick to be removed such long distances, therefore, you would leave a hospital at Droimere West and Tobercurry?—I should think so, Droimere West particularly; because, unfortunately, we have no railway communication with it, and it would be a very difficult matter to bring a sudden emergency or sickness from there. With Tobercurry, of course, it would not be quite so bad, because we have railway communication.

22154. Except that the sick cannot be carried by train, if a man breaks his leg or it is a bad case of pneumonia or fever, they must be taken by van?—It would be certainly desirable to have a hospital in those places.

22155. You would not diminish the hospital facilities?—I don't think so.

22156. If a large portion of these workhouse buildings could be released from their present use, can you suggest any use they might be put to in the future?—I think the very suggestion made in the queries with regard to using them for an auxiliary asylum would be a most desirable thing, because I am inclined to think that the overcrowding of the asylum as well as the centralisation of it is rather inconvenient; and if Tobercurry, for instance, was turned into an auxiliary asylum, I think it would be a great use.

22157. You heard, perhaps, what I said just now about Manerhamilton. The Leitrim people think that if any auxiliary asylum is provided that it ought to be provided in the County Leitrim, so that they should have their share of the expenditure?—That would be my view also.

22158. You would not object to Manerhamilton being used for that purpose?—Not at all, provided Manerhamilton was not used as a workhouse. The present asylum accommodates both Leitrim and Sligo, a joint asylum, and I think that Leitrim ought to have an auxiliary asylum, as well as Sligo; I think it would be a very convenient thing.

22159. Do you suggest there should be two auxiliary asylums—one in Sligo and one in Leitrim—or would you have one as an overflow from the Sligo Asylum?—My view would be, if convenient, to have one in Leitrim and one in Sligo.

22160. Do you think that would be necessary?—You might do with one; but I think it would be under to one county to have the whole thing in one, and not give accommodation in Leitrim. I think it would be only fair that Leitrim should have an auxiliary, as at Carrick-on-Shannon or Manerhamilton, wherever the workhouse would be established.

22161. But, then, if you had one at either Manerhamilton or Carrick-on-Shannon, would it be necessary to have another at Tobercurry, having the pauper houses here?—I regret to find that there is a great increase in cases of lunacy.

22162. Supposing they could provide for 200 inmates at Manerhamilton, would not that meet all your requirements?—I dare say it would. Well, I don't know, indeed, I cannot speak for the present asylum, but I have heard it is rather overcrowded, and I know they made a demand on the County Council for a very large sum of money to build an addition to it; and, instead of building an addition to it, I think it would be better to have these auxiliary asylums; but I certainly think there ought to be one on the upper part of the County Sligo. If you did away with the workhouse in Tobercurry, I certainly would be disposed to see it converted into something of that kind, that a, provided they could have hospital accommodation with it.

22163. If it were possible to remove the people who can travel from Tobercurry and Droimere West to Sligo Workhouse, would you approve of such a removal?—I would approve of the able-bodied portion of them.

22164. That is, people who can be removed easily?—Oh, certainly; I think I would approve of their being removed. Of course, I would not approve of the old and infirm, that are incapable of being removed, so to speak, or the sick.

22165. The sick, of course?—You mean the old and infirm, that it would be possible to remove.

22166. That are up every day?—I think there might be a discrimination made in that case.

22167. If the aged and infirm were left at a place there would be practically little or no distinction in the number of inmates, and you could not diminish the number of officers?—I don't mean by a hospital is those places that you should have the constant habitation of the workhouse; what I mean is the sick poor, and those who are really sick and incapable of being removed, and for sudden emergencies or cases of serious accident, and from time to time if an epidemic broke out.

22168. The really sick people?—Quite so.

22169. If that were so you would have an additional number to bring into Sligo, perhaps more than the Sligo Workhouse as at present administered would hold, so that the quarantine would come up for consideration what would you do with the classes that are in Sligo, if you take them in detail—first you have the sick, they would have to remain in Sligo?—You would have to keep the hospital in Sligo.

22170. Then the aged and infirm; if it were proposed to make Sligo a central place for the aged and infirm, they would have to stay, of course. Then as regards children, there are a fair number of children. Have your Board of Guardians considered much?—They have not acted very much on it—the boarding-out law?—Up to the present we have not, but it is a thing I hold strong views on, that we ought to take some action in the matter.

22171. It has been tried in a great many places, and there has not really been any voice raised against it where it has been tried, as far as the Commission have ascertained in their inquiries: all over the north, south, east, and west of Ireland we have found practically unanimous evidence in favour of the boarding-out system?—I am glad to hear that. I really was not aware of it before, but I had a sort of rooted prejudice, being a number of the Board of Guardians twenty or thirty years ago, and we sent children out to nurse, young children, and my experience of that was not good.

22171. That was at too early an age, perhaps before they were two years old?—Yes, out to nurse.

22172. The evidence we have got is largely that these children ought not to be sent out until they have the use of their teeth and can see whatever is going on—I think that is a very good idea.

22173. The family that they are boarded out with are attached to them, they become members of the family, and the evidence we have received is that these children who are boarded out virtually become the children of the family and contribute to the support, and are looked upon as members of the family?—That may be the case; but another thing, I find that very often when children are sent out, and we do send them out at from twelve to fourteen—

22174. That is hard out; that is a commercial bargain, where they are not brought up in the family, and don't come into the family as little children and get the natural affection that little children get—I have no doubt the system you suggest will work well, but those reared in the workhouse return, like the hare to their form; if they get vexed or fall out with their master or mistress they always have in their mind's eye that the workhouse is waiting to receive them, and back they invariably come.

22175. That is the great argument put before us in favour of the boarding-out system, that the children, when they are conscious of anything, never have any experience of the workhouse; they are reared always in the family, and it never occurs to them to be anything else but members of the family, and they become agricultural labourers and are absorbed into the population—I have experience of the way in which it has been working in other places, we have none here; but I will be very glad to convey what you say, and I think the Board of Guardians ought in a great measure to adopt it.

22176. You would like that discretion should be given to the Board of Guardians by law to board out all children that come on the rates for the future, to give them the discretion?—I think they have that discretion.

22177. Only in the case of orphans and deserted children. Suppose the children of thriftless, objectionable people come in the Guardians have no power to board them out, they must retain them. Do you think it would be wise that they should have a discretion to board out all children that come into their hands?—I think it would be, but if they are the children of certain parents you cannot prevent the parents from having control, and very often that very thing arises when we would be sending out children to learn—the parents would object to let them go.

22178. Supposing a Board of Guardians passed a resolution, in the exercise of their discretion, that they would board out A and B, two children whose parents are living, then will come the question, what are you to do with those parents; are you to allow them to go off with a horse leg and start fresh families for the ratepayers to keep, or would you be in favour, if those people are people who cannot be extracted with the curing and rearing of children, would you be in favour, as some witnesses have suggested to us, of placing them to be detained compulsorily, in an institution until such time as they might be trusted out on what you might call a ticket-of-leave, to see whether they could become working members of the community before they could get their children back again?—I would not approve of that. I am afraid that would be too sweeping. To begin with, by such a system you would no doubt get hundreds of never-do-wells parents very willing for you to do that, but I think when you would come to the system, and you would send away the children, I would not approve of locking up the parents.

22179. Do you think it would be a wise thing to take the children and relieve the parents absolutely of the cost and charge of them?—I think there ought to be a great deal of discrimination in that too. Now, for instance, what occurs here is, children are taken up and sent to industrial schools; under the present system they are committed, and I must say on more than one occasion I was not satisfied that the children were sent and their parents relieved. I think it was unfair to the ratepayers that an able-bodied man who owns a family and could support them should throw those children as a burden upon his neighbours, so to speak, or on the rates, and let him start about free, probably to get married again.

22180. Or to raise a further family?—Perhaps so. I don't at all like it, and a case of it occurred which came under my knowledge, which strengthened my views in that direction.

22181. Would those people be thriftless, unsatisfactory members of the community, and perhaps lazy?—Well, in some cases they are, but in many cases they are people who are very anxious to get relieved of the children. A man, for instance, is working, an industrious man, working at the quay driving a horse; it is very inconvenient for him to have two or three young children.

22182. Do you mean a widower?—Being a widower it is very inconvenient for him to have two or three young children, and he very naturally goes about to see if he could get them into an industrial school. Of course it is a great relief to that man, and just enables him to turn back to what you say. I think it is not right that the ratepayers should have to pay for the children of that man.

22183. That man would not let his children go into the workhouse, would he?—I hardly think he would; in some cases it might occur. You state they pay so much. The magistrate is committing the children sometimes name a sum that the parent is supposed to pay; that is very indifferently, I think, collected; it sometimes is and sometimes is not. The parent goes away, does not remain within reach of the authorities, and all that sort of thing, and I don't think very much comes out of it.

22184. But do you think a man in constant work, such as you indicate, would be willing to let his children go to an ordinary Poor Law institution?—I don't think he would; of course there may be what you call never-do-wells.

22185. Take the never-do-wells, which is the greatest number perhaps?—I think it is a mercy to relieve him of the children.

22186. And what would you do with him?—That is a problem that has puzzled many men.

22187. Do you think it would not be a fair thing to put him into what might be called a labour colony, where you would put in the tramps, and criminals, and never-do-wells?—I don't think so. Do you mean to put him on the rates?

22188. Put him into an institution where really hard work will be done. There are a number of those institutions in Belgium and other places which are self-supporting, owing to the useful labour these people are employed at; and there they would be put in for a certain time; and as soon as they had been taught habits of industry, and it is thought they would be able to go back into the ordinary labouring classes again, then they would get their chance and see whether they could?—That would be a sort of reformatory for adults. I believe myself that would be a very excellent institution, and would be of great use, for I am quite sure that there are in every community men who would be the better of being set up against their own will, and who are the victims of their own passions, which they cannot control.

22189. That would virtually take all the children out of your workhouses?—Yes, but what would you do with the infants?

22190. We might consider these in connection with the mothers of the infants, that is the girls who come in there to have illegitimate children. It has been suggested to us by various witnesses that it would be a useful change, that a girl who is going to have an illegitimate child should in future never be sent to a workhouse at all to be confined, that she should be sent to an institution under Catholic or Protestant religious management, as the case might be, where efforts would be made for her reclamation on the occasion of her first lapse?—I think that is an admirable idea.

22191. And there the girl should be kept as short a time as it would be thought safe to keep her, and that she should be placed out in a situation again; that the child should be as far as possible supported by her out of her wages, and it should be kept in some place in connection with or visited by this institution until it could be boarded out at the age of two years old, and if the mother was not able to receive it, then it should be treated as an ordinary boarded-out child; that would keep away all women and children from the workhouse. You know, I am sure, Mr. Colley, from your long experience, how this works out, how the admission of women to the workhouse turns out. We have had it before us in evidence in a great many places, that a girl comes in with her first baby and is practically never reclaimed; she goes out again and comes in with another, and so on perhaps until she has six, seven, or eight children. That goes on, and you in that way start, maintain, and keep going a class of illegitimate, useless people. In one instance we met four generations in the workhouse at the same time?—I should not at all wonder.

22192. All illegitimate down, and we frequently meet three generations, so that virtually you have the workhouses operating as a place for the raising of these children?—There is no doubt of that, but I think the remedy you suggest would undoubtedly be an admirable one; and as an illustration of that, I think there is, even in our own workhouse at present, one or two of these reclaimed girls, if I mistake not, working in the hospital and retained there, perhaps against the will of some members of the Board, but retained there by the nurse as a sort of nurse; and, if I mistake not, they are retained purely because of the fear that if they returned to the world they would return to their evil ways, and I do think, if you had an institution of that description, it would be a very admirable idea.

22193. Take the workhouse now as it exists. If a girl of, say, 15 years of age falls, and if she is a decent respectable girl, except that she has met with one special wrong, and if she comes two or three months before her confinement, which is about the usual time—if she comes to the Sligo Workhouse, you admit her. Where do you put her? Are you not bound to put her in a ward practically where there are mothers of three, four, or five illegitimate children?—Well, no, I think not; there is a different ward; there is one for the mothers of one child, and I think there is a separate one for habitual offenders, so to speak; but there is this about it, that she goes in and, unfortunately, she does not improve her morals inside.

22194. Usually, from the day she goes in to be confined, she associates with people who have been through such experiences, and have come to be perhaps hardened and hardened?—I quite agree with you.

22195. So that it is an almost hopeless place to reclaim a young girl, except she could be detached for special duty, as you have told us, and that could not be done with many?—No.

22196. As regards the lunatics and idiots, would you do in favour of removing them from workhouses and putting them in auxiliary asylums or the parent asylum. You may say all cases of mental disease?—I think so; it is a very bad arrangement to have them in workhouses.

22197. You have not good machinery for maintaining them in workhouses?—No; still say that are there are fairly well kept. But there is a system by which the authorities at the asylums now, when they get patients what they call harmless, send them back to the workhouse, which I think is very bad. We had a case or two of that kind where they were returned, and when they became troublesome again they had to be sent back, and altogether it would be a great matter if they could be removed from the workhouses.

22198. Your experience agrees with the evidence of most of the experienced Guardians who have given evidence to us, that it is desirable that all cases of mental disease should be removed from the workhouses?—Decidedly; they ought to be in the asylum. I don't see any reason why the asylum should not accommodate and care those mentally unfit to care themselves, as well as those who are dangerous to others.

22199. And even cases that are considered at the present time perhaps harmless may become dangerous at any moment?—That has occurred more than once.

22200. Now as regards casuals and tramps. We already discussed those practically under the head of ne-en-do-wells, and you said you were in favour of what you would call a reformatory for the adult population?—I would, to a certain extent; but I don't know would tramps who make the workhouses beds now come under that head.

22201. I think they would be perhaps the chief?—Where would you catch them?

22202. Wherever they are going. Some witnesses say that the assistance of the Constabulary ought to come in here, and any man going tramping ought to be brought up to be brought up by them before the proper authority, and if he cannot satisfactorily explain himself—if he is only living on the alms and support, whether willing or forced, of other people—he should be detained and made work for his support?—I quite agree with you. I think that would be quite right.

22203. Some are bona fide people really looking for work?—A great many of them are.

22204. That class, it was suggested by some witnesses, should provide themselves with some testimonial in writing from some person in the town where they started, this document to state that so-and-so, mentioning his name, age, and appearance, is going looking for work to such-and-such a place?—I think that would be a good idea.

22205. And that would protect any man who was really a deserving man from any arrest or detention?—And be a passport for him for admission to the workhouse if he needed it.

22206. But supposing there was no workhouse, supposing you say "We will abolish the casual ward," a man who would have that passport, as you call it, to enable him to go along, he would come, say, to the relieving officer's place, and the relieving officer would be empowered to give a man with such a passport lodgings and food for the night?—Where.

22207. In the village or town where he would be?—He may pay for him in a lodging-house.

22208. Yes?—I don't think that would be a good arrangement.

22209. What would you suggest. Supposing a man comes to Drumore or Tollymore and there is no workhouse to receive him, and he is a man who has honestly started from some place, say Swindon, and is coming to Sligo to look for work, what would you do when he arrives at the end of the day, tired and hungry, in Tollymore?—I would have, as I before stated to you, I would have a hospital in Drumore West, for instance, and I would have a ward in that hospital where a really bona fide man, who would have the passport you describe, and who the authorities of the hospital would see would not be able to make his way to where his destination was could be accommodated, but I would not give carte blanche to the relieving officer to go through the town and find residences for tramps.

22210. Well, they would be very few?—I don't know that you would have them so few.

22211. The ordinary tramp would very soon be a section?—Yes, they would become less, certainly, if they knew they had not the workhouse without having a passport, but I would not like to have the relieving officer going looking for lodgings for these. I think there ought to be a ward in that case.

22212. The argument that one would be against that is this, that if you have in such a hospital a ward for tramps of that sort, you would want a staff to manage the ward, whereas if you only have the hospital at Tollymore you will have the doctor, the surgeon, and nurse, and nobody else?—I would expect that the men you describe would be very few, and I don't think it would be any additional expense if there was a ward and a bed or two in these hospitals where a casual man could be accommodated.

22213. You would require a male officer?—If you have a hospital you must have some one in control of it.

22214. You need not have a male officer?—You would have a matron and porter.

22215. You might have a porter, of course, but a great many of these small hospitals never dream of having a porter, and then the associations of the workhouse are continued if you give these men a ward?—At all events the tramp is a difficult problem.

22216. He is, but the ordinary tramp would not be so difficult as the bona fide under the workhouse?—I think the bona fide makers for work are few, those who are really bona fide tradesmen, some of them occasionally start out, but not often, and you will very often find that these will get work in a town. If a baker goes out or a man of any other trade to meet with failure in another town and I know they relieve him very often, or carpenters or men of any particular trade. As for labourers, I don't see why they should become tramps at all.

22217. We have found a great many in going round a great many manors and manors who as soon as a work stops in one town have to march on until they get other work?—Probably you would get that very often.

22218. And before them to be find of moving about for some reason?—Yes, but before them have associations in every town, and it is very seldom you will find an absolutely destitute.

22219. You will find them in the workhouse—very often in the tramp ward?—Yes.

22220. But you do see it would be an advantage from an economical point of view if you could close the tramp ward, and make it unnecessary to keep any male officers?—Where?

Sept. 25, 1904.
Mr. Bernard Collier.

22221. In any workhouse, directed except for the purposes of the sick—I think if you could reduce the staff, but, unfortunately, it is the staff in a great measure that sets up a great part of the expense. It is necessary of course.

22222. And if you could do away with them it would be an economy?—Yes.

22223. Then the result of all that would be that the only inmates you would have, even in the central workhouse that remains—Sligo—the only class you would have there would be the sick in the hospital and the aged and infirm?—Yes.

22224. All the other classes would be provided for elsewhere. The children would be out, the women who came in with children would be elsewhere, the tramps would be elsewhere, and the lunatics would be elsewhere, so you would not have that congregation of classes that you have now that cause such difficulty in classification, and you would have merely an almshouse in Sligo with a hospital attached?—Quite so; that is what I would like to see.

22225. Mr. MURPHY.—What is your experience of out-door relief—would you wish to see it extended or otherwise?—I would; it is one of those things that can be abused, and it is very necessary to control it. I believe myself that out-door relief given to poor people prevents a lot of them from going to the workhouse. It really reaches them, while of the money spent on them in the workhouse nearly half of it is spent on establishment charges and officials.

22226. CHAIRMAN.—Say a quarter?—Well, I would be hardly inclined to agree with you there. However, you have the statistics, and I won't dispute it, but at all events if you give them 2s. 6d. or 3s. in out-door relief I would not give them much. I have made it a practice in most cases in giving out-door relief to limit it to a small amount and distribute it over many; instead of giving 4s. to one, to give 2s. a piece to two.

22227. Mr. MURPHY.—Do you think there is any tendency on the part of the Guardians to be lavish with money that way?—I don't think so. I think our out-door relief in Sligo has not very much increased from the old system. I think we used to have from £12 to £19 or £20 a week out-door relief under the old system if I mistake not. It might have increased £3 or £2.

22228. But not noticeably?—I don't think so.
